Secondly, CPI had "joined the chorus of vested interests" that CPI (M) was inciting agricultural labourers against farmers, much to the detriment of agricultural production as a whole. It might be that in some areas the leadership of agricultural labourers "have gone a little further". That needed to be tackled. But this did not mean that CPI (M) would guarantee that it would not stand behind movements and struggles by agricultural labourers.

Thirdly, he said CPI believed there was great possibility of industrialization by allowing firms like Mitsubishi of Japan to come to Kerala in such branches like iron-ore processing. This meant collaboration of Indian private capital with foreign monopoly capital.

On the other hand, he pointed out, there were a few offers from socialist countries to collaborate in iron processing itself and he firmly believed there was immense scope for building up collaboration between socialist countries and the State-owned Kerala Industrial Development Corporation. "We do not say we should not touch the Japanese at all. We are of the view that this sort of co-operation between the public sector units in Kerala and similar units in socialist countries should be explored. Before that is done, we cannot go into large-scale collaboration with foreign monopoly capital."

In regard to some other points made by CPI in its ultimatum, Mr. Namboodiripad said, CPI was factually wrong. One of these related to the suspension of the principal of an Agricultural College. The decision was taken by "myself and Mr. M. N. Govindan Nair together."

He also referred to the controversy over conflicting figures of food production provided by the Agriculture Department and the Statistical Bureau. Because the Statistical Bureau was under his charge, he said, a campaign had been mounted against "me that I was deliberately under-estimating the increase in production under the stewardship of a CPI Minister".

In regard to certain other points such as the one relating to a recent departmental circular that all Government exhibitions should be organized by the Public Relations Department, acting as a centralized agency, he said he had once welcomed a suggestion made to that effect by the Public Relations Department. But when he found that the actual circular had been issued without prior consultation with the other department concerned, he had immediately stayed its implementation and referred the issue back to the Council of Ministers.

Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad Criticises Kerala CPI Ministers:

The Kerala Chief Minister, Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, told the CPI on May 28 that he would publish some of the letters which the CPI leaders "would like to keep back," unless the CPI stopped repeating "baseless allegations."

He added that "the only difference" between the CPI leaders and himself was that while they gave publicity to their letters making baseless allegations, "I have scrupulously observed the convention of keeping such letters confidential."

He made these comments in a rejoinder to the statement from Calcutta of Mr. N. K. Krishnan, Central Secretariat member of the CPI. In the rejoinder released for publication by the CPI (M), Mr. Namboodiripad made the following points:

(1) Mr. Krishnan's assertion that the CPI(M) interfere in the portfolios of the CPI Ministers was baseless. On the contrary there were instances of interference from the Right Communists "in my own portfolio."

(2) The charge made against Mr. T. V. Thomas was not "irresponsible." He was prepared to substantiate his charges in public against Mr. Thomas even now, "if that is what the Right Communists want."

(3) Any compromise formula for a mechanism to probe corruption charges against Ministers could not be divorced from the wider issue of relations within the United Front. The CPI's three-month ultimatum to the CPI(M) raised the broader issue of the relations within the United Front. "We felt that if the Right Communists persist in their attitude which led them to give that ultimatum, a break-up of the United Front was inevitable."

(4) The CPI (M) had its own detailed proposals regarding the entire question of relations within the United Front including the question of the machinery for corruption probe. "I am, however, sorry to remind the leaders of the Central Secretariat of the Communist Party of India that the way in which they are behaving towards us will not help the process of resolving these questions."

Kerala's Industrial Potential:

The Kerala Industries Minister, Mr. T. V. Thomas (CPI), said in Trivandrum on May 29 that he would oppose the Marxist attempt to barter away Kerala's industrial potential to Yugoslavia or Rumania although he might have to pay a heavy price for it.

The CPI(M), according to him, wanted Kerala's iron-ore deposits to be exported to Yugoslavia or Rumania while he was making sustained efforts to establish a steel alloy plant in Kerala itself.

He said that he could understand the Marxist anxiety to get closer with Yugoslavia and Rumania in the context of the present international alignments. But, he would not be a party to sacrifice his own country's interest for the sake of ulterior international motives.

He denied a CPI(M) Politburo statement that he had submitted a report to the State Cabinet suggesting that the entire industrial potential of Kerala should be tapped by Japanese industrialists and rejecting Yugoslav and Rumanian proposals.

H. West Bengal Minister "Gherao-ed": West Bengal's Minister for Commerce and Industries, Mr. Sushil Kumar Dhara was gheraoed (forcible confinement) by extremist Communist (Maoist) Naxalite workers at Jaldhaka Hydel Power station for 92 hours from May 21.

Mr. Dhara had gone to Jaldhaka on May 20 on a four-day visit. On May 21, the workers submitted to him a memorandum covering five demands and insisted on immediate decision on each of them. Mr. Dhara promised to look into them and to decide after consulting his Cabinet colleagues. The workers then surrounded his room in the inspection bungalow, while Mr. Dhara on the other hand declared a protest fast till the gherao was lifted.

Mr. Nani Bhattacharya, the Health Minister who visited Jaldhaka on May 24 sent an urgent message to the Chief Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee asking for immediate removal of Mr. Dhara to Siliguri hospital. Mr. Mukherjee issued orders to the police accordingly and Mr. Dhara was rescued by the police at 11.30 A.M. on May 25, the workers offering no resistance.

Earlier, on May 24, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee, the Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. Jyoti Basu and four other Ministers held talks with Mr. Parirural areas, although he agreed that mal Dasgupta, President of the State Electricity Board Workers' Union. They said the Government was prepared to discuss the workers' demands with the Union in the first week of June, provided the Union agreed to lift the gherao on Mr. Dhara. But the Union did not agree to it. The appeal of Mr. Manoranjan Roy, General Secretary, West Bengal unit of the A-ITUC, to the workers to withdraw the gherao too went unheeded. On the other hand, Mr. Dhara continued his fast in spite of three successive messages from the Chief Minister. Mr. Sudhir Kumar and Mr. Sambhu Ghosh, both Ministers of West Bengal arrived at Jaldhaka on May 25 and arranged with the workers that with the immediate lifting of the gherao a settlement of their demands would be announced in June. But Mr. Dhara declined to accept the conditional lifting of the gherao. He broke his fast at Siliguri on the persuasion of Mr. Sukumar Roy, Vice-President of the Bangla Congress, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee's party of which Mr. Dhara is General Secretary.

On May 28, at a news conference in Calcutta, Mr. Dhara denounced gheraos as "coercive tactics which would only bring many social and economic complications." He said that coercion, intimidation or duress were wrong but he would not advocate legislation to prevent them. The problem must be fought on a "moral plane".

In his opinion, permanent remedial measures must be found to end gheraos. "I have set the ball rolling and I hope all others will play the game."

[The Ministers of the United Front who were not members of the Bangla Congress had been gheraoed in West Bengal in the past and they had adopted their own methods to break through them. Mr. Subodh Banerjee, the originator of gheraos and now Minister for Public Works, had rescued himself when he was gheraoed by petty contractors in the State Secretariat, by calling in volunteers of his party, the Socialist Unity Centre, who responded with sticks and other weapons and cleared the Minister's room of demonstrators. The Land Revenue Minister, Mr. Harekrushna Konar (CPI-M) when gheraoed by the Engineering College students near Jalpaiguri was rescued by some 500 CPI(M) workers who rushed to the scene. But, Mr. Dhara, whose gherao was perhaps the longest, adopted what he called a "moral" method to meet the exigency.]

I. CPI Red Guards Revived: It was disclosed in Bombay on May 29 that the Communist Party of India (CPI) had revived its Red Guards but in a new form and a new name. It would now be known as Lok Seva Dal.

The Red Guards would not only to trained like a para-military organization but would be entrusted with social work to get closer to the masses. Recruitment to the Dal would be from teenagers, both boys and girls.

A serious move made a few months earlier to revive the Red Guards had run into trouble, with the Shiv Sena attacking party meetings and its offices.

[The decision to revive the Red Guards and call it a Dal was taken at the party's eighth conference in Patna in 1968. The CPI in Kerala has 7,000 volunteers while the CP(M) in that State could mobilize 10,000 men and women. The Red Guards, originally formed in 1943, comprised mostly of hard-boiled card-holders. The emphasis now was on drawing young blood into the Dal. The Dal members now gather at regular intervals for intensive physical training. They begin their daily chores by saluting the Red Flag with hammer and sickle. A study circle on Marxism is arranged once a week for the members.]

J. Jana Sangh-Swatantra-BKD Merger Talks: The merger talks among leaders of the Swatantra Party, Jana Sangh and the Bharatiya Kranti Dal (BKD) ended inconclusively in New Delhi on May 27, with the promise that they would meet again to pick up the threads, preferably in the presence of the Jana Sangh President, Mr. Atal Bihari Vajpayee, who could not attend owing to illness.

The Jana Sangh spokesmen at the meeting were reported to have repeated their suggestion that the parties might begin with a joint front in Parliament and in State Legislatures. This apparently did not find favour with the other spokesmen who wanted an outright merger.

In a joint communique issued at the end of their deliberations it was stated that the talks were "exploratory in nature" and were intended to demarcate areas of agreement and "to assess and narrow down areas of disagreement between the parties."

The talks, it said, so far had been satisfactory and "it has been decided to resume these after an interval of time that would enable the spokesmen of the three parties to consult their colleagues in regard to various issues such as Centre-State relations, the attitude towards the Communist menace, problems of defence, including the question of nuclear armaments, Kashmir, relations with Pakistan, the minority issue, the Nagaland border hostilities and the language problem."

They welcomed the Prime Minister's statement that the selection of the next President "should not be a party question but a national one". Such an approch would imply, the communique said, that no party should put up any candidate and that there should be a free vote without any party whip. It urged the Congress and other Opposition parties to join them in giving practical shape to such an approach which, they felt, would be in the national interest. In the light of this, they chose not to consider names of any candidates.

BKD Closes Door On Jana Sangh:

Within 36 hours of "satisfactory" merger talks with Swatantra and Jana Sangh leaders, the National Executive of the Bharatiya Kranti Dal (BKD) decided on May 28 to exclude the Jana Sangh from the future round of formal unity talks with the Swatantra Party.

The sudden decision of the BKD, which initiated the idea of the new party, was considered in Delhi as "tactical", as one of its Executive Committee members told correspondents that "in politics decisions are taken according to situations".

Some of the BKD leaders were understood to feel that a section of the Jana Sangh, including Mr. A. B. Vajpayee, was not keen on merging the party's identity in the new party.

Mr. Charan Singh, BKD Chairman, told a questioner at the end of the Executive Committee meeting that "our impression is that they (Jana Sangh) are not prepared to sink their identity in a new party".

He said: "The Executive Committee has regretfully come to the conclusion that so far as the Jana Sangh is concerned, talks with them will have to be closed. Negotiations with the other parties—Swatantra and Praja-Socialist—will, however, continue.

Mr. A. B. Vajpayee's Answer:

In reply to BKD on May 29, the Jana Sangh President, Mr. A. B. Vajpayee, hit out at the BKD for having acted "immaturely" in excluding his party from any future merger talks.

He told newsmen that the Jana Sangh could not be "hustled into taking a decision on such a crucial issue. The BKD must know its limitations."

He said that the Jana Sangh did not rule out merger of democratic and progressive parties, but there must be a prior agreement on policies, principles and programmes. There was no point in forming a new party which would speak in different voices. Such a party would carry no weight. It was not proper to talk of outright merger without taking adequate precautions that dissensions were not caused in the new party.

He re-iterated the Jana Sangh suggestion to form a united bloc of Swatantra, BKD and Jana Sangh in Parliament and the State Legislatures and said that this might pave the way for ultimate merger. His party had always resisted merger as a first step. "How can there be a merger without agreement on fundamental principles?"

K. P-SP National Executive Resolutions: The National Executive of the Praja-Socialist Party (P-SP), which met at Yelwal, seven miles from Mysore, in a resolution on May 23 demanded the appointment of a tribunal to resolve inter-State boundary disputes on the basis of well-defined principles.

The Inter-State Council provided for in Article 263 of the Constitution, it said, should be created and its scope widened.

It also called for a re-examination of the problem of allocation of financial powers and resources between the Centre and the States. It, however, pleaded for preserving the "basic structure" of the Constitution, which represents a happy blending of the federal and unitary features.

The resolution referred to the two suggestions made to improve Centre-State relations—one pleading for a unitary Constitution for the country under which the States were "robbed" of their authority and initiative and the Centre became the focal point of all political and economic power and the other to "weaken" the Centre by leaving in its purview subjects like defence, foreign affairs, communications and finance and to transfer other subjects to the States.

It said that the adoption of a purely unitary Constitution would mean a "total disregard" of the historical basis of India's unity amidst diversity. It would sap the very roots of a decentralized democracy and prevent people's purposeful participation in the working of democracy. On the other hand, efforts to weaken the Centre would make India vulnerable to aggression by "our hostile neighbours". The P-SP, therefore, rejected both these extremes.

On Fourth Plan:

In another resolution on May 24, the P-SP National Executive described the Fourth Five-Year Plan as "an essay in frustration, meant more to consolidate the investments in the earlier Plans than to provide for rapid economic development".

It said that the Plan had belied the high expectations of the people since its size had been reduced and its percentage of investment in the public sector made even smaller than in the Third Plan.

At the outset, the publication of the draft Fourth Plan was a "vindication of the people's demand" for development to be resumed on a planned basis—a commitment which the Government had abandoned under pressure from vested interests of a laissez faire economy.

Even if the Plan targets were achieved, the Indian economy would not be taken beyond the objectives of the Third Plan, whereas social injustices had been accumulating from "the colossal income transfers of more than Rs. 1,300 crores annually from the masses and the salaried middle classes into the pockets of a monied minority".

Referring to agriculture, the resolution said that the high-yielding varieties programme had brought spectacular increase in agricultural production in certain areas of perennial irrigation. But, this had also created a new class of rich peasants and generated new imbalances and disparities since the "green revolution" had not touched the small farmers and landless labourers and vast areas of dry farming continued stagnant.

For a regeneration of the rural sector, it suggested acceleration of land reforms; ceilings on land ownership; consolidation of holdings; provision of inputs like cheap credit, fertilizers and better seeds, irrigation to cover 50 per cent of all cultivable land marketing facilities; and remunerative prices for the small farmer.

It re-iterated its demand for the nationalization of all credit institutions, including banks and general insurance. In the absence of strict control on credit institutions, financial bodies themselves favoured strengthening the monopoly sector. It was no accident, it said, that 36 per cent of the investments of the Life Insurance Corporation by the end of March, 1968 was in the first ten business groups listed by the Monopoly Commission.

It called upon the Government to make a firm declaration on the limits beyond which it would not permit prices to rise and suggested "built-in regulatory measures" such as buffer stocks, price regulation of essential goods and credit control to check spiralling prices, which if continued to be neglected would retard the tempo of development.

L. Bihar Cabinet Expansion: Eleven more Ministers of Cabinet rank and seven Ministers of State were sworn-in in Patna on May 18, bringing the total strength of the Congress-led coalition Ministry in Bihar to 33.

Of the 11 Ministers of Cabinet rank, ten belong to the Congress and one to the Hul Jharkhand.

Mr. Seth Hembrom of the Hul Jharkhand was included in the list a few minutes before the swearing-in ceremony.

Among those who were sworn-in included the dissident Congress leader, Mr. Daroga Prasad Rai. Mr. Rai took the oath 72 days after his appointment as Cabinet Minister. He had earlier declined the offer on the ground that adequate representation had not been given to his group.

The following are the 11 new Cabinet Ministers:

Mr. Daroga Prasad Rai, Mr. Baleswar Ram, Mr. M. R. Munda, Mr. Lahtan Chaudhari, Prof. Nagendra Jha, Mr. Saryu Prasad Singh, Mr. Shatrughana Sharan Singh, Mr. Ram Bilas Sharma, Mr. Jagannath Prasad Singh, Mr. Rajendra Pratap Singh (all Congress), and Mr. Hembrom (Hul Jharkhand).

The seven Ministers of State included four from the Janta Party, two from the Jharkhand and one

Independent. They were: Mr. Kailashpati Singh, Mr. Nagina Rao, Mr. Purnendu Narain Singh and Mr. Raghunathan Prasad (all Janta Party); Mr. Ratnakar Naik and Mr. Banbehari Mahto (both Jharkhand) and Mr. Mohammed Azimuddin (Ind.)

This expansion of the Bihar Cabinet was the third since the installation of the new Ministry three months ago.

The party-wise break-up of the 33-member Ministry at the moment is: Congress 19, Janta Party 6, Jharkhand Party 4, Soshit Dal 2, Hul Jharkhand one, Independent one.

The Chief Minister claims to have stabilized the position of the ruling Congress by the inclusion of the Hul Jharkhand representative in his Cabinet.

The Hul Jharkhand, led by Mr. Justin Richard, has a following of six MLAs in the State Legislative Assembly.

M. Student Leaders' Conference: A three-day conference of student leaders, which concluded in New Delhi on May 25, demanded employment as a fundamental right and student representation on various college and university committees. It also suggested that the Government should provide for unemployment dole.

This was the first officially-sponsored conference attended by 70 Presidents, Secretaries or other representatives of students' unions.

It rejected a suggestion to form an all-India student body representing various universities, but demanded democratically-elected unions whose membership should be compulsory.

It suggested that the education system should be more job-oriented and linked to employment needs. Greater emphasis should be placed on the introduction of vocational subjects in degree courses.

It felt that education imparted in universities and colleges had "not been purposeful, productive and employment oriented." The planning system had been "completely defective and needed a radical change."

It suggested that graduates should offer themselves to work in rural areas and capital distribution should shift to the rural areas and agriculture should be given primary importance. Compulsory rural service should be prescribed for agricultural and medical students.

To find resources to provide employment, the conference recommended conversion of all sectors into public sector, ceiling on land holdings and distribution of land among the unemployed, abolition of privy purses, opening of co-operative stores and co-operative farming, encouragement to small-scale industries on co-operative basis, provision of loans to engineers and others to create their own employment by starting small-scale industries.

It also recommended the formation of a discipline committee with 50-50 representation for teachers and elected student representatives to deal with cases of breach of discipline by students within the university campus.

N. Central Council Of Indian Medicine And Homoeopathy: The Central Government on May 29 took a major step for the promotion of Indian medicine and homoeopathy by constituting an autonomous Central Council to initiate, guide, develop and co-ordinate scientific research, both fundamental and applied, on Ayurveda, Siddha, Unani and Homoeopathy systems of medicine and Yoga therapy.

The Council would administer the fund of Rs. 60,00,000 in 1969-70 on post-graduate education and research in these systems. The total amount in the Fourth Plan for the purpose is Rs. 6 crores.

To facilitate the functioning of the Council, separate cells would be formed for each system. All the members of the 23-member Council were, for the present, nominated by the Government.

O. Drought In Tamil Nadu: The Chief Minister of Tamil Nadu, Mr. M. Karunanidhi, said in Madras on May 25 that nearly 18 million people had been directly affected by drought in the State and food production had come down by nearly 12,00,000 tonnes.

Speaking over the Madras Station of All-India Radio, he gave an account of the damage caused by drought in the State and the measures taken by the Centre and the State Governments to counter the havoc.

In 1968-69, paddy crops were affected in more than 9,00,000 acres of land. In districts like Coimbatore, even the cattle did not have enough fodder. In small towns and villages supply of drinking water was a big problem. He appealed to the people of the State to consume more wheat and reduce the consumption of rice. If the people of the State could take to the wheat-eating habit, "we can overcome rice scarcity."

He added that as an immediate measure to mitigate the sufferings of the affected people, the Government had set apart Rs. 1.5 crores. The Government had also appealed to the Centre for more assistance to meet the situation. The State Government had sanctioned further relief measures for the districts to the tune of Rs. 5 crores. The Centre had so far given Rs. 3 crores.

IRAN

A. Oil Agreement With Western Consortium: Iran and a consortium of major Western oil companies reached agreement in Tehran on May 14 on the revenue Iran would get from the consortium in the coming year, but did not announce the amount.

The year in question is the Iranian year 1348, which ends in March, 1970. The accord followed four days of intensive discussions.

A communique issued at the conclusion of the oil talks said: "Agreement was reached with respect to Government revenue requirements for 1348."

The absence of any figure raised doubts that the consortium had met Iran's billion-dollar demand in full. Before the meeting, the consortium had resisted Iran's demand, arguing that it would be difficult to find markets for such increased output.

The communique said the talks were marked by "mutual understanding and co-operation." It also said that further talks would be held this year with regard to "the future position."

Both sides maintained strict secrecy that had surrounded the talks from the beginning.

The consortium produces and markets more than 90 per cent of Iran's oil under an agreement whereby it shares earnings with Iran on roughly a 50-50 basis. It has been increasing its production and sale of Iranian oil by 12 per cent a year. But, for 1969, Iran has been demanding a 17 per cent increase over last year's actual output in order to raise $1 billion in revenue from the consortium. This amount has been budgeted for development funds under Iran's $11.5 billion five-year development plan.

The consortium is composed of British Petroleum 40 per cent; Royal Dutch Shell 14 per cent; Compagnie Francaise des Petroles 6 per cent; Gulf, Mobil, Jersey Standard, California Standard and Texaco, all American companies, 7 per cent each; and five smaller US companies, the Iricon group, with a total share of 5 per cent.

The consortium had strongly opposed Iran's demands on the grounds that there was already a glut of oil on world markets, and the 17 per cent production increase would aggravate disposal problems.

The oil companies also feared that acceding to Iran's demands would set off a chain reaction in other countries. In Kuwait, for instance, the Finance and Oil Minister, Mr. Abdel-Rahman al-Atiqi, reaffirmed that Kuwait would reconsider all its oil-company agreements if any concessions were granted Iran at Kuwait's expense. He said his nation expected a minimum of 6 per cent output increase per year.

The Shah of Iran bases his argument on the fact that Iran is the largest and most populous West Asian country (28 million people) with a greater need for oil income to meet the development programme which recently increased Iran's gross national product by 10 per cent annually.

Kuwait, with a population of about 500,000, boasts an oil output almost equal to Iran's.

Also galling was the 48 per cent increase in oil production registered by Libya (population less than 2 million) last year.

At stake for the firms in the Iranian discussions was the future of a 25-year agreement under which the consortium acts as the producing and marketing agent for the National Iranian Oil Co.

The consortium itself was only set up in 1954, following the nationalization of oil interests in 1951.

The Shah's Stand:

Earlier, in a Press interview, the Shah of Iran had personally committed himself to accept nothing less than the entire $1,000 million in oil revenues that his Government was demanding of the consortium.

He said that his confidence in the consortium had been shattered by its failure to meet its revenue promises for last year.

He had proposed to the member-companies that they should re-structure the consortium so that those companies whose main interests were elsewhere should have the chance to sell out and make room for other organizations that were interested in joining.

He said that this year's crisis with the consortium—the oil negotiations had become an annual affair—was much more serious than ever before, partly because of the loss of confidence in the consortium after it had failed by about $20 million to meet last year's revenue agreement of $8,865,000 (although the Shah did not put it like this) because of the extent to which the Iranian request for a 16 per cent additional increase to $1,000 million exceeded this year's estimated West Asian oil output increase of six or seven per cent. He stressed that he was no longer prepared to accept the consortium's offer "to do its best to reach the $1,000 million target." "I cannot build the future of my country on promises."

His explanation for the reasons for his demand for another 16 per cent increase in revenues were summed up in four points:

(1) The consortium was preventing Iran from exploiting her national wealth to the full;

(2) The Western countries were unwise to choose to take the greatest oil output increases from certain Arab States rather than Iran;

(3) This policy might well endanger international monetary stability when tiny Arab States were enabled to amass enormous reserves in sterling which if switched would "shatter" the world currency system (a clear reference to Kuwait or Libya);

(4) In contrast with the Arabs, the Iranians, with a far larger population of 27 million, devoted all their oil revenues to development.

IRAQ

A. Relations With Poland: A delegation, led by the Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Interior, Gen. Saleh Mehdi Ammash, who is also a member of the Revolutionary Command Council, visited Poland from April 22 to 28.

The delegation held talks with Polish officials including the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Stephan Aknar.

The two sides reviewed relations between the two countries and ways and means of developing them to the mutual interest of the two countries.

The talks resulted in the signing of an Agreement under which Poland would supply, a mining plant to Al-Meshraq Sulphur Field for exploiting sulphur directly by the Iraqi Government.

The delegation inspected installations and production at several major industrial centres in various parts of the Polish People's Republic.

A communique said the two sides found "wide areas of greater co-operation in various spheres for serving their common interests and for cementing friendly relations between them as well as for boosting their joint endeavour to consolidate peace in the world and re-inforce resistance to colonialism and imperialism."

JAPAN

A. Government Support To American Reconnaissance Flights: The Government on April 19 supported the decision of President R. Nixon of the United States to continue reconnaissance flights under protection in the Sea of Japan area.

The Chief Cabinet Secretary, Mr. Shigeru Hori told newsmen that it was "natural that USA take sufficient precautionary measures in resuming the reconnaissance flights near North Korea."

The Opposition's charges that the step would heighten tension in the Sea of Japan area were unfounded. Aerial reconnaissance was conducted around Japan by other countries.

Mr. Hori said the security situation surrounding Japan was not favourable enough to justify suspension of the US reconnaissance operations. They were required to insure Japan's own security.

Defence Ministry sources said that US jet fighter planes escorting US electronic reconnaissance aircraft over the Sea of Japan were not expected to use Japan as the base of their operations. The sources said that the area being covered by EC-121 reconnaissance aircraft off the coast of North Korea was outside the operational radius of F4C and F5B fighter jets stationed at US naval and air force bases in Japan. These bases included those in Yokota, Misawa and Iwakuni.

Meanwhile, a Foreign Ministry source said that flights by Japan-based aerial reconnaissance planes with fighter escort would not be a subject for "prior consultation" under Article 6 of the US-Japan Security Treaty.

Opposition Parties' Criticism:

Japan's major Opposition parties expressed varying degrees of opposition and anxiety regarding the US decision to continue aerial reconnaissance in the Sea of Japan with fighter escort.

For the Japan Socialist Party Mr. Masashi Ishibashi, director of the Party's international affairs bureau, said that the continuation by USA of aerial reconnaissance missions with protection in the Sea of Japan was an act of provocation. Such reconnaissance flights with fighter escort presupposed a possible engagement with hostile aircraft and would involve Japan.

He then demanded that these missions be made subject to "prior consultation" with Japan. The Government should refuse any further co-operation with USA in this regard.

The Democratic Socialist Party (DSP) feared that protected reconnaissance flights over the high seas off the North Korean coast might escalate the present tension in Asia as a result of possible "excessive defence" actions taken by the two parties.

Mr. Eki Sone, chairman of the DSP Foreign Affairs Committee, cautioned USA and North Korea that they should be careful not to resort to excessive defence measures. DSP showed grave concern over the US decision because both reconnaissance and escort planes were based in Japan.

Komeito's Secretary-General, Mr. Junya Yano, called on Mr. Hori at the Diet and demanded that the Government should ask USA not to use bases in Japan to send reconnaissance planes on missions off North Korea's coast. He also proposed that the Government should demand removal of all B-52 bombers stationed in Okinawa.

The Japan Communist Party (JCP) charged that the American decision was designed to intensify its military provocation against North Korea. The planned use of escort planes based in Japan and Okinawa meant that the nation was to become a US intelligence stronghold. It also urged the Government not to permit the use of Japanese bases by American forces and retract their hostile policy towards North Korea.

B. Aid To Pacific Islands—Accord With USA: Japan and USA have signed an Agreement calling on each party to provide $5 million grant to the inhabitants of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

The two countries exchanged Notes in the third week of April to allow Japanese fishing boats to visit the ports of Turk and Palau, two islands in the Trust Territory. They also exchanged Notes to permit Japan to salvage sunken ships in the area.

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (Nanyo Shoto) had been administered by Japan until World War II under the Covenant of the League of Nations and its mandate.

After the War, the area was administered by the United States according to the UN Charter and the Trusteeship Agreement for the former Japanese-mandated islands.

The conclusion of the accord was in line with the wishes of the residents in the area who had requested compensation for the damage they suffered during World War II. The Agreement was also in consideration of the fact that the UN Trusteeship Council had been urging a prompt settlement of the question.

Under the Agreement, Japan will make available in grants ($5 million) for purchase in Japan of goods and services to be used for the welfare of the inhabitants of the Trust Territory.

The accord stipulated that products and services be supplied over a three-year period from the time when both parties to the agreement completed domestic arrangements for the disbursement of the money.

The two countries agreed that the question of the disposition of properties and claims between Japan and the Trust Territory had been settled finally.

Article 4 of the Treaty of Peace with Japan called for making special arrangements for the settlement of the question. Because of this, the matter was raised repeatedly at the UN Trusteeship Council to Japan's embarrassment.

Japan had been taking the stand that it had no legal obligation to pay compensation for the damage suffered by the inhabitants of the area consisting of three island groups. It agreed, however, on making the contribution on an ex-gratia basis since it thought the contribution would meet the interests of not only the Trust Territory but also Japan.

The Trust Territory, composed of the Mariana, Caroline and Marshal island groups, now attracts an increasing number of Japanese tourists. It is also a good market for Japanese goods.

C. Steel Merger Plans Abandoned: The two giant steel mills, Yawata and Fuji, unable to meet the demands of the Fair Trade Commission, have abandoned plans for their merger into a new mammoth Shin Nippon Seitetsu (New Japan Iron and Steel) which would have become the world's second largest steel maker.

The decision was announced after the Presidents of the two companies had conferred till the early hours of May 10. While temporarily cancelling the merger plan the two firms, however, made known their determination to take the Fair Trade Commission's decision to court and fight it out there.

Yawata and Fuji had signed the merger agreement in March after the Commission had indicated there was likely to be no objection from it if certain conditions were met so that there would be no contravention of Anti-Monopoly Law of which FTC is the watchdog (see page 8924). The conditions were that corrective measures be taken so as not to corner monopolistic share of market in four items, namely, railway rails, tin-plate for cans, pig-iron for casting and sheet piles.

The merger had been backed by the Ministry of International Trade and Industry as well as business and industrial circles and it had been generally expected that FTC, which many quarters regard as toothless, would give its approval. Therefore, it came as a surprise when FTC rejected the merger proposal on grounds that it realised it was likely to stifle free competition in the four items mentioned. FTC also took the further precautionary step of taking court injunction against the two firms going ahead with the merger, ignoring its recommendation.

D. Aid To Indonesia: Japan has decided to extend a total of $120 million in economic aid to Indonesia for fiscal 1969.

The Japanese commitment includes $55 million in food aid. Japan has so far loaned some $200 million to Indonesia.

Mr. Shichiro Murai, Director of the International Finance Bureau, Finance Ministry, explained to the Upper House Finance Committee on May 15 that Indonesia had a total debt of about $2,500 million at present. Of the amount, she owed about $200 million to Japan.

He said that of the total amount borrowed by Indonesia, about $1,200 million came from the Western countries and some $1,300 million from the Communist bloc.

KOREA (North)

A. President N. Podgorny's Visit: The President of the Soviet Union, Mr. Nikolai Podgorny, paid a goodwill visit to North Korea from May 14 to 19.

Observers attached considerable significance to the visit in view of the ideological quarrel between the Soviet Union and China.

A communique issued in Pyongyang on the conclusion of the visit said the Soviet Union and North Korea re-affirmed their support for non-interference in the internal affairs of "brother parties and brother countries," as well as for other principles governing relations between Socialist States.

According to Tass, the communique said that Mr. Podgorny had discussed the future development of relations between the two countries during meetings with the Premier, Mr. Kim Il Sung, who is also the First Secretary of the North Korean Workers' (Communist) Party.

Mr. Podgorny supported North Korea's policy on the question of re-uniting Korea, backed the demand for the withdrawal of American forces from South Korea and called for the dissolution of the so-called United Nations Committee for the Re-unification of Korea (UNCRK).

The two parties also re-affirmed their support for the struggle of the Viet-Namese people as well as for the peace plan submitted by the North Viet-Namese and South Viet-Namese NLF delegations to the Paris peace talks.

KOREA (South)

A. Death Penalty For North Korean Journalist: A North Korean journalist, Mr. Soo-Kuen Lee, who was arrested in Saigon in January, 1969 after acting as an under-cover agent for 22 months in South Korea, was sentenced to death in Seoul on May 10.

The Seoul district court accepted prosecution charges that Mr. Lee (45), former Vice-President of the North Korean Central News Agency, defeated when he crossed the border at the armistice village of Pan Mun Jon in March, 1967.

Senior Judge Sang-Won Lee told the court that the journalist as an agent of North Korea had betrayed the nation.

Five other defendants were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 18 months to six years for assisting Mr. Lee.

LAOS

A. North Viet-Namese Envoy Meets Prince Souvanna Phouma: North Viet-Nam's special envoy, Mr. Le Van Hien, met the Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, in Vientiane in the third week of May.

Western newsmen quoting high-ranking Laotian Government sources said that Mr. Le Van Hien had told the Prince that North Viet-Namese forces might withdraw if the United States stopped bombing Pathet Lao-held areas in the North. There were no independent suggestions that USA would stop the bombing, which was directed against routes including the so-called Ho Chi-Minh Trail, over which the North Viet-Namese reportedly send men and supplies to South Viet-Nam.

In a Press interview later, Mr. Hien described his visit to Laos—the second in nearly four years—as a "special mission." "I have tried to strengthen the ties between our two Governments."

He said that before leaving Laos he would meet Mr. Pheng Phongsavan, the Minister of the Interior and Vice-President of the neutralist Party, who is regarded as the only original member of the 1962 coalition who has preserved his neutralist stance.

He also expressed North Viet-Namese support for Prince Souvanna Phouma. "We have always recognized the Premier as head of the tripartite coalition," he said, reversing a policy that until recently had led all North Viet-Namese diplomats in Laos to avoid contact with the Premier and his Government.

The North Viet-Nam News Agency reported on May 12 that King Savang Vatthana had spoken of good relations between Laos and North Viet-Nam in a message to President Ho Chi-Minh.

BURMA

A. National Unity Advisory Committee's Report: The 33-member National Unity Advisory Committee, appointed in December, 1968 to present by May 31, 1969 constitutional proposals for achieving lasting national unity, has submitted its report to the Government.

Among the members of the Committee are the former Premier, U Nu and U Ba Swe, and the ex-President, Mahn Win Maung.

Addressing a meeting of the Committee on June 2, the Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, Gen. Ne Win, said the Government would study the report with great care and "would do whatever is necessary." He preferred to call this report a "document" instead of a "report" as the latter connoted the submission of a proposal from an inferior to a superior entity.

Speaking about the interim proposal of the Committee, presented on February 5 for the formation of a provisional national Government, he said such a move would serve no useful purpose unless the goal of the Government and the means of achieving it had first been agreed upon.

He said that former political Governments came to grief precisely because they lacked a specific goal and an agreed means to achieve it. "This does not mean we want to monopolize political power", he said, adding that when the present proposals were submitted to the people and their decision taken on things like policy and programme, everyone would have a share of political power.

Later in the day (June 2), the Government released the Committee's report. The 64-page report contains two alternative proposals—one for democratic socialism and the other for socialist democracy.

The proposal for democratic socialism, made by 17 members of the Committee including Mahn Win Maung, envisages the transformation of Gen. Ne Win's Revolutionary Government into a Union National Government with members drawn from the Army, national minority races, former politicians and other suitable people.

A Union National Front is also to be formed on similar lines by Gen. Ne Win to draft a Constitution for a "Republic of the Union of Burma". This draft will be the basis of a final draft to be prepared by the Union National Government. The people's acceptance of this final draft will then be secured through presentation to a Constituent Assembly or through direct referendum. Before this last step is taken, party politics are to be allowed within the frame-work to be determined by the Union National Government.

To achieve internal security and peace, the proposal envisages negotiations with underground insurgents at the appropriate time and release of deserving political prisoners.

On the subject of national economy, the proposal recommends the introduction of "mixed economy" and the retention of only key sectors in production, commerce and transport for State operations.

It also recommends review of all nationalized industries by an expert committee and the exemption of certain business owned by Burmese nationals from nationalization. Such exemption should carry a 15-year guarantee.

U Kyaw Nyein, one-time Deputy Premier, and two others recommended a unitary State.

The proposal for socialist democracy, made by only seven members of the Committee, envisages the holding of a "national unity convention" to draw up a "common national programme". A "National Unity Front" is also to be created by Gen. Ne Win to carry out that common national programme. The Burma Socialist Programme Party of the Revolutionary Government and the newly-formed National Unity Front with them together constitute a National Unity Government.

Concern At U Nu's Activities:

Meanwhile, in a talk to men of the 77th Division taking part in successful operations against Communist rebels recently, Brig. San Yu, Vice-Chief of Staff and member of the Revolutionary Council, claimed that certain elements ousted from political power had been trying to use religion to stage a come-back.

Observers said the reference was to U Nu, who had lately given several public lectures on Buddhism in Rangoon, Mandalay, Moulmein and other large towns. His appearances had drawn large audiences.

[U Nu subsequently announced in a Press interview in Bombay where he had gone in the course of a tour of sacred Buddhist places in India that he would like to settle down in India as a missionary.]

Brig. San Yu's remarks, according to observers, revealed that the Government viewed U Nu's religious meetings with real concern and virtual disapproval. The Press followed up his remarks with condemnation of the former Premier's speeches.

The Guardian (Rangoon) asked: "Does any one in his senses sincerely expect the people to wish for a revival of a system (U Nu's parliamentary democracy) which bred regional bosses who committed heinous crimes with impunity and which...gave a free hand to foreign commericialists, specifically the Indians and Chinese, who placated the political chiefs with generous donations?" This was a thinly veiled reference to U Nu who had received large donations from foreign commercial interests when he built the World Peace Pagoda and the sacred Buddhist Cave while still Prime Minister.

B. Government Takes Over Printing Presses: The Government took over on May 16 four more printing presses in Rangoon, including the Rangoon Gazette of pre-War days.

The nationalization of these presses had been expected ever since the take-over of 12 similar presses in March.

The statistics of nationalization since the Revolutionary Government assumed power in 1962 are as follows:

Altogether 31 banks (both foreign and Burmese-owned), 52 saw-mills, 124 cinema halls, five newspapers, seven cigarette manufacturing firms, 24 shipping companies (both Burmese and foreign-owned), 814 private schools (including missionary schools), seven private hospitals and 168 miscellaneous industrial and manufacturing concerns were taken over by the State.

In addition, the Government had nationalized the Army-financed Burma Economic Development Corporation (BEDC) and its 42 subsidiary firms and factories, the Burma Oil Company and the oil industry, the Burma Pearls and Fisheries Syndicate, the Burma Corporation Ltd (which worked the Bawdwin lead mines), and the Burma Unilever Soap Factory.

The Government had also acquired the monopoly of foreign trade, a good proportion of the integral distribution trade, and of mining 18 specified kinds of gems.

C. Thai Fears Of Chinese Infiltration Scouted: The Press has scouted fears of massive infiltration of Chinese forces into Northern Burma as expressed by the Thai Foreign Minister, Mr. Thanat Khoman, in Bangkok on May 8 (see page 8999).

To most people in Burma, the report became known only when a columnist gave a full translation of a BBC commentary made three days later on Mr. Thanat Khoman's views.

The commentator said that Kachin State in Northern Burma had been in an unsettled state since Burma attained Independence (21 years ago). Kachin insurgents had been known to seek aid from China and to send their men to China for training. Chinese soldiers had also been known to enter Northern Burma, and Kachin villagers had been moving freely in the Sino-Burmese border region. Therefore, he argued, Mr. Thanat Khoman's allegation that China had "constructed battalions" in Kachin State seemed a bit exaggerated and reflected the Thai apprehension about possible developments in the region in future. The Thai Minister's statement, he explained, might have been an attempt "to prepare world opinion against Peking and Hanoi on the eve of the S-EATO Conference and the meeting of the allied Powers of the Viet-Nam war."

The Burmese Press promptly discredited the report. The Rangoon Daily, for example, argued that if the story were true, the news should have come straight from the countries concerned, namely, Burma and Laos. And even if the Thai Foreign Minister wanted to be the first with the news, he should have sought prior confirmation from the Governments of these two countries. As he had failed to do so, his "irresponsible words" would fail to carry much weight in the countries concerned.

The paper added that China had no reason to send her forces into Burmese territory, and if she should do so, she would be guilty of aggression. What Peking had been doing was merely to voice support for the insurgent Burma Communist Party and to give training to Burmese Communists in China.

A staff columnist writing in the official Working People's Daily (Burmese language) viewed the entire matter from a slightly different angle. "If there had been massive Chinese infiltration into Kachin State, the news should have come from that State, but why should it come from Bangkok through the mouth of the Thai Foreign Minister?" he asked. "And why did the BBC take upon itself the trouble of explaining away the possible motive of the Foreign Minister in making his alarmist report?"

The columnist questioned the good faith of the BBC itself over the comment that Kachin State had been in trouble since Burma gained Independence. "Does it mean to say that the Kachins have been dissatisfied since the departure of the British? Would it not be more correct to say that Kachin disaffection began only from the time the issues of State religion and Federalism disrupted national unity?" (These controversial constitutional issues were hotly debated during the time of the former Prime Minister, U Nu).

D. Citizenship For Foreigners: The Government has announced that citizenship will be granted to 60,000 foreigners living in Burma.

This has been viewed by observers as a direct consequence of the visit to Burma in March of the Indian Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi. The majority of foreigners in Burma are Indian.

The largest concentration of Indians is in Zeyawaddy (35,000) and Kyautaga (25,000) in the Pegu division. The inhabitants of these two towns are mainly peasants, the Indian population's ancestors having migrated about a century ago.

The official Working People's Daily, commenting on the Government decision, said: "We are quite willing to treat foreigners as friends, or to leave them alone as long as they do not interfere in our affairs, usurp our economy or infringe our national independence." As for foreigners who desired to be nationals of Burma, the newspaper said: "Mere declarations, verbal or in writing, are not sufficient; they must identify themselves in all national activities for national welfare."

CAMBODIA

A. West Germany Closes Embassy: West Germany announced on June 4 the closing of its Embassy in Cambodia in retaliation for Cambodian recognition of East Germany (see page 9003).

[In another development in Bonn the same day (June 4), the West German Foreign Minister, Mr. Willy Brandt, received the Rumanian Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr. Gheorge Macuvescu, whose country had maintained diplomatic relations with East Germany for years. The explanation of this anomaly given by a West German Government spokesman at a news conference was that the Bonn authorities reserved the right to determine who was friendly and who was being hostile towards the divided German nation. This was the original meaning of the so-called Hallstein doctrine of 1955 which stated that the countries that recognized the East Berlin regime committed an "unfriendly act" towards Germany as a whole. It was named after Walter Hallstein.]

Earlier, on May 14, the Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, told a news conference that West Germany had shown "Big-Power chauvinism" in its reaction to Cambodia's diplomatic recognition of East Germany. He said the Bonn reaction indicated that economic aid to Cambodia might be suspended. But, he added: "We accept the stopping of this aid with a light heart."

Meanwhile, in a telegram to the Chairman of the Council of State of the German Democratic Republic (East Germany), Mr. Walter Ulbricht, the Prince expressed the hope that relations between Cambodia and GDR would be further strengthened.

Referring to the decision to raise the status of relations to Ambassadorial level, the Prince said: "We wish that this decision may serve Cambodian-German friendship and lead to the strengthening of co-operation between our two States. I am glad to be able to express once again on this occasion our heartfelt gratitude for the unreserved support which GDR extended to our policy of complete independence, neutrality and territorial integrity."

After extending diplomatic recognition to GDR, Prince Norodom Sihanouk sent his Foreign Minister, Mr. Norodom Phurissara, on an official visit to GDR in response to an invitation from the East German Foreign Minister, Mr. Otto Winzer. This was the first visit by a South Asian Foreign Minister to GDR.

CEYLON

A. National Youth Service Scheme: A National Youth Service Scheme was formally inaugurated on April 26 by the Prime Minister, Mr. Dudley Senanayake, at Kota Vehera, the birthplace of the 12th century Sinhalese King, Parakrame Bahu the Great.

Under the Scheme, young men and women would be engaged in development work and given a token payment of Rs. 3 for each day's work. A year's satisfactory performance would entitle each youth to a place in residential training centres where he or she would be equipped with a skill that would build a career.

Mr. Senanayake asked the youth to nurture a sense of loyalty and dedication to the country. Despite Ceylon being free for 21 years after four centuries of foreign domination, she was still unable to claim total independence because there were several ingredients of freedom which were lacking. His Government, during its present four-year regime, was attempting to rectify this state of affairs primarily through the food drive, which had proved to be a tremendous success, and was now implementing various other development projects.

He said sowing of seeds of dissension and hatred was one of the biggest stumbling blocks the country had to contend with. But his Government had overcome it.

The problem of unemployment, though it looked formidable, required only a simple formula for solution, and that was national development. His Government was trying to solve this problem.

The Mahaweli diversion scheme, the plans for which he finalised recently, would bring a further 10,00,000 acres of paddy fields under cultivation. The country now had 5,00,000 acres under the plough and this new venture would bring new prosperity to the land. It would also help solve many problems the country was faced with today.

CHINA

A. Syrian Military Delegation's Visit: A Syrian military delegation visited Peking from May 13 to 21.

Commentators in Beirut said the visit was part of Syrian efforts to secure arms, including missiles, from Peking as it had failed to obtain them from Moscow.

The Syrian Chief of Staff, Gen. Moustapha Tlas, who led the delegation, had talks with Chinese leaders including the Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai.

Speaking at a reception on May 21, the Chief of the General Staff, Gen. Huang Yung-sheng, declared that the Chinese armed forces would do "everything possible" in the Arab struggle against Israeli aggression. He hoped relations between the armed forces of the two countries would further develop "in our common struggle against American imperialism, Soviet revisionism and their lackeys." It was China's international duty to help those peoples who were "struggling for liberation."

Gen. Tlas said that Syria "placed no hope" in the November 22, 1967 resolution of the United Nations Security Council on West Asia because the resolution was "fundamentally in the service of Israel and designed to perpetuate Israel's settlement in the heartland of the Arab nation."

He said Syrians were determined to rely first on themselves and then on their friends, especially China, for the common struggle against "imperialism" as the foundation of friendship between China and Syria.

He said Chinese policy on Israel was regarded by 100 million Arabs "as an expression of the true revolutionary spirit."

FORMOSA

A. World Bank Loan For Railways: The World Bank announced on May 28 a loan of $31.2 million to Formosa in continuance of its support to the programme of expansion and modernization of the railways operated by the Taiwan Railway Administration (TRA).

This was the Bank's third loan for the railways. A loan of $20 million made in 1965 was intended to cover TRA's foreign exchange requirements for the four-year period 1965-68. Traffic increased at twice the rate originally expected and in 1968 a second loan, of $17.5 million, was made to finance equipment urgently needed in 1967 and 1968.

The rapid growth of the Island's economy, particularly in the industrial sector, had led to an increased demand for public services. Transportation and electric power were the most crucial. Inland transport requirements were mostly concentrated within a corridor extending 250 miles along the western plain and containing most of the country's large cities. TRA's main railway line passed through this corridor serving 80 per cent of the population. A shorter and separate line through a narrow valley served the east side of the Island. The railways carried the bulk of the freight traffic and about half the long-distance passenger traffic. Road transport was still largely confined to short distances and local traffic.

TRA had now drawn up a revised capital investment plan for the period 1969-72 and the new Bank loan would be used for expenditures on high priority items to be imported during 1969 and 1970. TRA's total expenditures during those two years would amount to $86 million, of which $54 million would be in foreign exchange.

The new Bank loan would pay for the acquisition of 18 diesel electric locomotives, 268 passenger cars, 600 freight cars, track, signalling and workshop equipment, and various miscellaneous items, and the foreign exchange costs of consultants' services and staff training. The consultants would make a feasibility study of the electrification of TRA's main line, introduce a modern traffic cost accounting system, and help to establish a railway planning unit for which some TRA staff would be trained abroad.

The loan was made for 15-1/2 years, including a 3-1/2-year grace period, with interest at 6-1/2 per cent. The Government would re-lend the proceeds to the Taiwan Railway Administration on the same terms. The New York agency of the Bank of China was participating in the loan to the extent of $100,000.

MONGOLIA (Outer)

A. President N. Podgorny's Visit: The Soviet President, Mr. Nikolai Podgorny, visited Mongolia from May 20 to 24.

An official communique issued in Ulan Bator on May 25 said he had exchanged views with Mongolian leaders on a wide range of issues. The talks "confirmed the complete identity of views of the two sides in their appraisal of the present international situation."

It accused China of "Great-Power chauvinism" and condemned Peking for the border incidents with the Soviet Union.

It said that the "aggressive imperialist forces are stubbornly trying to hinder mankind's advance along the road of peace and social progress, are aggravating the international situation and creating dangerous hotbeds of armed clashes in various parts of the world."

It said: "USSR and the Mongolian People's Republic condemned the continuing aggression of the United States and its allies in Viet-Nam. The two sides believe that the troops of the United States and its allies must be unconditionally and completely withdrawn from South Viet-Nam.

"The sides again strongly condemned the Israeli aggression and stated that first of all the aggressor's troops must be withdrawn from all occupied Arab territories in order to ensure a relaxation of tensions in the Near East.

"The two sides expressed their full support for the just struggle of the Korean Democratic People's Republic and the Korean people for a peaceful unification of their country, for a withdrawal of American troops now occupying South Korea.

"The two sides expressed the conviction that the Great-Power chauvinistic course of the Chinese leadership damages the struggle of socialist countries and all genuinely revolutionary forces against imperialism and its aggressive designs. The provocations staged by the Chinese authorities on the Soviet-Chinese border are proof of the adventurism of the Chinese policy directed at aggravating international tensions.

"The recognition of the fact of the existence of two German States—the GDR and the FRG—respect of the inviolability of the existing borders in Europe, renunciation by the FRG of its claims to represent the entire German nation, the renunciation by the FRG of its intention to possess nuclear weapons, the development of extensive and mutually advantageous co-operation between all European States are, the sides believe, a prime condition of preserving and ensuring European security.

"Coming out for the speediest implementation of the Treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons, the Governments of the Mongolian People's Republic and USSR stated their readiness to exert further efforts directed at ensuring general and complete disarmament, which is an important condition of establishing durable peace.

"The two sides unanimously stressed the great importance of the forthcoming Conference of Communist and Workers' Parties in Moscow for the further strengthening of the cohesion of the world communist and workers' movement on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

"The two sides expressed firm conviction that the international communist movement will rally its ranks even more closely and score new successes in uniting democratic and progressive forces of the world into a single anti-imperialist front."

NEPAL

A. Gorkhas Being Recruited In Chinese Army: It was disclosed in Khatmandu on May 28 that even as the British Government was steadily reducing the number of Gorkhas in its defence forces, China was showing increasing interest in recruiting them in the Red Army.

The Nepal Government, however, had shown little interest in the reported Chinese desire to enlist Gorkha soldiers. Nor would it relax its present policy prohibiting recruitment, directly or indirectly, of Gorkhas in the armed forces of any foreign Power. Whatever arrangements for such extra-territorial recruitment exist at present would be allowed to lapse.

This policy would be adhered to even in the case of the British Government, with which Nepal had had a long-standing arrangement for Gorkha participation in the British Army. The Gorkhas had formed a prized component of the British Army for many decades.

[The British Government, which had decided to withdraw gradually from the Asian region and the Indian Ocean, began to reduce the size of the Gorkha component in its armed forces. From about 200,000 during World War II the strength of Nepali Gorkha troops in the British Army had fallen to 15,000, and with further demobbing, there would be hardly be more than 10,000 of them left to fight under the Union Jack. The last instalment of demobbing of 5,000 Gorkhas took place in April this year. At the same time, the British Government had launched a number of projects in Nepal for the rehabilitation of Gorkhas demobbed from its forces.]

B. Stainless Steel And Synthetic Fibre Industries — Foreign Exchange Frozen: On May 27, Nepal froze the foreign exchange allocation for indigenous entrepreneurs turning out synthetic fibre and stainless steel items at factories located on the India-Nepal border.

This was done to comply with the agreement arrived at with India to restrict the flow of these items into India to the 1967-68 level.

The agreement, worked out by the joint inter-Governmental Committee on Trade in November, 1968, envisaged that fibre exports should be limited to 2.2 million metres valued at Rs. 1.12 crores, and stainless steel items to 630 tons valued at Rs. 2.32 crores.

Despite this agreement, which Nepal claimed to be implementing in good faith, misgivings continued to be voiced by affected Indian interests. This had caused a good deal of resentment in Nepal, where the authorities had informally protested to Indian Government representatives over the provocative tone of some Indian trade advertisements on this subject.

C. Unsuccessful Bid To Climb "Annapurna": It was disclosed in Khatmandu on May 28 that a nine-member German expedition to the Annapurna had finally given up its bid to climb the 26,657-foot peak.

The expedition had made two attempts to scale the mountain on May 13 and 19 but had failed both times owing to unfavourable weather and mountain conditions.

"Deotiba" Peak Climbed:

A five-member Japanese team succeeded in climbing the 19,687-foot Deotiba peak.

The party included one Indian, Capt. N. P. Raja, and three Sherpas, who also climbed the peak. The Japanese members were Akiraokoyama, Y. Kawasakin, Y. Kawaguchi, K. Yano and S. Sirahata.

PAKISTAN

A. Consortium Aid: Members of the Aid Consortium, at a meeting called by the World Bank in Paris, on May 20 decided that in 1969-70 Pakistan could effectively use external aid totalling $500 million on suitable terms from them.

Half of this aid would be in the form of non-project assistance.

It was agreed that the terms should take into account Pakistan's ability to reduce external debt. Some members indicated a move in this direction and it was decided that the question should be studied further by the Consortium.

A World Bank communique said that the Consortium members commended Pakistan's performance in the face of difficult problems of economic management and pointed out that despite recent disturbances the total output had increased by nearly six per cent and agricultural production by about five per cent. Exports were up by nearly 10 per cent and industrial production by more than eight per cent.

The Consortium members, the communique said, were interested in the measures and policy changes envisaged in preparing the annual plan for 1969-70 and the Fourth Five-Year Plan.

France was among the members who were able to pledge their contribution which will remain unchanged at the level of $15 million. Other figures were not disclosed.

The participants of the meeting were Belgium, Canada, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherland, Sweden, Britain, USA as well as representatives of the World Bank.

Annual Plan Approved:

Earlier, on May 7 in Rawalpindi, the National Economic Council—the supreme body in economic matters—approved the annual development Plan, aiming at a 6.5 per cent growth rate of 7 per cent for East Pakistan, and 6 per cent for West Pakistan.

The Gross National Product (growth rate) in 1968-69 has been estimated at 6 per cent, which means the target for the next year is one per cent higher.

The Council approved the following targets for the Annual Plan for 1969-70:

Agriculture: Wheat—seven million tons, against 6.5 million tons this year; rice (East Pakistan)—12.3 million tons, against 10.9 million tons this year; rice (West Pakistan)—2.3 million tons, up from 21.1 million tons; cotton (West Pakistan)—3/2 million bales, up from three million bales; jute (East Pakistan)—seven million tons, up from 5.9 million tons.

Industry: All manufacturing industry 10 per cent, growth, large scale industry 12 per cent growth.

Exports: An increase of nine per cent to a figure of Rs. 450 crores, compared to Rs. 412 crores actual for 1968-69, against a target of Rs. 415 crores. The actual exports in 1967-68 were Rs. 375 crores.

The Secretary of the Planning Division, Mr. Qamrul Islam said East Pakistan continued to face certain problems. Among these he listed: (1) stagnation in agriculture, (2) lack of the proper level of private enterprise and investment, and (3) transport bottlenecks.

QATAR

A. Talks On Federation Of Persian Gulf Emirates: The Supreme Council of the Federation of Persian Gulf Emirates met in Qatar from May 6 to 14 and discussed the structure of the Federation.

A communique issued at the close of the discussions on May 14 said: "A President and Vice-President of the Federation will be elected for a term of two years.

"The present Federal Council will be replaced by a Council of Ministers of 13 members.

"The Federation will have a common flag for international representation and each Emirate will retain its present flag.

"A commission composed of jurists and experts has been created to draw up a provisional Constitution to be ready in two months."

The Council also approved the creation of two new commissions—one to be concerned with emigration and nationality and the other to co-ordinate "organs of information."

Several other items on the agenda were discussed without any decisions being reached. These included choice of a capital for the Federation, creation of a National Consultative Assembly and questions of defence.

At the end of the meeting, several delegates expressed disappointment about slowness of the progress and said setting up of the Federation risked being blocked because of what they described as the stubbornness shown by certain Emirates, including Bahrain, regarding their prerogative within the Federation.

The next meeting of the Federal Council will be held at Abu Dhabi at a date to be fixed later.

Earlier, on May 10, the Supreme Council decided to apply for UN membership.

It also decided to form a common Federation Army based on the local troops formerly led by British officers and known as the "Trucial Scouts." The Army will receive the technical and arms equipment of the British land, sea and air forces stationed in the area.

[The rich oil-producing areas—the Emirates of Bahrain and Qatar, as well as the Sheikhdom of Abu Dhabi—are resisting the plan to put all their funds into a common pool and use them for the Federation as a whole. Side by side with the oil Emirates which live in untold wealth are territories which have no income whatsoever. The Federation of what will be the 15th Arab State will include the nine Arab territories along the Persian Gulf still under British protection, the Emirates of Bahrain and Qatar and the seven Sheikhdoms along the Trucial Coast.]

SYRIA

A. President N. Atassi Forms Leftist Government: The President, Mr. Nureddin Atassi, on May 29 formed a new broader Leftist Government to bring about domestic reforms and seek union with the UAR, Iraq and Algeria.

But the new Cabinet structure spelt out no change in Syria's foreign policies or its rejection of a peaceful settlement of the Arab-Israeli crisis.

The 27-member Cabinet was dominated by the Arab Socialist Baath Party which had been ruling Syria since 1963. Two-thirds of the seats went to Baathist leaders including Mr. Atassi who retained the Prime Ministership, and Air General Hafez el Assad, Commander of the Air Force, who retained the Defence Ministry.

TURKEY

A. Restoration Of Rights To Democrats: The National Assembly, by a two-thirds majority on May 14, amended the 1961 Constitution restoring to the former members of the Menderes regime, and the men who had been sentenced at Yassada, the political rights denied to them. They were made eligible for public office.

As a result of the amendment, a former President, Mr. Celal Bayar, and 200 other leading members of the Democratic Party who had received harsh sentences after the 1960 coup d'etat (see page 3416) were given back all their political rights.

Mr. Bayar (84) is eligible to sit in the Senate immediately (by terms of the Constitution, former Heads of State are automatically life-time members of Parliament). But Mr. Bayar, who had been sentenced to death and then reprieved, said that since he had not been duly elected by the people he would not take advantage of his right. However, it was thought certain he would run for Parliament at the next elections and would almost certainly win a seat.

The amendment was proposed by members of Prime Minister Demirel's Justice Party and supported by virtually all the Opposition headed by former President Ismet Inonu.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. "Apollo-10" Orbits Round Moon Close-Range And Returns: The Apollo-10 to orbit the Moon for eight days and with a lunar module Snoopy fly within 15 kilometres of the Moon, to prepare the ground for the landing of two men on the planet in July or August, landed on May 18, successfully performed its mission to a 110 per cent degree and splashed down in the Pacific Ocean near Pago Pago at early dawn on May 26.

The crew consisted of Air Force Col. Thomas P. Stafford, Navy Commander J. W. Young and Navy Commander Eugene A. Cernan.

Apollo-10 crashed into the Earth's atmosphere at 36.310 feet per second (39.850 km or 24.760 miles an hour).

Before plunging into the atmosphere, it jettisoned its service module containing the main engine, leaving the command capsule alone over the western Australian coast.

The spacecraft made its perfect splash-down in full view of the recovery carrier Princeton.

A recovery helicopter landed the astronauts on the Princeton 12 minutes after their recovery from the space-craft. A red carpet was rolled out for them.

All the three men emerged smiling and waving to their rescuers and to a world television audience.

Col. Thomas Stafford said: "First of all, it's great to be back on Earth. We thank all on Earth who helped our tremendous team effort and we hope we have added to man's knowledge."

The "better than perfect" mission of Apollo-10, as space officials described it, it was said, opened wide the door for an American landing on the Moon on July 20.

NASA spokesmen said that the eight-day trip to the Moon and back, Apollo-10's loops around the Moon and the swoop down to 9.4 miles above the lunar surface by the Moon-landing module added up to the "best year" in USA's space programme. Excellent performance by the two-seated lunar module, with Col. Stafford and Cmdr. Cernan inside was the high point of the mission.

Apollo-10 was launched on May 18 from Houston. The Saturn-5 rocket engines, the world's mightiest, thundered to life and bathed the launch complex in fire. The spacecraft—with its human cargo strapped inside the tiny command module cone on top—stood motionless for nine seconds while the rockets strained to their peak of power.

The space-craft was speared into a 115-by-118-mile Earth orbit. The crew rode in orbit aboard the command module at the head of a bullet-like space-craft that included the lunar model—housed in petal-like aluminium panels—and the S4B third stage booster rocket. For three days the three space-men soared outward on a quarter-million-mile journey across trackless space and then fired themselves into an orbit 69 miles above the lunar surface.

During 2½ days of circling the Moon, Col. Stafford and Comm. Cernan flew a spidery lunar landing craft to within 50,000 feet of the surface, scouting the site where two Apollo-11 astronauts would land on July 20. They dropped the descent stage of the lunar module, fired the ascent stage engine to lower their orbit and flashed again behind the Moon. There, they fired the rocket engine again to line them up for rejoining Comm. Young in the command module. Two more rocket bursts brought the two space-craft to a rendezvous and Comm. Young guided the command module to a final linking. Col. Stafford and Comm. Cernan crawled back into the command module and the lunar module separated, ignited its engine on signal and rocketed out of sight into a solar orbit.

Then, Apollo-10 crewmen spent another day in orbit about the Moon, performing photography experiments and gaining vital data about navigation around the Moon. After some 60 hours of circling the Moon, the crew started the longest trip home.

The Moon is farther from Earth now than it was during the December, 1968 Moon flight of Apollo-8. They then fired the service propulsion engine to break the gravitational lock of the Moon and flashed towards the Earth 423,000 kilometres away. It took 54 hours to return to Earth. The space-craft came scorching back into the Earth's atmosphere at more than 37,000 km an hour for a landing in the South Pacific not far from American Samoa.

LEM Descends To 9.3 Miles Above Moon:

The lunar landing craft (LEM), carrying Col. Thomas P. Stafford and Comm. Eugene Cernan, undocked from the Apollo-10 space-craft on May 23, starting the final phase of man's closest approach to the Moon. Comm. John Young stayed behind in the command ship, ready to rescue the lunar module, if necessary, during their eight-hour separation and LEM's descent to 9.3 miles over the surface.

A problem in alignment of the two space-craft in the docked position had developed just before the scheduled undocking manoeuvre. Apollo-10 was behind the Moon and out of ground contact at the scheduled time of separation.

The hazardous LEM manoeuvre provided the climax of the Apollo-10 mission.

During the eight hours the mother ship and the Moon taxi were separated, Col. Stafford and Comm. Cernan descended to within 15 km of the Moon. They gathered data, took pictures and conducted radar tests which were considered vital to the July, 1969 landing attempt.

The lunar module went out of control briefly just before the second low pass over the Moon. Col. Stafford and Comm. Cernan separated the upper stage of the craft and suddenly found themselves in trouble.

The small space-ship started rolling wildly. First indication of the trouble was a surprised "son of a bitch" exclamation from Comm. Cernan. Col. Stafford later said the lunar module "just took off on us."

Officials later said the uncontrolled roll was caused by a switch being in the wrong position. Ground controllers said the switch was omitted from a check list read up to the lunar module crew earlier.

When told of it, Col. Stafford said: "Okay, we'll try to correct it. I thought we went through the check list as prescribed."

During the eight hours in which Col. Stafford and Comm. Cernan swooped within 15 km of the Moon's surface, Apollo-10 demonstrated that the lunar landing ship (LEM) will operate in the Moon's environment. It also determined that the landing site chosen for the first American astronauts was smooth enough for a touch-down, but that the pilots would have to be very accurate to avoid surrounding boulders and craters.

It also showed dramatically that man can overcome problems in space and save a mission from potential disaster, where instruments alone might fail.

Less than an hour after the lunar lander docked with the big ship, Col. Stafford and Comm. Cernan crawled back into the command module. The LEM was then kicked off free in space.

They had been as much as 563 km apart as Comm. Young kept the command ship circling at a constant attitude of 111 km.

"Snoopy and Charlie Brown are hugging each other," was the exalted cry of Comm. Young.

Those are the radio code names used by the two vehicles.

"That rendezvous was the best we've ever had," Col. Stafford reported. "We were right up the tail all the way."

It was a rendezvous that almost did not take place. Two-and-a-half hours before the command and lunar modules were to undock, the astronauts reported a problem in depressurizing the tunnel that connects the two. Corrective action to overcome this caused the docking rings between the two vehicles to slip out of alignment by three degrees.

As Apollo-10 disappeared behind the backside of Moon, out of radio contact for the critical separation, mission control advised the astronauts not to undock if the rings moved another three degrees.

For 40 minutes ground controllers held their breath until Apollo-10 came around to the front side again. There was elation when tracking picked up two separate objects. Then the word from Comm. Cernan: "We have joined."

Possible Landing Sites On Moon:

On May 22, the astronauts said that the site where the Americans plan to land on the Moon on July 20 was "pretty smooth", and another potential touch-down area further east had "enough boulders to fill up Galveston Bay (in Texas)."

Swooping in the LEM less than 16 km above the two landing sites, Comm. Cernan said the areas were "very distinguishable," thus meeting a prime requirement of being easy to find.

The primary target, named Site-2 and located near the lunar equator, also on the Sea of Tranquillity, he said, "looks pretty smooth, surprisingly enough."

Landing Site No. 2 has been chosen as the spot for Apollo-11 touch-down more for operational and crew safety than in the interest of science.

Despite risky problems and a hair-raising moment of "gyration," the project officials said they knew of nothing which happened during Apollo-10's rendezvous with the Moon to prevent a lunar landing on July 20.

"Everything really performed," said Flight Director Glynn C. Lunney. "I think we have something to learn about using the communications, but we always do."

"As a result of what happened today, our stock has gone up," agreed a high-level source. "There is a feeling of optimism."

Discomfort Caused By Insulating Material:

The astronauts disclosed for the first time on May 23 that they had been itching and scratching, sneezing and coughing in space for the previous three days.

The discomfort of the astronauts was caused by tiny bits of fibreglass insulating material which had broken loose in the space-craft. The loose insulation was from the tunnel and hatch connecting the command and lunar modules. It was apparently blown loose when pressure in the two craft was equalized.

The astronauts also noticed beads of water on a steel rim around the forward hatch. "For that matter the whole tunnel walls are kind of moist," Comm. Young said.

Ground control told the astronauts later not to worry about lack of insulation on the hatch as it had been decided to do away with the material altogether on the next lunar module's hatch.

Major Achievements:

During the eight days in space since their blast-off from Cape Kennedy on May 18, the Apollo-10 astronauts:

(1) Travelled 250,000 miles to the Moon on a course so accurate that only one adjustment was needed;

(2) Orbited the Moon 31 times;

(3) Performed every phase of a manned lunar landing except the actual touch-down;

(4) Flew the lunar lander Snoopy to within 9.5 miles of the lunar surface and linked it up again with the main Apollo craft in the first rendezvous and docking in lunar orbit;

(5) Took hundreds of pictures of the Moon which may shed important scientific light on its nature and origin;

(6) Overcame four problems on the crucial day (May 22), including one which might have prevented their undocking for the swoop on the Moon, and another which caused the space-craft to gyrate on one of the lunar passes; and

(7) Perfected Moon navigation procedures which proved accurate enough to allow the Apollo-11 astronauts to find their landing site.

The Apollo-10 flight round the Moon has been a "110 per cent success," Flight Controller Glynn Lunney told a news conference on May 26.

Dr. Lunney said that the extra 10 per cent success lay in the way the capsule was navigated and in the sighting of objectives on the Moon and Earth alike.

Previous assessments of manned space flights by NASA were: Apollo-7—"101 per cent success; Apollo-8—"even better"; Apollo-9—"at least 100 per cent."

Commenting on the accuracy of the Apollo-10 flight path, ground control remarked: "I guess all that mathematics really works after all."

US-Russian Score-board:

With the flight of Apollo-10, the United States-Russia man-in-space score-board now reads:

	USA	Russia
Manned flights	20	12
Multi-man flights	14	3
Moon orbit flights	2	0
Manned hours in space	4,514	868
Men in space	38	17
Space walks	10	3
Time outside capsule	13 hrs 40 mts
Rendezvous missions	9	3
Manoeuverable spacecraft	16	3
Space link-ups	11	1

B. US Economic Assistance For Asia—President R. Nixon's Message To Congress: President Richard Nixon asked the US Congress on May 29 for $625 million for economic assistance to eight nations in South and West Asia, with India and Pakistan earmarked to receive the greatest share.

A total of $399.5 million was sought for India—a sharp boost over the $205.9 million appropriated for the current fiscal year.

The request for Pakistan amounted to $148.7 million—another sharp increase of over $79.35 million in economic aid appropriated for the current year.

Mr. Nixon's message to Congress said that a few years ago, mass starvation within a decade seemed clearly possible in many poor nations, but today "they stand at least on the threshold of a dramatic break-through in food production."

US officials said the figures being sought for India and Pakistan were within the range of the usual US share of assistance to the two countries in conjunction with the World Bank Consortium. In separate Paris meetings, the industrial nations supporting India's economic growth had received recommendations from the World Bank that $1 billion be contributed and the figure recommended for Pakistan was $500 million. During the current year US contributions fell below the customary 40 per cent. of the aid figure.

However, Greece and Turkey were earmarked for a share of $288 million in military assistance which also was being allocated to two other US allies—South Korea and Formosa.

The US contribution to CENTO was held at a mere $350,000, but $5 million were earmarked for regional programmes.

Under the economic aid programme, Turkey would receive $54.2 million compared with $44 million in the current year. Others would include $5 million for Ceylon in development loans, $7.8 million for Afghanistan, largely for technical assistance, and $1.6 million for Jordan, despite the Arab-Israeli dispute. Nepal would receive $2.5 million in technical assistance.

President Nixon also asked Congress for $2.6 billion in foreign aid—about $900 million more than Congress voted last year—saying the sum was "necessary to meet essential requirements now." "Foreign aid must be viewed as an integral part of our overall effort to achieve a world order of peace and justice." The $2.6 billion included $2.2 billion for US economic assistance to the developing countries, $375 million for arms and $75 million to help start a public corporation to promote private investment in developing lands.

The Nixon programme for the new fiscal year, starting July 1, was about $63 million below what President Lyndon Johnson had proposed. "This request for foreign economic and military assistance is the lowest proposed since the programme began" after World War II, the President said, "but it is about $900 million when Congress cut nearly $1.2 billion off Mr. Johnson's programme. I consider it necessary to meet essential requirements now and to maintain a base for future action."

C. Japan And Outer Mongolia Invited To Disarmament Conference: Disregarding protests by some of the other members, the United States and the Soviet Union on May 23 invited Japan and Outer Mongolia to join the Disarmament Conference when it opened its Summer session on July 3.

The United States, which had proposed the admission of eight new members, including two allies, Japan and the Netherlands, agreed to the two Asian countries because these were the only ones that the Soviet Union was prepared to accept without further consultation.

The decision was not announced by the Conference co-Chairmen, Mr. Adrian S. Fisher of the United States and Mr. Alexei Roshchin of the Soviet Union, until three hours after the Spring session ended, to counter any impression that they had acted arbitrarily.

There was general agreement that Japan, as a great industrial Power, should take part in the negotiations, and it was understood that this would require the admission of a Communist Asian country to maintain the geographical and ideological balance.

However, some members insisted at the closed meeting that Mr. Fisher and Mr. Roshchin should have waited until they could agree on a comprehensive list instead of tackling the expansion problem piecemeal.

Others, including Mr. Nicolae Ecobesco of Romania, insisted that the United Nations General Assembly, which adopted a resolution on December 20, 1961 establishing the "18-nation Disarmament Committee" should give its approval.

Although all the 17 participants in the Conference—France has rejected membership—were picked originally by the United States and the Soviet Union, it meets in the Palais des Nations, Geneva office of United Nations, and is staffed by UN officials.

D. Eugeno Morelli Prize Award To Dr. R. Viswanathan: Dr. Raman Viswanathan, 69-year-old Professor and Emeritus Scientist at the Vallabbhai Patel Chest Institute in Delhi, has been awarded the Eugeno Morelli Prize by the National Academy of Sciences of Italy. He is the first Asian to receive the Prize.

Dr. Viswanathan has been awarded the Prize for his original contribution to the field of chest diseases research. The reward comes as international recognition of his research work over the past many years in distinguishing eosinophilia as a separate clinical entity and describing its pathology.

Only three other medical scientists—Prof. H. W. Knipping of Germany and Prof. Zurini and Prof. G. Daddi, both of Italy—have received the award, made by one of the oldest academies of the world.

Dr. Viswanathan received a cash award of 2 million lira (about Rs. 26,000) from the President of Italy in June.

E. Indus Valley Script—Further Findings: Dr. Asko Parpola, one of the four Finnish scientists who claims to have disciplined the Indus Valley scripts, said in Copenhagen on May 28 he was well aware that there may be strong repercussions from discoveries that the Indus people were Dravidians who knew about astronomy long before the Mesopotamians, and worshipped astral gods identical to Siva and Krishna.

"The discovery of the astral religion of the Proto-Dravidians compels us to reconsider the whole history of astronomy", he said. He agreed that there may be "some trouble" when Hindus realise that their two main Gods are of Dravidian origin.

The discoveries came over the last few months from the decipherment —by Dr. Parpola, his brother Mr. Simo Parpola, Dr. Seppo Koskenniemi and Prof. Pentti Aalto of Copenhagen's Scandinavian Institute of Asian Studies—of the pictographic Rebus-type scripts left by the Indus Valley civilization (see page 8978). Since then, the brothers Parpola and Professor Aalto had gone on using their key, and now in a second paper, have come up with additional discoveries.

The Indus people, or Proto-Dravidians, did astronomical and astrological calculations long before the Sumerians, or the Babylonians, who have so far been considered the fathers of astronomy.

The scripts also revealed that the Proto-Dravidians practised astro-religion and that the gods Siva and Krishna could be traced back to the Indus civilization and the worship of the planets Mars and Saturn. "There is evidence enough to show that the Indus people worshipped stars and especially planets which were comprehended as malignant demons causing evil on earth."

Dr. Parpola emphasized that he and his Finnish partners in the Indus project did not claim that the Indian caste system originated directly in the Indus culture. "We believe there was a combination of the Indus people's religious and professional distinctions and the social system of the invading Aryans."

F. Asian Development Bank Annual Meeting: The second annual meeting of the Board of Governors of the Asian Development Bank (ADB) was held in Sydney from April 10 to 12 with delegates from 33 countries participating.

Among others who attended were 20 observers from countries which were eligible for, or were considering, membership and from various international organizations.

Opening the session, the Australian Governor-General, Lord Casey, said his country's participation in ADB was a useful and "practical extension of Australia's interest in and knowledge of the countries of the Asian area which have been growing for the past 25 years and which I hope and believe will continue to grow."

Governors' Suggestions:

The comments made by the Governors in their individual statements covered a wide ground and a number of specific suggestions in regard to the Bank's operations was made. Some of the suggestions were:

(1) The ordinary resources of the Bank, at the rate of interest which sound banking principles require, must be ameliorated by "a high mix of Special Funds on concessional terms."

(2) It was of utmost importance that the Bank should formulate a set of operating principles to give concrete and tangible expression to the provisions in the Charter which underlined the importance of paying special regard to the needs of the smaller and less developed countries of the region.

(3) According to current regulations, while suppliers of a recipient country were permitted to participate in the competitive biddings, the Bank would only finance the foreign exchange component of the bids if and when they were awarded the bids. In such cases, it would seem desirable for the Bank to consider financing of the local currency component by providing the equivalent in foreign exchange.

(4) It was hoped that the Asian Development Bank would play a crucial role in the gigantic task of post-war reconstruction and development of Viet-Nam and the post-war adjustment of the economies of a large number of regional countries. As a first step, a general survey of the prospective development needs and problems of the region in the decade of 1970's would be highly fruitful for the formulation of the overall strategy of international co-operation through the Bank. This survey may be carried out as a joint regional venture under the sponsorship of the ADB, possibly in co-operation with other international institutions.

(5) A proper balance in the Bank's lending capacity must be achieved. While the Bank sought to develop the agricultural sector in the region, it must necessarily also seek to develop the manufacturing sectors.

(6) As regards the proposed borrowing in capital markets, the Bank should consider short-term issues which could then be refunded when the cost of money, hopefully, eased.

(7) An exchange of views and information concerning development problems, experiences and techniques among the members of the Bank would be invaluable.

(8) Under the Bank's present policy, a commitment charge would be made at a rate of 3/4 of one per cent on the undrawn amount of a loan and such commitment charge would take effect 60 days after the date of the loan agreement. A more equitable basis for assessing commitment charges would be to relate these to an agreed schedule of withdrawals. Under such an agreement, the commitment charge would operate only to the extent that drawings fall behind the agreed schedule of withdrawals.

(9) The Bank must adopt a more liberal policy in regard to financing of the local cost components of projects, especially in the field of drainage and irrigation, new land development and education.

(10) The Bank should assist member-countries in financing educational projects.

(11) The Bank could consider the possibility of setting up a Special Fund for softening the terms of its normal lending. This Fund could be built up from contributions specially made for the purpose and, in due course, from the profits of the Bank itself.

(12) All the resources of the Bank, whether normal or special, should be available equally for loans to and procurement from all the developing members of the Asian region.

(13) The ADB should consider the setting up of suitable export credit re-financing facilities. Another useful avenue which the Bank might explore in the interest of promoting the exports of the developing member-countries would be the arrangement of joint financing of projects in the territories of member-countries.

(14) The Bank might consider making greater use of development finance institutions in the countries of the region as intermediaries.

(15) A beginning may also be made by the Bank for preparing for the consideration of the Board of Governors proposals for investment of funds in the equity capital of institutions and enterprises in the developing countries. Such investments were necessary and would be very welcome.

Hong Kong Becomes Member:

Hong Kong joined the Bank as a member on March 27. Hong Kong's entry raised the Bank's regional membership to 20 and the total membership to 33.

Hong Kong has subscribed $8 million to the Bank's capital stock which has consequently moved up to $978 million.

Dutch Contribution:

The Netherlands announced on April 11 that it would contribute four million guilders (Rs. 83,16,000) to the agricultural special fund of the Asian Development Bank.

The Dutch Ambassador to the Philippines, Mr. G. T. Dissevelt, who was his country's Alternate Governor to the Bank, said the contribution would be made on a grant basis.

He told the Bank annual meeting that the Netherlands believed contributions to international institutions should be untied. The Dutch contribution would not be tied when used for procurements from developing countries. But its use for procurements from developed countries would be restricted to those member-countries which had contributed to special funds on terms no less favourable than the Netherlands.

He said Holland planned to make similar contributions in the next two years.

The Dutch offer and the US Treasury Secretary, Mr. David Kennedy's promise that proposals for special fund aid would go before Congress "this legislative year" came amid calls from several developing countries for more special fund aid.

To date, only Japan, Canada and Denmark had contributed.

Australia's Treasurer, Mr. William McMahon, said that his Government might review the question of making contributions to the special fund. Australia had not made any special contribution so far in the light of its heavy initial contribution to the Bank's funds.

The Governor for Finland, Mr. Tank Mar Horn, head of the Commercial Department of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, said Finland was already committed to make technical services available on a grant basis.

In addition, it was now prepared to extend this offer to include the financing of Finnish consultants and consulting engineers to carry out particular feasibility studies and project analyses.

Mr. T. Watanabe's Closing Remarks:

In his closing remarks, the ADB President, Mr. Takeshi Watanabe, emphasized the importance of economic priorities. He said: "The characteristics that are peculiar to Asia dictate that Asian nations must find their own paths to regional co-operation and I assure you that the Bank will endeavour to play its due role in this effort.

"We are striving for as great a degree of flexibility as is consistent with our Charter and our principles. Many of the Governors have also made proposals for Bank activities in various fields. I have made note of these numerous proposals for actions, and I will examine them carefully.

"We are aware of the complexity of the development process and of the inter-connexion amoung the economic and social elements of growth. Many Governors have pointed out the possibilities of Bank action in some of these social aspects, most notably education. We would be happy to explore with your Governments the area of educational activities in which the Bank can make a contribution."

Accomplishments Of Session:

The specific accomplishments of the session were:

(1) A decision to set aside 10 per cent of the present unimpaired paid-in capital of the Bank paid pursuant to Article 6.2 (a) of the Bank's Charter for its special operations. On the basis of the paid-in capital as of December 31, 1968, the action by the Board of Governors would release approximately $14.5 million for the Bank's concessional lending activities. The Bank had received contributions to its Special Funds from several countries. Apart from augmenting these Funds, the set-aside resources would also impart greater flexibility to the Bank's special operations and ensure maximum benefits to recipients. The set-aside resources would be allocated to the Multi-Purpose Special Fund.

(2) A decision to increase the strength of the Board of Directors from 10 to 12, with regional members securing a representation of eight instead of the present seven and non-regional members four instead of three. The increase, which would become effective at the annual meeting of the Board of Governors, would help provide increased representation to the smaller less developed member-countries and to provide the large number of non-regional countries which had joined ADB with the opportunity for fuller participation and involvement in the activities of the Bank.

(3) The allocation of the entire net income of the Bank for the year ended December 31, 1968 of $3,482,791 to the Ordinary Reserve of the Bank.

Annual Report:

According to the Annual Report for 1968, the Bank extended during the year seven loans amounting to $41.6 million.

Five loans were for specific projects—a tea factory modernization project in Ceylon, an expressway project in South Korea, a road feasibility study in Formosa, a water supply scheme in Penang (Malaysia) and a plant for the production of an intermediate for polyester fibre in Formosa—while two were for institutions financing industrial development, one in Thailand and the other in Pakistan.

Also during the year, 11 technical assistance proposals involving an outlay of $1,137,000 in grants were approved by the Board of Directors. These proposals covered both the preparation of specific projects and programmes which the Bank might later consider for financing and sectoral activities of importance to the countries concerned.

The year was also notable for a promising start on the constitution of Special Funds for concessional lending to the Bank's developing member-countries. The "Special Funds Rules and Regulations" adopted by the Board of Directors made provision for an Agricultural Special Funds, a Multi-Purpose Special Fund, a Technical Assistance Special Fund and such other Special Funds as might be established or accepted by the Bank.

The Government of Japan contributed to the Agricultural Special

Fund the equivalent of $20 million to be used for financing the Bank's special operations in the field of agricultural development including forestry, fisheries and agriculturally-related industries. Similarly, an Agreement was signed with the Government of Canada under which a contribution equivalent to $25 million had been made available to the Multi-Purpose Special Fund over a five-year period on the basis of cumulative annual instalments of $5 million.

Good progress was also made in the sphere of regional activities during 1968. Early in 1968, the Bank completed the Asian Agricultural Survey. From the point of view of the Bank's operations, the Survey had yielded perspectives of great value in the formulation and appraisal of projects in agriculture and related activities.

Also in 1968, acting in response to a request made by eight South-East Asian countries, the Bank's Board of Directors approved the undertaking of a Regional Transport Survey and authorized the setting up of a Steering Committee of high-ranking experts to prepare the draft terms of reference of the proposed Survey. The Steering Committee had its first meeting in Manila from December 9 to 13, 1968 and submitted its recommendations to the Bank.

The Bank had undertaken to make arrangements to hold the fourth Regional Conference of Development Banks in Asia in Manila in July, 1969.

Loans For 1969:

The Bank approved four loans for a total of $24.8 million during the first quarter of 1969. The Bank's total loan commitments as of March 31, 1969 stood at $66.4 million.

The year's first loan of $2.8 million was given to the Government of Malaysia to finance the foreign exchange outlay on the first two palm oil mills of the Federal Land Development Authority (FLDA) in the State of Pahang, West Malaysia. This was the second loan provided by the Bank to Malaysia, the first being of $7.2 million for the Penang Water Supply Project.

The Bank made its third loan to national development banks in the region with a $5 million credit line for the Private Development Corporation of the Philippines (PDCP). The loan, which would be channelled through the Philippine National Bank to PDCP, would assist the latter in financing private industrial and other productive enterprises in the Philippines. The other national development banks which had received Bank assistance so far were the Industrial Finance Corporation of Thailand ($5 million) and the Industrial Development Bank of Pakistan ($10 million).

The development of fisheries, a high priority sector in South Korea's development programme, was being assisted by the Bank with a $7 million loan to the Korea Cold Storage Company Ltd. (KCSC). The loan was an offshoot of a technical assistance programme earlier undertaken by the Bank in Korea in regard to the organization and development of the Agriculture and Fishery Development Corporation (AFDC).

Board Of Directors:

The following were elected Directors of the Bank at the second annual meeting of the Board of Governors:

Mr. Wazir Ali (Pakistan); Mr. R. W. H. du Boulay (United Kingdom); Mr. Byung Kyu Chun (South Korea); Mr. Masaru Fukuda (Japan); Mr. Michelangelo de Grazia (Italy); Mr. Abdul Wahab Haider (Afghanistan); Mr. Chanchai Leetavorn (Thailand); Mr. P.V.R. Rao (India); Mr. R. J. Whitelaw (Australia); and Mr. Bernard Zagorin (USA).

The South Korean Finance Minister, Mr. Jong Ryul Whang, was elected Chairman of the Bank's Board of Governors.

The annual meeting also elected as Vice-Chairmen the Belgian Finance Minister, Baron D'Oppuers and the Afghanistan Ambassador to Japan, Mr.Abdul Hakim Tabibi.

The next annual meeting of the Bank will be held in Seoul or Manila in April, 1970.

G. No US Action Against "Pueblo" Crew: The US Secretary of the Navy, Mr. John Chafee, said in Washington on May 8 that no disciplinary action would be taken against any one involved in the North Korean capture of the United States intelligence ship Pueblo (see page 8779).

He and other senior naval authorities had overruled the recommendation of the Navy court of inquiry that Comm. Lloyd Bucher, the ship's captain, should be tried by court martial.

Mr. Chafee said that "neither individual discipline nor the state of discipline or morale in the Navy nor any other interest requires further legal proceedings with respect to any personnel involved in the Pueblo incident. They have suffered enough and further punishment would not be justified."

His decision apparently concluded the inquiry into the loss of the ship to the North Koreans in January, 1968 and the behaviour of her crew in captivity.

The court of inquiry had also recommended that Lt. Stephen Harris, the officer in charge of the vessel's spy equipment, should be tried by court martial, that Lt. Edward Murphy, the executive officer, should be given a letter of reprimand and that Rear-Admiral Frank Johnson, the commander of US naval forces in Japan at the time, and Capt. Everette Gladding, the director of the naval security group in the Pacific, should both be reprimanded.

Mr. Chafee noted that the court had found that Comm. Bucher had upheld morale in a superior manner and provided leadership during the crew's captivity.

Admiral Johnson and Capt. Gladding had been accused of failure to anticipate the incident, but "this basic general accusation could be levelled in various degrees at responsible superior authorities in the chain of command and control."

H. Gen. C. de Gaulle Resigns As President In France: Gen. Charles de Gaulle officially ended his office as President of France at noon on April 28, 12 hours after announcing his decision to retire as a result of his defeat in the referendum on his reform programme. About 52 per cent of the electorate had voted against the reforms.

The Senate President, Mr. Alain Poher took over as interim President of the Republic as the country's leading political groups went into full swing preparing for the election of a new President on June 1.

The Constitutional Council, in a brief statement, officially named Mr. Poher acting Head of State, as the 60-year-old Centrist leader was preparing for his first official act— a meeting with the Prime Minister, Mr. Couve de Murville.

Mr. de Murville presided over a meeting of his Cabinet, which took stock of the situation and unanimously adopted a one-sentence statement which said: "The Government will assume the responsibilities which it holds under the Constitution."

I. UNCTAD Board Meeting: The Board of the UN Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) ended a two-week session in Geneva on May 20 without progress on defining UNCTAD's role in the Development Decade of the 1970's.

A final statement said it was recognized that "very little progress was achieved during the session of the Board in preparing the major contribution of UNCTAD to the strategy for the second Development Decade."

At the root of the lack of achievement was the widely different views of UNCTAD's role taken by the developing countries, the Communist nations and the Western industrialized States.

The Board's 55 members agreed, however, to seek and possibly accomplish the following targets over the next 10 years: expansion of trade and co-operation among the developing nations as well as furthering of their respective regional integration.

J. Soviet Space-crafts Reach Venus: The Russian news agency Tass disclosed on May 17 that Venus-6 had reached Venus on that day.

Earlier, Moscow Radio had said that Venus-6, following close in the wake of her sister-ship, Venus-5, had entered the atmosphere of Venus.

Venus-6 had been launched on January 10, five days after Venus-5 which covered some 350 million km before gliding smoothly into Venusian atmosphere.

Moscow Radio said that the performance of the two Venus craft had enabled Soviet science to "score a new glorious achievement in cosmic space exploration."

The Venus-5 space capsule parachuted gently down through the carbon-dioxide atmosphere of the planet on May 16, but apparently stopped transmitting information before it landed.

An official announcement several hours after the event did not say anything about a landing, although it said the space-craft had delivered a bas-relief of Lenin and a Soviet coat of arms to the planet.

The announcement by Tass said the capsule had transmitted back to Earth a non-stop stream of information during its 53-minute descent.

The two spacecraft followed up the mission of Venus-4, which made history in October, 1967 by parachuting through Venus's atmosphere and transmitting 90 minutes of data back to Earth.

Venus-5, launched on January 5, took 130 days to cover the 350 million kilometres to reach the third brightest celestial body after the Sun and the Moon, known to the layman as the Morning Star or Evening Star.

The first measurements of the planet's proper radiation and the first attempts at radio-spotting them had been made in the mid-fifties. It was established that Venus revolved around its axis in an average of 244 terrestrial days. A Venusian day was equal to 117 terrestrial ones.

One of the recent discoveries was that of "synchronic" revolution of Venus around the Earth. When it came closest the Earth, it always faced it by the same side. This was explained by the presence of substantial gravitational anomalies in the depths of the planet. Measurements showed that the Venus surface had a very high temperature—250-400 degrees Centigrade.

The flight of Venus-4, which had made a smooth descent by parachute through the Venusian atmosphere on October 18, 1967, was described by a Soviet scientist, Mr. Marov as an important achievement. Describing the physical conditions on Venus in the light of the latest findings, he stressed that the high temperature on the Venus surface ruled out any possibility of life forms. "But one cannot deny in principle the possibility of existence of some life forms on the basis of silicon-organic compounds."

He said that the data sent back to Earth by Venus-5 and Venus-6 would provide answers to many so far unsolved problems. By size and by its distance from the Sun and the height of atmosphere, Venus resembled Earth more than any other planet. Optical studies of Venus yield little information since it is covered by dense clouds. Before space flights, scientists had no reliable information about the physical conditions on the planet.

Soviet automatic inter-planetary stations had provided unique scientific data on the chemical composition and physical characteristics of the atmosphere of Venus. The Venus-5 and Venus-6 landings had enabled scientists to constitute an exact "replica" of the atmosphere's structure from two different points on the planet.

There was absolutely no indication that there might be life on the planet.

K. New Cardinals: Archbishop Joseph Parecattil of Ernakulam (Kerala) was among 33 new Cardinals elevated to the Sacred College by Pope Paul on April 28 to give younger men and more nations a place in the highest council of the Roman Catholic Church.

Archbishop Parecattil was the second Indian to become a prince of the Church, the first being Valerian Cardinal Gracias, Archbishop of Bombay.

The latest additions expanded the Sacred College to 134 members, the highest number yet and nearly double the limit of 70 maintained for four centuries until the tradition was broken 10 years ago. The number of countries represented now was 46.

The new Cardinals included eight Italians, four Americans, three Frenchmen, two Spaniards, two Brazilians and the first Cardinals ever from Korea, Guatemala, Madagascar, Congo (Kinshasa) and New Zealand.

INDIA

A. Aid Consortium Meeting: The World Bank, in a communique issued on May 24 at the end of a two-day meeting in Paris of the Aid-India Consortium, said that the Consortium had recognized India's need for increased project assistance and its request for $400 million was accepted as reasonable.

The communique emphasized that Consortium members welcomed continuation of substantial recovery in India's industrial production, restoration of stable price levels and the efforts made in the last Budget to mobilize additional resources for development. It appreciated the export performance as "particularly noteworthy." (Exports were 12.2 per cent above those of the 1967-68 period.) The Consortium members also commended steps taken by India to extend its family planning programme. It was also stated that the contribution of France to the Consortium would continue in 1968-69 at the same level as in 1967-68 i.e. $ 15 million for project assistance and an equal amount for non-project assistance.

The Consortium's decision to provide $ 700 million for non-project assistance in 1969-70 was welcomed in India, though it still fell short of the annual average indicated by the Consortium countries for the last three years. (The non-project aid is used mostly for the purchase of fertilizers, components and spare parts for industries and raw materials such as non-ferrous metals and newsprint.) India's maintenance requirements covered by non-project aid were expected to increase during this year because of higher growth rate in industry.

The Consortium had suggested to member-countries a total of $ 900 million for non-project aid in 1966-67. A similar amount was promised for 1967-68 besides food aid. For 1968-69, the goal was set for $ 1 billion including $ 100 million as debt relief. The latter was based on a World Bank study which had suggested provision of debt relief of $100 million annually for three years until 1970-71.

Dr. I. G. Patel On Results:

The chief Indian delegate to the Consortium, Dr. I. G. Patel, told newsmen on June 5 that India expected to use $1,100 million (Rs. 828 crores) of aid during the current year 1969-70. Setting off against it repayments of $550 million (Rs. 412 crores) falling due in these 12 months, the net in-flow of aid would still be considerable.

The targets set by the Club—$700 million for non-project aid including debt relief and $400 million for project aid—would, he said, match disbursements during the year.

Referring to the $400 million target for project financing, Dr. Patel confessed that "it was very difficult to see where we came out." India could reckon on only $75 million—$85 million on the basis of the project aid countries normally set aside for projects in their respective aid packages. France, for instance, customarily offers a total of $30 million—half of it for projects. The rest would depend a good deal on the interest individual donors take in the projects canvassed with them. This interest would obviously be conditional upon what India wished to buy from them for these projects.

India could also count upon some project aid from the World Bank and IDA for infra-structure investments in railways, communications and irrigation. Mr. Robert McNamara's offer to finance public sector fertilizer plants stood, but it had still to be given concrete shape.

B. Visa Agreement With Scandinavian Countries: India and the Scandinavian countries agreed in New Delhi on June 3 to abolish visas on a reciprocal basis for visits lasting 90 days.

The Agreement was signed by the Secretary for External Affairs, Mr. V. H. Coelho and the Ambassadors of Denmark, Finland, Norway and Sweden for their respective countries.

This was the first Agreement of its kind signed by India.

C. New Apostolic Pro-Nuncio: The Most Rev Joseph Marie Lemieux has been nominated Apostolic Pro-Nuncio to India.

Born in Quebec (Canada) in 1902, the Most Rev. Lemieux entered the Dominican Order and was ordained priest in 1928. He was Bishop of Sendai, Japan, in 1936. He was subsequently transferred to the Residential See of Gravelbourg, Canada, in 1944 and thence to the Archbishopric of Ottawa in 1953.

Since September, 1966, he had been Apostolic Nuncio in the Republic of Haiti.

E. Collaboration With UAR In Developing Supersonic Jet Fighter Engine Terminated: It was officially learnt in Cairo on June 1 that the five-year India-UAR collaboration in developing supersonic jet fighter engine with the help of India-made HF-24 air frame would be terminated by the end of July.

All Germans numbering about 80 working on the project ceased work, while the Indian team under Group-Captain Naik will return home by the end of July.

The UAR apparently decided to drop its plan for mass production of supersonic jet engines owing to foreign exchange shortages.

The Government of India decided to present the UAR Government the HF-24 air frame with which the UAR engine had been flight-tested so far.

The first test flight of the UAR engine was carried out by Wing

Commander Inder Chopra of the Indian Air Force just before the June war in 1967.

The UAR was in the past five years developing E-300 jet engine designed by Austrian Professor Ferdinand Brantner. Hopes that it would achieve supersonic speed had not been realised within the target period.

G. Exploitation Of Copper Deposits: Hindustan Copper Limited, which is executing a project at Khetri in Rajasthan, has prepared a Rs. 6-crore scheme to exploit the copper deposits at Rakha in Bihar.

The scheme envisages production of 500 tonnes of ore per day. There will be a concentrator at Rakha, but the quantity of ore that can be mined initially is considered too small to justify a smelter. It is, therefore, proposed to send the concentrates to the smelter of Indian Copper Corporation (a private sector firm) at Ghatsila. The arrangement with Indian Copper Corporation has yet to be made, but the company will probably get a conversion fee.

The Rs. 6-crore scheme is only the first phase during which the end product expected is about 3,000 tonnes of copper. In the second phase, yet to be worked out, the annual production is expected to be about 20,000 tonnes of copper from Rakha concentrates.

The annual production of copper from Khetri will be 31,000 tonnes when the project reaches full capacity. Khetri will also produce 600 tonnes of sulphuric acid per day from the smelter gases as well as by treatment of pyriate. This will be utilized to produce fertilizer—214,000 tonnes of triple super-phosphate using sulphuric acid.

The only other major copper deposit is at Agnikundla in Andhra Pradesh. In October, 1967, the Centre had cleared a collaboration arrangement with Ashlands of USA to exploit this deposit. But the US firm has apparently lost interest. Hindustan Copper has, therefore, decided to exploit the Agnikundla deposits in two phases. A Rs. 5-crore scheme has been prepared for the first phase which is now being processed by the Finance Ministry. In the first phase, only lead will be recovered. Deeper mining will be required to recover copper, which will be undertaken in the second phase.

The demand for copper is estimated at 124,000 tonnes by the end of the Fourth Five-Year Plan. There is only one unit now—Indian Copper Corporation—which is producing copper at the rate of 9,600 tonnes per year. This unit's capacity will be increased to 16,500 tonnes by 1970-71.

Together with Khetri, the total yield should be about 47,500 tonnes of copper by the end of the Fourth Plan period—which means a major part of the domestic demand has to be met through imports, unless richer deposits are found and exploited quickly.

J. Cyclone In Andhra Pradesh: Coastal Andhra Pradesh and its districts of West Godavari, Krishna and Guntur experienced the worst cyclone and flood disaster of the last 30 years from May 16. Vijayawada City recorded a rainfall of 569 mm from May 16 to 20. It rained 700 mm in a span of four days, which is two-thirds the average annual rainfall of the region. The quantity of rainfall at places was nine times the normal.

Disastrous floods followed. The cyclone behaved in a peculiar manner. It pierced the coast at a place near Ongole in Guntur district, forked into two, turned round and drove the flood waters towards the sea at a terrific speed of 150 kilometres per hour. On the other hand, tidal action caused the sea-level to rise from the normal eight feet to 15 feet and prevented the flood waters from flowing into the sea.

Many of the rivers and rivulets of the area were swollen and swirling waters entered low-lying villages. The capital city of Hyderabad was completely cut off from the area of devastation for several days. There was destruction on a vast scale of human life, cattle, food and crops and of public and private properties. Official reports on May 24 placed the known death toll of human life at 879. Besides, several hamlets were completely wiped out. Thousands of cattle were seen floating in the swollen rivers of Wira and Kateleru in Khammam district. The estimated loss of cattle was 2,00,000 head, of which 1,50,000 died in Guntur district alone. Guntur district also lost an equal number of dwelling units. It was estimated that 2,50,000 acres of paddy crop and 9,000 acres of sugarcane crop suffered damage in Krishna district. The total loss of the second paddy crop in the three affected districts was estimated at 6,00,000 acres. In terms of rice, the loss was 3,00,000 tonnes.

Transport and communication facilities were severely damaged. Tele-communication and electric lines were snapped all over. The Guntur canal was breached on May 21. The bridge between Pabatapalli and Khammam was washed away. The Bundamesh river burst its banks near Vijayawada.

It was estimated on May 28 that the loss of revenue and the cost of re-building bridges and tracks damaged or washed away in coastal Andhra was between Rs. 10 and Rs. 15 crores. The total loss of property and crops was officially estimated at Rs. 99 crores, of which Rs. 32 crores was on account of crops.

Train services remained cancelled over a wide area for over three weeks and a number of trains were diverted because of track breaches or the washing away of bridges and culverts between Vijayawada and Madras and other places. The "Dakshin Express" which left New Delhi on May 15, and which had bumped into the Janta Express and the Hyderabad-Madras Express, arrived at Hyderabad on May 22, having remained stranded for seven days at Tondalagopavaram with 600 passengers aboard. The passengers were fed by IAF air-dropping of food packets on May 19 and 20 and subsequently by relays of trollies from adjacent stations.

Mr. Parimal Ghosh, Central Minister of State said on May 30 that the South Central Railway had suffered a loss of Rs. 27 crores in income. The total loss of revenue to all the concerned railways was estimated at Rs. 10 crores, with an addition of Rs. 5 crores required to restore washed-away bridges, culverts and tracks.

The Army and Air Force took up rescue measures from May 16 and air-dropped food packets to marooned railway passengers and villagers. Fourteen special boats were flown to Hyderabad from military HQ at Poona under the supervision of a party of 50 officers and jawans of the Corps of Engineers on May 22 to evacuate marooned villagers in Guntur district and to air-drop food packets to affected people. About 3,500 such packets were dropped on a single day on March 22 in 24 marooned villages.

K. U Nu To Work As Buddhist Missionary In India: The former Burmese Prime Minister, U Nu, stated in Bombay on June 4 that he would shortly put on yellow robes and work as a missionary in India for the revival of Buddhism.

He said he was seeking the permission of the Governments of India and Burma for the religious mission, his life's ambition.

In a exclusive interview, U Nu, who was undergoing medical treatment in the city for the past 46 days said: "I have always had a feeling that we owe a deep gratitude to India which gave the Buddha to the world. The time has come to reply this I have decided to retire from politics and embark on a religious mission. Now religion is the most important thing to me."

U Nu, who celebrated his 62nd birthday quietly at a Bombay nursing home, said he had discussed his plans for missionary work in India with several Buddhist leaders during his stay in the city. In his missionary work he would have no truck with Buddhist organizations with a political bias. "We must not allow politics to come in religious matters."

U Nu, who was removed from Premiership by a military coup led by Gen. Ne Win in 1962, said before his current visit to India that he had given 93 lectures of Buddhism when in Burma. He was now free to move anywhere in Burma. He was in prison and under house arrest for more than five years immediately after Gen. Ne Win's takeover.

U Nu, presumably still under Government surveillance, declined to answer or discuss any questions on politics during the 30-minute interview at the residence of Mr. Lalji Malhotra, former Indian Ambassador to Burma and his host.

ISRAEL

A. Knesset Votes Confidence In Government: The Knesset defeated on May 19 a no-confidence motion against the National Unity Coalition Cabinet of Mrs. Golda Meir.

Voting on the motion, sponsored by the Agudat Yisrael party over religious issues, was three for and 69 against. There were as many as 19 abstentions.

Two Coalition factions—the National Religious Party and Poalei Aguda—sided with most of the Opposition during the debate.

While the Labour-Mapam Alignment, Gahal and the Independence Liberal Party helped defeat the no-confidence motion on the issues of Sabbath TV and autopsies, and Agudat Yisrael was the only faction to back it, the abstainers included the two Coalition religious parties, the two Communist factions, the Free Centre and Ha'olam Hazeh.

Obviously bent on avoiding a heated clash, Mrs. Meir underlined the general respect for religion and for the orthodox community, and stressed the need for the observant and the non-observant to find a modus vivendi consonant with dignity and mutual respect. She firmly rejected the idea that the Cabinet had decided on seven-days-a-week TV in order to anger anybody. "We regard TV as a direct extension of radio," she said. "Just as radio operates on the Sabbath, so does TV. All those who object to TV on the Sabbath object to radio as well. Observant people, I presume, do not turn their radios on the Sabbath."

She said that one important reason in favour of having Sabbath TV was the fact that some 200,000 homes with sets, who could watch Cairo, Amman and Damascus, ought to be able to watch Jerusalem too. It was desirable that Israel's Arabs should have Israeli TV at their disposal.

In the Cabinet, she said, the decisive majority did not regard operation of TV on the Sabbath as an innovation, and hence did not see it as an infringement of the status quo on religious matters.

Regarding autopsies, she conceded that the existing law should be scrupulously observed, and said that the Controller had already noted the Health Minister's readiness to take firmer action. "We are all sorry that the law was infringed, but nobody can say that Mr. Barzilan was not alert to take immediate action, once it was explained to him that there had been infringements."

JAPAN

A. Mr. K. Aichi's Talks With American Officials On Okinawa: The Foreign Minister, Mr. Kichi Aichi, visited Washington in the first week of June when he had talks on the future of Okinawa with President R. Nixon and the American Secretary of State, Mr. William P. Rogers.

He formally presented to the US leaders Japan's demand that Okinawa and the rest of the Ryukyu islands captured by the American forces in World War II be returned to Japanese political control not later than 1972.

The New York Times reported on June 5 that Mr. Aichi had stated that Japan was willing to leave American military bases on Okinawa after the Island reverted to Japanese rule, but wanted to restrict their use to the same standard as other American bases in Japan. Mr. Aichi also asserted that his Government intended to renew automatically the Mutual Defence Treaty between the United States and Japan next year. The Treaty was signed in 1960 and, starting next year, either side can give one year's notice that it intends to withdraw.

Mr. Aichi told Mr. Rogers that Tokyo wanted to end the American privilege of storing nuclear weapons on Okinawa and other special military privileges once the Island was returned to Japanese rule.

The US State Department said on June 3 that no decision had been made by Mr. Nixon on the future status of Okinawa or American military equipment on the Island and none would be taken until lengthy negotiations with the Japanese Government were completed.

Mr. Robert J. McCloskey, the Department spokesman, was asked about a report that President Nixon had already decided to remove American nuclear weapons from Okinawa once an over-all scheme for return of the Ryukyu Islands to Japanese control had been agreed upon.

He said: "No decisions, either with respect to the future status of Okinawa or US military equipment on the Island, have been made. The President has asked the Secretary (Mr. Rogers) to begin discussions with the Japanese Government on the matter of Okinawa. Until those issues have been thoroughly discussed with the Japanese—and that will take several months at least—no firm US decision will be taken."

There was no immediate indication where the nuclear weapons now stored in Okinawa would be put. Some knowledgeable sources suggested Guam as the most likely alternative. Other possible sites included South Korea, Formosa, Midway and American naval vessels operating in the Pacific.

B. Government Bill To Quell Campus Violence: The Government sent to the Diet on May 24 a Bill designed to restore order in strife-torn Universities.

The Government action followed Cabinet approval of some measures to bring normalcy to the troubled universities. At the same time, the Government issued a statement seeking the co-operation of all sections of opinion to support the Bill.

The statement said that at present 34 national universities, four municipally run universities and eight private universities were "in dispute."

The Government and the Liberal Democratic Party had earlier agreed that the context of the projected university legislation would be confined to provisions needed to normalize the current campus disputes. The agreement, however, implied that the Bill could be altered in the course of Diet debates so as to reflect some Tory views still opposed to the Government Bill. The ruling party maintained all along that the Bill should contain provisions calling for a basic reform of the administrative and operational system of universities.

The Government Bill, worked out on the basis of one drafted by the Education Ministry, was mainly aimed at settling the current disputes. It placed emphasis on the Government's administrative assistance in normalizing trouble-ridden campuses at the initiative of each school, instead of exercising State power in restoring normalcy at the schools.

The Education Ministry draft called for:

(1) Punishment to be meted out to students and administrative and teaching staff members who hindered normalization activities.

(2) Concentrating administrative power on a President.

(3) Giving the Education Minister the right to issue directives including suspension of both educational and research activities of a school.

(4) A 30 per cent pay cut for school staff if such a suspension goes into effect.

(5) Steps to be taken to abolish a school in protracted troubles if a suspension lasts more than three months.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, said later that the university legislation was a "minimum measure" necessary to settle campus disputes without interfering with university autonomy. He stressed that the Government would exert every effort to have the provisional campus legislation Bill passed by the Legislature.

Opposition Criticism:

The Bill drew a wave of criticism from the Opposition parties, Mr. Ichiro Kato, President of the University of Tokyo, and the Japan Teachers' Union.

The Japan Socialist Party denounced the Bill as a Government plan to control universities. It said the Bill could serve only to bring on further confusion in the strife-torn universities. It said it would redouble its efforts to crush the Bill in the Diet by launching a national campaign.

Mr. Kato issued a statement saying that Government "pressure" would imperil the existence of universities. Spelling out a series of measures to normalize functions of his university, he stressed the need for respecting the initiative of the university in resolving the current turmoil on the campus.

Trouble In 43 Universities:

Meanwhile, according to a survey by the Ministry of Education, 43 universities were still locked in campus disputes as of May 13.

The survey said that students either continued to boycott classes, occupy school buildings, or the school authorities ordered suspension of classes at the 43 universities —30 State, 4 public and 9 private schools.

A total of 27,708 students matriculated in April had been forced to wait at their homes for re-opening of classes. Of the total, 17,265 belonged to the strife-torn State universities, the figure representing one out of every four students admitted to State universities this year.

Education Ministry officials said it was highly probable under the present circumstances that this year's freshmen would have to begin their first-year course only next year and that the universities would be forced to cancel entrance examinations in 1970.

State universities are required to decide by the end of June the schedule of next year's entrance examinations in consultation with the Education Ministry.

Only 54 State universities managed to hold classes on a limited scale.

C. Mr. K G. Kiesinger's Visit: The West German Chancellor, Mr. Kurt Georg Kiesinger, paid a visit to Japan from May 17 to 21.

The Chancellor, who was accompanied by his wife, called on Empress on May 19 when they were invited to a luncheon.

Apart from State receptions and visits to industrial centres, the Chancellor's engagements included prolonged talks with the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, and other Government leaders on a wide range of problems.

According to Press reports, Mr. Sato and Mr. Kiesinger agreed that the two countries should consult each other on the issue of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

[Japan and West Germany have not yet signed the Treaty. The two countries are in a similar position as both are scientifically advanced with potential to produce nuclear arms. There have been, however, Press reports that Japan may sign the Treaty some time this Summer or Autumn.]

The two leaders also discussed China, Viet-Nam, the currency issue and bilateral relations.

Joint Communique:

A joint communique issued on May 21 said that Mr. Kiesinger and Mr. Sato had "stressed" in their meetings the importance of a total and complete disarmament to be enforced under strict and effective international control.

They had agreed that efforts should be promoted for strengthening relations between Japan and the European Economic Community.

They expressed the determination of their countries to strive through mutual trust and co-operation for the maintenance of freedom, promotion of international co-operation and the ensuring of peace based on a "principle of justice."

They concurred that a peaceful solution of the German re-unification problem was essential for the attainment of a lasting European peace based on justice. They also agreed that freedom in West Berlin should be maintained.

D. Oil Reservoirs In Sea: A geophysical survey conducted in the East China Sea and the Yellow Sea in October-November, 1968 indicated that the shallow sea floor between Japan and Formosa might contain one of the largest oil reservoirs in the world.

The findings were presented to the sixth session of the Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in Asian Off-shore Areas of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE), which concluded in Bangkok on May 27.

The geophysical survey undertaken in 1968 was part of the Committee's operating activities and is a joint effort by Japan, South Korea and Formosa with the support of the United States. Scientists and technicians from those countries participated in an expedition under the leadership of Mr. K. O. Emery, of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution of the United States, serving as special adviser to the Committee.

The survey covered a region equal to the combined areas of Cambodia, Laos, Thailand and Viet-Nam. The result indicated that an area several times larger than Formosa lay north of that Island with sediment thickness exceeding 2 km, perhaps reaching 9 km. thickness that underlined Formosa. Most of this sediment was believed to be neogene in the geologic age, the same as the oil-producing strata on the Island. Scientists believed that a high probability existed that the continental shelf between Japan and Formosa could become an important world oil-producing area.

In addition to that area, neogene sediment had also been discovered in the Yellow Sea basin. Such sediment was less than 2 km. thick, but may contain a high content of organic matter, with good reflecting horizons that could serve as an ideal reservoir bed for both oil and natural gas.

Further seismic studies would be required to portray the shapes and extent of the geological structures.

Much interest had been aroused by these discoveries, and several international oil companies were discussing follow-up work with the countries concerned.

In addition to this survey, the Committee made during 1968-69 a large-scale reconnaissance aeromagnetic survey from Formosa to South Korea, under Project Magnet; a seismic refraction survey along the south-west coast of South Viet-Nam; and, together with the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, geophysical survey of the South China Sea (a Sunda Shelf expert had undertaken an investigation of the economic feasibilities of detrial, the heavy mineral deposits of Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Formosa, South Korea and South Viet-Nam).

As support to the Committee's activities, Japan had established a regional training centre on off-shore prospecting, which during the last two years had taken in trainees from the member-countries of the Committee.

E. Geodesic Co-operation With Russian Scientists: Japanese and Russian scientists agreed on May 19 to conduct joint surveys to determine the relative positions of the Japanese archipelago and Siberia by means of American geodesic satellites, starting this year.

The agreement was reached at a meeting between Dr. G. Massevitch, Vice-President of the Astronomical Council, Soviet Academy of Sciences and Dr. Hideo Hirose, Professor at Tokyo University and Tokyo Astronomical Observatory, and other Japanese scientists.

While the Soviet Union would use their newly developed satellite tracking cameras AFU-75s at Khabarovsk and Sakhalinsk, Japanese scientists would avail themselves of three Observatory Maritime Safety Agency and Construction Ministry geodesic stations.

The satellites used would be the American surveying satellites Pageos and Explorer-38.

Although the Soviet Union wanted to investigate the continental drift of Asia, this had been found too ambitious in the present state of geodesic precision. The immediate task had been set at determining precisely the relative positions of the Continent and the Japanese islands, leaving the continental drift project to a later stage.

B. Aid To Syria: According to an official statement issued in Pyongyang, Syria has accepted from North Korea "free aid material" which would be "conducive to the Syrian struggle against USA and Israel and for the defence of Syrian independence and sovereignty."

The official news agency which put out the statement did not elaborate what kind of materials these were, but mentioned that representing the Syrian side at the ceremony of transfer in Damascus was a Syrian military officer, Brig.-Gen. Nourtin Kanju, Commander of the Latakia military region.

The Brig.-Gen. in expressing thanks to the North Korean Premier, Mr. Kim Il Sung, for the "precious" aid materials, said that they would be "greatly helpful to the Syrian struggle against the US imperialists and Israel."

In his speech, the North Korean Charge d'Affaires ad interim of the North Korean Embassy in Damascus said: "The aid materials are an expression of the ardent desire of the Korean people to "support and 'co-operate' with Syria in the anti-imperialist, anti-US struggle and the close friendship between the two countries."

A. Aid Consortium Meeting: The Consultative Group on development assistance to South Korea met in Paris on April 17 and 18 under the chairmanship of the World Bank.

Represented at the meeting were Australia, Belgium, Canada, Formosa, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan, Britain and the United States. Representatives of the Asian Development Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the United Nations Development Programme and observers from Austria and Switzerland also attended the meeting.

The group heard a statement by the leader of the Korean delegation, Mr. Choong Hoon Park, who is also Deputy Prime Minister, setting forth the main issues and outline of the measures the Government proposed to take to promote economic development. This, together with the documentation earlier prepared by the Korean Government and by the World Bank, constituted the frame-work of the Consultative Group's discussions.

A communique issued later by the World Bank said: "The members of the Group expressed satisfaction at the rapid growth of Korea's production and exports, which was exceeding growth rates estimated in the Government's Second Five-Year Plan (1967-71). Another encouraging sign noted at the meeting was the further improvement in the financial condition of the public sector. The Deputy Prime Minister emphasized his Government's determination to maintain monetary stability and to keep external indebtedness within reasonable limits while pursuing an active growth poicy. The meeting indicated a large measure of willingness on the part of member-countries to support Korea's development effort. It was acknowledged by many member-countries that in order to prevent an excessive level of debt service in the future, a substantial proportion of foreign assistance should be in the form of grants or credits on relatively long terms and moderate interest rates. It was provisionally agreed that the Consultative Group would hold the next meeting in April, 1970."

B. IDA Credit For Education: The International Development Association (IDA), an affiliate of the World Bank, has approved a credit of $14.8 million to upgrade and expand technical and vocational education in Korea.

It is designed to result in a greater output of suitably trained graduates to help fill the needs of the country's growing commerce and industry where progress has already outstripped the supply of skilled man-power.

The project will support the Government's current drive to alleviate man-power shortages by improving selected schools and colleges. Compulsory primary education in Korea has reduced illiteracy from 78 per cent. in 1945 to 11 per cent in 1965, one of the lowest in Asia. Few secondary schools, however, are adequately equipped and staffed to provide the specialized training required if future rapid and sustained economic growth is to be realized.

The project will benefit 32 schools and four university departments permitting a combined increase in enrolment from 27,820 to 36,340 by 1974. The emphasis will be on new equipment and facilities for teaching agricultural, commercial, scientific and industrial subjects. Of the nine technical high schools included, three will be replaced entirely. The other six will be extended and improved, along with two comprehensive, seven agricultural, five agricultural-technical and four commercial secondary schools. Four post-secondary technical schools and one agricultural school and Seoul National University's Agricultural Education Department will also be enlarged and re-equipped, while new equipment alone will be purchased for the science teacher-training departments of Seoul, Kynogbuk and Kongju national universities. Three of the higher technical schools will provide teacher-training. A number of outside specialists will be required to support agricultural and technical education. This has been included in the project, along with fellowships to allow some of the schools' teaching staffs to broaden their experience overseas.

The project is scheduled for completion in five years at a total estimated cost equivalent to $26.8 million. A special Project Unit to be set up in the Ministry of Education will be responsible for its execution.

The $14.8 million credit, equivalent to the foreign exchange cost of the project, will be extended to Korea for 50 years, including a 10-year grace period. It will be interest-free, but a service charge of 3/4 of 1 per cent per annum will be made to cover IDA's administrative expenses.

The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization assisted in the identification and preparation of the project and the Food and Agriculture Organization participated in its appraisal under the UNESCO and FAO/Bank Co-operative Programmes.

MALAYSIA

A. Alliance Party Returned To Power—General Election Results: The Alliance Party—a combination of the United Malays National Organization (UMNO), the Malaysian Chinese Association (MCA) and the Malayan Indian Congress (MIC)—was again returned to power in the General Election held on May 10.

This was the third General Election since Independence. The Alliance had comfortably won in the first two. This time, however, it came out with a considerably reduced majority.

There are 144 Parliamentary seats of which the results of 113 were declared soon after the Elections. The final position would be known only six to seven weeks hence. Of the declared results, the Alliance won 76, the Democratic Action Party 13, the Pan Malayan Islamic Party 12, the Gerakan Rakyat eight, and the People's Progressive Party four. A notable feature of the Election was the emergence of the Opposition in strength.

In the State elections, the Alliance secured control of seven of the 11 West Malaysian states. Kelantan was wrested by the Pan-Malayan Islamic Party and Penang by Gerakan Rayat. In Perak, the Alliance was reduced to a minority, securing only 19 of the 40 seats. In Selangor State, the Alliance and Opposition were evenly balanced, with either side securing 14 seats. The Alliance is in control of Perlis, Kedah, Negri Semlilan, Malacca, Johore, Pahang and Trengannu.

Several commentators saw in the Election outcome a big blow to the Alliance. For the first time in Malaysia's history, however, the Federal Government must now face up seriously to the prospect of dealing with opposition governments in four of the 11 mainland States.

In Penang, beyond its wildest expectations the moderate Opposition Gerakan Rakyat Malaysia seized 16 of the State Assembly's 24 seats. It will now be able to govern the State on its own. The Gerakan is a newly formed Party of mostly dissidents from the extreme Left Labour Party which boycotted the Elections.

In Malaysia, the Alliance lost 23 seats, and on the personal side there were startling eclipses and revivals. Three Federal Ministers were defeated, including Mr. Senu, Minister of Information, and Dr. Lim Swee Aun, Minister of Commerce and Industry. The personal majority of the Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, was reduced by 8,000.

Several well-known Opposition politicians scored high personal successes, particularly Dr. Tan Chee Khoon, of Gerakan, and Mr. Goh Hock Guan, of the Democratic Action Party, whose majorities near Kuala Lumpur exceeded 13,000 and 27,000, respectively. To the dismay of the Alliance, this latter party, remnant of Singapore's presence in the Federation, now becomes the second party in Parliament with 13 seats.

Overall in the Federal Parliament, the Alliance will have a comfortable enough majority, but for the first time in Malaysia's three Elections since Independence, the Alliance share fell just short of 50 per cent.

The most significant increase in vote was recorded by the Pan Malayan Islamic Party, whose championing of Malay resistance to the supposed encroachments of other races increased its second place share to 24.3 per cent.

Paralleling this Government loss of Malay votes, the Chinese component of the Alliance, the Malaysian Chinese Association, also saw its vote eroded seriously by the Opposition parties, and returned only 13 seats compared with 25 in 1964.

The candidate to secure the highest majority in the elections was the Secretary-General of the Democratic Action Party, Mr. Goh Hock Guan in Bungar (Kuala Lumpur) with a difference of 27,402 votes. In the last elections the previous DAP candidates, Mr. Devan Nair got only a majority of 803. Mr. Goh defeated MCA's, Mr. Lew Sip Hon.

In the State elections the Alliance Party won 164 seats, with 122 seats going to the Opposition—PMIP 40, Gerakan 36, DAP 31, PPP 12 and Independents 3.

B. Economic Growth: Speaking at a trade function in Kuala Lumpur on March 16, the Finance Minister, Mr. Tan Siew Sin, outlined the "phenomenal economic advance" the country had made since 1957.

He said that money in the private sector by the end of 1957 had totalled (Malaysian) $947 million, but 11 years later it rose to (Malaysian) $1,688 million.

He said: "Foreign trade increased during this period from $3,986 million to $7,607 million. Commercial bank deposits were up from $726 million to $2,670 million."

He said the most spectacular rise was in commercial bank loans which rose from $280 million in 1957 to $1,764 million in 1968. "Gold and foreign exchange reserves increased from $1,482 million to nearly $2,000 billion last year, despite massive expenditure in economic and social development.

"If I am not mistaken, Malaysia is the only developing country in Asia and Africa which has actually increased its external reserves since Independence. Our achievement is both unique and unequalled."

In the field of production over the past 11 years, sawn logs, palm oil and palm products and poultry meat had registered increases of over 300 per cent. Signs of growing prosperity in the country could be seen in the rising number of cars and motor-cycles. In 1960, 49,056 motorcycles were registered, but this figure rose to 251,529 in 1967—a fivefold increase. Cars on the road had nearly doubled—from 92,217 in 1960 to 182,447 in seven years.

On the timber industry, he said there were indications that exports this year would supersede tin to become the country's second largest export earner.

C. West German Assistance: Malaysia obtained on March 18 a $12.5 million loan from West Germany to finance the expansion of Port Swettenham and other "worthwhile projects".

The Loan Agreement was signed in Kuala Lumpur by the Permanent Secretary to the Treasury, Tan Sri Mohamed Sharif bin Abdul Samad, and the West German Charge d'Affaires, Dr. K. J. Citron.

The loan, carrying 4.5 per cent interest and repayable within 25 years, was the third to Malaysia under the West German Capital Assistance Programme. The first loan of $16 million was given in 1963. It was for the construction of deep-water berths in Penang-Butterworth. The second loan of $11.5 million was granted in 1965 to buy equipment for the University Teaching Hospital.

D. Diplomatic Relations With Rumania: Malaysia established diplomatic relations with Rumania on March 22. A Trade Agreement between the two countries was also signed the same day.

The announcement came during a visit to the country by the Rumanian Deputy Premier, Mr. Gheorghe Radulescu.

In a Press interview before he left Kuala Lumpur on March 23, he said his country was willing to provide technical training to Malaysians in industrial fields. Training at Rumanian wood-processing plants in particular would be helpful to Malaysia because of her rich timber resources.

MONGOLIA (Outer)

A. Tense Relations With China: Mr. Harrison E. Salisbury of The New York Times*, after a visit to Ulan Bator recently, wrote that tensions along the Mongolian frontier with China had risen sharply in recent months, bringing a number of small but violent flare-ups.*

So far there had been no outbreaks involving casualties on the scale of recent Sino-Soviet border fighting but, he said, officials disclosed privately that the Chinese had made several serious efforts at subverting the regime of Mr. Y. Tsedenbal.

He wrote: "An effort to establish a Chinese faction within the Mongolian People's Revolutionary (Communist) Party was said to have been in the background of several party shake-ups in the last few years.

"Although Ulan Bator has maintained a policy of not publicizing frontier clashes, there have reportedly been frequent probing attempts by Chinese frontier guards. Conflicts have flared repeatedly over the Trans-Mongolian Railway, which is jointly operated by the Mongolians and the Russians. Conflicts over the operations of trains frequently arise. So do wrangles over Mongolian-Chinese railroad operations.

"A Mixed Mongolian-Chinese Commission is supposed to deal with these questions. Its most recent meeting was held at Erh-lien on the Chinese side of the Mongolian-Chinese frontier. When the Mongolian commissioners arrived at the meeting place, it is reported they were immediately locked up by the Chinese as punishment for what the Chinese termed hostile actions of Mongolian authorities towards Chinese interests. They were held for 24 hours, and then immediately returned to Mongolia. The Mixed Commission has held no further meetings.

"The Chinese remain largely confined to their high-walled Embassy compound on a quarter-mile-square plot of ground in the heart of Ulan Bator. About 50 Chinese diplomats are still stationed in Ulan Bator. With their families they make up a group of 125 to 150 Chinese.

"Ten years ago there were possibly 40,000 Chinese workers in Mongolia engaged in a vast variety of building and construction projects. Of this labour force, only about 300 Chinese remain. They no longer have their own housing but are confined to the Embassy compound.

"Trade with China has dwindled almost to nothing. Some rice is still purchased and there are occasional items of consumers' goods, such as silks for the traditional Mongol dress, the Del. But the dozens of items which formerly provided the basis of much of Mongolia's retail economy no longer are imported. Some of these items now come from North Korea, but most have simply vanished from the stores.

"The cost to the Mongol consumer of the quarrel with China is considerable. The loss of consumers' goods has not been made up from other sources. Nor has the withdrawal of Chinese construction labour been matched by a comparable introduction of Soviet or East European construction forces.

"The breach with China has cut all ties between Outer Mongolia and Inner Mongolia. Mongols in Ulan Bator express fear that their fellow Mongols in Inner Mongolia have virtually lost their special ethnic status as a result of the enormous influence of great Chinese (Han) immigration into Inner Mongolia which has reduced the Mongol population to a distinct minority. At the same time, political control of the region under the Chinese Cultural Revolution has been taken from Mongol hands. No Mongols hold any position of authority in Inner Mongolia."

The strained relations between the Mongolian People's Republic and China were underscored in May when the Soviet President, Mr. N. Podgorny, visited Ulan Bator (see page 9018). A joint communique issued on the conclusion of his visit denounced the "Great-Power chauvinist course of the Chinese leadership."

China responded to the communique by accusing the Soviet Union of having turned Mongolia into its "colony" complete with Soviet military bases and troops. China also denied that it had violated the border with Mongolia.

Meanwhile, China's provincial radio in Urumchi (Sinkiang) was alleged by a Yugoslav correspondent in Ulan Bator to have put out a Mongolian-language broadcast disputing the validity of the 1962 Border Agreement with Peking (see page 5013).

NEPAL

A. Expulsion Of Dalai Lama's Chief Representative Denied: The Government described on June 1 as "erroneous" a news item published in a section of the Press that the Government had "expelled the chief representative of the Dalai Lama on May 29."

A Government statement, contradicting the item regarding expulsion of Mr. Sonam Wangyl Sarge, who had been described as "chief representative of the Dalai Lama" was released by Nepal's official news agency, RSS.

The statement said: "The Nepal Government had never had any representative of the Dalai Lama officially or unofficially. As far as the Government was concerned, Mr. Sonam Wangyl Sarge lived in Nepal like any other Tibetan refugee in the Kingdom."

A high Government official said: "Mr. Sonam Wangyl Sarge was only warned by the police against his undesirable activities. What was only a law and order matter has been given a political colour by some Indian newspapers."

SYRIA

A. Recognition To East Germany: It was officially announced in Damascus on June 5 that Syria had given full diplomatic recognition to East Germany.

Syria is the third Arab country to grant East Germany full diplomatic recognition in the last two months after Iraq and Sudan.

The West German Government thereupon accused Syria of committing an "unfriendly act" by recognizing the East German Government.

THAILAND

A. S-EATO Ministerial Council Session: The Ministerial Council of the South-East Asia Treaty Organization (S-EATO) met in Bangkok on May 20 and 21.

An Islamabad message said that Pakistan did not participate in the drafting of the joint communique. A Pakistan Foreign Office spokesman said his country was represented only by its Ambassador "which is in line with Pakistan's attitude towards S-EATO."

It wound up earlier than scheduled after calling for greater emphasis on political and counter-insurgency activities.

A communique issued at the end of the conference said: "The Council was convinced that greater emphasis should be placed on political consultations, counter-insurgency, and economic and cultural co-operation to make the Organization's role more effective and more responsive to the new Communist tactics being employed to undermine the stability and orderly progress of our societies."

The Ministers from the United States, United Kingdom, the Philippines, Australia, New Zealand and Thailand, who drafted the communique agreed that the most significant development during the past year "has been the prospects for peace in the area opened up by the Paris meeting."

It said that "Communist aggression, both over and by subversion, infiltration and terrorism remained a major threat to the peace and security of the region. The Council expressed its determination that this aggression must not be allowed to succeed."

The Council was also convinced that the "Communist threat" in the Treaty area could not be considered in isolation from problems of international peace and security, and the outcome of the struggle now going on in South-East Asia would have a profound effect throughout the world.

The Council agreed that the "most significant development" during the past year had been "prospects for peace" in the Treaty area opened up by the Paris peace talks and the efforts of the United States and South Viet-Nam in consultation with their allies to bring about a peaceful and just solution to the Viet-Nam conflict.

It said the Council also signified its approval of proposals made by President Richard Nixon and South Viet-Nam for: (1) The mutual withdrawal of external forces from South Viet-Nam; (2) Respect for the demilitarized zone in Viet-Nam; (3) Full implementation of the 1962 Geneva Agreements on Laos; (4) Respect for independence, neutrality and territorial integrity of Cambodia; and (5) the release of prisoners of war.

The communique said: "The Council noted that the Paris talks have been going on for a year and expressed the hope that the other side would now respond constructively to these proposals."

The Council expressed "deep concern" over "North Viet-Nam's continued aggression against South Viet-Nam." It also noted the progress being made by the South Viet-Namese armed forces in improving their ability to withstand the "armed aggression of North Viet-Nam," and "counter-subversive activities."

It welcomed the "determination of the South Viet-Namese Government" progressively to assume greater responsibility for the "defence of the country." "The Council stated its conviction that the effective defence of the Republic of Viet-Nam in its current struggle is essential to the security of South-East Asia and will demonstrate that Communist expansion through aggression of this kind will not be permitted."

It noted the "intention of S-EATO members" to continue their "aid to South Viet-Nam" and contribute to her reconstruction after the war. It also welcomed the intention of other countries around the world to take part in the reconstruction work.

On Laos, the communique expressed grave concern over the ""continuing presence of North Viet-Namese military forces" and the "use of Laotian territory" for "infiltration of troops and supplies into South Viet-Nam and Thailand."

It declared its support for the Government of the Laotian Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma and called for the full implementation of the Geneva Agreements on Laos.

S-EATO military advisers who met in preparation for the Ministerial conference issued a statement on May 16 emphasizing the need to improve the military effectiveness of member-States to counter widening subversion and aggression.

In a report on the political situation in the Treaty area, Gen. Jesus Vargas, the S-EATO Secretary-General, said subversion must be expected to continue regardless of the outcome of the Paris talks.

B. Security Agreement With Formosa: At the end of a six-day visit to Bangkok by the Formosan Defence Minister, Gen. Chiang Ching-kuo on May 17, it was officially announced that Thailand and Formosa had reached agreement on exchange of information and intelligence on security matters.

Observers saw in the agreement the beginning of a new defence alignment in East Asia.

The agreement will seek closer co-operation between the Thai intelligence apparatus and 6,000 or so remnants of the Kuomintang army in Burma and north Thailand who combine gathering of intelligence with the management of the opium trade.

Coming on the eve of the meeting of the Ministerial Council of the the South-East Asia Treaty Organization, Gen. Chiang's visit intensified speculation that Formosa and South Korea might be invited to join the troubled alliance or a new pact that could replace S-EATO. This much vaunted possibility was raised in discussions with Thai leaders.

At a news conference before his departure, Gen. Chiang evaded direct answer on this question, saying: "We have not considered joining S-EATO yet." But he volunteered the observation that Thailand was as equally committed to the anti-communist struggle as South Korea, which he had visited in February.

Strengthening speculation on the KMT search for new allies, newspapers in Taipeh greeting Gen.

Chiang's return declared that the Bangkok talks had ushered in "a new era" in the struggle against the Chinese Communists.

C. Air Agreement With Pakistan: Thailand and Pakistan signed in Bangkok on May 17 an Air Agreement which will allow the airlines of both countries to stop at each other's airports and pick up passengers.

The outgoing Pakistan Ambassador, Mr. Hayat Junejo, and the Thai Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr. Chitti Sucharitakul signed the Agreement.

The Agreement was originally initialled in Karachi two years ago. Since then, Pakistan International Airlines had set up an office in Bangkok.

The Agreement, effective immediately, will allow Thai International Airways to stop in Dacca and pick up passengers and cargo there on the way to New Delhi, the present farthest west-bound point on Thai international routes.

Pakistan International Airlines planes from Dacca will stop in Bangkok on their way to Pnom Penh (Cambodia).

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Canada Adopts "One-China" Policy: According to Ottawa reports, Canada has veered round to a "one-China" policy in deference to the Peking stand that it will not discuss diplomatic relations with any country which also recognizes the KMT Government in Formosa.

The Canadian External Affairs Minister, Mr. Mitchell Sharp, told the House of Commons on May 30 that "we cannot recognize both (Peking and Taiwan)."

Until now Canada's China policy, as stated by the Premier, Mr. Elliott Trudeau, was aimed at opening up diplomatic ties with the Peking regime and recognizing it as the Government of China, even while continuing to accord recognition to Formosa as a separate entity.

This two-China formula had not found favour with Peking and talks in Stockholm between Canadian and Chinese representatives on establishing diplomatic relations between their two countries had remained stalled for months.

The expectation was that the change in Canada's policy would lead to early diplomatic recognition of Peking by Ottawa. Though Ottawa had not said it would sever relations with Formosa to suit Peking, its recognition of China would most likely lead to Gen. Chiang himself breaking off his present ties with Canada. This was what happened when Gen. Charles De Gaulle of France established ties with China.

Mr. Trudeau's bid to recognize Peking had never gone down well in Washington which had consistently withheld recognition from Peking.

Recently, several US Senators had formulated a "sense of Congress" resolution which if passed would enable USA to explore the possibility of recognizing China at some future date. But this "future date" may be quite far away. The latest change in Canada's China policy was, therefore, not welcomed in Washington, which naturally fears that Canada's example will be followed by other members of the Western alliance. Italy for one has been talking for some time about following the Canadian lead.

B. Venus Unsuitable For Man—Soviet Space Capsules' Findings: The Soviet Academy of Sciences revealed in Moscow on June 4 that the three Soviet space capsules that had descended into the atmosphere of Venus had gathered nearly identical data showing the planet to be unsuitable for man.

Venus-4 had radioed that the atmosphere contained 90 to 95 per cent of carbon dioxide and not more than seven per cent of nitrogen. Venus 5 and 6 had reported 99 per cent of carbon dioxide and 2 to 5 per cent of nitrogen.

The two experiments differed slightly on temperature and pressure estimates. Venus-4 reported 270 degrees Centigrade (518 Fahrenheit) while Venus 5 and 6 reported 400 degrees Centigrade (752 Fahrenheit).

The reports indicated that none of the three craft had succeeded in transmitting from the surface.

C. Czech Liberals Expelled From Communist Party Central Committee: It was announced in Prague on May 31 that Mr. Ota Sik, Mr. Frantisek Kriegel and the signatories of the 2,000-word manifesto published in the Spring of 1968 had been expelled from the Czechoslovak Communist Party Central Committee.

Mr. Sik and Mr. Kriegel were not signatories.

The announcement of the expulsions was made by the Party's First Secretary, Mr. Gustav Husak.

He said the Central Committee had decided to exclude from its ranks "those who have refused to abandon their false platform." He then named the former Deputy Premier, Mr. Ota Sik—one of the main architects of the economic reforms proposed after the fall of Mr. Novotny—and the former President of the National Front, Mr. Frantisek Kriegel, as being among those expelled together with all members who had signed the 2,000-word manifesto.

The 2,000-word manifesto had been published on June 27, 1968. It was drawn up by Czech writer Ludvik Vaculik and called for a speeding up of the democratization process.

The manifesto, signed mainly by writers and intellectuals, had supported the liberal ideas introduced by the then party leader, Mr. Alexander Dubcek, after the ousting of President Antonin Novotny.

D. Mars Landing Predicted: The British astronomer, Sir Bernard Lovell on May 9 predicted a Russian or American attempt to land on Mars within 10 or 20 years.

Sir Bernard, Director of the Jodrell Bank space-tracking station, also said that man could make a close approach to Venus, but a landing there would be difficult because of boiling temperature and a poisonous atmosphere. "I don't regard a Mars landing as fanciful. I am sure it is something which is in both the Russian and American programmes. It is now not a question of technical ability but a matter of expense."

AFGHANISTAN

A. Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Visit: The Prime Minister of India, Mrs. Indira Gandhi arrived in Kabul on June 5 on a five-day good-will visit.

Heading the large group present at the airport to receive her were the Prime Minister, Mr. Nur Ahmed Etemadi, Mrs. Etemadi and members of the Cabinet. Mr. Etemadi introduced his Cabinet colleagues to Mrs. Gandhi. Later, she inspected a ceremonial guard of honour.

The same evening, Mrs. Gandhi called on King Zahir Shah at the Royal Palace. She also held talks with Mr. Etemadi on matters of mutual interest.

Later, speaking at a banquet given by Mr. Etemadi in her honour, Mrs. Gandhi said that India and Afghanistan could greatly expand and diversify their trade and exchange of technological skills. "There is hardly a home in India which does not consume or want to consume your produce. The absence of direct means of communication, however, hampered the expansion of trade between the two countries."

She said that the two countries had chosen the paths of planned development and non-alignment. "Our non-alignment is not a sign of indifference to world problems. On the contrary, it is our concern for peace and progress that has convinced us of the dangers of military blocs. Our national interest and sense of priorities urge friendship and co-operation with all."

Meeting With Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan:

On June 6, Mrs. Gandhi met the Pathan leader, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan.

Discussions between Mrs. Gandhi and Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, who had fought shoulder to shoulder with Mahatma Gandhi and Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru for the freedom of the sub-continent, were marked by sentiment and poignancy. Mrs. Gandhi presented to him a piece of bluish grey khadi which he usually wears and also an illustrated copy of the Quran.

Mrs. Gandhi extended a personal invitation to Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan to visit India. He has been awarded the Nehru Award for international understanding and is expected to come to India in October. He usually stays at Jalalabad and occasionally visits Kabul.

Reception:

On June 6, Mr. Etemadi held a reception in honour of Mrs. Gandhi at the Foreign Ministry.

He welcomed her on her first official visit to Afghanistan as Prime Minister. He said the people of India had won freedom after "a century of struggle against imperialism and under very difficult circumstances."

He referred to the Pakhtoonistan issue and said Afghanistan wanted to solve this problem with Pakistan in an honourable and peaceful manner.

Turning to West Asia, he said the occupation of Arab territories by Israel had created an undesirable situation and posed a threat to peace.

Talks:

At their first formal talks on June 7, Mrs. Gandhi and Mr. Etemadi decided on increased contacts between the two countries in the agricultural field and a Joint Economic Commission to ensure better co-operation.

Present on the Afghan side were the First Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Ali Ahmed Popal and Second Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. A. Yaftali.

Indian officials who participated in the talks were the External Affairs Secretary, Mr. Kewal Singh and the Joint Secretary, Mr. R. D. Sathe.

Address To Parliament:

On June 9, Mrs. Gandhi was extended a rare honour when she was invited to address both Houses of the Jirga (Parliament).

Never before had a visiting dignitary addressed the bicameral Parliament.

In her address, Mrs. Gandhi dealt largely with the difficulties a developing country had to encounter in banishing centuries-old poverty and backwardness. In this context, she referred to the identical tasks facing the two countries and the progress made in India in the scientific and technological fields. "Today we make aircraft, machine tools and heavy chemicals, not to speak of a wide range of items from antibiotics to automobiles. We export engineering goods and sophisticated instruments to many advanced nations."

She briefly referred to the international situation and emphasized the need for maintaining peace for concentrating on development works.

She expressed the sympathy of the people of India for the people of Viet-Nam and the Arabs, especially Palestinian refugees.

She asserted that India resolutely opposed regimes like those in South Africa, Angola and Mozambique which were based on the doctrine of racial superiority. "The Indian stand on these questions has been consistent and firm and identical with the attitude of the Afghan Government."

Earlier, Mr. Etemadi, while introducing Mrs. Gandhi to the Members of Parliament, specially referred to the contribution made by the people of India to the independence movement in his country and stated that Afghanistan's relations with India were an epitome of co-operation in international affairs.

Reception By Women's Welfare Society:

Earlier, on June 9, Mrs. Gandhi was given a reception by the Women's Welfare Society. She presented to the Society a cheque for Rs. 12,000, six sewing machines and six knitting machines.

The President of the Society, Mrs. Salehah Farooq Etemadi, welcomed Mrs. Gandhi and gave an account of the progress made by Afghan women in the last 10 years.

On behalf of the Society, an artistic table-cloth made in Kandahari was presented to Mrs. Gandhi.

Mrs. Gandhi also entertained Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, the self-exiled Frontier leader, at a private lunch. Her other engagements included a meeting with Shah Wali Khan, the Victor of Kabul.

She presented to the Agriculture Minister, Mr. Akbar Raza, agricultural implements worth more than Rs. 2,00,000.

She also presented medicines worth about Rs. 10,000 to the Health Minister, Mrs. Kubra Noorzai.

Joint Communique:

In a joint communique issued on June 10, Mrs. Gandhi and Mr. Etemadi re-affirmed their faith in the principles embodied in the Tashkent Declaration for finding solutions to differences between States.

They expressed the hope that the implementation of this significant Declaration would lead to peace in the region and would also be in the larger interest of peace in the world.

The communique announced the setting up of a Joint Commission at ministerial level to study and plan various projects for the mutual benefit of India and Afghanistan based on the co-ordination of the respective resources and capabilities of each country. The Commission would examine all measures necessary to expand the trade between the two countries.

In this context, the two Prime Ministers agreed that co-operation among the countries of the region was of great importance. They expressed the hope that the existing difficulties in the way of the land transit trade of the region would be ended soon so that economic co-operation and trade between the countries of the region could be developed to the maximum extent for the benefit of the peoples of these countries.

They noted with satisfaction the great scope that existed for collaboration in the economic and technical fields, particularly in irrigation, power, agriculture, small-scale industries, education and culture. Mrs. Gandhi agreed to place at the disposal of the Government of Afghanistan technical expertise available in India in these fields.

In a reference to West Asia, the communique expressed deep concern at the continued occupation of Arab territories by Israel. The two Prime Ministers stressed that while a comprehensive solution should be found through the implementation of the Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967, any delay in withdrawal by Israeli forces from the occupied areas presented dangerous possibilities.

On Viet-Nam, they were of the view that a solution could be found only through negotiations and that the provisions of the 1954 Geneva Agreement provided an acceptable basis for such settlement. They hoped that the talks being held in Paris would lead to an early settlement.

The following are excerpts from joint communique:

"At the invitation of His Excellency the Prime Minister and the Government of Afghanistan, the Prime Minister of India, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, visited Afghanistan from June 5 to 10, 1969 and was accorded an enthusiastic and warm reception by the Afghan people wherever she went.

"As the discussions revealed that there existed a considerable scope in various fields for economic and technical assistance and cultural co-operation, the two Prime Ministers agreed to set up a Joint Commission at Ministerial level. The Joint Commission would, inter alia, study and plan various projects for the mutual benefit of the two countries based on the co-ordination of the respective resources and capabilities of each country. The Commission would also examine all measures necessary to expand the trade exchanges between India and Afghanistan.

"In the above context, the two Prime Ministers agreed that co-operation among the countries of the region was of great importance. They expressed the hope that the existing difficulties in the way of the land transit trade of the region would be ended soon so that economic co-operation and trade between the countries of the region could be developed to the maximum extent for the benefit of the people of these countries.

"It was specially noted that the recent development of the road net-work in Afghanistan has greatly enhanced the possibilities of land transport and overland trade between the countries of the region.

"The Prime Ministers expressed the conviction that the policy of non-alignment had been re-affirmed by the loosening of military alliances and the growth of forces for peace and international co-operation. They emphasized the importance of the acceptance of the principles of peaceful co-existence and peaceful methods of settlement of disputes by the world community for safeguarding international peace and security.

"The two Prime Ministers re-affirmed their faith in the principles embodied in the Tashkent Declaration for finding solutions to differences between States and the hope was expressed that the implementation of this significant Declaration would lead to peace in the region and would also be in the larger interest of peace in the world.

"The Prime Ministers were of the firm opinion that an early conclusion of a comprehensive Treaty on general and complete disarmament, both nuclear and conventional, under effective international supervision would be a vital contribution to the maintenance of world peace and security. They voiced their concern that there had been little progress so far in this direction and expressed the hope that the 18-nation Disarmament Committee would give urgent consideration to this important matter.

"They re-iterated their firm opposition to any form of imperialism, colonialism or its remnants and neo-colonialism. They also noted that apart from the maintenance of peace and the eradication of all forms of exploitation by one country of another, the primary concern of developing countries is to raise the living standards of their people as rapidly as possible during the Development Decade. The two Prime Ministers urged the advanced nations to pursue more constructive trade policies and show a deeper understanding of the role of trade in development so that dependence on credits can be reduced.

"The Prime Ministers expressed the view that a solution to the Viet-Nam problem can be found only through peaceful negotiations and that the provisions of the 1954 Geneva Agreement provide an acceptable basis for such settlement and hoped that the talks now being held in Paris would lead to an early settlement.

"The two Prime Ministers expressed deep concern at the continued occupation of the Arab territories by Israel. They stressed that while a comprehensive solution should be found through the implementation of the Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967, any delay in withdrawal by Israeli forces from the occupied territories was fraught with further dangerous possibilities.

"The two Prime Ministers strongly condemned the racialist and colonialist policies pursued by South Africa, Rhodesia and Portugal and expressed their solidarity with all those countries and organizations struggling to bring to an end these policies which directly contravene the Charter of United Nations.

"The Prime Minister of India thanked the Prime Minister and Government of Afghanistan for their warm and cordial hospitality. She extended an invitation to the Prime Minister of Afghanistan to visit India at a convenient date. The Prime Minister of Afghanistan accepted the invitation with pleasure."

B. Mr. A. Kosygin's Visit: The Soviet Premier, Mr. A. Kosygin, paid a five-day official visit to Kabul in the second week of June.

A joint communique issued at the end of talks between Mr. Kosygin and King Zahir Shah said that there are favourable prospects for expansion of trade and economic co-operation between their two countries.

It said that economic co-operation between the two countries without political strings "has played an important role in the creation of foundations for economic progress of the people of Afghanistan."

The Soviet side, it said, extended appreciation of Afghanistan's policy of neutrality and independence.

The two countries stressed their commitment to international detente ending the arms race, non-proliferation of nuclear arms and a political settlement in Viet-Nam. They took note of Israel's "provocative" actions against the Arab countries and agreed that there "could be no just peace in the Middle East without the withdrawal of Israeli troops" from the occupied territories.

BHUTAN

A. Democratic Reforms Accepted By National Assembly: Bhutan has emerged as the world's most progressive monarchy following the acceptance by the Tsongdu (National Assembly) of King Jigme Dorji Wangchuk's proposal to democratize the royal rule.

During its Summer session, the 150-member Assembly unanimously passed a constitutional amendment making continuity of any monarch's rule dependent on popular approval. The amendment provides that if the Assembly passed by a two-thirds majority a vote of no-confidence in the King, he must abdicate in favour of the next royal successor. The successor will, however, have to be from the present Royal Wangchuk dynasty.

Under the new constitutional provision, while the King must mandatorily seek a vote of confidence of the Assembly every three years to be in power, the Assembly may bring a vote of no-confidence any time. The voting will be by secret ballot.

Keeping in line with the constitutional reform he himself initiated, the King sought the first vote of confidence immediately after the Assembly had adopted his proposal. Of the 137 members present, 133 members voted in his favour, two voted against while two abstained.

Commenting on the two votes cast against him, the King said that it was evidence of the robust democracy in action.

Last year, the Tsongdu had accepted other constitutional reforms which made the National Assembly a sovereign body by abolishing the King's veto powers on Bills and resolutions adopted by the Assembly.

During its 23-day session, the longest on record, members raised the question of Bhutan's application for membership of United Nations. The King's step-brother, H. H. N. Wangchuk, who attended the last session of the UN General Assembly, told the Members that he would be submitting a report on the subject. He said that many aspects—financial, political and organizational—had to be considered before taking a decision on this vital question. Bhutan was already a member of the Colombo Powers' Conference and was recently admitted as a member of the Universal Postal Union.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Telengana Agitation; Round-up Of Naxalites In Andhra; Gen. S.H.F.J. Manekshaw Takes Over As Army Chief; CPI(M) Village Volunteer Force; Electricity Generation Survey.

A. Telengana Agitation Resumed: The Telengana Praja Samithi launched the second phase of its agitation for a separate State on May 26 when volunteers offered satyagraha and courted arrest in the nine districts of the region.

In the twin cities of Hyderabad and Secunderabad, the Samithi volunteers offered satyagraha at ten places.

The agitation continued for several days.

Army Called Out:

On June 2, the Army was called out to aid the civil authorities in maintaining law and order in the twin cities of Hyderabad and Secunderabad.

The situation in Hyderabad worsened on June 2 when, for the first time, protagonists of an integrated State and separate Telengana clashed in the busy shopping centre of Abid Circle.

As the news of the clash spread quickly throughout the city, hundreds of people came out into the streets and indulged in an orgy of violence, arson and vandalism.

The Chief Secretary to the Government announced that the Army had been called out to aid the civil authorities in Hyderabad and Secunderabad for the conduct of public examinations beginning next day (June 3).

There was military patrolling and CRP vigilance in Hyderabad and Secunderabad on June 3 when examinations were held. But the agitators put up road-blocks, attacked buses and intimidated students. The academic authorities claimed an attendance of 80 to 90 per cent at examinations. Following this, the agitators indulged in violence and there was police firing resulting in the death of about 13 persons.

The demonstrations continued for the next few days.

Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Visit:

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, flew to Hyderabad at 10 p.m. on June 5 and appealed to the leaders of various political parties in Andhra Pradesh to help restore normalcy in the State.

She assured that all aspects of Telengana and the connected issues could be discussed in a calm atmosphere. She also made it clear that violence must stop immediately.

She had detailed discussions with the Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, the President of the Telengana Praja Samithi, Dr. M. Chenna Reddy, Mr. Konda Laxman Bapuji, leaders of the Swatantra Party, SSP, Secretary of the Communist Party of India, and Jana Sangh and student leaders.

Mr. Y. B. Chavan's Visit:

The Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, visited Hyderabad for two days on June 7 and 8 and met a number of persons with a view to bring about a proper understanding and atmosphere and the withdrawal of agitation.

On June 8, Mr. Chavan issued a statement calling for the suspension of all agitational activity in Telengana so that solutions to the problems might be found in an atmosphere "free from passion and acrimony."

He said that the problems of Telengana were "very serious and complex which require objective and most careful consideration of the Prime Minister and the Central Cabinet. This consideration will be given as soon as possible."

He appealed to the people, meanwhile, to ensure normal conditions in which "after further consultations with their leaders, we may work out fair and just solutions for their problems."

Mr. Chavan read his statement to newsmen shortly after 10 p.m. at the conclusion of two days of hectic consultations with hundreds of people from all walks of life on problems connected with the Telengana agitation.

He did not make a specific reference to the demand for a separate State of Telengana in his statement, but said he recognized "the strength of feeling" that existed on the problems of Telengana and appreciated their urgency.

The following is the text of his statement:

"Since my arrival at Hyderabad, I have spent most of my time meeting people from different walks of life, representatives of various organizations, Members of Parliament and the State Legislature, persons connected with local bodies, and other leaders of public opinion.

"Various views have been expressed and suggestions offered for dealing with the distressing situation prevailing in Telengana. I recognize the strength of feeling that exists on the problems of Telengana.

"I appreciate the urgency of the problems, the very serious and complex problems which require objective and most careful consideration of the Prime Minister and the Central Cabinet. This consideration will be given as soon as possible.

"But, in the meantime, it is essential that normal conditions are maintained so that solutions may be found in an atmosphere free from passion and acrimony.

"May I, therefore, urge and appeal that there should be suspension of all agitational activity. In the present circumstances, such activity would lead to violence and disorder and set in motion a chain of events which cannot but do grave harm to the interests of the people concerned and indeed of the whole country.

"I have been told that non-gazetted officers of Telengana propose to start a strike on June 10. They have the right to press for removal of their grievances and to ask for sympathetic consideration from the State Government and from the Central Government if any if their grievances relate to matters with which we are concerned. But it is wrong for Government servants to seek to paralyze the administration in pursuit of a political objective.

"I hope all concerned will think coolly about the serious implications of Government servants going on strike for a political purpose and that the contemplated strike will be given up.

"It has been mentioned to me that there is nervousness among the people from the Andhra region residing in Telengana and a few incidents have already occurred. I am very happy to have assurances from many of those who met me that whatever may be their political views, they entertain brotherly feelings towards people from the Andhra region with whom they would maintain harmonious relations under all circumstances. I hope people from the Andhra region will be given no cause for any nervousness."

Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy On His Resignation:

Also on June 8, the Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, offered to step down from office if that could help the integration of the State.

He said: "I am interested in the unity of 40,000,000 people of Andhra Pradesh and the rapid economic development of the region which its sources warrant. If the interests of both the nation and of Andhra Pradesh would be secure by my giving up the office of Chief Minister, my resignation is a small matter."

He however, made it clear that he would not resign as a result of pressure tactics or to "satisfy the vanity of some persons."

Asked whether he would seek a fresh vote of confidence of the Congress Legislature Party, he said: "I do not think the question of confidence of the party in me has arisen or is doubted by any one. If I do not have that confidence, I have no right to exist, trouble or no trouble."

He attributed the current agitation to the attempts of some "disgruntled" politicians to exploit "some mistrust and suspicion which have been created" (in Telengana).

He said that his former colleague, Dr. M. Chenna Reddy was motivated by his "personal antagonism" towards him (Chief Minister) and was "trying to deceive the public."

He said the question of change in leadership in Andhra Pradesh had not figured in his talks so far with the Prime Minister or the Home Minister.

On the suggestion for President's Rule in the State for a brief period to "cool off" tempers, he said it might only increase the appetite of agitators who would go on "with more violence."

He pointed out the problem posed by the Telengana agitators was full of ramifications which had to be faced by the Centre. "I must say I am bearing the nation's cross. It is not a question of law and order. It is a question of what will happen if disintegration of linguistic States takes place. How do you meet a situation if demands arise for creating two or three linguistic States out of one?"

Asked about his solution of the problem in Telengana, he said: "We are prepared to have the Regional Committee, which is an important part of our Assembly, being given statutory powers, if it would inspire better confidence in the people."

He said that the State Government had accepted 51 out of 54 recommendations made by the Regional Committee so far and had always respected the opinions of the Committee.

Congress Working Committee's Talks Fail:

The Congress Working Committee discussed the Telengana issue on June 19 and 20. It invited Dr. M. Chenna Reddy and Mr. Konda Lakshman Bapuji for talks, and after some hesitation they arrived in New Delhi on June 21 and had discussions with the Committee. But, they stuck rigidly to their three demands—President's Rule, resignation of the Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy and a separate Telengana.

The Congress Working Committee rejected the three demands, but decided to continue the dialogue with the Telengana leaders. The Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, was asked to visit Hyderabad for the purpose, but Dr. Chenna Reddy "advised" him not to, and Mr. Desai abandoned the visit.

In Bangalore, the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, said on June 24 that the talks with Telengana leaders had failed for the time being.

Telengana Congress Workers' Convention:

A Convention of Telengana Congress workers on June 1 urged the Government of India to suspend the State Legislature for a period of six months and impose President's Rule.

It also urged the Central Government to concede the just and genuine demand for a separate Telengana State immediately, in deference to the wishes of the people of Telengana and Andhra.

The lengthy resolution listed the acts of commission and omission of the State Government since the merger of the two regions in 1956. The violation of the 1956 Gentleman's Agreement and the continuous injustice done to Telengana and the failure of successive Chief Ministers to redress the grievances—all culminated and resulted in the unleashing of a mass upsurge in the entire Telengana region.

It said that the Prime Minister's eight-point programme could not satisfy anybody. The resolution quoted extensively from the Fazl Ali Commission's report which recommended the formation of a separate Telengana State as early as in 1956 and said that "in fact, smaller States would be more viable and administratively well-knit units, which would not only bring prosperity and progress to the people of the area but would also be a boon to them."

The Convention also adopted another resolution to constitute the Telengana Pradesh Congress Committee and decided to request the A-ICC to give due recognition to it.

The Convention, held without the permission of either the Andhra Pradesh Congress Committee or of the All-India Congress Committee, expressed the view that "if a Congress organization at the Telengana level is not promoted, the very existence of the Congress in Telengana would be at stake, leaving a vacuum in the political life of the people of this part of the country, causing great damage to the interests of the public at large and danger to the very functioning of democracy."

Recognition To Telengana Unions Withdrawn:

The Andhra Pradesh Government withdrew on May 25 the recognition to the Telengana NGOs' Association and the State Teachers' Union for organizing the "token strike" on April 15 in connexion with the Telengana agitation.

The Government also dismissed the President of the Telengana NGOs' Association, Mr. K. R. Amos, for "acting in a manner prejudicial to the security of the State." Mr. Amos was working in the Industries Department of the State Government.

The dismissal order said: "The Governor is satisfied that in the interests of security of the State it is not expedient to hold an inquiry under Clause 2 of Article 311 of the Constitution."

The General Secretary of the State Teachers' Union, Mr. P. Ramabrahmam, criticized the withdrawal of recognition and said that the action was "vindictive." He accused the Government of "suppressing legitimate Union activities." The order would only strengthen the determination of teachers to lend more support to the movement for a separate Telengana.

Essential Services Ordinance:

On June 1, the Andhra Pradesh Government promulgated an Ordinance to provide for the maintenance of certain essential services and the normal life of the community in the State.

Under the Ordinance, called the Andhra Pradesh Essential Services Maintenance Ordinance, 1969, the Government took wide powers to deal with any situation arising from the threat to paralyse the administration in Telengana given by the Telengana Praja Samithi.

Under it, no person employed in any essential service to which the order relates shall go or remain on strike. It makes any strike declared or commenced, by person employed in any of the specified services as illegal. All those who commence a strike or otherwise take part in any such strike shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to Rs. 200 or with both.

It came into effect at once.

Separate Telengana Demand By BKD:

The National Executive of the Bharatiya Kranti Dal (BKD) on May 29 passed a resolution supporting the demand for a separate Telengana State. This alone, it said, would give the State much-needed peace and ensure its proper development.

The Executive was, however, of the view that recourse to any violent movement to secure a separate State militated against the democratic way of life. It disapproved of the violence and destruction of property which followed in the wake of the demand for a Telengana State. At the same time, it felt that the Central Government was responsible for such violent activities.

Congressmen Expelled:

On May 26, the Executive Committee of the Andhra Pradesh Congress Committee expelled six legislators from the party for three years for infringing party discipline.

All members, excepting Mr. J. Chokka Rao, President of the Telengana Regional Committee, voted in support of a resolution to this effect.

The expelled legislators were: Mr. K. Achutha Reddy, Mr. M. Manik Rao, Mr. T. Anjaiah, Mr. M. M. Hashim, Mr. G. Raja Ram and Mr. P. Navasinga Rao.

Mr. Chokka Rao told newsmen that he voted against the resolution because he felt that the situation was such that disciplinary action at present would only aggravate the situation.

He said he would shortly be seeking the intervention of the Congress President on the expulsion issue and would also urge the creation of a separate Pradesh Congress Committee for Telengana.

China's Support For Telengana:

In a broadcast on June 13, Peking Radio said that China supported the agitation for a separate Telengana and said that "the heroic people of Telengana have once again risen in rebellion against Indian reactionaries."

It recalled that "even during 1946-51, the people of Telengana had launched an armed struggle against the reactionaries."

It added: "In 1948, the Nehru Government had despatched troops to suppress the people and had failed to put down the struggle. Only by taking the road to armed struggle can the people of Telengana overthrow the rule of feudal landlords and the bourgeoisie".

B. Campaign To Crush Naxalites In Andhra Pradesh: Twelve Naxalites, including two (gang) leaders, were killed on May 27 in four encounters with the police at various places in the Parvathipuram area of Srikakulam district in Andhra Pradesh, the centre of Naxalite activities.

Seven more Naxalites, including Panchadri Krishnamurthy, stated to be a leader, were killed in Jalantharkota and Pathankota hills.

In another encounter at Aviri in Parvathipuram area, a Naxalite leader, Pyla Bhumudu of Mondemal, was killed when about 100 of them attacked the police party while they were combing the area for the absconding accused. The attackers hurled three country bombs and fired two gun shots at the police, but fled when police retaliated.

The police also intercepted a gang of dacoits who were carrying away looted grains at Chintalakoridi forest. One dacoit was killed in the firing, while the others fled.

At Kagithada hills, in Parvathipuram area, there was an exchange of fire between another dacoit gang and the police in which three dacoits were killed.

Naxalites Claim "Liberation" Of Tribal People:

The Naxalities (pro-Peking extremist Communists) claimed on June 14 to have "liberated" a number of tribal people in the Agency area of Srikakulam district (of Andhra) from the liability to pay back loans to the landlords.

A pamphlet issued by them said that promissory notes to the value of Rs. 5,00,000 executed by the tribal people had been seized from the landlord money-lenders and destroyed. Mortgaged gold of about 200 tolas had also been seized from landlords and restored to the real owners.

The pamphlet also claimed that eight landlords were done to death and 29 armed police personnel were liquidated physically.

The pamphlet was issued in the name of the "Srikakulam District Communist Committee" and the "Jilla Raitanga Sangram Samithi" of Srikakulam.

"Disturbed Areas" Notification:

On June 16, the Andhra Pradesh Government declared in a notification the Parvathipuram and Palakonda and Pathapatnam Agency area in Srikakulam district as "disturbed areas."

The notification empowers the police to open fire on those violating prohibitory orders in these areas and certain bailable offences will become non-bailable.

C. Pay Rise For Andhra State Employees: The Andhra Pradesh Government announced in Hyderabad on June 13 revised pay scales for its staff to benefit 2,30,000 Government employees, including those in local bodies. The additional expenditure will be Rs 5.5 crores.

Announcing the decision, the Chief Secretary, Mr. M. T. Raju said that the revised scales would come into force with retrospective effect from March 19.

The revision was based on the proposals of an officers' committee which examined the recommendations of the one-man Pay Committee headed by Mr. Justice N. D. Krishna Rao. The pay committee was appointed in 1965 and its report was submitted towards the end of 1967.

The Cabinet did not accept the recommendation of the Pay Committee to introduce an efficiency bar. The scales announced were an improvement on those suggested by the Pay Committee. As an incentive for efficiency, selection of grade posts was sanctioned in each category up to 15 per cent of the total number of posts in that category.

House rent allowance was sanctioned to employees drawing a pay of up to Rs. 300 a month at Central Government rates in lieu of the existing compensatory allowance.

A portion of the dearness allowance would be treated as earnest pay for purposes of pension and gratuity at the Central Government rates. This would have retrospective effect from April 1.

Existing rates of daily allowance and fixed travelling allowance were enhanced by 33-1/3 per cent.

D. Lt.-Gen. S.H.F.J. Manekshaw Takes Over As Army Chief: Lt-Gen. S.H.F.J. Manekshaw took over as Chief of the Army Staff in the rank of a General in New Delhi on June 8 on the retirement of Gen. P. P. Kumaramangalam at Bangalore.

In a special Order of the Day to officers and jawans, published on his taking over, Gen. Manekshaw said: "I have today assumed the appointment of Chief of the Army Staff. I know you will all make every endeavour to enhance the good name of the Indian Army and ensure that it is, and always will be, a first-class fighting force."

Fifty-five-year-old Gen. Manekshaw was the first Indian Commissioned Officer to become the Army Chief, unlike his predecessors, who were all Sandhurst-trained officers and known as King's Commissioned Indian Officers. Gen. Manekshaw received his training at the Indian Military Academy, Dehra Dun. He was one of the first 40 cadets who were admitted to the IMA when the Academy was opened in 1932. Two years later he was commissioned into the Army. He was also the first officer of the Gorkha Regiment to become Chief of the Army Staff. An infantry officer, he is a Colonel of the 8 Gorkha Regiment.

In 1963, Gen. Manekshaw became GOC-in-C, Western Command, and a year later he was transferred to Calcutta to head the Eastern Command. He was awarded Padma Bhushan in 1968.

Gen. P. P. Kumaramangalam's Message:

In a message on June 9, Gen P. P. Kumaramangalam asked the Army to shed conservatism and "always look ahead and have new ideas."

He said: "Armies sometimes tend to be conservative in their outlook. If they do so they get stultified in their methods and tactics. It will not hurt my pride in the least if some radical changes in the Army were made after I have left. I have left an army with the correct spirit if I find it brimful of new ideas.

"I would also like to give a parting message of appreciation to all those sitting in those parts of our frontiers where there is continual tension. It is remarkable how the troops in most difficult conditions, particularly those at high altitude, have carried out their tasks year in and year out with a great sense of courage and patience. The real tone of the Army can be measured by the number of courts-martial and various other delinquencies. Considering the size of the Army, we have remarkably few. This shows the high morale and patience of the troops from all parts of our country. I congratulate them on this."

G. Micro-wave Communications Net-work: The Railway Minister, Mr. Ram Subhag Singh, said in Madras on June 12 that the Railways would soon set up a net-work of micro-wave communications covering about 17,000 km during the Fourth Five-Year Plan.

Opening a multi-channel micro-wave radio-telephone and teleprinter net-work, he said that the scheme would cost Rs. 18 crores and about 2,500 km had already been covered.

Micro-wave stations were also simultaneously inaugurated in Bangalore, Guntakal, Olavakkot, Tiruchirapalli and Madurai.

The Madras net-work will connect the headquarters of Southern Railway with its divisional headquarters and also with Hubli and Vijayawada of the South-Central Railway.

H. Village Volunteer Force Formed By CPI(M): The CPI(M) peasant organization, Paschim Banga Pradeshik Krishak Sabha, at its concluding session in Contai on June 8 decided to form a village volunteer force.

Declaring this at a public meeting, Mr. Abdulla Rasul, Secretary of the Sabha, said that the volunteer force would combat "class enemies and anti-peasant forces". He said already the nucleus of such a force had been formed in some districts and in others it was being formed.

Mr. Hare Krishna Konar, President of the Sabha, and other leaders pointed out that the "khetmajurs" and agricultural labourers were gaining in political consciousness. It was evident from the fact that 36 per cent of the delegates to the conference were "khetmajurs."

Mr. Promode Dasgupta appealed to all Left party peasant organizations to come forward to fight along with the CPI(M) for the rights of the peasants. He said that inter-party squabbles among the United Front constituents benefited only reactionary forces. Describing Naxalites as associates of the Congress, he said that these so-called agrarian revolutionaries were benefiting only the "enemies of the people".

J. Electricity Generation Survey By Experts' Committee: It was made known in New Delhi on June 8 that the Central Ministry of Irrigation and Power had set up an 11-man committee of experts to make a comprehensive survey of the generation of electricity in the country.

The committee, headed by Mr. K. L. Vij, retired Vice-Chairman, CWPC, will consist of ten members including an expert from the Tennessee Valley Authority, USA and an expert from the Edison Institute of USA, besides a representative of the Department of Atomic Energy.

The terms of reference of the committee are:

(1) To review the pattern of utilization of available plant capacity during the past five years and their operational efficiency and fuel consumption;

(2) To consider the scope of improving economy in power generation together with specified measures for attaining them;

(3) To review the economics of power generation from different hydro, thermal and nuclear sources under prevailing conditions and expected future trends to indicate the factors which must prevail in the choice of schemes for expansion of generation and supply in each region of the country in future;

(4) To review the conditions of power supply including reliability, voltage fluctuations and the extent of transmission losses to the minimum extent possible; and

(5) To review the causes of delay in the execution of the power projects, to suggest measures for improving the manner of implementation of power projects and reducing construction periods.

In power development, transmission and distribution schemes are largely capital intensive. In view of the limited resources available for this sector, the Ministry felt it necessary to take early steps to effect reduction in the cost of power generation and avoid delays in executing power projects.

L. Malappuram District Formed In Kerala: The Kerala Government announced in Trivandrum on June 7 the formation of the Malappuram District with effect from June 16.

The new District, which has a predominantly Muslim majority, has an area of 1,313.14 square miles and a population of 13,94,000.

The areas that form the new District are: Manjeri, Wandur, Malappuram, Kondotti, Thiruvangadi, Tirur, Vengara Tanur and Kuttippuram of the present Kozhikode District and Ponnani, Andathoee, Mankada and Perintalmanna of Palghat District.

Congress Criticism:

The President of the Kerala Pradesh Congress Committee, Mr. T. O. Bava, said on June 7 that the State Government's notification announcing the formation of the new Malappuram district on the eve of the by-elections to the Assembly was "politically-motivated" to "unduly influence" voters in the Malappuram constituency.

Mr. K. Karunakaran, leader of the Congress Legislature Party, described as "improper" the action of the Kerala Government in coming out with the notification on the eve of the poll in Malappuram.

Mr. K. Kelappan, 79-year-old Sarvodaya leader of Kerala and chairman of the action committee against formation of Malappuram District said in Madras that the present agitation, started on June 2, against formation of the new District would be intensified and extended to other parts of the State. He added that the Chief Minister, Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad, was anxious to retain the support of the Muslim League for the purpose of maintaining the stability of the United Front in Kerala and had apparently no choice but to yield to the demand for a separate District.

M. Murder Of Mr. D. Upadhyaya — Two Persons Acquitted: The Special Sessions Judge of Varanasi, Mr. Murlidhar, on June 9 acquitted Bharat Lal and Ram Avadh of the charge of murdering the former Jana Sangh President, Mr. Deendayal Upadhyaya.

Bharat Lal was, however, found guilty of the charge of theft and sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment.

Ram Awadh was acquitted of the charge of theft as well.

[Mr. Deendayal Upadhyaya was found dead near the rail track a few hundred yards from the Moghalsarai railway station early on February 11, 1968. Following suggestions by party leaders that he might have been the victim of a political murder, the investigation was entrusted to the Central Bureau of Investigation. Bharat Lal and Ram Awadh were arrested on February 29. They were charge-sheeted in the court of the Additional District Magistrate on May 4. The ADM committed them to the Sessions.]

The Sessions Judge, delivering his judgment, said: "The prosecution has not been able to prove this case, mainly because of the paucity of evidence. There have also been deficiencies here and there during the investigation and these have been duly mentioned while discussing the evidence and the necessary inferences drawn therefrom."

He, however, rejected the defence argument that the CBI had deliberately overlooked the theory of political murder. He said he found no basis to suspect the bona fides of the investigating agency.

The two accused, Bharat Lal and Ram Awadh, were charged under Section 302 read with Section 34 of IPC for causing the death of Mr. Upadhyaya, the then All-India Jana Sangh President in pursuance of their common intention by pushing Mr. Upadhyaya out of the running Pathankot-Sealdah Express train in an act which they knew to be so imminently dangerous as to cause his death or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death and without any excuse for incurring such risk.

They were also charged under Section 382 and Section 379 IPC for committing theft of Mr. Upadhyaya's belongings.

They were committed to the Sessions on August 6, 1968 where 128 witnesses had appeared on behalf of the prosecution. Five others, including Mr. Nanaji Deshmukh, Treasurer of All-India Jana Sangh had appeared as court witnesses.

The case was decided in the Sessions Court in a record time of eight months. Mr. Murlidhar was specially appointed by the State Government to hear the case.

N. Drought In Nine States: According to official figures released in New Delhi on June 14, more than 15 million people had been affected by drought in nine States this year.

The worst hit was Rajasthan, where scarcity condition had been declared in 22,800 villages affecting a population of 12.8 million.

Next came Gujarat, where 800,000 people were affected.

Severe drought conditions prevailed over large areas in seven districts of Tamil Nadu. The number of people engaged in relief works was about 7,00,000.

Other States that had reported drought conditions were: Uttar Pradesh, Andhra Pradesh, Mysore, Haryana, Madhya Pradesh and Pondicherry.

Central teams of officials had visited most of the drought-affected States and had recommended financial assistance.

For Rajasthan, the first Central team had recommended a ceiling of Rs. 8.96 crores for relief operations up to the end of March. A second team which visited the State in April had recommended a ceiling of Rs. 9.02 crores for 1969-70. A sum of Rs. 17.51 crores had already been released. In addition, it had been decided to allot Rs. 1 crore for drilling and energizing of tube-wells.

The Central Government had so far sanctioned Rs. 16.55 crores as grants and loans for 1968-69 and 1969-70 to Andhra Pradesh.

Tamil Nadu had so far been given financial assistance of Rs. 3.25 crores, besides 100 tonnes of wheat as gratuitous relief.

Pondicherry, which was in the same region as the district of Tamil Nadu affected by drought, had been authorized to take up urgently relief works like desilting of tanks and provision of drinking water up to a total cost of Rs. 100,00,000 in the current year. Additional funds would be provided in the light of developing situation and progress of expenditure.

P. Rocket Motor Of Fibre Glass Tested: A rocket motor wound in fibre glass filament was successfully flight-tested, for the first time in India, as a part of the Rohini programme of the Space Science and Technology Centre at Thumba (Kerala) on June 6.

Though the first rocket was only 125 mm in diameter, the test had established the feasibility of using fibre glass technology indigenously developed for the bigger motors which were required for the Indian satellite launcher programme.

Fibre glass motor cases are used in most advanced rockets and have the great advantage of providing high strength with light weight. The body was fabricated by the development group at the Thumba Equatorial Rocket Launching Station. A new high-performance propellant developed at the Space Science and Technology Centre was used.

Q. Infiltration Of Aryans In Rajasthan – Archaeological Findings: According to a statement by the Director of Archaeology in Rajasthan, Dr. Satya Prakash in Jaipur on June 15, excavations conducted by the Rajasthan Department of Archaeology at Noh in Bharatpur district during 1968-69 had confirmed that the people of Indo-Gangetic plain were the earliest settlers there.

He said that this presupposed the infiltration of Aryans in Rajasthan through the east. These people had occupied the site for a few hundred years and introduced a particular type of fine ware for their domestic use which was known as painted grey ware. This type of ware had been found at various places in Bharatpur district.

Excavations during this period had also fielded beautiful terracotta figures belonging to Sunga-Kushan period from 2nd century BC to 2nd century AD. Very fine specimens of the earthen black polished pottery discovered from the site were the outstanding achievements of the excavations.

He said that besides the pottery, impressed with designs of "Tri Ratna" symbols and with incised designs belonging to the period ranging from 2nd century BC to 2nd century AD were noteworthy.

ISRAEL

A. West Asia Fighting—Further Developments: According to Israeli Army sources, Arab commandos, getting covering fire from Jordanian legionnaires, launched their biggest co-ordinated attack in two years against an Israeli military outpost near the Jordan River on May 17.

Twelve of the raiders and one Israeli medico were killed. El Fatah, the Arab guerrilla organization that carried out the attack, said in Amman that their only losses were two commandos wounded.

Also on May 17, according to the Cairo newspaper, Al Ahram, Israeli and Egyptian artillery fought a brief duel over the Suez Canal near the town of Ras Eleish.

According to Amman military sources, Jordanian guns blazed on May 19 when two Israeli fighter planes swept in to attack troops in the King Hussein (former Allenby) bridge area.

Earlier, Israeli planes attacked the area of Karameh and Kraymeh in the Jordan Valley with rockets and machine-gun fire. Jordan said one civilian was killed and five wounded.

Gen. Odd Bull, Chief of the UN Observer Corps in West Asia, reported on May 20 that the Israelis were on the offensive in the artillery duels in the Suez Canal sector after a long series of Egyptian-initiated exchanges.

An Israeli Army spokesman said that Israeli forces shot down three UAR MIG-21 planes which tried to fly across the Suez Canal on May 21. Another UAR plane was damaged.

An announcement said that UAR launched two separate strikes across the Canal at the same time. In one of these incidents a few MIG-21s flying from the direction of Port Said tried to cross the Canal in the area north of El Qantara. The Israelis said one of these planes was hit by a Hawk anti-aircraft missile and seen to explode. Another UAR plane was damaged.

A UAR military spokesman said that UAR fighters drove back three groups of Israeli planes which tried to cross the Suez Canal on May 21. damaging one of them in a dogfight.

An Israeli motorized column thrust across the Jordan border on May 21 and attacked an Arab guerrilla base.

A military spokesman in Amman said that Jordanian forces fought for more than four hours with Israeli forces that had crossed the cease-fire line south of the Dead Sea on May 21.

An Amman military spokesman said that Israeli forces in company strength invaded a desert area in central Jordan on May 21 and withdrew after a 4½-hour engagement.

The Israeli Army announced that three Egyptian jet fighters were shot down over the Sinai near the Suez Canal on May 21. Two were hit by Israeli warplanes and one by a ground-to-air missile. A fourth Egyptian plane was damaged.

A Jordanian Army spokesman said that on May 25, Jordanian forces destroyed one Israeli Land Rover vehicle during a 20-minute clash with Israeli forces in the northern Jordan Valley. The fire was returned by Jordanian forces, but there were no casualties.

On May 26, Israeli and Jordanian troops clashed on the Jordan River cease-fire line at the southern and northern ends of the Jordan Valley.

A Syrian military spokesman said that on May 27, Israeli and Syrian forces exchanged automatic fire in three incidents across the cease-fire line.

Rockets fired from Jordan into the heart of the ancient Arab city of Jericho during the night of May 28 wounded an Arab civilian and left three shops blazing. As shopkeepers and neighbours struggled to extinguish the flames, the Mayor of Jericho appealed to citizens not to leave the city in the West Bank area of Jordan occupied by Israel during the June, 1967 war.

While fighting across the Suez Canal had considerably diminished over the past week, almost daily clashes had been reported along the Jordan-Israel front.

Four Israeli civilians and a soldier where wounded on May 28 when they came under Arab gunfire from Jordan near the Sea of Galilee.

An Israeli Army spokesman said that on May 29, Israeli fighters brought down a Syrian MIG-21 in a dog-fight 20,000 feet above Israeli-occupied Arab territory. The Soviet-built MIG was one of two Syrian jets which penetrated Israeli-controlled air-space over Kuneitra. The pilot of the jet shot down was seen parachuting from the stricken aircraft. The other aircraft escaped.

Arab families began fleeing with their belongings from Jericho on May 29 after two rocket attacks launched from Jordan territory within 24 hours. Russian-made rockets fired from across the River Jordan hit Jericho in the early hours of May 28 and again on May 29. Several shops and houses were destroyed, but the only casualties were two people injured.

On June 6, Jordanian and Israeli forces fired on each other for about an hour in the southern Jordan valley.

A report from Beirut on June 7 said that Lebanese and Israeli forces exchanged mortar fire early on June 6.

A Jordanian official spokesman announced that Israeli troops fired on a two-mile stretch near the Lebanese border village of Halta.

On June 7 and 8, Egyptian and Israeli forces exchanged artillery shots over the Suez Canal in the Deversoir and Ismailia areas.

Two Israeli tanks were destroyed and 17 soldiers killed or wounded in a 40-minute clash between Jordanian and Israeli forces in the southern Jordan valley on June 8.

A UAR spokesman said that on June 12, Egyptian forces destroyed Israeli positions on the east bank of the Suez Canal and equipment designed to strengthen the positions in a duel over the Canal which went on most of the night.

Israeli forces were said to have lost seven dead and 14 wounded in two days ih the Suez Canal area and along the other cease-fire lines.

These figures brought Israeli casualties since June 1 up to 14 dead and 30 wounded.

It was reported from Amman that three Israelis were killed and one half-truck was destroyed during a 60-minute clash with Jordanian forces on June 13.

According to Israeli sources, four Israeli soldiers were wounded by Egyptian mortar fire on the Suez Canal on June 13. The firing flared at the southern end of the Canal. Israeli troops returned the fire.

A UAR spokesman said that on June 15, heavy artillery went into action across the Suez Canal for the second time in less than six hours.

Israeli forces opened fire on June 15 with automatic weapons on positions in the Ghabet All Najjar area, in the south of the Jordan Valley.

Shells fired from Jordanian territory killed an American woman and wounded four other tourists near the Dead Sea on June 17. Two taxis were hit and burnt out. The taxis were parked outside a cafe when the shells burst. The tourists were sitting in the cafe. The taxis were part of a group which had been carrying a party of about 24 tourists.

A military spokesman named the dead woman as Shulie Anderson (25) of New York. One of the wounded Americans was later identified as Helen Burnett (27).

The Israeli Army announced that on June 18, wave after wave of Israeli jet fighters blasted Jordanian Army gun positions across the Jordan River in the south Jordan valley. The Army declined to connect the two incidents but an American woman tourist was killed and another wounded at a beach resort on the Israeli-Jordan border on June 17.

It was the biggest Israeli air activity on the tense border with Jordan for some weeks.

The air attack came after Arab guerrillas had opened fire on an Israeli patrol moving along the Jordan cease-fire line. The Arab commandos were reported to have taken refuge in a grove of trees near the River frontier and the Israeli jets were called in to smoke them out.

According to Cairo reports, a violent duel with heavy weapons broke out between Israeli and UAR forces along a wide front across the Suez Canal on June 17. The exchange of fire involved the whole area between el Shatt and El Qantara on the 75-mile-long front.

In Tel Aviv, an Israeli Army spokesman announced that UAR gunners had killed an Israeli soldier and wounded three others slightly when they opened artillery fire in the Mitle region across the Suez Canal. The UAR forces opened up in the Mitle and El Qantara regions with mortars, cannon and automatic weapons but failed to inflict casualties on the Israeli side.

Cairo reports said that violent artillery duels were resumed on June 20 all along the Suez Canal and were followed by another exchange.

Three bundles of dynamite exploded on June 20 near Jerusalem's Wailing Wall where an estimated 3,000 worshippers were praying to mark the Friday night commencement of the Jewish Sabbath. Police reported that one Arab was killed and an Israeli soldier wounded.

On June 21, according to a Cairo military spokesman, Egyptian gunners shot down three Israeli reconnaissance planes in one of the fiercest clashes along the Suez Canal. The light aircraft were downed near Deversoir, a small port at the northern neck of the Great Bitter Lake.

The heavy artillery, rocket and tank fire action was fought across the Canal along a scattered 50-mile front from Suez to Ismailia.

Jordanian and Israeli forces exchanged artillery and tank fire for 25 minutes in two separate incidents on June 21 and 22.

A Jordanian military spokesman accused the Israelis of starting both incidents south of Lake Tiberias.

An Amman report said that two Israeli aircraft raided Jordanian military positions in the Ghor Al Safi area south of the Dead Sea on June 22.

PLF Blow Up Oil Pipe-line:

The Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine said on June 1 that it had blown up an American-owned oil pipe-line passing through occupied Syrian territory to remind the United States that it had to pay a big price for its support of Israel.

The pipe-line, carrying Saudi Arabian oil through the Golan Heights to the Lebanon, is owned by the Trans-Arabian Pipeline Company, a subsidiary of ARAMCO.

An explosion on May 30 blew up the pipe-line at a point 20 km north of the town of Moneitra, on the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights.

A statement issued by the Front in Amman on June 1 said that the TAPLINE belonged to "a group of exploiting and monopolistic American companies" and that the oil carried in its pipe-line was owned by those same companies.

It alleged that the US Government was "part of the anti-Arab front which opposed the Palestinian people's struggle to regain their usurped homeland and continued to back Israel politically and economically as it had backed it in the June, 1967 war."

Blazing patches of crude oil floated down the Jordan River towards

Lake Tiberias in Israel after Arab saboteurs had blown up the pipe-line.

The pipe-line, which carries oil from the Iranian port of Dran in the Arabian Gulf to the Lebanese port of Sidon, runs partly through territory occupied by Israeli forces in the June, 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Eye-witnesses said that Israeli bulldozer drivers fought to stem the sluggish flow of crude oil from the damaged pipeline. Patches of oil in fields near the scene of the blast were still burning some 12 hours after the explosion.

Some 480,000 barrels of oil were estimated to be pumped through the 3,000-mile pipe-line daily.

On this incident, the first public criticism of a Palestinian commando operation in any Arab country appeared on June 1 with a trenchant comment in Al Ahram on the blowing up of the trans-Arabian pipe-line in the Golan Heights by the Popular Front for Liberation of Palestine.

The authoritative Cairo newspaper called the sabotage act "incomprehensible". It was contrary to the Khartoum decision allowing the free flow of Arab oil to world markets, and "outside the frame-work of Arab principles and interests."

The paper said that no commando organization had the right to act in this manner unless it had special reasons to profit. It pointed out that the dynamiting of the pipe-line constituted great harm to Arab interests and none at all to Israeli interests. If the purpose was to deal a blow to American interests, the target was not well chosen.

[The PLF is a comparatively small commando organization, but it has distinguished itself with dramatic and daring operations like the hijacking of an Israeli airliner and causing explosions in Jerusalem. It has always operated as a "lone wolf" outside the discipline of Arab Governments. It is the only group which has mounted commando operations across Syrian cease-fire lines. It has three factions within itself—a pro-Peking Marxist group, a group affiliated to the Arab national movement (which is banned in Syria) and a third without any ideological affiliations. The pro-Peking group made a clean break with the PLF in February, 1969 and now calls itself the Popular Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine. The hijacking of an Israeli plane to Algeria caused great embarrassment to Mr. Boumedienne's Government. Its actions across the Syrian cease-fire line cause annoyance to the Baathist Government which, while training commandos in general and supporting its own group, Al Saika, has always taken care to see that they operate from Lebanon or Jordan and not from Syria.]

Warning To King Hussein:

Israel gave a second warning to King Hussein of Jordan on June 1 that Israeli forces would hit back if the Jordanian Army provoked more incidents along the cease-fire line.

Israel had recently claimed that the Jordanian Army was co-operating with Arab guerrillas in firing on Israeli positions.

The new warning had been conveyed to King Hussein by American intermediaries.

Israeli military officials said that the Jordan Army provided covering fire for guerrillas in the Jordan valley and south of the Dead Sea.

Soviet-UAR Communique:

The Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Andrei Gromyko, visited UAR for four days from June 9 to 13 and a joint communique issued on June 13 said that the Soviet Union and UAR had agreed that Israel must withdraw from all occupied territories in any settlement of the West Asia crisis.

It also stressed that a settlement required the implementation of the UN Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967 in all its provisions. These included settlement of the Palestine refugee question, an end to the state of belligerency in the area and freedom of navigation in waterways in the area—including the Suez Canal.

It expressed the Soviet Union's appreciation of the fact that UAR had declared its acceptance of the resolution and willingness to implement it.

Mr. A. Eban On Soviet-UAR Communique:

On the Soviet-UAR joint communique, the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, said on June 14 that Israel would "in any case never agree to return to the "position of peril and vulnerability" that a withdrawal to her pre-war positions would entail.

He commented: "Two years after the six-day June, 1967 war, we find the architects of that war conspiring together for the obstruction of peace."

He described the communique as "a deplorable document with hostility in every line." It was "a verbatim repetition of ideas and formulas used by UAR and USSR since 1967".

He added: "On June 13, 1967, Soviet proposals absurdly accusing Israel of aggression and calling for a return to the perilous and explorive armistice lines were presented to the UN General Assembly and emphatically rejected. On June 31, 1969, we find these negative policies presented again."

Mrs. Golda Meir On Peace Settlement:

Israel's Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, said in an interview with the Time magazine on May 19 that Israel would reject any "Big Power" settlement of West Asia issue if she did not like it even in face of pressure from the UN Security Council and the General Assembly.

She said: "I have no illusions. The Security Council will say, of course, this is wonderful: the Big Powers agree. It doesn't happen twice a week that USA and USSR are in agreement. And we will say no.

"Then it will go to the General Assembly, and maybe, a Special Assembly, and we will say 'no.' It won't be easy."

Referring to Israel's withdrawal from Egyptian territory after the 1956 Sinai campaign, she said: "I did it on behalf of the Government, but it was not my greatest hour."

She also indicated that her Government would not allow Arab forces to return within 12 miles of Israel's coastal plain, or to Syria's Golan Heights overlooking Upper Galilee. Nor would it rely on others to safeguard Israeli shipping through the Strait of Tiran.

When asked how she visualized a West Asia settlement, she replied: "Agreed, secure boundaries. Both adjectives have equal importance. We say, come and negotiate with us for secure and agreed borders. Now, I say 'secure' because we have lived with those borders for 20 years. Anybody that tells us that we should step down so that the Syrians again can put their guns in position and to say to our people down below, don't budge, stay there—I want to see that hero. It is not moral. It is not decent."

Insisting on a signed Peace Treaty with the Arabs, she said: "What we ask our friends is, to my mind, a very simple thing: tell Nasser and Hussein to sit down with the Israelis, negotiate peace with them. For 20 years, we have tried everything. Now it is your responsibility, not the Soviet Union, not the United States, not France, not England. Mr. Nasser, it is your responsibility, you are responsible for the war. You must take the responsibility for peace."

Mrs. G. Meir Calls For Talks With Arab Leaders:

In a television interview on June 8, Mrs. Golda Meir called the United States as the "best friend we have in the world" and urged her to influence the Arab Governments to change their rigid opposition to direct negotiations with Israel.

She said that such negotiations were the only hope for peace in West Asia, though she repeated her long-standing view that another war was not imminent.

She said that Arab Heads of States should realize that the "only solution for the problem is to get together with the Israelis and come to a peace agreement."

Later, she added: "And now all we ask of the United States as our big friend, the best friend we have in the world... is—you use your influence not to make it easy for President Nasser or for King Hussein of Jordan or for any of the other leaders again to escape their responsibilities, and sit down with us and negotiate a peace agreement."

Asked if another war loomed for the area, she replied: "I don't think we are drifting towards war. Our borders are more secure, it is more difficult for our neighbours to attack us, and therefore I think that they won't easily do this folly again."

Mr. Abba Eban On Indian Attitude:

The Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, said in the Knesset (Parliament) on May 22 that peace prospects in West Asia would have been better if India had adopted a more balanced stand towards the States of West Asia during the last two decades.

He said, however, that India's statements on Israel after the last UN General Assembly session were more moderate than before. But there had been no change in relations between the two countries.

B. Proposed Lease Of Suez Canal To Russia: It was stated in New Delhi on May 25 that the proposal of the UAR Government to lease out the Suez Canal to the Soviet Union in order to revive the operation of the Canal had not made much headway.

Judging by the latest indications, the plan was unlikely to materialize in the near future. Competent observers feel that the resumption of operation of the Suez Canal will not be possible till a settlement of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The Soviet Union, it is pointed out, is as interested as UAR in the resumption of traffic through the Suez Canal because all its exports to Asian countries otherwise have to be diverted through the circuitous route round the Cape of Good Hope.

To cover the cost of this additional "steaming," the Soviet Union has levied freight surcharges, which in the case of India is 30 per cent.

Other major suppliers of machinery and materials have likewise imposed freight surcharges. India has been paying a surcharge of 15 per cent on supplies from USA, Britain and other West European countries since 1967.

India is presently incurring an additional Rs. 2.25 crores every month on shipping freight for supplies from West European countries following the closure of the Suez. Canal. The efforts of the authorities to reduce this burden have not borne fruit so far.

C. "Land Bridge" Alternative To Suez Canal: It was announced in Tel Aviv on May 18 that Israel was considering the establishment of a "land bridge," by-passing the Suez Canal, to transport goods from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea.

Goods would be unloaded at Israel's Mediterranean port of Ashdod and taken overland to the Red Sea port of Eilat for shipment to East Africa and the Far East.

The Transport Minister, Mr. Moshe Carmel, said that an estimated 200,000 tons per year would be transported in the first two years of operation.

The estimate was based on the report of an Israeli delegation which recently visited European countries to examine the possibilities of obtaining cargoes for overland shipment.

The scheme would give a substantial boost to the two ports and help Israel's economy by providing transit fees.

D. New 160-mm Mortar Developed: The Israeli Army weekly Bamahan claimed on May 20 that the country's defence forces had developed a 160-mm mortar mounted on the Sherman tank.

It was further claimed that the mobile, hydraulically-operated weapon, which weighs one ton and has a firing range of some 10,000 yards (about 9,200 metres), is the biggest mobile mortar in the world. It is managed by a seven-man crew. The entire battle station is protected by armour plating.

A. Mr. A. Hoveida's Visit: The Iranian Prime Minister, Mr. Abbas Hoveida, who was on a visit to Turkey, said at a news conference in Istanbul on June 14 that the expected vacuum in the Persian Gulf area after the withdrawal of British forces in 1971 should be filled by nations of the region. "We do not want any imperialist country to replace the British."

On the Shatt al-Arab border conflict between Iran and Iraq, he said his country (Iran) was prepared "to sign a new agreement with Iraq, any place, any time, on the basis of international law and justice."

He denied foreign Press reports that Iran extended assistance now and again to the nationalist Kurdish leader, Mullah Mustafa Barzani of Iraq.

AFGHANISTAN

A. IDA Assistance For Road Net-work: The International Development Association (IDA), an affiliate of the World Bank, announced on June 11 a credit of $5 million to finance establishment of an organization trained and equipped to assume responsibility for effectively maintaining the entire highway net-work in the country.

A technical assistance grant of $17 million from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) is expected to complement the credit.

"Highways are the principal means of transportation in Afghanistan, both for domestic and international traffic. In the past 10 years the highway net-work has been expanded from about 4,000 miles to 11,000 miles. This includes a primary system of about 1,300 miles of paved roads which was designed and built mainly with financing from USSR and USA. It connects important population, agricultural and industrial centres to the capital, Kabul, and has branches leading to neighbouring countries.

The principal problem in the transport sector has been the imbalance between investments for new highways and expenditures for maintenance work. For the foreseeable future the highway net-work will need only minor additions to serve the country adequately but there is an urgent and critical need for establishing sound highway maintenance operations to prevent a serious deterioration of some existing primary roads.

Consultants financed under a World Bank grant of $155,000 in 1966 made a study of Afghanistan's road maintenance requirements and recommended measures to improve maintenance operation. The project now being financed follows directly from this study. It will institute a four-year road maintenance programme for selected roads in the eastern region of the country, which has the highest road and traffic density. This programme will serve to demonstrate modern methods for eventual application throughout the country.

The IDA credit will be used to finance imports of road maintenance and workshop equipment, tools, spare parts and materials, such as steel and bitumen. The UNDP grant, for which the World Bank will be executing agency, will finance a team of consultants which will provide guidance and advice to the Ministry of Public Works on the re-organization of the Road Maintenance Directorate and the introduction of modern highway maintenance practices.

The project is estimated to cost about $10.8 million. The $5 million IDA credit and the $1.7 million UNDP grant will cover $6.7 million of this amount and the remaining $4.1 million will be provided by the Government of Afghanistan.

The IDA credit will be extended to Afghanistan for a term of 50 years, including a 10-year grace period. It will be interest-free, but a service charge of 3/4 of one per cent will be made to cover IDA's administrative expenditure.

UNDP Aid For Housing:

The Government, with the assistance of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and with United Nations as executing agency, has, meanwhile, established the Central Authority for Housing and Town Planning as part of the Prime Minister's Office.

It will formulate and supervise the implementation of regional and urban master plans, undertake research into building materials and methods, and co-ordinate housing programmes.

It is estimated that of Afghanistan's population of 13 million, roughly one million live in four cities—Kabul, Kandahar, Herat and Mazar-i-Sharif. The country's urban population lives in about 85,000 buildings, of which 5 per cent are of recent construction, conforming more or less to modern standards. Because of haphazard urban development, population densities in the older sections of the cities are as much as four times greater than those in new neighbourhoods, thus posing serious health hazards and hampering social development.

The Government estimates the need for new urban housing at 5,000 dwelling units per annum and an additional 6,500 units each year to replace existing dwellings that have become inadequate.

B. Mr. W. Rogers' Visit: The US Secretary of State, Mr. William Rogers, paid a brief visit to Afghanistan on May 25. He called on King Zahir Shah and later held talks with the Prime Minister, Mr. Noor Ahmed Etemadi.

Kabul Radio said his talks with Mr. Etemadi related to American aid to Afghanistan, regional affairs and a general review of the international situation.

The talks included economic and cultural co-operation between the two countries.

At a luncheon given to Mr. Rogers by Mr. Etemadi, both the leaders spoke about the desire of the people of USA and Afghanistan to strengthen the bonds of friendship between the two countries.

Mr. Etemadi said that Afghanistan followed a policy of neutrality based on the established traditions of his country. He also touched on the situation in Viet-Nam, West Asia and his country's relations with Pakistan.

Mr. Rogers said that his tour which took him to various countries in Asia had provided him with an opportunity to have greater contacts with the leaders of these countries.

He hoped that relations between his country and Afghanistan would further grow to mutual benefit for the people of the two countries.

BURMA

A. Gen. Ne Win On Advisory Body's Report On Draft Constitution: The Chairman of the Revolutionary Council, Gen. Ne Win, told the Advisory Board formed to advise on the drafting of a Constitution and on social, economic, political and national minority affairs on June 2 that the time was not yet ripe for the formation of a National Government.

The Council, comprising 33 politicians, including the former Premier, U Nu, had on June 1 submitted a 64-page report to Gen. Ne Win (see page 9015)

Gen. Ne Win told the Board that correct aims and regulations for the proposed national Government were needed. Otherwise Burma would be faced with unworkable problems. "If the National Government is worthwhile, we would not hesitate to form it, but as I have said, correct aims and regulations are needed."

He emphasized that the Revolutionary Council had no intention of holding on to power indefinitely.

He thanked the Board for submitting its report on time and told members he would take no action against those who spoke openly against his Government. The Board's term of office expired on June 1.

[The report urged the present Government to transform itself into a National Government, headed by Gen. Ne Win. It said the Government should include as its members Army officers, politicians and other racial groups and should establish democratic socialism. It asked the present Government to create a new Ministry of National Culture and Minorities and form a "national united front" with Army officers, people of various races and politicians before elections. It also urged the present Government to initiate peace talks with rebels in Burma, release all political detainees, and lift the present restrictions on the released politicians. It said the Constitution should be discussed only after the formation of the national United Front. The Constitution for a Burmese "Republic" should either be adopted by a Constituent Assembly or in a referendum. It advised the Government to de-nationalize unnecessary sectors in the country, adopt a mixed economy, subsidize exports and receive aid from the United Nations members for heavy and key industries. On foreign affairs, it said Burma should have friendly relations with all her neighbours, especially China and Thailand.]

B. U Thi Han Resigns As Foreign Minister: Government newspapers on June 19 reported the resignation of U Thi Han as Minister for Foreign Affairs and National Planning. He was the only civilian member in Gen. Ne Win's Cabinet.

U Thi Han (57), however, continued to be the Director of Procurement, Ministry of Defence.

Following his resignation, the Revolutionary Council appointed Brig. San Yu as Minister of National Planning and Col. Maung Lwin as Foreign Affairs Minister.

Brig. San Yu, who is also General Secretary of the Burmese Way to Socialist Programme Party (BWSPP) already holds the portfolio of Finance, while Col. Maung Lwin is Minister for Relief, Social Welfare and National Solidarity.

CAMBODIA

A. Diplomatic Relations With USA Resumed: The Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, announced in Pnom Penh on June 11 that his Government had decided to resume diplomatic relations with USA.

He also announced that Cambodia—which had recognized East Germany several weeks ago—had also decided to break off relations with West Germany (see page 9016).

In announcing the break with West Germany, news agency reports quoted the Prince as saying that he was acting in the face of a "series of West German penalties and censurings," and treatment which "not even the Americans" had dished out.

Observers said he was referring to the Bonn Government's debate over how to penalize Cambodia for its recognition of the East German regime. (Under the 1955 Hallstein doctrine, such an act is considered "unfriendly" because it tends to enforce the division of Germany.)

On June 2 and 3, the West German Cabinet formulated a new "modification" of the doctrine permitting the Government to act "according to circumstances" and to "all-German interests." The next day, it closed down the Embassy in Pnom Penh and left it in charge of a low-ranking caretaker. As a concession to progressives in the Social Democratic Party, Bonn did not break relations, however.

B. Territorial Violation Charge Against Thailand: The Government in a statement issued on May 21 accused Thailand of having committed an unspeakable violation of Cambodian territory and of attempting to create a "rebel government inside Cambodia."

The statement called on international public opinion to condemn Thailand's "revolting attitude."

The statement, which referred to the recent arrest of two members of the Thai armed forces, said their presence there amounted to a "very serious infringement on Cambodia's sovereignty." It was part of Thailand's designs to "set up a zone destined to the creation of a rebel government."

The Government also formally informed the UN Security Council that Cambodian forces had captured four Thai military infiltrators and 72 civilians who had been planning to set up a "free Khmer government" on Cambodian territory.

A Bangkok report quoting Thai police sources said on June 8 that Cambodian troops had fired across the Thai border in Prachinburi province, damaging a customs checkpost and several houses.

CHINA

A. More Incidents On Sino-Soviet Border: Peking Radio said on June 6 that Russian troops were using artillery and machine-guns to fire into Chinese territory along both the eastern and western ends of the Sino-Soviet border.

The broadcast claimed that Russian intrusions into Chinese territory and air-space had occurred continually since March.

The accusations reported in the broadcast were made in a protest Note which China had delivered to the Soviet Union. The Chinese alleged that one of their border guards was shot dead on May 15.

Peking Radio said that on May 2, hundreds of Soviet troops, supported by armoured units, had penetrated into Sinkiang. Chinese civilians had been attacked by Russian soldiers, who had also threatened Chinese frontier guards. Only Chinese restraint had averted bloodshed, and the firing was still going on.

The Chinese accused the Russians of the firing of machine-guns on a river island and the wounding of two Chinese fishermen, of abductions and an attack by mounted forces in the same area.

At Chen Pao island (which the Russians call Damansky), at the extreme eastern end of the Sino-Soviet border, where two serious clashes in March resulted in several dead and wounded on both sides, 8,000 shells had fallen since March 15, and the artillery and machine-gun attacks were continuing.

A week earlier, the Radio added, Soviet gunboats, supported by helicopters had crossed the Heilingkiang River and abducted 10 Chinese who had still not been returned.

The Chinese Note accused Russian fighter and bomber aircraft of intruding into China's air-space 57 times from March 29 to May 31. It claimed that a total of 16 Chinese nationals had been kidnapped by the Russians.

Chinese Protest Note:

According to another protest Note delivered to the Soviet Embassy in Peking on June 11, China alleged that a large number of Soviet troops had crossed the frontier on June 10 and killed a Chinese woman who was herding sheep in Sinkiang.

The Chinese claim that a second shepherd was kidnapped brought to 19 the total number of Chinese whom Peking claims to have been abducted by Russian forces in recent clashes.

The Chinese Note reported that armoured units were brought up in support by the Russians, but it was not clear whether Soviet tanks had actually crossed the international boundary. The Note stated that the incident was "still developing"—a possible indication that fighting was continuing.

According to Peking's account, Chinese frontier guards had made contact with the Russians 10 minutes after they had intruded into Chinese territory. Peking accused the Soviet troops of refusing to discuss the situation with the Chinese guards. The protest Note claimed that the Russians opened fire first, at which the Chinese had to take "defensive measures."

Soviet Version:

The same day (June 11), the Soviet Union protested to China over the incidents involving troops of each country and warned that it held Peking "responsible for the serious consequences of these provocations."

The Soviet Note accused China of invading Soviet territory in the Kazakhstan area across Sinkiang province and charged that its troops had opened fire on Soviet border guards.

The Note said that a Chinese herdsman was sent 400 metres across the border into Soviet territory at 6 p.m. local time. "The violation of the frontier was supported by a group of Chinese servicemen who had secretly penetrated into Soviet territory."

"In response to the demand by Soviet frontier guards that they leave Soviet territory, the Chinese servicemen suddenly opened fire from machine-guns at the Soviet frontier detachment.

"In self-defence, the Soviet frontier guards were forced to open fire in return, after which the violators left the territory of the Soviet Union".

The Note did not mention any casualties or say how many troops were involved.

USSR Calls For Negotiations:

The Soviet Union announced on June 14 that it had called on China to begin negotiations within two or three months on disputes involving their border.

Tass said a Government statement to that effect had been presented to the Chinese Embassy in Moscow.

The Agency made public the text of the declaration, in which Moscow stated that until the two countries met to settle their differences, both sides should refrain from fighting along the border.

[The new Soviet statement was the third demand on China to resume border talks that were broken off in 1964. The first Note, sent on March 29, was followed on April 11 by a Note proposing opening of the negotiations within a few days. Peking replied on May 24 with a statement agreeing to the idea of border talks but demanding that Moscow accept the Chinese view that the treaties by which Czarist Russia had acquired Far Eastern territories from Imperial China in the second half of the last century were "unequal" and should be annulled. The latest Soviet statement rejected this contention and upheld the legality of Soviet possessions.]

More Chinese Allegations:

On June 15, China charged that the Soviet Union had provoked 4,189 border incidents from October 15, 1964 to March 15 this year and since March 15 had carried out "more vicious armed provocations."

October 15, 1964 was the date the Soviet Communist Party Chief, Mr. Brezhnev and Mr. Kosygin came to power in Russia. March 15 was the date of the second of two bloody clashes over the Ussuri River border island, called Chen Pao by China and Damansky by Russia. The first was on March 2.

The Chinese charges, broadcast by the official New China News Agency, made no mention of the Soviet call for China-Soviet border talks in Moscow within the next two or three months, nor of the earlier Chinese call for negotiations on an entirely new Border Treaty.

NCNA said that since Mr. Brezhnev came to power, the Soviet Union had "again and again increased troop strength along the Sino-Soviet border, disrupted more rapidly the status quo of the boundary, carried out armed provocations and created incidents of bloodshed."

B. Bulgaria Accused Of Supporting "Two Chinas:" Peking Radio reported on June 3 that China had protested to Bulgaria against the invitation to Taiwan (Formosa) to attend the World Inter-Governmental Conference on Tourism held in Sofia in May.

According to the broadcast, a spokesman for the Information Department of the Chinese Foreign Ministry called the Bulgarian act a "shameless provocation against China" and an "extremely serious anti-China political incident."

Reminding Bulgaria that she was one of the countries maintaining diplomatic relations with China, Peking warned that Bulgaria must be held "fully responsible for the consequences if Bulgaria persists in the plot of creating 'two China'."

The statement accused the Bulgarian Government of having warmly treated the Formosan Government delegation as a guest of honour, repeatedly requesting the delegates to attend Bulgarian Governmental activities.

It recalled that the Bulgarian Press had time and again described Formosa as a "country" and openly published photographs of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek.

The spokesman said Bulgaria had invited Formosa after ignoring the Chinese Government's repeated warnings and strong protests. He alleged that Bulgaria had perpetrated yet another "new crime" of creating 'two Chinas' and making itself the "enemy of Socialist China" at the instigation of the USSR.

Tracing Soviet "underhand dealings" with Formosa, the spokesman recalled that USSR had let Formosa sign as a sovereign State a partial nuclear test ban Treaty in 1963, recently sent a "correspondent" to Formosa and published in the Soviet Press the Formosan flag, calling Taiwan a "country" and Gen. Chiang Kai-shek as "President."

The Peking statement pointed out that the Formosan delegation would go to the Soviet Union for "activities" after the Sofia conference. "This shows the present anti-China farce of creating 'two Chinas' was stage-managed wholly by Soviet revisionism."

Calling Bulgaria's Prime Minister, Mr. Todor Zhivkov "a lackey fostered wholly by Soviet revisionism," it said that he had served as an "accomplice" in the Soviet aggression of Czechoslovakia and supported the Soviets with anti-China articles, speeches and statements after the Chen Pao Island incidents.

Stressing that the Government of the People's Republic of China was the sole legal Government for the Chinese, the Foreign Ministry spokesman re-iterated that Formosa had always been an inalienable part of Chinese territory.

He declared: "The Chinese people are determined to liberate Taiwan and resolutely oppose any plot to create 'two Chinas'."

KMT Officials Visit Sofia:

A New York Times report from Taipeh on June 8 said that three officials of the KMT Administration had visited Bulgaria for the conference. It was the first authorized visit by KMT officials to a Communist country since 1949.

Two of the men, Mr. Chen Shu-yu of the Tourism Council of the Ministry of Communications, and Mr. Li Cheng, deputy director of the Formosan provincial Government's Tourism Bureau, spent two weeks in Sofia. The third, Mr. Tao Chung-yu, is Press Officer of Formosa's Embassy in Beirut. The men travelled by way of Vienna and did not pass through any other Communist country.

Although the two tourism officials were unavailable for comment, a source close to them insisted that the visit had no political significance. "It was all very simple," he said. "We received an invitation to go, so we went."

"The fact that the conference was in Bulgaria did not matter to us. It would have been the same if our delegates had gone to the USA. There were no political discussions. It was just a tourism conference."

Observers in Taipeh were sceptical of this explanation. They pointed out that for years Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's regime and the Communist countries had been bitter enemies. A decision to send representatives to Eastern Europe could have been made only at the highest levels of Government.

C. Relaxation Of Restrictions On Diplomats: A correspondent of the French News Agency posted in Peking reported on June 9 that the diplomatic corps in the Capital was beginning to benefit from a climate of detente which had become evident in the six weeks since the Ninth Communist Party Congress.

On the day he filed the despatch, he said that three Ambassadors—those of Norway, Finland and Denmark—were travelling 450 miles into the provinces to visit Yenan, a favour unheard of since 1967. The British Charge d'Affaires was on the verge of visiting Shanghai and Nanking.

Besides, there were no demonstrations at the Soviet Embassy, in spite of the renewal of border incidents, or at the Bulgarian Embassy, in spite of the presence of a Formosan delegation at the inter-Governmental conference on tourism in Sofia in May.

In fact, there had been no mass demonstration in Peking since the end of the Ninth Party Congress on April 24.

Diplomats remarked that the detente was yet to bring the least solution to such basic problems as the situation of foreigners imprisoned in China. Moreover, a few visiting foreign technicians had reported encountering harassment, particularly in the provinces.

But diplomats had definitely been meeting with more amiability than previously. Simultaneously, China after the Cultural Revolution had begun a return to the international scene and the operation of a more realistic and moderate home policy.

Chinese Ambassadors had been leaving for posts abroad since the Congress. The only Ambassador to stay at his post during the Cultural Revolution was the representative in Cairo. Now six were back at work and a seventh, the former Ambassador in East Berlin, was set to leave for Bucharest.

D. Currency Re-named: According to the Communist newspaper Ta Kung Pao on June 16, the term for Chinese currency has been changed to Renminbi (people's currency) from Jen Min Piato (JMP).

The abbreviation for the new term is RMB.

The change was set by the administrative headquarters of the Bank of China.

INDIA

A. Kutch Boundary Demarcation Agreement: With the completion of the demarcation of the Kutch boundary, yet another Indo-Pakistani dispute—which in 1965 had led to armed clashes—has been settled.

The documents relating to the boundary settlement in accordance with the Award of the International Tribunal were signed on July 4, 1969.

With the dispute thus ended, the controversy over the Award itself is likely to simmer for some time, inasmuch as two eminent jurists, the former Attorney-General of of India, Mr. Motilal Setalvad, and the former Foreign Minister, Mr. M. C. Chagla, have held diametrically opposite views about the Award.

According to Mr. Chagla, the Award is a political one, while Mr. Setalvad has argued that it is judicial.

Pakistan had claimed that it was entitled to the northern half of the Rann of Kutch on the basis of the exercise of jurisdiction in the area by the Sind Administration ever since the annexation of Sind by the British in 1843.

Pakistan's claim was also based on the ground that the Rann of Kutch is either a landlocked sea or a boundary lake separating the two countries from each other, and that the boundary line must, therefore, run through the middle of this area since there was no special treaty declaring otherwise.

As against this, it was India's case that the totality of the evidence available established without doubt that there was no dispute regarding Kutch, which had always been in possession of the Rann in its entirety. Furthermore, the Rann of Kutch is not a landlocked sea or a boundary lake, but only a marsh to which the principles referred to by Pakistan could not apply.

The Tribunal—comprising Sweden's Dr. Gunnar Lagergren (chairman), Mr. Nasrollah Entezam of Iran and Dr. Ales Bebler of Yugoslavia—had totally rejected Pakistan's case that the entire Rann itself formed the boundary between adjacent lands. This theory, alluded to as a suggestion in Pakistan's first oral argument before the Tribunal, was made the principal basis of Pakistan's case in its second oral argument.

While it was admitted that "boundaries having the character of broad belts of territory are a well-known historical phenomenon," the Tribunal came to the conclusion that this was not so in the case of the Rann. Thus, the foundations of Pakistan's case were demolished.

However, the Tribunal awarded about 10 per cent of the area in question to Pakistan. On an examination of the evidence before it, the Tribunal came to the conclusion that Sind did exercise authority over this area, notably over Pirol Valo Kun, Rahim ki Bazar, Dhara Banni and Chhad Bet.

What transpired after India and Pakistan became Independent in 1947 is not very pertinent to the issue, as the Tribunal said, since that is precisely the point at issue. But, because of the imprecise topographical features of the region and the impossibility of exactly delimiting many acts of State authority, the boundary must sometimes be represented by straight lines (according to the Tribunal).

In doing so, the Tribunal awarded two small inlets cutting into the Nagar Parkar district of Sind to Pakistan. As early as in 1885, the Deputy Commissioner of Thar Parkar had pointed out that if these inlets were to be considered Kutch territory, "a glance at the map will show that Parkar would be a peninsula almost entirely surrounded by Kutch territory."

It is in respect of these two small inlets that the Tribunal referred to the "paramount consideration of promoting peace and stability in this region" which "compels the recognition and confirmation that this territory, which is wholly surrounded by Pakistani territory, also be regarded as such."

It is about this reference to "the paramount consideration of promoting peace and stability in this region" that Mr. Chagla and Mr. Setalvad differed.

Maps Signed:

On July 4 in Islamabad, the plenipotentiaries of India and Pakistan signed the strip maps of demarcation. These cartographic documents were also authenticated by the representatives of the two Governments in overall charge of the demarcation as well as by the technical officers-in-charge.

Fifteen sets of maps were signed in the original, five of which were retained by India and an equal number by Pakistan, and the remaining five sent to the Tribunal for record.

In all, approximately 1,500 documents were signed by the two sides.

Indian and Pakistani personnel stationed on the Rann of Kutch moved to their respective sides of the boundary demarcated in accordance with the International Tribunal's Award.

The map below shows the demarcation of the Rann of Kutch boundary following the International Tribunal's Award.

C. Credit To Ceylon: According to an Agreement signed in New Delhi on June 30, India has agreed to give a new credit of Rs. 5 crores to Ceylon to purchase capital goods from India.

The new line of credit will help finance supply from India of commercial vehicles, machine tools, industrial and construction machinery, agricultural, railway, electrical and tele-communication equipment.

With this Agreement, the total credits granted by India so far to Ceylon amount to Rs. 12 crores.

The first credit of Rs. 2 crores, which had been fully utilized, had financed the purchase of certain essential commodities required in Ceylon. Against the second credit of Rs. 5 crores, commercial contracts were concluded for a substantial portion of the amount for the supply of capital goods.

D. Forward Trading In Shares Banned: The Government of India, by a notification issued on June 27, banned with immediate effect forward trading in shares at all stock exchanges.

A Press Note issued by the Finance Ministry said that the action had been taken to curb certain unhealthy trends and prevent undesirable speculation.

The following is the text of the Press Note:

"Certain unhealthy trends have been developing of late in the shares and securities business. If they are allowed to continue unabated, there is danger to the health of the stock market and to the investment climate, particularly when there is a revival of public investment interest in the capital market.

"To curb these unhealthy trends and to prevent undesirable speculation, the Central Government has, by a notification issued on June 27 in a Gazette of India Extraordinary, banned with immediate effect forward trading in shares at all Stock Exchanges.

"Existing contracts entered into up to the date of the notification and remaining to be performed are, however, permitted by the same notification to be liquidated in accordance with the rules, by-laws and regulations of the Stock Exchanges concerned."

A similar ban was enforced in November, 1962 in the wake of Chinese aggression when share prices registered a precipitous fall and the Government had to fix minimum prices.

The effect of the ban is that trading in the stock exchanges will hereafter be confined to the cash section.

Financial circles were critical of the Government's decision and feared that the ban would cause a setback to the investment market. According to them, the prevailing prices of shares in the various stock exchanges were not such as to warrant such an extreme action.

Even if the Government wanted to correct "scattered instances of speculation," it should have been done by tightening the by-laws and regulations of stock exchanges and not by abolishing forward trading altogether.

Representatives of industry and stock markets conveyed their reaction to the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, on June 28 when he visited Calcutta in connexion with the meeting of the Direct Taxes Advisory Committee.

IRAQ

A. Budget For 1969: Details of a record Budget of ID666,641,514 for fiscal 1969 were published on May 27 in the official gazette.

The Budget included the investment programme and the budgets of State organizations and autonomous administrations.

It exceeded last year's Budget by ID55,993,680.

The allocations of the ordinary Budget came up to ID267,959,720 while the revenues amounted to ID262,644,087.

Of this, 25 per cent was for educational and cultural services, 12 per cent for economic affairs and the balance for social and health services, pensions, the police and international commitments.

A sum of ID111,420,000 was allocated to the investment programme.

The Budget law provided that the share of the Budget of the Economic Plan for the current fiscal year shall be 50 per cent of the total share of the Government in the royalties of exported oil for 1969.

B. Peace Offer To Kurds: Brig.-Gen. Saadoun Ghaidan, one of the five officers who form the highest executive authority—the Revolutionary Command Council—and Commander of the Baghdad Garrison, announced in the third week of May that the Government had offered to make peace with the Kurdish insurgents who had been fighting the Army off and on for the last eight years.

The basis of the peace offer was a promised law which would give 1.5 million Kurds, forming about one-fourth of the country's population, self-government in northern districts which border Iran and Turkey.

He said the Revolutionary Command Council wanted a "peaceful and just solution" to the Kurdish problem. He announced that a new law for local administration would be issued soon.

[Self-government for the Kurds was part of an agreement reached in June, 1966, which established a cease-fire in the north. Insurgents under 66-year-old Mullah Mustafa Barzani ended the cease-fire in March this year after accusing the Government of procrastination in fulfilling its promises. The present regime endorsed the 1966 Agreement when it came to power. The Kurds also were reported to have decided to continue fighting until the present regime was replaced by one more favourably disposed towards Kurdish national aspirations. The Kurds, mountain tribesmen who claim they are Aryan, not Semitic, had been asking for autonomy.]

Observers believed that there were several reasons for the regime's peace bid to the Kurds. Most important, according to them, was the Kurdish threat to Iraq's oil industry. (The $400 million Iraq gets annually in oil revenue constitutes more than 65 per cent of its total national income.)

Kurdish insurgents had initiated new hostilities with a mortar attack on March 1 on installations of the Iraq Petroleum Co., a consortium of major Western oil companies, in Kirkuk, about 60 miles north of Baghdad. They had also threatened further strikes at oil installations.

Iraq's current heavy commitment to the Arab cause in the confrontation with Israel was another reason for Baghdad's willingness to come to terms with the insurgents. In addition, Iraq was engaged in a serious dispute with neighbouring Iran over navigation in Shatt al-Arab, the estuary on the northern tip of the Persian Gulf forming the southern border-line between the two countries.

Iraq had been accusing the Iranian Government of supplying the Kurds with weapons.

JAPAN

A. Rise In GNP: The Economic Planning Agency on June 11 released figures which confirmed that the Gross National Product (GNP) of Japan in 1968 placed it ahead of West Germany as the second largest economic Power among non-communist countries after the United States.

The figures showed that Japan's GNP was $141.9 billion in 1968, or an 18.7 per cent growth in nominal terms and a 14.4 per cent expansion in real terms over the year before.

In early March, a figure of $135.77 billion had been estimated, compared with $132 billion for West Germany.

Observers believe that the continued growing rise in Japan's economic strength would make her play a more active role in economic development in Asia, which was badly in need of industrial funds and technologies.

Japan's per capita annual income rose to $1,110—an increase of 15.6 per cent over the previous year. It ranked Japan 20th among non-communist nations.

National income totalled $112.2 billion in 1968—an increase of 15.6 per cent over 1967. This was attributed to a 16.9 per cent increase in employed persons' incomes and a 25.2 per cent increase in corporate income.

Consumer spending totalled $74 billion—an increase of 15.1 per cent over 1967. Government investments in industries and other fields rose by 16 per cent, while private investments registered a 28.2 per cent rise over the previous year.

KUWAIT

A. First Political Trial Announced—Background: The tiny Arabian State of Kuwait (15,000 square kilometres and population of about 600,000, half of which is formed of aliens) will soon have its first political trial since the country gained Independence from the British on June 19, 1961.

Its Minister of Interior, Sheikh Saad Al Abdullah Al Sabah, has said that a State Security Court, the country's first, would be set up soon to try a number of persons accused of sabotage and anti-State activities. Neither the number of persons involved nor their names were disclosed, but he said that they had confessed their crimes.

The defendants are believed to be those accused of responsibility for the bomb explosions which took place in January, 1969. Some of the explosions, set off by home-made devices, were said to have taken place near the Ministry of Interior itself, and Sheikh Saad's own residence. A number of persons were arrested, and about 400 non-Kuwaiti Arabs were said to have been deported in the wake of explosions.

Technically, Kuwait is still under a State of Emergency, declared during the June, 1967 war with Israel. However, the Government has not been applying the emergency laws strictly. Should it choose to do so now, it would mean death sentence for the alleged saboteurs. There has not yet been any political execution in Kuwait. Only one man has been hanged recently for murder and Kuwait built its first scaffold for him.

It is said that the arrested persons include trade unionists, students and some members of the banned Arab Nationalist Movement (ANM), the Pan-Arab organization whose Kuwaiti branch has been conducting the main opposition in the country.

The January, 1969 explosions coincided with a strike by oil workers launched in protest against a Government law pertaining to the regulation of working conditions for workers with the oil companies. The Government had introduced new amendments to it providing special privileges for Kuwaiti nationals, to the exclusion of workers of other nationalities.

The fact that the explosions also took place on the anniversary of the election of the National Assembly or Parliament evoked the suspicion that ANM elements had a hand in it. This is because the ANM had been strongly opposed to the Assembly and its Deputies have had a long history of standing against it.

Some Press reports said the explosions were actually set off by members of the newly-established Aden-based "Front for the Liberation of Occupied Arabian Gulf" in which the ANM is represented. But the South Yemeni Premier, Mr. Feisal Abdel Latif Al Shaabi denied during a visit to Kuwait that the Front's plans covered Kuwait. He explained that the Front only sought to liberate areas in the Gulf which were under colonialist and imperialist domination.

This is the first serious case of subversion faced by oil-rich (annual income about $650 million) Kuwait. But there have been many political crises. Independence had hardly been proclaimed when the then Iraqi Premier, Lt.-Gen. Abdel Kerim Kassem claimed Kuwait as an integral part of Iraq.

The claim provoked a crisis of maximum proportions resulting first in the landing of British troops in Kuwait under the Protection Agreement between the two countries, and later by Arab League troops who replaced the British forces. In 1963, the Ba'athist regime in Iraq, which had overthrown and executed Kassem, extended official recognition to Kuwait in exchange for a loan (that was never paid back) of $20 million.

That year (1963), Kuwait witnessed the first internal political crisis when 31 of the 50 members of the National Assembly walked out en masse from an Assembly session in disapproval of some members of a new Cabinet formed then. The Cabinet was later re-shuffled. Thus far, the Royal family had held together. Signs of a serious split inside the Royal family occurred as the late ruler, Sheikh Abdullah Al Salem Al Sabah, the first Emir after Independence, fell seriously ill and the Royal family faced the ticklish issue of choosing a new Crown Prince, since the then Crown Prince, Sheikh Sabah Al Salem Al Sabah, brother of the old Emir, would become the new ruler at the death of his brother. This was early in November, 1965.

The Royal family agreed that Sheikh Jaber would be the new Crown Prince, which meant that he would succeed the present ruler, Sheikh Sabah Al Salem, who became the Emir when the late Sheikh Abdullah died in November, 1965.

In the short period since Independence, Kuwait established the first democracy in the Arabian peninsula. Immediately after gaining freedom, a Constituent Assembly was chosen which laid down a Constitution for the country. The first Parliament was elected in January, 1963, and the second, which is now in session, was elected in 1967. The Parliament's term is for four years.

Criticism by the opposition, especially by the ANM, is centred on the argument that despite the parliamentary form of Government in the country, the Royal family, with its monopoly on the main portfolios in the Cabinet, still wields immense powers.

B. Industrial Training Centre: A large Industrial Training Centre costing some $4 million and capable of training 300 workers a year is to be established by the Government. Construction work has already begun on a 15,000-squaremetre site.

The decision to build the Centre directly followed the successful results from the UNDP-ILO-assisted Pilot Centre for Vocational Training of Adult Workers in Kuwait. During its first year of regular training activity, the Pilot Centre offered a 12-month accelerated course for 30 skilled workers and another course lasting two years for 30 instructors. By the beginning of 1969, 33 craftsmen trained at the Centre were released for jobs in industry.

The Centre was created under the UNDP-supported technical assistance programme. The Government of Kuwait has acquired for the Centre (recruited on Government funds) the services of four ILO instructors who are providing instructor courses in motor vehicle repair and maintenance; electrical trades; air conditioning and refrigeration; and maintenance of water desalination plants.

LEBANON

A. Crisis Over Palestine Commandos: The Lebanese "crisis", now over two months old, was stated on June 21 to be moving towards a solution.

The "crisis" was not so critical because Lebanon has survived for almost two months without a Government since the Ministers in the out-going Cabinet of the Premier, Mr. Rashid Karame have been dealing only with routine matters. Yet the issue involved—as an exception to the usual Lebanese crisis—is both very real and very important.

The first characteristic of the crisis was that Mr. Karame began it by declaring openly and categorically that it involved a clash between those who wanted the Palestinian commandos to be given full freedom to operate in Israel from Lebanese territory and those who wanted them to be curbed so as not to give Israel a pretext for attacking Lebanon.

[It so happens that the former group is largely, though not wholly, Muslim, while the latter are mainly, thought not exclusively, Christian.]

Mr. Karame had said that he would not form a new Cabinet till a general agreement was reached on the commando issue.

After about three weeks of intense negotiations, in which the commando leaders and the Egyptian representatives took part, it was agreed that in future, commando activities should be "co-ordinated", which everyone took to mean that they would be strictly controlled. No one has been able to give a firm figures of what the number of the commandos is —figures vary from 300 to 3,000 with about 1,000 being the best guess.

The President, Mr. Charles Helou, has been firm: under his constitutional obligation to defend the sovereignty and integrity of Lebanon he has said that he could not accept the fait accompli of hundreds of uninvited armed men on Lebanese soil. Almost all political leaders, including Mr. Karame have agreed with the President in his interpretation. However, deep differences developed over how the commandos were to be got out of Lebanon since they have, so far, refused to leave of their own free will. President Helou said that he favours an amicable arrangement, but also insisted that the use of force, by the Army, against any recalcitrant commandos could not be ruled out even if only as a last resort. Mr. Karame also insisted that he could never be party to the use of force even though he agrees that the commandos must leave.

Now, finally, it has been agreed that a Government will be formed even before the commando question is settled, and that this problem will be left over to be worked out later by the President, the Premier and the Chief of the Armed Forces.

NEPAL

A. Indian Military Group's Presence—Mr. K. Bisht's Statement And Reaction: The Prime Minister, Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht, in a major policy statement on June 24, called for the withdrawal of Indian military personnel in the Kingdom's northern border checkposts and also of the Indian military group in Khatmandu.

In an interview with the official English daily Rising Nepal, a copy of which was officially made available, Mr. Bisht said that work, of both the Indian military personnel and Indian military group had been completed in Nepal. "They can and should, therefore, be withdrawn."

Replying to a question regarding their mutual obligations under the 1950 Treaty of Peace and Friendship between Nepal and India, he said that since the Treaty was signed three years after India's Independence, there had been several military developments of important character in India. Such developments had taken place in India's relations with the Soviet Union and the United States on the one hand and with Pakistan and China on the other. Nepal was not informed of these developments and India had, therefore, assumed and had led Nepal to assume that exchange of information in such cases was unnecessary.

Nepal, he said, did not believe in the existence of "special relations" between his country and India.

Asked to comment on Mr. Dinesh Singh's theory of "special relations" between the two countries, he said it was incorrect to say that Nepal alone had benefited from such relations.

Asked about Nepal's Arms Assistance Agreement with India, he said that at India's own verbal suggestion for its cancellation, "the Government has written to New Delhi that so far as Nepal is concerned the Agreement does not stand any more."

The statement by Mr. Bisht touched off a major controversy over the propriety of his making a policy statement in public while the National Panchayat was in session.

Mr. Rishikesh Shaha On Statement:

Mr. Rishikesh Shaha, a member of the National Panchayat and a former Foreign Minister, said at a news conference in Khatmandu on June 26 that he had sought to move a privilege motion in the Panchayat on June 25 against the Prime Minister, charging him with "contempt of the House". It was, however, disallowed by the Chairman.

Mr. Shaha said that Mr. Bisht had shown undue haste in granting an interview to a daily newspaper. "If this is the way diplomacy is conducted, let us have a White Paper on Indo-Nepalese relations."

Mr. Shaha's main objection was to Mr. Bisht replying outside the Panchayat to certain points raised by him (Mr. Shaha) in the course of the debate on the Motion of Thanks to the King for his Address to the House. "This is definitely an insult to the House and to me."

Mr. Shaha confessed complete lack of knowledge of the Arms Supply Agreement mentioned by Mr. Bisht in his statement and said: "The Prime Minister did not at any time take the nation into confidence about it. Against whom will Nepal use these arms?"

He criticised USA and UK for supplying arms to "backward Afro-Asian countries", and remarked: "Look at what has happened in Pakistan due to the dumping of arms by them."

He said there were contradictions in the statements made by Mr. Bisht in the statements made by Mr. Bisht in the course of the Royal Address and in the interview published by the Rising Nepal and said: "I confine myself to using parliamentary language. The Prime Minister's statement to the House is false."

Through the Royal Address, the Prime Minister had said a few days earlier that Nepal's relations with India and China were growing stronger. At the interview granted to the Rising Nepal, he complained of a campaign of vilification in the Indian Press against Nepal, lack of progress in the Karnafuli project and other difficulties of trade and transit. Why did not the Prime Minister tell the House about such developments? Mr. Shaha asked.

He expressed the view that India and Nepal were inter-dependent. There were good prospects for trade between the two. The "racket of gift parcels" had to be ended by joint efforts of both the Governments. Nepal's sovereignty would be secure only by the growth of understanding between India and China. Nepal did not need arms supply. The Indian Government should be happy to withdraw its military personnel from Nepalese check-posts as also the Indian Military Liaison Group.

National Panchayat Members' Views:

In the debate on the Royal Address in the National Panchayat (Parliament) on June 24, seven members expressed the view that it was not at all reasonable to allow what they called "Indian check-posts to continue to stay on the northern border of Nepal."

They said: "The self-respecting Nepalese can never tolerate that foreigners should rule them. Nepal on the basis of friendship had allowed India to construct dams on the Kosi and Gandak rivers. It becomes, therefore, imperative on the part of Nepal to negotiate with India on the basis of friendship to withdraw Indian personnel at check-posts on the northern borders".

They also asked the Government to act firmly "in the case of the Trade Agreement and Susta."

They called on the Government to make contingents of the Royal Army and police stationed in the border regions more effective and efficient and to utilize ex-Servicemen for defence.

Chinese Reaction:

The New China News Agency, commenting on the call by Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht for withdrawal of Indian military personnel from border check-posts, said that "Bisht's words sound reasonable and have reflected Nepal's indignation at Indian expansionists."

A despatch from the Agency said: "India has invented the theory of so-called special relationship in order to control and unleash aggression against its neighbours."

Indian Reaction:

The official Indian reaction on June 25 to the Nepalese Prime Minister's statement publicly calling for the withdrawal of Indian personnel on the Nepal-Tibet border check-posts and the Indian Military Liaison Group in Khatmandu was cautious. It decided merely to take no official notice of it.

But Mr. Bisht's statement given in the form of an Press interview, it was said, serves a very clear Nepalese purpose. It is a tactical reply to India's new approach, expounded by India's Foreign Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh, during his recent visit to Nepal.

In these circumstances, India's decision not to over-react to it was considered wise because it would serve little purpose to engage in public polemics on the subject. There is no indication so far when the Nepalese wish to raise it in serious discussions with the Indian side.

The present Nepalese approach seems to be to try to relate the problem of the Indian presence at the checkposts and the Military Liaison Group to its unacceptability in terms of Nepal's new nationalism, particularly to the feelings of the young generation.

[Mr. Dinesh Singh had taken pains at his news conference on June 9 to allay misgivings about his mentioning "a special relationship" between Nepal and India that such a statement did not indicate in any way loss of sovereignty for either country.]

In the first place, it was stated, there are no Indian military personnel posted at the check-posts. What exists in Nepal is a Military Liaison Group of 23 men, headed by an officer of the local rank of Major-General.

Secondly, if Mr. Bisht wants this small group to be withdrawn, the matter should better be taken up at the governmental level rather than through the columns of a newspaper.

As a matter of fact, during the recent visit to Nepal of the Indian Foreign Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh, this question was referred to by the Nepalese side, but it did not press for the pull-out of the Military Liaison Group.

The liasion group of 23 men including batmen and orderlies, it was said, is in Nepal at the specific request of the Government of Nepal because one of the clauses of the Indo-Nepalese Treaty of 1950 says that Nepal "shall be free to import from or through Indian territory the arms, ammunitions, material and equipment necessary for her security."

In 1952-53, there was an Indian military contingent of almost battalion strength for training purposes in Nepal at the specific request of

His Majesty's Government. When the training programme was over around 1958-59, this contingent was withdrawn. What has existed since is only the Liaison Group of 23 men, and that too at the specific request of the Government of Nepal, to assist that country in the purchase of stores and equipment.

It is true that the Indo-Nepalese Treaty contains a clause which says that the two Governments will keep each other informed of major military developments in their countries, but, it was said, no major military development has taken place between India and the United States or the Soviet Union except that India is procuring some military equipment from the latter country. As regards Sino-Indian and Indo-Pakistani developments in the military sphere, these are a matter of public knowledge. Moreover, Nepal was kept informed of these developments, though perhaps not through formal diplomatic channels.

B. Students Demand Recovery Of Territory In Chinese Hands: Nepal's students expressed their resolve on June 25 to recover from "expansionist, imperialist and reactionary" China 250 square miles of territory which, they say, belongs to Nepal.

The area includes strategic places like Tingri Maidan, Khasa, Tingal Gaon, Tangla and Rasua. Nepal lost the territory to China, they say, because of the Sino-Nepal Boundary Treaty signed by President Liu Shao-chi and King Mahendra in 1961.

The students had submitted 21 demands to the Nepalese authorities in a manifesto issued during the student union election campaign.

Besides the demand to recover territory from China, the manifesto also claimed that "Susta is our land, we shall not give it to India. Susta also will have to be recovered whatever the circumstances."

C. Mr. Dinesh Singh's Visit: The Indian Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Dinesh Singh, arrived in Khatmandu on June 5 on a five-day official visit.

Mr. Singh, accompanied by his wife and some senior External Affairs Ministry officials, was welcomed by Nepal's Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Gehendra Bahadur Rajbhandari and senior officers of the Foreign Ministry, including the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Yadunath Khanal and Nepal's Ambassador to India, Mr. Bhim Bahadur Pandey.

Besides the Indian Ambassador, Mr. Raj Bahadur, the only other head of mission present at the airport was the British Ambassador, Mr. A. R. Kellas.

The same day (June 5), Mr. Dinesh Singh had an audience with King Mahendra at which bilateral matters were discussed.

Talks:

At discussions between Mr. Dinesh Singh and Mr. Rajbhandari, India and Nepal reached agreement on appointment of a joint survey team for solving the boundary problem of Susta.

In separate talks with newsmen, the two Ministers confirmed that officials of both sides would work out the mechanics of the survey. No deadline was set for the appointment of the survey team.

At a news conference before he left for New Delhi, Mr. Dinesh Singh recalled that he had said on the very first day of his arrival that he had come on a goodwill visit and not on a trip to resolve any specific issue. He declared that his talks with King Mahendra and Mr. Rajbhandari had led to a greater understanding of each other's views.

He said: "Some of the issues between India and Nepal require examination in depth, but the cordial relations prevailing between us will enable us to resolve the minor differences. I am happy that in a wide range of issues we discussed, we found identity of views between India and Nepal."

He would not reveal the substance of his talks with King Mahendra and emphasized that during his visit he was more concerned with promoting goodwill rather than with resolving specific bilateral issues.

He said India was "convinced that the prosperity of Nepal is necessary for stability in the region." All those he had met were desirous of maintaining close contacts with India and strengthening "our special relations." "We want Nepal's continued independence and it will be our endeavour to maintain our bonds and close co-operation."

Asked to elaborate his reference to India's interest in security over the Himalayas, he said: "If you have an open border between two countries, it is desirable that you have mutual consultations."

He re-iterated that India had no border dispute with Nepal over the ownership of Susta. "It is mainly a question of physical delineation of the border." Nepal wanted to look into some aspects of this specific problem. The question of delineation of the entire Indo-Nepalese boundary "never arose" during the talks.

Mr. Rajbhandari said that he did not see "much difference between a joint survey and appointment of a joint boundary commission for surveying common border areas that were posing problems to Nepal and India."

He was asked to correlate the latest agreement on appointment of a joint official survey team with the statement he had made last May on his return from New Delhi envisaging the appointment of a joint Boundary Commission to survey the entire Nepal-India boundary in the western sector.

He said the joint survey would include areas other than Susta on the Nepal-India border wherever they were posing a problem.

Mr. Dinesh Singh returned to New Delhi on June 9.

Joint Communique:

The following is the text of a joint communique issued at the end of Mr. Dinesh Singh's visit:

"At the invitation of Mr. Gehendra Bahadur Rajbhandari, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Nepal, the Minister of External Affairs of India, Mr. Dinesh Singh, accompanied by a team of officials paid a goodwill visit to Nepal from June 5 to 9, 1969. During the period of his visit, Mr. Dinesh Singh had two audiences with His Majesty, the King of Nepal.

"He also had discussions with the Prime Minister of Nepal, and the Foreign Minister of Nepal, while the visiting Indian officials held discussions with the officials of HMG of Nepal.

"The two Foreign Ministers met several times and discussed frankly and cordially and in considerable detail the various questions of bilateral interest between the two countries.

"It was decided that official groups would go into them in greater depth to evolve recommendations for specific solutions and also to evolve specific plans for further co-operation in matters of common interest."

D. Khatmandu - Dakshinakali Road Opened: The Prime Minister, Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht, on June 10 declared open a 19-kilometre road which links Khatmandu with the Kingdom's most important pilgrimage centre, Dakshinakali.

The road, constructed with Indian aid, cost more than Rs. 19,00,000. It also links the ropeway terminal at Tribhuvan University campus to the central horticultural station at Kirtipur, Chovar, an important tourist centre. India had assisted Nepal to the extent of 85 per cent in the construction of the road.

Speaking on the occasion, Mr. Bisht paid rich tributes to Indian engineers and thanked India for her aid.

E. The Dalai Lama's Representative Expelled: Mr. Sonam Wangyal Sarge, who had been functioning in Khatmandu since 1964 as the Dalai Lama's representative, suddenly boarded a plane for New Delhi on May 29 and his office ceased to function.

Sources close to Mr. Sarge said that he was summoned by the police on May 27 and kept at the police station for "almost the whole night."

A visit to Mr. Sarge's office showed that what was so for an office for organizing relief for Tibetan refugees had turned overnight into a private home occupied y the staff of the representative's office.

Informed sources indicated that Mr. Sarge was asked to leave Nepal within 24 hours.

Order Confirmed:

A spokesman of Nepal's Home Ministry confirmed that Mr. Sarge, "who used to pose as the Dalai Lama's official representative in Khatmandu," had been asked to leave Nepal.

Mr. Sarge was, several times in the past, warned by the Government against posing as the Dalai Lama's representative and given "sufficient time" to leave.

He said that the Government had no objection to Mr. Sarge organizing relief for the welfare of Tibetan refugees, but the Government could not recognize him as the Dalai Lama's official representative. "We do not recognize the Dalai Lama. We follow a policy of non-alignment and friendship with our neighbour."

There are at present about 10,000 Tibetan refugees in Nepal.

PAKISTAN

A. Mr. A. Kosygin's Visit: The Soviet Premier, Mr. Alexei Kosygin, said at an impromptu airport news conference on arrival in Rawalpindi on May 30 from Kabul that he hoped for "tranquillity, detente and peace on the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent."

He was received at the airport by President Yahya Khan and his three Deputy Martial Law Administrators: Vice-Admiral S.M. Ahsan, Air Marshal Noor Khan and Lt-Gen Abdul Hamid Khan.

Mr. Kosygin said that his desire for detente was fully reciprocated by Pakistan's leaders and people. But he refused to comment on the present state of Indo-Pakistani relations.

Mr. Kosygin later had talks with Gen. Yahya Khan. On the Pakistan side, the Foreign Secretary and the Pakistan Ambassador in Moscow were present. Mr. Kosygin was assisted by the Soviet Ambassador to Pakistan and a Counsellor of the Soviet Foreign Ministry.

No details of the talks were disclosed. But Mr. Kosygin had said earlier that bilateral issues were to be discussed apart from international affairs and Indo-Pak relations.

Observers thought the bilateral issues included the possibility of Soviet aid for an $850 million steel plant at Kalabagh. But according to diplomatic sources, Soviet experts have already told Pakistan that they consider the project uneconomic as it would cost more to produce steel at Kalabagh than to import it.

According to Radio Pakistan, apart from Indo-Pakistan relations, Mr. Kosygin and Gen. Yahya Khan discussed matters of mutual interest, the West Asian situation and world issues.

Speaking at a banquet given in honour of Mr. Kosygin, Gen. Yahya Khan said that while Pakistan continued its efforts to reduce tension and create an atmosphere of good neighbourliness with India, "India's response has not been encouraging".

Radio Pakistan quoted him as saying: "India's attitude does not show that she is prepared to go into the root causes of the dispute between the two countries".

He added: "India's attitude towards Pakistan is hardening day by day".

Referring to relations between Russia and Pakistan, he hoped that the growing good relations between the two countries would help maintain peace in the area.

In his reply, Mr. Kosygin said that the Soviet Union wanted her neighbours—India, Afghanistan and Pakistan—to settle their differences and live together in peace.

He said: "We should like to see Pakistan, Afghanistan and India developing relations of friendship and constructive co-operation. The Soviet Union would do all it can on its part to promote this."

Mr. Kosygin spent 22 hours in Pakistan on his way home from Afghanistan.

In his airport remarks as he left for Moscow on May 31, Mr. Kosygin said he was sure the three Asian countries (Afghanistan, India and Pakistan) would make efforts to resolve their differences amicably.

Asked if co-operation between the three was possible despite their basic disputes, he replied: "I think given the mutual desire it is not only possible but also essential. All the more so because the people of India, for whom we hold great regard, want peace and a peaceful solution.

"It is the desire of the people of Afghanistan also. We are also convinced the people of Pakistan want peace. No solution can be found through war."

Asked if he shared President Yahya Khan's view that India's attitude towards Pakistan was hardening, he said: "Please do not ask me to comment on the position of India.

"I feel quite sure that given co-operation, an amicable settlement of disputes with India is possible in spite of those who wish otherwise. I am sure no country is hardening its attitude."

Joint Statement:

A Joint Statement said that Mr. Kosygin re-affirmed his conviction that an early solution of Indo-Pakistani disputes would be in the interests of the sub-continent's people.

The Statement said that President Yahya Khan explained Pakistan's efforts to settle all outstanding disputes with India in a peaceful manner.

Re-affirming their desire to co-operate in economic, cultural and other fields, it said both sides made it clear this was not directed against any third State.

It made no mention of arms sales by the Soviet Union to Pakistan, over which India had expressed concern.

The following is the text of the Joint Statement:

"Mr. Alexei Kosygin, Chairman of the Council of Ministers of USSR, made a brief visit to Pakistan on May 30, at the invitation of Gen. A. M. Yahya Khan, President of Pakistan.

"They held an exchange of opinion on bilateral Soviet-Pakistani relations and on international problems of mutual interest. These talks were marked by an atmosphere of cordiality and friendly mutual understanding.

"President Yahya Khan reviewed the latest developments in Pakistan. They did not touch upon the main principles of Pakistan's foreign policy. He expressed confidence that Pakistan's friendly relations with the Soviet Union would continue strengthening. On his part, Mr. Kosygin assured the President of Pakistan that the Soviet Union would continue her efforts in strengthening friendly relations with Pakistan.

"The two sides re-affirmed their desire to extend the sphere of co-operation between the two countries in economy, culture and other spheres. This co-operation serves the interests of the peoples of the two countries, the interests of friendship and peace in Asia and throughout the world and is not directed against any third State.

"Informing Mr. Alexei Kosygin of the situation on the sub-continent, President Yahya Khan noted that Pakistan was exerting efforts for the regulation of all outstanding disputes with India by peaceful means. Mr. Kosygin re-affirmed his conviction that an early solution of Indo-Pakistani disputes would accord with the interests of the peoples of the sub-continent.

"Both sides noted with great satisfaction that their views coincided on a number of major international problems.

"Both sides stressed the need for settling the West Asian issue on the basis of the Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967 and went on record in favour of the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from all territories they occupy.

"Touching upon the question of the current Paris talks on Viet-Nam, Mr. Kosygin and Gen. Yahya Khan stressed the need for a political solution to the Viet-Namese problem on the basis of respect for the inalienable right of the people of Viet-Nam independently to settle their destinies without any foreign intervention.

"The two sides re-affirmed their determination to strengthen the effectiveness of the United Nations as an Organization supporting peace."

Indian Comment:

Commenting on the Joint Statement, a Government of India official spokesman said: "India's policy in this respect is well known. We are keen to settle our differences by peaceful means and through bilateral talks."

He added: "We note that Mr. Kosygin, during his visit to Pakistan, has re-affirmed his conviction that an early solution of all Indo-Pakistani differences is in the interests of peace in the sub-continent and should be done in accordance with the Tashkent Declaration. We welcome and fully subscribe to this view."

When the spokesman's attention was drawn to the fact that the Joint Statement made no mention of the Tashkent Declaration, he said: "We have noted the absence of any mention of the Tashkent Declaration. But we have adequate evidence that in his banquet speech Mr. Kosygin referred to the Tashkent Declaration."

B. Political Leaders' Call For Elections: According to reports appearing in newspapers, several political leaders have demanded the restoration of complete political activity in the country and the holding of early elections.

Air Marshal Asghar Khan has urged the Yahya Khan regime to allow political parties to function and to prepare a time-table for the next General Election.

He said that it would be in the best interests of the country if preliminaries such as the preparation of electoral rolls and delimitation of constituencies were undertaken straightaway. He thought conditions were ripe for political activity.

Without mentioning names, he said that there were certain parties in Pakistan which believed in alien ideology and in values other than those for which Pakistan was created. These, he said, had no right to function and must be rooted out.

Mian Tofail Mohammed of the Jamaat-i-Islam Party in West Pakistan told a news conference in Multan that early revival of political activity would discourage elements who would like to create chaos in Pakistan. He pleaded for a revival of the 1956 Constitution.

[Both Wings of the Pakistan National Awami Party have, however, strongly opposed the revival of the 1956 Constitution.]

The Joint Secretary of the Wali group of NAP, Mr. Ajmal Khattak, opposed it on the ground that it would perpetuate the "one unit" scheme in West Pakirtan. He said that his party would not co-operate with other parties unless this question was rerolved.

Maulana Bhashani, National Awami Party leader, also expressed strong opposition to revival of the 1956 Constitution and suggested a national convention with representatives of all sections of the people to prepare a draft Constitution.

The country's Constitution, he said, must enjoy the support of all sections of the people of both Wings of Pakistan and should be put to a referendum for their approval.

Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, Chairman of the Pakistan People's Party, declared that his party would accept the 1956 Constitution only as a last resort and that too, only if certain amendments were incorporated in it. These amendments relate to question of "One Unit" which should be disbanded and representation of the people on population basis. The amendments would in effect mean framing a new Constitution.

AFGHANISTAN

A. Move For Regional Transport Conference: According to an official statement in Kabul on June 24, the Afghan Government had contacted India—as also Iran, the Soviet Union, Pakistan, Turkey and Nepal—for the purpose of convening a transport and overland transit conference.

The conference was believed to be in furtherance of the Soviet proposal for co-operation among the countries of this region for their economic advance.

The statement said: "Afghanistan, since the completion of some of its major modern highways, has expressed the wish through diplomatic channels to hold a transport and overland transit conference in this part of Asia to be attended by Afghanistan, Iran, the Soviet Union, Pakistan, India, Turkey and Nepal.

"Increased contacts in this respect have been taking place recently. When all the invited participants express readiness through diplomatic contacts, steps will be taken to hold such a meeting in Kabul, which will be free from all other aims."

Regarding collective security, the statement said: "Afghanistan has never had, and will not wish to have, the desire of joining any military and defensive pact under whatever name it may be formed.

"Afghanistan has pursued the policy of neutrality and non-alignment with military blocs as a constant and stable line of action.

"She recognizes friendship between all nations, co-existence, non-interference in the internal affairs of all nations, and expansion of multilateral international economic co-operation as the only way for fostering peace.

"Afghanistan believes that real peace for developing nations and nations of this region should be sought by strengthening the economic, social and political structures of these nations."

CEYLON

A. Foreign Exchange Entitlement Rates Raised: The Central Bank on June 17 raised its rate of foreign exchange entitlement certificates from Rs. 44 to Rs. 55 per 100.

This meant that one would have to pay more on every Rs. 100 worth of remittances for imports while receipts from abroad would receive proportionately increased values for exports and professional services.

The foreign exchange entitlement scheme, which came into effect in May, 1968, was based on the Pakistan pattern. The rate of Rs. 44 had fetched Rs. 334 million within eight months of its introduction.

This and other recent measures touched off speculation that rigid import restrictions were to be re-introduced.

However, on June 23, the Governor of the Bank, Mr. William Tennekoon, ended the speculation with his statement that the "open general licence system introduced in May, 1968 would continue. We are not going to put open the general licence system under quota again."

In May, 1968, several items from butter and sago to cutlery and industrial raw materials under quota system were permitted to be imported free subject to a payment of 44 per cent surcharge. With the raising of the surcharge to 55 per cent, it was feared that the Government would abandon the open general licence scheme and re-introduce quota system.

Books, newspapers and periodicals would continue to remain under open general licence system and the Government rejected the plea that they be exempted from 55 per cent surcharge.

The Government was now considering having a new rate of exchange for travel following representation that foreign travel would be seriously affected by the new foreign exchange entitlement certificate rate.

B. Indian Participation In Textile Venture: The foundation stone of a modern textile mill, a joint venture of Ceylon and the Indian industrial house of Birla, was laid at Horana on June 29 by the Prime Minister, Mr. Dudley Senanayake.

He said the setting up of the mill would be a stepping-stone for even closer collaboration between the two countries.

He re-iterated the need for India and Ceylon working together to put their tea industry on a stable footing. Together they produced 70 to 80 per cent of the world's tea. He had no doubt that joint action by the two countries would bring tangible benefits.

Giving details of the project at a news conference on June 28, Mr. B. K. Birla said that once the proposed mill started production, foreign exchange of Rs. 11 million would flow into Ceylon in the very first year. The project would have 70 per cent Ceylonese and 30 per cent Indian capital. Technical personnel would be supplied by India. The ultimate aim was to train the Ceylonese to man the industry.

The target of production was 80 million yards annually, which would be stepped up in due course. It was proposed to manufacture rayon and nylon varieties also.

Asked whether there were possibilities of similar joint ventures in other fields, he said the fields in which private capital could play a useful part seemed to be limited in Ceylon, since in most of the key industries like sugar, cement, rubber and tea, the State was playing a leading role.

Asked why the company had been named "India-Ceylon Industries Limited" in general terms, and whether it would interest itself in launching other industries in addition to textiles, he said it was proposed to launch some chemical industries like manufacture of caustic soda. Such projects depended on the availability of raw materials.

CHINA

A. Talks With Soviet Union On River Navigation: Tass reported on June 21 that Sino-Soviet talks on border river navigation had opened in Khabarovsk on June 18 "in accordance with the agreement between the two sides."

Observers saw it as important that Soviet and Chinese negotiators were sitting across the table for the first time in several years, particularly since the clashes across the Ussuri River.

The Soviet news agency described the Khabarovsk conference as the 15th meeting of the Mixed Soviet-Chinese Commission on Navigation.

The talks centred on River Amur and its tributaries, in particular the Ussuri, as well as on Lake Khanka.

The two countries had exchanged Notes on holding such a meeting shortly after serious incidents broke out on the Ussuri River late last Winter, when the River was still frozen over. With the thaw, it became even more urgent to avoid new frontier friction and navigation disputes. Further incidents would have been almost inevitable since the two sides have never agreed on the exact border line, and whether it passes through the middle of the River, or on one bank or the other.

In the case of the Ussuri in particular, the old Treaties, which the Chinese call "the unequal treaties", stipulate that the border is traced along the Chinese bank of the River.

Confirmation by Tass that the Mixed Commission had convened came at a time when relations between the two countries had reached their nadir.

Accusations by the Soviet Party leader, Mr. Leonid Brezhnev, at the international communist conference in Moscow that Peking was preparing for war had been matched by fresh tirades of Chinese invective against the Czars.

However, according to Press reports, this was merely the surface froth. More sinister was the fact that, behind the scenes, the situation along the Sino-Soviet border had continued to deteriorate. Since the initial incidents over Damansky Island in the Ussuri River, border clashes had spread to other areas, including the Central Asian sector. A state of permanent emergency prevailed in the eastern border areas where arms were said to have been distributed to the civilian population.

According to reports, some of the recent border clashes were considerably more serious than published accounts had indicated. The Soviet Press had virtually imposed a black-out, save for publishing protest Notes to the Chinese Embassy in Moscow over incidents said to have occurred recently on the border between Chinese Sinkiang and Soviet Kazakhstan. The Chinese had been rather more voluble, alleging intrusion into their territory of "large numbers of tanks and armoured cars".

Warning On Threat From USA And USSR:

An article written by an Army officer in the June 14 edition of the Peking People's Daily warned China not "to ignore the danger of United States imperialism and Soviet revisionism launching a large-scale war of aggression. ...at an early date."

The article called on the nation to rally behind Marshal Lin Piao in preparing for the possibility of either a nuclear or conventional war.

"The rapacious nature of United States imperialism and Soviet revisionism will never change", it said. "When they think they can get away with it they will launch a war of aggression."

The author described Washington and Moscow as both colluding and contending "in a vain attempt to redivide the world". The Russians were accused of never ceasing to carry out "armed provocations and military threats against our country."

The article went on: "The Chinese people's victory was won with guns: the fruits of their victory must also be defended with guns." It ended by expressing China's determination to liberate Formosa.

While the article was a tough statement for Moscow's benefit four days before the Sino-Soviet discussions on the river disputes were due to begin, it was also an indirect plea for national unity within China. The need to sink political dissensions had been a recurrent theme in recent domestic propaganda.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai the same day recognized the provisional revolutionary government of South Viet-Nam established by the National Liberation Front. His telegram of congratulations called on the Front to fight on until "complete victory."

He warned that the United States would never agree to the unconditional withdrawal of its forces or the creation of a revolutionary coalition government "which truly accords with the wishes of the South Viet-Namese people".

B. Campaign For Unity: Presumably in pursuance of the campaign for unity launched after the Ninth Party Congress in April, a joint editorial offering pardon for those defeated in the Cultural Revolution was published by the People's Daily, the Liberation Army Daily and the Red Flag on June 14.

The editorial emphasized the necessity of "retrieving" those party officials who had been lost to bourgeois ideology and morals.

It said that the working class should unite even "with those who committed errors characteristic of the capitalist-roaders in power but who are not absolutely unrepentant".

The reference to "capitalist-roaders in power" led observers to wonder whether the national leaders would not set the example for the rehabilitation of disgraced party officials by re-admitting such former colleagues as Mr. Teng Hsiao-ping, the former party secretary, and Mr. Peng Chen, the former Mayor of Peking.

The editorial said that 95 per cent of the population could be united around Mr. Mao Tse-tung's thought and it warned revolutionary organizations against overbearing attitudes. "Unite to win still greater victories...The masses of the people throughout the country (must be) united under the leadership of the proletariat....Unity must be realized in every factory, every village, every office and every school."

Publication of these directives, which seemed to have been taken from Mr. Mao's opening speech before the April Congress, started mass demonstrations in Peking. These were the first street demonstrations since April 24, the day when the Congress ended. But their relatively small scale—in comparison with those which took place last Winter and in the Spring—apparently confirmed the impression that a detente was prevailing on the political front.

The moderate trend, which became apparent last Winter, had seemingly gained strength during the party caucus. Day after day the call for unity was given top place in the People's Daily, whereas the anti-Soviet campaign and reports of border incidents were relegated to back pages.

Peking observers said the call for unity was a logical sequel of the Cultural Revolution and conformed with Mr. Mao's "one-divides-into-two" doctrine. (Unity is restored after dangerous trends have been eliminated and until such time as new dangerous trends emerge.)

The observers believed that the main motive for the unity campaign was the need to prepare for a "leap forward" which was to follow after the Cultural Revolution. Everything indicated that a realistic but ambitious development plan was under preparation. But before it was implemented, the country must re-integrate large numbers of former officials of party and industry.

Replying to criticisms, the editorial said the new unity was not unprincipled but solidly based on Mr. Mao's thought. It said: "Naturally there is no question of uniting with landlords or other bad elements, just as on the international field there is no question of uniting with imperialists, revisionists and all reactionaries who oppose communism and the people".

HONG KONG

A. Mr. D. Healey's Visit: The British Defence Secretary, Mr. Denis Healey, paid a visit to Hong Kong from June 24 to 26 when he held talks with local officials on security arrangements for the Colony.

He told a news conference on June 26 he was now confident that Hong Kong would deal with any future threat to its security. This confidence was partly psychological but was based also on the impressive co-operation established between the local security forces and the British garrison and the very thorough contingency planning after the communist riots two years ago.

He added that a major object of his visit was to discuss the implications of Britain's military withdrawal from Singapore and Malaysia in 1971 on the defence of Hong Kong.

He denied accusations made by the Conservatives in the British Parliament that he had changed his policy on the British withdrawal from east of Suez. All the Commonwealth defence partners in South-East Asia accepted that the decision on withdrawal was final. After 1971, re-inforcements for Hong Kong will have to be flown out from Britain in an emergency instead of from Singapore and Malaysia as at present.

To make up for this time lag, he said, the Colony's garrison would be increased by a battalion together with some Royal Navy minesweepers.

He added that discussions were still in progress for new arrangements for air defence. He denied suggestions that increase in the Colony's garrison might be interpreted as provocative by Peking, adding that China had an interest in the peace and stability of Hong Kong.

He described Sino-British relations as having improved very slightly over the last 18 months and said he believed that the cause of the violence in Hong Kong in 1967 was communist factionalism in the Colony which did not have the backing of China.

On the case of Mr. Anthony Grey, the Reuter correspondent detained in Peking, he said the British Government was confident that he would be freed by the end of the year when the last of the 11 communist "newsworkers" would be released from prison in Hong Kong.

Mr. Grey's chances of being released this year had improved when the Hong Kong Government announced that sentences on three communist prisoners had been cut to enable them to come out of gaol by December.

British Military Presence In S-E Asia:

Earlier, on June 23, while in Bangkok on his way to Hong Kong, he told a news conference that Britain would maintain four Royal Navy ships in training in the South-East Asian region for four months every year and would hold regular exercises for the Royal Air Force.

He indicated that a British military presence would be very much in evidence in the region after 1971, although on a very much reduced scale.

He said that Britain would also maintain her military planning staff at the South-East Asia Treaty Organization (S-EATO) headquarters in Bangkok and contribute forces for S-EATO exercises. Britain would send part of her forces from Europe to the S-EATO area to take part in operations if and when necessary.

INDIA

SUMMARY: President's Rule In Bihar; Telengana Issue; Road In "Occupied" Kashmir; Mrs. I. Gandhi On Possible Chinese Attack; New Central Loan; Gold Control Ordinance; Three State Budgets; Two IAF Accidents.

A. Congress Ministry In Bihar Falls—New SVD Ministry Also Falls—President's Rule Imposed: The Chief Minister of Bihar, Mr. Harihar Singh, submitted the resignation of his Ministry to the Governor on June 20 after the budget demand for animal husbandry moved by one of his Cabinet colleagues was rejected by the Legislative Assembly.

The four-month-old Ministry fell when the six-member Soshit Dal group withdrew its support to the Ministry. Several members of the Jharkhand and Hul Jharkhand parties also voted with the Opposition.

The voting on the budget demand was 143 in favour and 164 against. After the voting, the Speaker, Mr. Ram Narain Mandal, adjourned the House sine die.

The Opposition leader, Mr. Bhola Paswan, talking to newsmen later, expressed his willingness to form an alternative non-Congress government if called upon to do so by the Governor.

The defection by the Soshit Dal members came as a shock to the Congress, which was already in the throes of a crisis following the demand by a section of Congress MLAs for a change in leadership.

In the election of the Speaker held shortly after the mid-term poll, the Opposition candidate, Mr. Dhanik Lal Mandal (SSP), had lost to the Congress nominee, Mr. R. N. Mandal, by six votes. The Opposition had made headway since then, securing five votes more than was required for an absolute majority in the 318-member House.

The SSP, with 52 members, is the largest Opposition party in the House.

Six Congress members were absent. One Congress member, Mr. Ram Baswan Ram, who was suffering from heart ailment, was specially brought to the House to enable him to vote.

The Ministry comprised 25 Ministers and eight Ministers of State, out of whom 12 Ministers and eight Ministers of State did not have any portfolio.

The Harihar Singh Ministry, which was in power for 115 days, was the fifth Ministry formed after the General Election in 1967.

The Soshit Dal Ministry, formed in January 1968, was overthrown in March. The second United Front Ministry headed by Mr. Bhola Paswan remained in office for three months until President's Rule was imposed.

The Congress-led coalition, consisting of the Congress, the Janta Party, the Jharkhand Party, the Soshit Dal and the Swatantra Party then came to power. Subsequently a section of the Hul Jharkhand Party defected and extended its support to the Congress. One of its nominees, Mr. S. Hembrom, was appointed Cabinet Minister.

New Ministry:

Next day (June 21), the State Governor, Mr. Nityanand Kanungo, formally invited Mr. Bhola Paswan, Leader of the Opposition in the Bihar Assembly, to form a new Government.

On June 22, Mr. Bhola Paswan was sworn-in as Chief Minister.

Along with him, Mr. Sushil Kumar Bage (Jharkhand) and Mr. Shanker Dayal Singh (BKD) were also sworn-in as Cabinet Ministers.

On June 24, eight more Ministers and six Ministers of State were sworn-in, bringing the total strength of the new Ministry to 17.

Those sworn-in included four nominees of the Loktantrik Congress, four of the Soshit Dal, one of BKD and three Independents.

The new Cabinet Ministers are: Mr. Deep Narain Singh, Mr. Krishna Kant Singh, Mr. Laliteswar Prasad Sahai and Mr. Abdul Gafoor (all Loktantrik Congress); Mr. Mahavir Prasad and Mr. Motilal Kanan (both Soshit Dal); Mr. Kaderan Singh (BKD); and Mr. Sheoshankar Singh (Ind.)

The Ministers of State are: Mr. Brindawan Wansi and Mr. Hari Lal Verma (both Soshit Dal); Mr. Hari Charan Roy (Jharkhand); Mr. Ramaballagh Sinh and Mr. Ghanshyam Mahto and Mr. Satya Narain Singh (Ind.)

The Legislature wing of the All-India Jharkhand Party, a constituent of the Congress-led coalition, expelled Mr. S. K. Bage and Mr. Haricharan Roy from the party for six years on June 24 for supporting the non-Congress opposition without the party's permission. Both of them voted against the Government in the Assembly on June 20, when the Congress-led coalition collapsed.

Meanwhile, the Soshit Dal which ruled Bihar for 47 days after the fall of the first United Front Government was split in two on June 24.

One group is led by Mr. Tarini Prasad Mandal, General Secretary of the party, and Mr. Jagden Prasad who was removed from the leadership of the party's Legislature wing on June 22. The other group is led by Mr. Ramnagina Singh and Mr. Satish Prasad Singh (former Ministers).

Ministers' Portfolios:

On June 27, Mr. Bhola Paswan announced in the Assembly the portfolios of his Ministers.

The Chief Minister, Mr. Paswan, kept to himself Finance, Education, Forest, PWD, Mines, Law, River Valley Projects, Political (Appointments and General) and all other departments not allotted to any of the Ministers.

The following are the portfolios of Cabinet Ministers:

Mr. Deep Narain Singh—Irrigation and Power;

Mr. Krishna Kant Singh—Community Development and Gram Panchayat;

Mr. L. P. Sahi—Industries and Technical Education;

Mr. Abdul Ghafoor—Labour and Employment;

Mr. Kaderan Singh—Information and Tourism;

Mr. Shankar Dayal Singh—Health and Exercise;

Mr. Moti Lal Kanan—Revenue;

Mr. Mahavir Prasad—Agriculture and Animal Husbandry; and

Mr. Shiv Shankar Singh—Cooperation and Sugarcane.

The following are the portfolios of the Ministers of State:

Mr. Brindawan Wansi—Agriculture and Animal Husbandry;

Mr. Ram Vallabh Singh—Cooperation and Sugarcane;

Mr. Satya Narain Singh—Irrigation and Power;

Mr. Hari Charan Roy—Tribal Welfare;

Mr. Hari Lal Prasad—Revenue; and

Mr. Ghanshyam Mahtoo—Public Health and Engineering.

On June 30, two of the three Congress MLAs who defected from the party recently, were sworn-in as Cabinet Ministers, raising the strength of the Government to 19.

The Ministers were Mr. Jamal Uddin and Mr. Zafar Ali. The third defector, Mr. Madan Besra, was not given any ministerial berth.

Mr. B. Paswan's Cabinet Resigns:

But, on July 1, only nine days after taking over, the Samyukta Vidhayak Dal Ministry headed by Mr. Bhola Paswan resigned following the withdrawal of support by the 34-member Jana Sangh group in the Legislative Assembly.

The Governor, Mr. Nityanand Kanungo, accepted the resignation and requested Mr. Paswan to continue in office until alternative arrangements were made.

The immediate provocation for the Jana Sangh's action was the inclusion of two defectors from the Congress—Mr. Jamaluddin Ahmed and Mr. Mohammed Zafar in the Cabinet.

Mr. Paswan announced in the Assembly the decision of his Ministry to resign. The Speaker immediately adjourned the House.

Mr. Paswan read out a letter he had received from the Secretary to the Governor saying that the Jana Sangh group in the Assembly had withdrawn its support to the Government. As such, he could not, in the circumstances, continue as Chief Minister.

Before the Chief Minister's announcement, the Speaker had admitted a motion of no-confidence against the SVD Ministry. He told the House that he would fix, in consultation with the Chief Minister, a date for discussion on the motion. The Chief Minister, however, resigned before a date could be fixed.

After question hour, Mr. Verma handed over a letter to the Chief Minister conveying the party's decision to withdraw its support. By that time, Mr. Paswan had already received the letter from the Governor's Secretary.

Mr. Verma in his letter charged Mr. Paswan with "lust for power." He took strong objection to his action in including two Congress defectors in the Cabinet. He alleged that Mr. Paswan had offered similar inducements to members of the Hul Jharkhand Party led by Mr. Justin Richard, MLC.

In an interview, Mr. Paswan denied the charge of having given any inducement to defectors.

He, however, asserted that those legislators who had voluntarily decided to support the SVD Ministry to make it more stable "did deserve adequate representation on the Ministry."

President's Rule Imposed:

However, on July 4, the acting President, Mr. V. V. Giri, issued a proclamation under Article 356 of the Constitution suspending the Bihar Legislative Assembly and introducing President's Rule in the State.

The proclamation said that the acting President was satisfied on receiving a report from the State Governor, Mr. N. N. Kanungo, that a situation had arisen in which the Government of Bihar could not be carried on in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution.

He was, therefore, assuming to himself all functions of the State Government and powers vested in or exercisable by the Governor. The proclamation also declared that the powers of the Assembly shall be exercisable by or under the authority of Parliament.

It accepted the Governor's recommendation which had also been approved by the Internal Affairs Committee that the Assembly, instead of being dissolved, should be kept in suspended animation for two months. The position should be reviewed at the end of this period and the Assembly should be re-activated if the chances of forming a stable Government improved.

The Governor in his report also did not appear to be optimistic about the restoration of stable conditions in the State in the foreseeable future. His report, which was fairly comprehensive, attributed the increasing political instability to unseemly scramble for power among the State politicians.

He referred to the acute dissensions within the Congress Party which had made it impossible for the Congress-led coalition Ministry to function.

Background:

Bihar has been in the grip of political instability since the 1967 General Elections. Six Ministries have toppled in quick succession. The State has been placed under President's Rule for the second time since 1967 and within five months of the mid-term elections. The mid-term poll which had aroused high expectations failed to give absolute majority to any single party.

The Congress Party had to revise its earlier stand and permit the leader of the Congress Legislature Party, Mr. Harihar Singh, to form a coalition Ministry with the help of local parties.

The Ministry faced heavy odds from the beginning, largely due to internal bickering in the Congress, and could not stay in office for more than 4-1/2 months. Mr. Bhola Paswan's Ministry, which assumed office shortly thereafter, could not remain in power for more than nine days.

Governor's Broadcast:

The Governor of Bihar, Mr. N. Kanungo, in a broadcast on July 5, expressed the hope that members of the suspended Legislative Assembly would soon re-align themselves to provide a stable Government to the people in the larger interests of the State.

He recalled the circumstances under which President's Rule was imposed in the State and said that he would do his best to "preserve, protect and defend the Constitution and the rule of law."

Since the General Election of 1967, he said, six Ministries had come and gone. The State had been under President's Rule from June 30, 1968 to February 25, 1969. Barring the first Ministry inducted into office on March 5, 1967, which functioned for nearly nine months, all the other Ministries held office for periods ranging from four days to 114 days. The phenomena occurred because of shifting loyalties of some Assembly members. Mid-term elections were held as recently as January, 1969. Evidently, the election had not helped in the formation of a stable Government. In spite of such discouraging conditions, he believed in the wisdom of the voters.

B. Telengana Agitation—Ministers' Resignations—Party's Vote Of Confidence: In spite of the Essential Services Ordinance issued by the Andhra Pradesh Government on June 1, the Non-Gazetted Officers (NGOs) of the State Government announced a strike from June 10 in support of their demand for a separate Telengana. The State Government, however, reported about 90 per cent attendance of NGOs in offices.

The Telengana agitators launched on June 23 what they described as "mass satyagraha" to demand a separate Telengana state. It continued for several days.

In the early hours of June 25, Dr. M. Chenna Reddy, Mr. Konda Lakshman Bapuji and four others were arrested and sent to Rajahmundry Jail. More arrests were made in Hyderabad, Secunderabad, Warangal and a few other towns on subsequent days.

Chief Minister & Other Telengana Ministers Resign:

On the morning of June 27, the Industries Minister from Telengana, Mr. B. Gurumurthy, resigned and there were reports that other Telengana Ministers would follow suit.

Thereupon, the Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, sent his resignation to the Congress Parliamentary Board. In a statement, he said: "I spoke to the Congress President and the Deputy Prime Minister between 9 a.m. and 11 a.m. on June 27. I have placed my resignation in the hands of the Congress Parliamentary Board for their consideration and acceptance to enable the Board to take an unfettered decision in the interests of the country and the State."

He added: "I am calling a meeting of the Congress Legislature Party on July 6."

Thus, Mr. Reddy's announcement had created a first-class political crisis. The crisis was precipitated by a firm stand taken by some of the Telengana Ministers in the State Cabinet.

Talking to newsmen later in the evening, Mr. Reddy said that he had made a similar offer openly on June 7 "when I met newsmen at Hyderabad. In fact, I have suggested this on June 5 to the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan. But I stayed my hands because my leaders were not clear in their minds. I hope that the agitation would now stop completely to create the necessary atmosphere for proper and cool thinking."

The remaining seven Telengana Ministers in the Andhra Pradesh Cabinet submitted their joint letter of resignation to the Chief Minister, Mr. Brahmananda Reddy, on June 28.

This development came as an anti-climax to the Chief Minister's own resignation "placed in the hands of the Congress Parliamentary Board" on June 27.

Of the nine Telengana Ministers in the Cabinet, Mr. Konda Lakshman Bapuji resigned in March, 1969 owing to differences of opinion with Mr. Brahmananda Reddy on the Telengana issue. Mr. B. Gurumurthy, however, gave no reason for his resignation.

The seven Ministers who tendered their resignations on June 28 were Mr. J. V. Narasinga Rao (Communications), Mr. V. B. Raju (Revenue), Mr. P. V. Narasimha Rao (Education), Mr. Siddha Reddy (Labour), Mr. Mohammed Ibrahim Ali Ansari (Health) and Mr. Arige Ramaswamy (Social Welfare).

In a statement, the seven resigning Ministers explained their action. Their joint statement said: "For some time past, Mr. Brahmananda Reddy had expressed his willingness to resign as Chief Minister in order to create a congenial atmosphere for finding a solution to the present situation. He has, however, been holding up his decision in the interests of the State and on the advice of his colleagues and elders.

"After bringing about a marked improvement in the law and order situation, he has, after due deliberation, sent in his resignation to the Congress Parliamentary Board.

"This step, we expect, will pave the way for other meaningful and fruitful measures in solving the problems of the Telengana region while preserving the State's integrity.

"We have tendered our resignations as Ministers and pledge ourselves to the task of working among the people in order to create a psychological climate conducive to achieving the full integration of the State.

"The people of the Telengana region have already suffered a great deal in the past few months. The economy and the tenor of people's life in the region have been considerably disrupted due to frequent violence.

"A backward region like Telengana can ill-afford such severe setbacks and, therefore, it is high time that all violent activity is put an end to and the problems that we are facing are tackled in a cool and dispassionate atmosphere.

"We have no doubt that the phase through which Telengana is passing is only transient and that all outstanding problems of the region can and will be solved in accordance with the best interests of the people of the region.

"Meanwhile, we wish to emphasize the need to maintain law and order effectively in the State and appeal to the people to help in the healing process that is so essential for this end in view.

"We also request the Congress High Command to take expeditious steps to sort out the problems pertaining to the Telengana region."

The Governor, Mr. Khandubhai Desai, told the eight Telengana Ministers that their resignations would be accepted when alternative arrangements were made. In the meanwhile, he had requested them to continue in office.

Praja Samithi Sticks To President's Rule:

The Telengana Praja Samithi leaders, however, categorically stated in New Delhi on June 25 that they would not give up the demand for President's Rule.

The acting Chairman of the Samithi, Mr. A. Madan Mohan, told a news conference that nothing short of a separate Telengana could solve the present crisis of confidence.

The Samithi's agitation, he said, did not hinge on Mr. Brahmananda Reddy's resignation. It was neither for nor against Mr. Reddy. It would suspend its agitation if President's Rule was imposed followed by an opinion poll on a separate Telengana.

Congress Parliamentary Board Rejects Telengana Demand:

On July 3, the Congress Parliamentary Board firmly rejected the demand for a separate Telengana and made it clear that there was no question of splitting the present linguistic State.

The Board did not take any decision on the resignation of the Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy.

It also decided that the resignation should be placed before the Congress Legislature Party, meeting in Hyderabad on July 6.

It authorised the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa and Mr. K. Kamaraj to go to Hyderabad, ascertain the views of the party and give whatever advice they considered necessary to resolve the present crisis.

Congress Legislature Party's Vote Of Confidence:

The Andhra Pradesh Congress Legislature Party re-affirmed its full confidence in the Chief Minister, Mr. Brahmananda Reddy, in Hyderabad on July 6 and requested him not to press his resignation.

A resolution to this effect moved by Mr. P. V. Narasimha Rao, Minister for Education (who hails from Telengana) was passed unanimously.

The meeting, convened to consider Mr. Brahmananda Reddy's offer to resign in the context of the Telengana agitation, was attended by 165 Assembly and 51 Council members. The absentees included 25 MLAs and eight MLCs from Telengana and four MLAs and seven MLCs from the Andhra region.

The Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, and Mr. K. Kamaraj attended the meeting as representatives of the Congress Parliamentary Board.

Mr. Nijalingappa said he approved "the spirit of the resolution" and, as Congress President, it would be his endeavour to ensure that it was implemented.

The resolution said: "The Andhra Pradesh Congress Legislature Party re-affirms its faith in the integrated State of Andhra Pradesh and welcomes the categorical declaration of the Central Parliamentary Board against further vivisection of linguistic States.

"The party views with concern the events of the past few months consequent on the agitation for a separate Telengana State and deprecates various acts of violence and vandalism committed in pursuance thereof.

"The party condemns the large-scale intimidation and coercion being brought to bear on the legislators subscribing to the ideal of the unity of Andhra Pradesh, and compliments the legislators on their steadfast adherence to their cherished goal.

"It expresses its deep sympathy for those who suffered during the agitation.

"The party has carefully considered the various developments leading to the voluntary offer of resignation by its leader and the Chief Minister, Mr. Brahmananda Reddy.

"The party, however, is of the view that Mr. Brahmananda Reddy's services should be available to the State as its Leader and Chief Minister in order to restore normalcy and eventually pave the way for a smooth change-over to leadership, preferably in favour of a person from the Telengana region.

"The party re-affirms its full confidence in Mr. Reddy and requests him not to press his resignation."

Thanking the members for the confidence they reposed in him, Mr. Brahmananda Reddy emphasized the need for preserving the unity of the State and said that he would ensure that at the appropriate time a person from Telengana was elected Leader of the Congress Legislature Party.

He briefly explained the background to the present political situation in the State and said that he had offered to resign as some people felt that such an offer would help restore peace and normalcy. The main purpose behind his offer to resign had not materialized.

Political circles in the State interpreted the resolution as a "blank cheque" to Mr. Brahmananda Reddy to handle the situation as he deemed fit.

C. Construction Of Road In "Occupied" Kashmir—Protest Notes To Pakistan And China: The Ministry of External Affairs on June 25 protested to the High Commission of Pakistan and the Chinese Embassy in New Delhi against the construction of yet another road by these two countries in Indian territory under the illegal occupation of Pakistan.

The road is from a place called Mor Khun in northern Kashmir to the Khunjer Ab Pass on the Kashmir-Sinkiang border.

The protest Note to Pakistan said: "The entire alignment of the road runs in Indian territory which is at present under the illegal occupation of Pakistan. Further, 12,000 Chinese personnel of the People's Liberation Army have been inducted into northern Kashmir to help build the road and are camped at Mor Khun, deep in Kashmir territory, and at Khunjer Ab. The road is being built in secrecy."

It said that the purpose of the new road was "military expansionism", and that it constituted a threat to the peace and tranquillity of the region.

In the Note delivered to the Chinese Embassy, the Ministry of External Affairs said: "The construction of this road demonstrates China's collusion with Pakistan to undermine the sovereignty of India and provides proof of China's policy of aggravating relations between India and Pakistan.

"It is obvious that the Chinese authorities intend to develop a strategic net-work of roads with the connivance of Pakistan to subserve China's ambitions in the region."

The text of the protest Note to Pakistan is as follows:

"The Government of Pakistan have begun constructing a road from Mor Khun in northern Kashmir, to the Khunjer Ab Pass on the Kashmir-Sinkiang border. The entire alignment of the road runs in Indian territory which is presently under the illegal and forcible occupation of Pakistan. Further, 12,000 Chinese personnel of the People's Liberation Army have been inducted into northern Kashmir to help build the road and are camped at Mor Khun, deep in Kashmir territory, and at Khunjer Ab. The road is being built in secrecy.

"Pakistan cannot be unaware that this road will help to extend the Chinese road net-work in the Tibet-Sinkiang areas into northern Kashmir. Indeed, this new road will give easier access to Chinese troops from areas which they have illegally occupied in north-east Kashmir and from Tibet to the Gilgit area in Pakistan-occupied Kashmir which lies immediately to the north of the cease-fire line dividing the armed forces of India and Pakistan in Kashmir. Considering that this is being done with the approval of the Government of Pakistan, it is clear that this road forms part of a calculated and co-ordinated plan. Whereas Pakistan and China sought to justify the illegal construction of the road from Sinkiang into Gilgit through the Mintaka Pass in 1967 for reasons of trade and commerce, the new road cannot be justified except on grounds of military expansionism. The road is a threat to the peace and tranquillity in the region.

"No part of Jammu and Kashmir is Pakistani territory and indeed Pakistan does not claim it as such. The whole of Jammu and Kashmir is a part of India. Neither Pakistan nor China has any locus standi in Kashmir except that of an aggressor and, therefore, whatever action they take singly or jointly to consolidate their hold on the territory of this State of the Indian Union is wholly illegal.

"The Government of India lodge an emphatic protest against this violation of Indian sovereignty in Kashmir and deplore that Pakistan should be seeking Chinese help in creating further tension in this area and in aggravating Indo-Pakistan relations which both countries have undertaken under the Tashkent Declaration to improve by peaceful means. The Government of India would like to make it clear that in pursuance of their inherent right of self-defence they reserve the right to take all such measures as may be necessary against any violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity in Jammu and Kashmir."

The following is the text of the Note to the Chinese Embassy:

"The Chinese authorities are secretly assisting Pakistan in building a road from Mor Khun in northern Kashmir to Khunjer Ab Pass on the Kashmir-Sinkiang border. Some 12,000 Chinese military personnel have been inducted in this area for the task. As is well known, Pakistan continues to illegally occupy this area of the Indian State of Jammu and Kashmir. The construction of this road demonstrates China's collusion with Pakistan to undermine the sovereignty of India and provides proof of China's policy of aggravating relations between India and Pakistan. The Government of India strongly protest against these activities of the People's Republic of China which abet the illegal occupation of Indian territory by Pakistan and create tension between India and Pakistan.

"This new road from Indian territory illegally under Pakistan's occupation is clearly designed to provide a link with the Chinese net-work of roads in Sinkiang and Tibet. It is obvious that Chinese authorities intend to develop a strategic net-work of roads with the connivance of Pakistan to subserve China's ambitions in the region.

"The Chinese Government have throughout pursued a diabolical policy in regard to Kashmir. They would remember that in the Joint Statement issued by Premier Chou En-lai and Prime Minister Cyrankiewicz of Poland on April 11, 1957 in Peking, it was stated that the Kashmir question 'should be settled by the countries concerned through peaceful negotiations and should not be allowed to be made use by external forces to create new tensions.' China's pronouncements and actions in recent years completely repudiate this statement to which the Chinese Premier had subscribed. It is quite evident from such activities that China, an 'external force' in Kashmir, is wilfully complicating Indo-Pakistani relations and adding new tensions. Kashmir is legally an integral part of India. Pakistan and China have, therefore, no locus standi to undertake construction of roads, etc., in territory lawfully belonging to India.

"By undertaking such activities that endanger the peace, good neighbourly relations and security of the countries in the region, the Government of the People's Republic of China make it abundantly clear that they are in no way interested in strengthening peace and reducing tension. Chinese assistance to Pakistan to construct highways in portions of Indian territory under the illegal occupation of Pakistan is a fresh step taken by the People's Republic of China to further aggravate Sino-Indian relations. The consequences of such Chinese actions which can only serve to bring about a further worsening in India-China relations are to be entirely borne by the Government of the People's Republic of China."

D. Mrs. Indira Gandhi On Possible Chinese Attack: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, said at a news conference in Djakarta on July 1 that India had no intention to start producing or possessing nuclear weapons.

She added: "India uses nuclear energy only for peaceful purposes."

India, she said, did not take part in the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty because it was "an unequal Treaty."

In reply to a question on a possible attack by China on India, she said: "I cannot see any real danger from China at present and I believe it will pose no real threat to India in spite of the border issue."

She thought that if war broke out between India and China, it would be a conventional one.

India, she said, would maintain her non-alignment policy because she believed the country would become a target for attack if it joined any military pact.

Asked of the possible presence of Australian troops in Malaysia after the British pull-out in 1971, she said it was up to Malaysia to make the decision. But she stressed that presence of foreign troops in any country would create a false sense of security.

E. Loan From World Bank And IDA: It was disclosed in New Delhi on June 19 that the Government had negotiated a $55 million loan from the World Bank and the International Development Association (IDA) for development of tele-communications in the country.

Of this, $35.4 million would be utilized for import of raw materials by the three public sector undertakings—Indian Telephone Industries, Hindustan Teleprinters and Hindustan Cables' and the P and T Departmental Workshops—for manufacture of tele-communications equipment for supply to the P and T Department.

The balance of $19.6 million would be utilized for the direct import of certain essential equipment not yet manufactured or not manufactured in adequate quantity in the country.

The new loan, together with the expected credit of $30 million to $40 million from Canada, would meet the essential requirements of foreign exchange of the P and T Department and its major suppliers of tele-communications equipment for the first three years of the Fourth Plan.

F. British Loan: Britain gave India on July 2 a debt relief of £7.5 million (Rs. 13.5 crores) against the Aid-India Consortium's total debt relief of $100 million (Rs. 75 crores) for 1969-70.

An Agreement providing for the debt relief was signed in New Delhi by Sir Morrice James, UK High Commissioner, and Dr. I. G. Patel, Special Secretary, Finance Ministry. This was the first of the Aid Agreements under the aegis of the Consortium for 1969-70 and was against the total British aid pledge of £38 million (Rs. 68.4 crores) for the current year.

The debt relief by Britain, like the one for the same amount last year, was in the form of an interest-free loan repayable over 25 years with a seven-year grace period. Unlike other aid loans, debt relief was not tied to purchase of goods from any particular country but was to help supplement India's free foreign exchange resources.

G. Cultural And Technical Agreement With USSR: India and the Soviet Union signed in Moscow on June 27 a Cultural and Technical Agreement for the coming year providing for 107 items of exchange, including Soviet aid in the development of Indian television.

Among the exchanges provided for were 50 scholarships for Indian students to study advance science topics in the Soviet Union. India in turn offered 20 scholarships to Soviet students.

Also spelled out in the Agreement was a joint celebration in both countries of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Mahatma Gandhi and Vladimir Lenin, both born in the same year.

K. New Central Loan: The Government announced on June 16 the flotation of a 4.25 per cent loan issued at Rs. 100 per cent for an aggregate amount of Rs. 250 crores (nominal) and repayable at par on July 1, 1976.

Subscriptions were received from July 1, 1969. The loan was over-subscribed on the first day itself.

The securities of the 3.5 per cent bonds, 1969, were accepted for conversion at par. Interest at the rate of 3.5 per cent per annum on the security of 3.5 per cent bonds, 1969, tendered for conversion were paid up to and inclusive of June 30, 1969 at the time of the new securities.

The new loan bears interest from July 1, 1969. Interest on the loan will be paid half-yearly on January 1 and July 1 and will be liable to tax under the Income-tax Act, 1961.

This was the second instalment of the Central Government's current year's borrowing programme. The first instalment was issued in May in the form of a long-dated 5.5 per cent 1999 loan at par for Rs. 250 crores. It had evoked an encouraging response.

The maturing 3.5 per cent 1969 loan had an estimated outstanding amount of about Rs. 191 crores, a major portion of which was being held by the Reserve Bank of India.

L. Gold Control Ordinance Promulgated: A Gold (Control) Ordinance, which came into immediate effect, was promulgated by the President in New Delhi on July 3 to "repair the void caused" by the invalidation of some of the provisions of the Gold (Control) Act by the Supreme Court in its judgment on April 30 (see page 8955).

While revising some of the invalidated sections of the law and omitting one of them from the statute, certain relaxations were introduced in respect of some of the provisions which had been acting as irritants to licensed dealers in gold, goldsmiths and the general public.

Some of the salient features of the Ordinance were that the rigid restrictions on the purchase of gold in ornament form had been relaxed, while the ban on sale and purchase of primary gold continued.

Till now, a licensed dealer or a private individual who bought ornaments was liable to be visited by the penal provisions of the law whether or not he was aware of the fact that the ornaments bought formed part of undeclared jewellery.

Now, the responsibility or liability of the purchaser was attracted only if he knew that what he was buying was part of a lot which was required to be declared. It was assumed that a person buying more than 2,000 gms or a family buying more than 4,000 gms of gold ornaments would exercise due caution to ascertain that they were not liable to be declared.

Under the Ordinance, Sections 27(2) (D), 27(6), 32, 46, 88 and 100, which had been declared invalid by the Supreme Court, were revised in the light of the Court's observations. Section 5(2) (B), which had also been invalidated by the Court, was omitted from the Act.

The other provisions of the Gold (Control) Act which were amended by the Ordinance were Section 8(2) relating to acquisition and transfer of ornaments, 17(2) (D) and 17(6) relating to refiners, 26 relating to disposal of gold recovered during silver refining, 31 relating to acquisition of gold ornaments by licensed dealers, 39(2) (C) and 39(4) relating to certified goldsmiths, 50 relating to cancellation of licences and certificates and Section 114 relating to the power of the Central Government to make rules.

It was stated that in the process of effecting changes in the provisions of the Act, the Government had not tightened up any of the restrictive provisions. On the contrary, certain relaxations had been introduced in respect of Sections 8(2) relating to acquisition and transfer of gold ornaments generally and in 31 relating to acquisition of gold ornaments by licensed dealers.

By revising the provisions in Section 32, the quantitative limit of primary gold which licensed dealers could keep with them in a form other than gold bars would not apply to cut pieces which remained with the dealers after issuing gold to goldsmiths.

Under the revised Section 46, the quantitative limit of gold remaining in the hands of an artisan would not be more than in the case of the licensed dealer under whom he was working.

M. Formation Of CPI (M-L) Announced By "Peking Radio": The establishment the Communist Party (Marxist-Leninist) was announced by Peking Radio in a newscast on July 2—2½ months after the party was formally inaugurated in Calcutta.

The Radio also named Mr. Kanu Sanyal as its leader.

The commentary by Peking Radio emphasized that the CPI (M-L) was based on the thought of Mr. Mao Tse-tung. It also quoted extensively from Mr. Sanyal's speech at Calcutta on April 22 showering lavish praises on the "great leader Mao" and the "great Communist Party of China."

The Peking announcement, according to political observers in New Delhi, implied formal recognition of the CPI (M-L) as the only Communist Party in India. All propaganda media controlled by the Chinese Communists had characterized the CPI as the "Dange renegade clique" and the CPI (M) as "neo-revisionists."

N. CPI(M) Resolution On Kerala Cabinet Crisis: The CPI(M) submitted to the United Front Co-ordination Committee of the Kerala coalition Cabinet on June 16 seven resolutions, chiefly aimed to censure the CPI or to send it out of the coalition.

One of the important resolutions wanted the Co-ordination Committee to censure strongly the CPI for "making the conspiracy issue a live one again" in violation of the earlier decision of the Co-ordination Committee.

The second resolution alleged that Mr. T. V. Thomas was protecting Mr. M. Ramakrishnan, General Manager of the Travancore Cochin Chemicals (a State sector enterprise) while an inquiry was in progress against him. This official should be removed from his present post to facilitate a proper inquiry.

At the same time, the CPI(M) sought the ratification of the Co-ordination Committee of the steps taken by the Chief Minister, Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, regarding the corruption charges made against three of his Ministers.

[Mr. Namboodiripad had ordered a judicial inquiry into the charges against Mr. P. K. Kunju of the Indian Socialist Party, and had exonerated his own party Minister, Mr. M. K. Krishnan, Forest Minister and the Health Minister, Mr. B. Wellingdon (KTP).]

The CPI(M) followed the ratification demand with another demand on the Committee to agree that no more inquiry into corruption or other charges against Ministers would be pursued until the Public Men's Enquiries Bill was passed by the State Legislature.

O. Madhya Pradesh Budget For 1969-70: The first annual Budget of Madhya Pradesh after the Congress Party recaptured power recently, presented by the Finance Minister, Mr. K. L. Dubey to the Vidhan Sabha in Bhopal on June 25, revealed a net revenue deficit of Rs. 22.71 crores and an overall deficit of Rs. 29.94 crores.

The Budget proposed to leave the entire non-Plan revenue deficit of of Rs. 24.86 crores to be met by additional resources expected from the award of the Fifth Finance Commission.

It proposed measures designed to net Rs. 1.10 crores, besides a State lottery scheme to earn about Rs. 40,00,000. The measures included a rise in certain categories of water rates. It also proposed some relief in irrigation rates. The gap of Rs. 2.63 crores was proposed to be left uncovered.

Despite a grant of Rs. 6.66 crores in the interim report of the Fifth Finance Commission, Mr. Dubey attributed the large non-Plan revenue deficit mainly to:

(1) The enhanced dearness allowance granted partly with effect from December 1, and partly from March 1, over and above the expenditure of Rs. 14 crores on dearness allowance in 1968-69.

(2) Committed expenditure in respect of completed Plan schemes relating to the period from 1966-67 to 1968-69 which had been transferred to non-Plan account from April (Rs. 11.75 crores).

(3) Increased contribution made to the famine relief fund over the contribution made hitherto—Rs. 5.11 crores.

The deficit in the capital account outside the revenue account, public debt and loans and advances by the State Government was estimated at Rs. 26.98 crores. This large deficit in the capital account was indicative of the heavy burden of the debt repayment.

P. Maharashtra Budget For 1969-70: The Maharashtra Finance Minister, Mr. S. K. Wankhede, presented the State's additional Budget for 1969-70 to the State Legislature in Bombay on June 17, which proposed an additional taxation of Rs. 2.18 crores in a full year and showed an overall surplus of Rs. 89,00,000.

There was an increase in the rates of sales tax to 12 per cent on 13 categories of articles, generally used by the upper middle class, to net Rs. 90,00,000.

The categories included motor vehicles, components and spare parts, clocks, watches, timepieces, photographic material, arms, cinematographic equipment, cigarette cases and lighters, certain audio machines, certain optical glasses, sound transmitting equipment, certain office equipment like tabulators, typewriters, teleprinters, and tape-recorders.

The Budget also proposed to increase the rate of sales tax on aviation spirit from 5 paise to 7 paise per litre. This increase would yield an additional revenue of Rs. 30,00,000. It also proposed to increase the tax on State transport passengers from 20 per cent to bring an additional resource of Rs. 98,00,000.

The estimates placed revenue receipts at Rs. 370.62 crores and revenue expenditure at Rs. 406 crores, showing a deficit of Rs. 35,38-000. But this revenue deficit will widen to Rs. 4.77 crores.

Q. West Bengal Budget For 1969-70: Presenting the Budget estimates for 1969-70 in the West Bengal Assembly in Calcutta on July 2, the Chief Minister and Finance Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee indicated that the Government would have to take some measures of additional taxation in the current year for which necessary measures would be introduced in due course.

He said that the Government desired to raise about Rs. 75 crores by new measures of taxation and other means during the Fourth Five-Year Plan period.

The Budget disclosed a negative closing balance of Rs. 53.67 crores. Revenue receipts were estimated at Rs. 230.52 crores and revenue expenditure at Rs. 282.30 crores. There was a deficit of Rs. 13.78 crores outside the revenue account, making an overall deficit of Rs. 65.55 crores. This, together with the opening balance of Rs. 11.88 crores, resulted in a negative closing balance of Rs. 53.67 crores.

On the revenue side, Mr. Mukherjee estimated a reduction of about Rs. 2 crores under land revenue in the current year due to the decision to exempt holdings up to three acres from payment of land revenue, a shortfall of Rs. 1.5 crores under interest in view of the Durgapur project being not in a position to pay interest charges and is running at a loss and a shortfall of Rs. 75-00,000 in respect of receipts under stamps.

On the expenditure side an increase of Rs. 27.74 crores was due to the following reasons: an additional expenditure of Rs. 9 crores in order to give dearness allowance at Central rates, an additional Plan expenditure of Rs. 10.62 crores, an increase of Rs. 9.76 crores in respect of payment of arrear interest charges to the Central Government which could not be paid in 1968-69 and an increase of Rs. 4.16 crores for relief works due to floods in North Bengal last year.

Mr. Mukherjee placed the Plan outlay for 1969-70 at Rs. 55.44 crores (an increase of Rs. 10.62 crores over the estimates presented in March, 1969), in order to provide for schemes directly related to food production and power.

He gave the assurance that his Government would "continue to maintain law and order and preserve industrial peace."

R. Two IAF Accidents: Twenty-six persons were killed on June 29 in two IAF accidents—involving a Fairchild Packet near Agra and a helicopter near Jodhpur. Eighteen of them were Air Force personnel and eight, including six children, were residents of a cluster of hutments into which the blazing helicopter had crashed near Jodhpur.

Fourteen persons, including five officers, were aboard the Fairchild Packet which was flying from Nagpur to Agra. Owing to a severe duststorm the aircraft could not land at Kheria airport and crashed near Burhera village, 27 miles from Agra. The helicopter carried four persons, including two officers. Both aircraft were on training flight.

The charred and mutilated bodies of the Burhera village crash were recovered from the debris and identified. The next-of-kin were informed.

A court of inquiry was ordered to go into the causes of the accidents.

It was the first time in the history of the Indian Air Force that two aircraft had crashed on the same day. The last, and the worst, air accident involving an Air Force aircraft occurred on February 7, 1968, when an Antonov transport plane with 98 defence personnel aboard crashed on the Rohtang Hill range while on a return flight from Leh.

Other serious accidents to Air Force planes since 1958 were on: February 5, 1958, when a Liberator crashed on high hills about 55 km west of Sulur airfield near Coimbatore, killing all 10 persons aboard; February 17, 1964, when an Ilyushin-14 carrying 13 persons, including two top Army officers, crashed somewhere between Srinagar and Udhampur. All on board were killed; March 4, 1964, when a Fairchild Packet exploded in mid-air and plunged into the Hoogly river at Barrackpore immediately after take-off from the Air Force base there. All 22 men aboard, including a crew of five, were killed; April 13, 1965, when a Dakota crashed in the Mokokchung area of Nagaland, killing four officers and five other ranks; February 22, 1966, when 10 persons were killed and 12 injured when a Toofani hit a radar installation at Borjhar airport about 22 km from Gauhati and crashed in flames in a residential area. Seven persons were also reported missing.

S. Train Disaster: Eighty-one persons were killed and 141 injured, 60 of them seriously, when the 6 Dn Allahabad-Gorakhpur Express was derailed about 100 km from Varanasi in the early hours of June 28.

Among those killed were two firemen. The driver received burns in the face and his condition was said to be serious.

Through running of trains in the Audihar-Mau section of the Varanasi Division was suspended. Trains were being diverted through Bhatni and other sections.

Sabotage Alleged:

According to reports received by the Railway Board, the derailment of the Allahabad-Gorakhpur Express was the result of sabotage. The rail track had been tampered with and fishplates and bolts removed at the site of the accident.

The driver of the ill-fated train, Mr. Bannerjee, who died of grave injuries, told the police in his dying declaration that he had seen a man on the rail track and he suddenly applied the brake. But the train moved on for 100 yards when the derailment occurred at about 1 a.m.

The Railway Minister, Mr. Ram Subhag Singh said that two or three rails had been removed just near the approach to the bridge on the River Maghali. Six coaches out of the total rake of 10 and the engine of the express train were derailed and capsized. The engine and three coaches fell completely and one partially into the river, 50 feet below the bridge. The capsized coaches did not, however, touch the water which was only knee-deep. Last year, also at the same place, there was an attempt to tamper with the railway line and a case was registered. The police had also recovered from the accident site amounts ranging from Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 10,500. The police were investigating whether looting of passengers was the motive for the sabotage.

T. Helium-Neon Gas Laser Developed: A helium-neon gas laser, a tool for research, communications and surgery, has been developed by the Bhabha Atomic Research Centre (BARC) in Bombay.

The laser, designed, constructed and operated by the Electronics Division of the BARC, generates a coherent and highly directional infra-red beam of wavelength 1,1523 microns. The maximum continuous power in the beam is about one milliwatt. This beam is invisible to an unaided eye but may be viewed with an infra-red image convertor or detected by photo-sensitive devices.

The ability of the laser to provide intense illumination over small areas is very useful for research in fields such as Raman spectroscopy and non-linear optics. The directional nature of the beams makes the laser attractive for optical communication and optical radar and makes it an invaluable aid in aligning complex optical instruments and large mechanical systems.

The laser group has made a number of lasers since 1954. One of these was used as a communication link between the BARC and the Tata Institute of Fundamental Research, a distance of 20 km. in 1965.

A ruby laser developed at Trombay can be used in the treatment of detached retina of the eye. Under development is an optical radar using a Q-switched ruby laser. Other uses are in micro-machining, study of non-linear optical properties of materials and production of high temperature plasma.

V. Exploration Of Indian Ocean: Indian marine scientists plan to explore the Indian Ocean during the 1970-80 International Decade of Oceanic Exploration as an extensive follow-up of the UNESCO-sponsored Indian Ocean Expedition in which 20 countries had participated over a period of six years.

The Indian programme for oceanic research during the Decade along with similar programmes of other countries would be presented to the Inter-Governmental Oceanographic Commission at its meeting to be held in Paris in September.

India's efforts during the Decade will be concentrated on the study of geology, geo-physics, geo-chemistry, biology and physical oceanography of the Arabian Sea, the Bay of Bengal and the northern Equatorial part of the Indian Ocean.

Much of the success of India's efforts to further supplement its knowledge of the Indian Ocean will depend upon its ability to secure necessary ships to conduct the exploration. The National Institute of Oceanography is acquiring a 45-foot boat for exploration purposes. Larger ships are necessary for various studies contemplated under the Indian programme.

The studies made during the International Indian Ocean Expedition of 1961-65 by India, Russia, the United States, UK and other countries have assumed great importance for India, economically and scientifically.

Some of the analyses of the data secured by the International Indian Ocean Expedition now available have exploded the myth that tropical seas cannot sustain big fisheries. Excellent and varied fish shoals have been located in the Arabian Sea, some parts of the Bay of Bengal and other regions of the Indian Ocean.

IRAN

A. Indo-Iranian Joint Commission Meeting: A major blue-print on economic collaboration between Iran and India emerged from the first meeting of the Indo-Iranian Joint Commission, which ended in Tehran on June 22.

A communique issued in Tehran recorded agreement on seeking to set up a joint venture in Iran for the production of ammonia, which was intended to be utilized for the proposed fertilizer factory at Paradeep. A project report on it was expected to be ready by September and this would be considered at the Joint Commission's second meeting in New Delhi in December.

Secondly, India and Iran agreed to investigate the setting up of a plant to manufacture railway wagons in Iran. This was a proposal made from the Indian side and Indian participation in the projected plant was expected to be about 70 to 80 per cent.

However, the import of ammonia for the Trombay plant was not recorded. It was understood that it was intended to import 200,000 tons of ammonia on this account, but there were differences between the two sides on the time factor involved in laying a pipeline from Bombay harbour to Trombay.

While the communique merely recorded that Iran would facilitate the import of steel products, chemicals, railway equipment and spares, the meeting was understood to have projected a long-range agreement between the two countries for the fulfilment of these Iranian requirements.

B. World Bank Loan: It was announced in Washington on June 19 that Iran would receive a loan of $30 million from the World Bank for additional irrigation works, farm development and adoption of modern agricultural techniques in Khuzestan province.

The development of irrigation and agriculture in the Dez area in the province was initiated following the construction of the multi-purpose Mohammad Reza Shah Pahlavi Dam on the Dez River, for which the Bank had made a loan of $42 million in 1960.

The project now being financed will provide for the irrigation of 90,000 acres and on-farm development of the entire 140,000-acre area.

JAPAN

A. Aid To Developing Countries: The Finance Minister, Mr. Takeo Fukuda, told the Cabinet in the last week of May that Japan had extended a total of $1,049,300,000 in economic aid to developing nations in 1968.

The amount represented an increase of 22.7 per cent over the preceding year's figure.

According to Mr. Fukuda, the aid accounted for 0.94 per cent of the gross national income against 0.89 per cent for the preceding year.

The goal of such aid is one per cent of national income.

The aid conditions were eased somewhat in 1968 with Governmental loan interest rates averaging 3.74 per cent a year and repayment terms 18.1 per cent a year against 4.79 per cent and 16.6 per cent, respectively, for the preceding year.

Such an increase of Japan's economic assistance was traced mainly to a marked 52 per cent increase in non-Governmental aid.

Specifically, private investment abroad went up by 45 per cent and export credits by 49.8 per cent. The Governmental aid, on the other hand, dwindled by 8.6 per cent.

B. Search For Uranium: The Power Reactor and Nuclear Fuel Development Corporation plans to begin a five-year search for uranium in Australia and Canada and the countries of Africa, South-East Asia and Latin America in 1970 because of the possibility that there will be a world shortage of reactor fuel in the 1970s.

At least 13 new Japanese nuclear electric power plants are expected to be placed in operation during the next decade.

In addition to overseas explorations, the Japanese Corporation is also planning to increase its uranium survey in Japan as well. Corporation executives hope that Government budgetary appropriations will allow them to explore possible uranium deposits in Congo (Kinshasa) and Niger and in advance of other African regions.

The Japanese have already developed a uranium mine on the Tottori-Okayama prefectural border in western Honshu, the main island. The country's first integrated uranium ore processing plant will be constructed there to provide the Japanese reactors with close to 25 tons yearly of ammonium diuranate (ADU) which can be used for producing enriched uranium.

Japan's domestic uranium deposits currently total an estimated 6,530 tons in terms of triuranium octoxide, but only 2,500 tons of it is commercially minable. This is just sufficient to operate Japan's present single nuclear power plant for 30 years.

Although the United States has promised to ship sufficient nuclear fuel to allow operation of at least 14 power stations for the next three decades, the Japanese Corporation feels that it must seek its own basic ore supplies.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Air Agreement With USSR: The Soviet news agency, Tass, reported on June 22 that Viet-Namese and Soviet officials had concluded in Hanoi an Air Agreement which would "strengthen the friendship between their countries."

Aeroflot and North Viet-Nam's Hong Kong Viet-Nam would fly a once-weekly service between the two capitals, with stop-overs in Tashkent, Karachi and Calcutta.

At present, Soviet aircraft flying to Hanoi have to pass through Peking and observers speculated that the new Agreement may mean that a more direct route, avoiding China, might be established.

A. Cabinet Re-shuffled: King Hussein re-shuffled his Government on June 30 and made changes in the top positions in the Army and security forces.

No official explanation was given for the re-shuffle, which involved ten ministerial and military positions. The changes were announced in a Royal decree broadcast over Amman Radio.

It said that Mr. Ahmed Toukane, Foreign Minister, had given up the Defence portfolio and had taken up the Tourism portfolio instead.

Gen. Amer Khammash, Army Chief of Staff, was named as the new Minister of Defence, Gen. Ali Hayari, formerly Director of the Security Forces, was named as the new Army Chief.

Mr. Akef el Fayez, Vice-Premier, handed over his portfolio as Minister of the Interior to Gen. Mahmoud Rassoul el Keilani, a former Director of the Security Forces.

Marshal Hades Majali was appointed First Secretary to King Hussein, replacing Mr. Cherif Nasser Ben Jamil, who was nominated C-in-C of the Army.

Gen. Izzet Hassn Kandour took over from Gen. Ali Hayari as Director of the Security Forces.

KOREA (South)

A. Sinking Of Spy Boat Claimed: The Central Intelligence Agency in Seoul reported on June 13 that a spy boat had been sunk in a six-hour gun battle on June 3 off the western coast of Korea.

Earlier, the Agency had said the spy boat was captured and 15 North Korean Commandos on board "wiped out" in the battle. Later, it said that the boat was sunk near the island of Huksando, about 120 miles south of Soeul.

Agency officials said all the 15 persons on board the boat were "shot to death" but only two bodies had been recovered. They said they knew the spy boat was coming and had set up a trap around Huksando with a combined Army, Navy and Air Force task force. The boat was supposed to pick up a communist agent on the island and take him back to North Korea. The agent was arrested on May 30 while in South Korea on an espionage mission. The South Koreans made him maintain radio contact with North Korea and organized the task force when the spy boat left the North Korean port of Chinnampo on June 12. "We even knew the number of crew on the boat".

The officials added that the communist boat, a 75-ton vessel with a maximum speed of 35 nautical miles per hour, was disguised as an ordinary cargo fishing boat. An attempt by the task force to capture the spy boat was met with strong and persistent resistance from its crew who were heard through radio eavesdropping to receive orders from North Korea "to fight it out until the last man falls".

After a South Korean destroyer escort fired her heavy guns, South Korean troops went on board the communist boat and found about a dozen bodies, they had to abandon the ship after recovering some North Korean equipment, because the ship was going down.

B. World Bank Assistance For Industry: The World Bank on June 25 provided a loan equivalent to $20 million to the Korea Development Finance Corporation (KDFC).

The loan will help sustain Korea's rapid industrial growth by enabling KDFC to finance the foreign exchange cost of specific projects undertaken by private industrial enterprise.

Manufacturing industry has been the main force behind Korea's impressive economic growth. During 1968, when gross national product increased by 13 per cent, the output of the manufacturing sector rose by almost 29 per cent, and the rapid increase in exports of manufactured products continued. As a result, the manufacturing industry accounted for nearly one-quarter of Korea's gross national product and for two-thirds of its total exports during the year.

Role Of KDFC:

The rapid expansion of the Korean economy has created a strong demand in the private industrial sector for medium-term and long-term finance, and especially for foreign exchange resources. To help meet this demand, KDFC was established under the sponsorship of the Federation of Korean Industries in April, 1967, with the assistance of the International Finance Corporation (IFC), a World Bank affiliate.

Early in 1968, IFC subscribed the equivalent of $713,000 to the equity of KDFC, and the World Bank made a loan equivalent to $5 million. Together with funds from other sources, both domestic and foreign, KDFC started operations with resources equivalent to $22.5 million. KDFC's purpose is to make equity investments, as well as loans, primarily in manufacturing and processing industries. It gives high priority in its investments to businesses whose products will save Korea foreign exchange by substituting for imports or that earn foreign exchange through exports.

Apart from KDFC, the only financial institutions in Korea providing medium-term and long-term industrial finance are two Government-owned banks. But it is the Government's intention that KDFC should become the principal source of industrial financing for the private sector. Over the past 12 months, its operations have been gathering momentum. There is a strong demand for its services, and it is expected that it will commit the new World Bank loan within a period of approximately two years.

KDFC earned a net income of 107 million Won ($380,000) in 1967 and W436 million ($1.56 million) in 1968. It has not yet paid a dividend and all earnings have been retained.

The World Bank loan is guaranteed by the Government of Korea, and carries interest at 6-½ per cent per annum. Repayments to the World Bank will conform approximately to repayments received by KDFC on its sub-loans financed out of Bank funds, which will not extend for periods beyond 15 years.

NEPAL

A. King Mahendra's Address To Panchayat: In his address to the Budget session of the Rashtriya Panchayat (Parliament) in Khatmandu on June 18, King Mahendra said that his Government would pay "particular attention" to the establishment of industries based on indigenous raw materials "which are of lasting and permanent value to Nepal".

This was a re-iteration of his statement last year. He also said that his Government had already enforced a law for encouragement and additional facilities to cottage industries and other industries based on indigenous raw materials. His statement on industrial policies clearly gave low priority to certain types of industries in the country set up on the basis of imported raw materials, the producers of which had been clamouring for a larger quota of exports of these goods to India.

Stainless steel and synthetic fabrics were items produced in this country much in excess of the local requirements and were sought to be sold in Indian markets.

King Mahendra welcomed the proposed withdrawal of 25,000 troops from Viet-Nam. Nepal also welcomed efforts made by other States towards world peace.

Referring to foreign policy, he said Nepal's "traditionally friendly ties with our neighbouring countries, India and the People's Republic of China, continue to be strengthened." These were the only two countries he mentioned by name. He said Nepal's foreign policy was based on non-alignment and peaceful co-existence while remaining vigilant to safeguard the country's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity.

He said that the panchayat system had become an integral part of Nepal's national life and "the society and the country believe that there was no alternative to it and have embraced it in words, deeds and thoughts."

He, however, cautioned his countrymen against complacency and called upon workers of the panchayat system "who are the real representatives of the people" to work harder and launch a sustained campaign for self-discipline.

B. Budget For 1969-70: The Prime Minister, Mr. Kirtinidhi Bisht, who also holds the Finance portfolio, presented to the National Panchayat (Parliament) on June 30 a Budget showing a deficit of Rs. 6.94 crores which will be met partly by foreign and internal loans, but a net deficit of Rs. 3.71 crores has been left to be met by previous years' savings.

Mr. Bisht presented a Budget of Rs. 84.10 crores for the financial year beginning mid-July, 1969. This is the biggest amount to be spent in Nepal so far in one year. Of this, Rs. 60.82 crores is proposed to be spent on development. This includes Rs. 39.36 crores for communications, agriculture and irrigation and power.

This year's foreign aid is expected to be about Rs. 32.93 crores, while Nepal will itself raise Rs. 44.23 crores through various sources.

Taxes have been increased only on luxury and non-essential goods, while those on essential commodities remain unchanged.

Indian aid, as in the last two years, is the largest and forms more than half of the total foreign aid estimate for 1969 and 1970. It will be Rs. 16.63 crores for the coming fiscal year compared to Rs. 12.61 crores for the year ending July 15, 1969.

The other aid-giving nations are China (Rs. 7.66 crores), USA (Rs. 6.66 crores), Britain (Rs. 1.08 crores), Russia (Rs. 45,00,000), and West Germany (Rs. 27,00,000). Besides, Rs 15,66,000 is expected from other countries.

Nepal will receive an interest-free loan of $17 million from the International Development Association to develop tele-communications. The loan is repayable in 40 years.

With this aid, Nepal proposes to install telephones in all the major towns—about a dozen—within three years. Trunk telephones and a long-distance tele-communication system will also be developed with this aid. At present, only Khatmandu and Biratnagar have telephone systems. Tele-communications are at present maintained through a net-work of wireless stations numbering more than 60 installed with American assistance.

The tax proposals are expected to yield a revenue of Rs. 1.43 crores only.

This year no increase has been proposed in postal and telephone rates as also in air freight or hotel tax.

The goods on which Customs duties have been increased are mainly synthetic textiles and hosiery goods, ready-made garments, washing soap, tea, confectionaries, cotton threads, etc.

Duties on alcoholic products have been increased by as much as 35 per cent. The registration fee for motor trucks and buses has been increased by 500 per cent, for jeeps by 100 per cent and for scooters and motor cycles 33 per cent.

PAKISTAN

A. Mr. H. Bourguiba Jr.'s Visit: In a communique issued at the end of the Tunisian Foreign Minister, Mr. Habib Bourguiba Jr's four-day visit in Karachi on June 29, Mr. Bourguiba and President Yahya Khan expressed "deep concern at the deteriorating situation in Rhodesia."

The two leaders called for "comprehensive mandatory sanctions" against Rhodesia in accordance with the United Nations Charter. They condemned apartheid and South Africa's annexation of South-West Africa.

The communique stressed the need for closer ties between Africa and Asian countries and expressed deep concern over the West Asia situation which was a "constant threat to peace and stability." It called for withdrawal of Israeli forces from Arab lands and restoration of Jerusalem to Jordan.

On relations between the two countries, the communique announced agreement to set up a committee to examine ways and means of establishing closer economic co-operation between the two countries.

Kashmir also figured in the joint communique. It said that "Pakistan and Tunisia have agreed that a solution of the Kashmir and Ganges waters issues between India and Pakistan will help bring about peace in this region."

B. USSR To Develop Gwadur As Naval Base: It was stated in Rawalpindi on June 29 that President

Yahya Khan's Government had revived, with Soviet assistance, a five-year-old project to give Pakistan a second major port on the west coast for the use of its growing navy at Gwadur, 275 miles west of Karachi.

Originally conceived in 1964 with the help of its CENTO allies, the project was to have been aided by Western nations. Their support was apparently with-held or denied to Pakistan after the Indo-Pakistan conflict of 1965.

The high-priority project, on which work began recently, also aims at developing the small west coast port of Gwadur into a major naval base as it is strategically situated, commanding the sea-way from and to the Persian Gulf.

Indian Reaction:

It was stated in New Delhi that the implications of this move of Pakistan for India could be serious in terms of future Soviet help in equipping and developing Pakistan's Navy. Russia has been anxiously looking around for base facilities denied to her by India, with a view to increasing her "presence" in the Indian Ocean.

The 300-mile Gwadur peninsula was ceded to Pakistan by the Sultan of Muscat and Oman in September, 1958 through British good offices for £3,000,000. At present, Gwadur has a population of but a few thousands.

The statement of Vice-Admiral N. I. Smirnov, Deputy Chief of Staff of the Soviet Navy, during his visit to Pakistan in March, 1969 also acquires a new significance. He had said that a powerful Pakistani Navy would be a good pre-condition for peace in this part of the Indian Ocean.

The implications of Pakistan developing a second major Navy port on the Makran coast are obvious, particularly in the context of the expansion and modernization plans of the Indian Navy. Pakistan's naval strategy seems to be to concentrate on under-sea warfare capabilities.

It is said that USA is aware of the Soviet Union's interest in Gwadur, but a recent attempt by an American naval vessel to probe into it failed.

Presumably, the Soviet support to Pakistan in developing Gwadur might also extend to the building of communication links to the port. The Pakistan Atomic Energy Commission has started work on a solar desalination project at Gwadur to provide 15,000 tons of drinking water a day.

Soviet Denial:

But, on July 2, the Press Department of the Soviet Foreign Office described as "nonsense" reports that Russia was helping Pakistan build a naval base in the Arabian Sea and was hoping in return to secure facilities for a naval force in the Persian Gulf and the Indian Ocean.

The cryptic but swift and outright denial supported the view generally held in diplomatic circles in Moscow that the Soviets were unlikely to be building nor seeking base facilities in the region.

For one thing, it was pointed out, acquisition of bases was against the Soviet policy which was re-stated during the World Communist Conference in June, 1969. The Conference document called for disbandment of bases on foreign territory, saying that their existence was an obstacle to international co-operation.

Secondly, it was recalled in these circles, USSR had seemed to be keen on securing disengagement of countries, especially in their immediate periphery, from commitments of military alliances and to promote concepts of collective security based on good neighbourly co-operation and mutual understanding.

From the military point of view, too, it was thought that the Soviet Union stood in no need of bases, particularly as the Soviets had now evolved a system of re-fuelling and supplying ships in mid-ocean without support of relay points.

C. Sheikh Mujibur Rehman Demands New Constitution: The Awami League President, Sheikh Mujibur Rehman demanded on June 22 the framing of a new Constitution on the basis of his party's six-point programme and the 11-point programme of the students.

In a statement issued in Dacca on June 22, he said that his party was firmly wedded to the concept of full regional autonomy, representation in the Federal Legislature on the basis of population and dismemberment and restoration of the former Provinces of West Pakistan.

He said that the Pakistani authorities should "make immediate arrangements to hold direct elections on the basis of universal adult franchise and representation on the basis of population. The object of these elections would be to bring into being a federal parliamentary structure which would provide the country with a representative legislature and a civilian government to which power should be transferred immediately.

The four parties to merge were: East Pakistani National Democratic Front, Awami League of Nawabzada Nasrul Haq, the newly-formed Justice Party of Air Marshal Asghar Khan, and Nizam-i-Islam Party.

Mr. Nurul Amin told newsmen that if elections in the country were delayed, the new Pakistan Democratic Party would agitate against non-fulfilment of President Yahya Khan's promise of early transfer of power to the people.

F. Economic Survey: The Government conceded on June 23 that Pakistan was unlikely to meet its target of food self-sufficiency by 1970, which the former regime of F-M Mohammed Ayub Khan had proclaimed was in sight.

An Economic Survey issued in Rawalpindi said that wheat-eating West Pakistan was "near self-sufficiency" and would not need to import wheat from East Pakistan where rice was the main diet.

It added: "It may take longer than many of us had thought to become self-sufficient in foodgrain production."

This year's East Pakistan rice crop was estimated at about 11 million tons, representing no increase over last year.

The Survey also conceded that the growth rate had fallen in the fiscal year under review, which ended on June 30. It stood at 5.2 per cent, against 7.5 per cent for the 1967-68 fiscal year.

The Survey blamed bad weather and floods that hit agriculture in East Pakistan, a shortage of foreign aid needed to buy raw materials for industry and political disturbances at the time of the collapse of President Ayub Khan's regime.

But, it said that the total loss due to unrest was not more than Rs. 100,000,000.

The growth rate of large-scale industry fell from 7.8 per cent in 1967-68 to 7.4 per cent.

It also conceded a slow-down of private sector investment and a rise in the cost of living in the year under review.

Between April, 1968 and March, 1969, the wholesale price index rose by 10.6 per cent. But per capita income had risen. There was an improved balance of trade.

G. Mr. Z. A. Bhutto On Situation: In a talk with newsmen in Karachi on June 14, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto asked Gen. Yahya Khan to recognize the "complexities of the present situation" and draw "correct conclusions from past blunders."

He said that Pakistan could not live for ever under Martial Law. In his view, an all-party agreement on basic constitutional principles to return to democracy was necessary.

Radio Pakistan quoted him as saying that intervention by armed forces was permissible when the country was "ablaze." But Martial Law could not be declared again and again.

He said it must be borne in mind that a country divided into two Wings and separated by more than 1,000 miles required political participation of both the Wings to cement the bonds of unity.

His party, he said, would be prepared "as a last resort, though reluctantly" to accept the 1956 Constitution. But questions such as parity between the two Wings and the future of the "One Unit" system in West Pakistan must be resolved before the elections.

He was of the view that questions like proportional representation and breaking up of the one-unit system should be decided in a referendum. All these things should be settled at a conference of political leaders. If the politicians could not hold such a conference, the Government itself should organize one.

H. National Awami Party's Appeal: The pro-Peking National Awami Party at its meeting in Panchbibi (East Wing) on June 6 called on President Yahya Khan to transfer power to the people at an early date through General Elections on the basis of a new Constitution.

The Party's Working Committee, headed by 80-year-old Maulana Bhashani, said the new Constitution should be framed and approved by the people. Any new Constitution should provide for one-man, one-vote and direct parliamentary elections.

I. Soviet Tanks Supplied: It was confirmed on June 5 that 60 more Soviet tanks had arrived, to bring the number of such tanks to around 100.

The arrival of the new contingent of tanks went a long way to meeting Pakistan's request for a total of 250 tanks and closely followed the Soviet Premier, Mr. A. Kosygin's visit to Rawalpindi.

According to political observers in New Delhi, one consequence of the new Soviet supply of tanks will be an even more wary approach by India to professed Russian gestures for bringing about peace between India and Pakistan. Moscow's new proposal of regional co-operation linking the Indian sub-continent with Afghanistan will also be viewed in a different light.

Indeed, the timing of the new injection of Soviet arms assistance to Pakistan is likely to have an unfortunate effect on Indo-Soviet relations. Present Soviet objectives in Pakistan are being assessed in New Delhi as an interest in maintaining Russian security and a desire to secure shore facilities in Pakistan for their submarine-bound sailors in Russia's new efforts to establish a credible presence in the Indian Ocean. India is believed to have expressed her inability to provide such facilities for the Soviet Navy.

Going by this assessment, promoting Indo-Pakistani or regional co-operation occupies a third place in the scheme of Russian priorities.

J. Relations With India: In one of the strongest anti-Indian statements since the emergence of the military administration of President Yahya Khan, a Government spokesman said in Islamabad on June 4 that India did not intend to eliminate the basic cause of tension between the two countries and that there could be no co-operation with India "unless the Kashmir issue is settled."

The spokesman re-iterated the Pakistani charge that India's attitude on the Kashmir issue had been hardening.

Pakistan had made this charge shortly before the recent talks between the Soviet Prime Minister, Mr. Alexei Kosygin, and Gen. Yahya Khan. When Pakistani correspondents questioned Mr. Kosygin on the subject, he had denied that there was any hardening in India's attitude.

Although the Soviet-Pakistan communique issued at the end of Mr. Kosygin's visit had made no mention of the Tashkent Declaration, an Indian External Affairs Ministry spokesman had welcomed Gen. Yahya Khan's statement that efforts were being exerted to solve outstanding disputes with India and re-affirmed India's keenness to settle all differences peacefully through bilateral talks.

The Pakistani spokesman, however, alleged that it was for the sake of propaganda that India said it was prepared to settle all the issues. He added that because of its military might, India did not think it necessary to hold talks with Pakistan.

Referring to the recent Indian re-iteration of the position that Kashmir was an integral part of India, the Pakistani spokesman said the basic issue between the two countries was the Kashmir question.

K. Four Committees To Probe Into Corruption: On June 20, the Government set up four Special Committees—two in each Wing—to inquire into "improper" acquisition of property and assets by Class I Government officials and those drawing equivalent salaries in statutory corporations and institutions.

This followed the decision of the Government, announced a few days earlier, to take steps to eradicate corruption.

According to an announcement in Islamabad, quoted by Radio Pakistan, each of the Committees would be headed by a retired High Court Judge and would consist of two other members, one of whom would be from the Defence Services.

One of the two Committees in either Province would deal with the declaration of assets of Class 1 officers drawing a salary of Rs. 1,500 or more but less than Rs. 2,300.

The other would examine the assets of Class 1 officers drawing less than Rs. 1,500.

M. Move To Nationalize Christian Schools—Other Educational Reforms: It was stated in Karachi on July 3 that the Government wanted to nationalize Christian missionary schools and abolish English as the country's official language.

Presenting proposals for the modernization of the nation's education system, the Government said that missionary schools were partly responsible for "the emergence of a secular class, the influence of which is totally out of proportion to its numbers."

The document containing the proposals blamed the existence, side by side, of classical Muslim schools and an outdated educational system inherited from British rulers of the Indo-Pakistan sub-continent, as well as mission schools, for the division in the national consciousness between Western-educated, English-speaking Pakistanis and others. Both systems neglected science and technology in favour of religious teaching and the humanities. Consequently there were not enough technically qualified Pakistanis to help the country's economic development, and there were no jobs for 200,000 young people with qualifications in the humanities.

To heal the division between Western-educated Pakistanis and the rest, the document said, the over-riding need was to abolish English as the country's official language.

It recommended that science and mathematics be taught in Muslim schools, and that religious doctrine be taught to children up to the age of 16 in secular schools.

The proposals, outlining the regime's education policy for the next 10 years, would be circulated for a month to elicit public opinion. They followed widespread student unrest which contributed to the downfall of President Ayub Khan.

PHILIPPINES

A. Candidates In Presidential Contest: The principal political organizations, the Nacionalista Party and the Liberal Party, have chosen their candidates for the Presidential elections scheduled for November.

President Ferdinand Marcos has been chosen unopposed by the Nacionalista convention in June as its candidate.

His Liberal Party opponent is Senator Sergio Osmena Jr. He had to contend with two other aspirants for party candidacy, Senator Genaro Magsaysay and the Manila Mayor, Mr. Antonio Villegas.

While the Nacionalista campaign highlights the achievements of the Marcos Administration, the Liberal Party platform takes the Government to task for its "mismanagement and corruption."

Commenting on the campaign of the rival parties, a correspondent wrote in the Far Eastern Economic Review: "There is little to choose between the two party platforms, although the Liberal Opposition is rather more appealing to the masses because it advocates either a welfare State or a limited socialist programme. However, the Nacionalista party is not without its socialist ideology, having already produced a Medicare Bill. Also it is proposing greater social justice and "socialization of capital and plans to introduce a Bill which seeks tto give labour a share of corporate profits in excess of 20 per cent."

The other points contained in the report were: "Both parties welcome foreign investment.

"Both Mr. Marcos and Mr. Osmena have taken generally pro-American stances and are advocating continuing friendly ties with USA.

"While party platforms may be identical, each party has always had minority groups which tend to side with the opposition."

B. Contributions To Asian Development Bank: The Asian Development Bank, which has its headquarters in Manila, on June 24 accepted a Japanese contribution of 72 million yen ($200,000) on a grant basis for its Technical Assistance Special Fund.

This was the third contribution made by Japan to the ADB Technical Assistance Special Fund. The previous contributions totalled $131,278.

Under the terms of the agreement, the contribution will be used for acquiring the services of consultants and specialists from Japan and for purchasing library materials.

The Bank acceptance of the Japanese contribution was conveyed by a letter from the ADB President, Mr. Takeshi Watanabe, to the Director for Japan on the Bank's Board of Directors, Mr. Masaru Fukuda.

A week earlier, the Bank accepted an offer by the Netherlands of four million guilders ($1.1 million).

The contribution was to be allocated to the Agricultural Special Fund, to be used mainly in South-East Asia for concessional lending.

Under the agreement, the Netherlands contribution will be untied as far as procurement from developing member-countries is concerned. As to the developed members of the Bank, the contribution may only be used for procurement in such countries as have made contributions to similar Special Funds on procurement conditions not less liberal than that of the Netherlands,

The assistance extended by the Netherlands represents the third capital contribution to the Agricultural Special Fund, the first being a $20 million contribution by Japan and the second being a $2 million contribution by Denmark.

The Bank also received from Canada a $25 million contribution (over 5 years) to its Multi-Purpose Special Fund and contributions to its Technical Assistance Special Fund from the United States, Britain, Japan, West Germany, Canada, Denmark and Finland.

Soviet Participation:

Japanese newspapers reported on June 12 that the Soviet Union was considering investments in the Asian Development Bank.

The Japanese Foreign Ministry said, however, it could not confirm the report published by the Mainichi Shimbun, a leading daily, and the Nihon Keizai Shimbun, a major financial journal.

The newspapers quoted Foreign Ministry sources as saying that the Russian desire had recently been expressed by the Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr. V. M. Vinogradov, when he met the Japanese Ambassador in Moscow, Mr. Toru Nakagawa.

The Bank was set up in 1966 with an authorized capital of $1,000 million to promote regional development in Asia and the Far East. No Communist country contributes to the Bank.

The Japanese newspapers did not mention how much the Soviet Union planned to put up for the Bank, but the Finance Ministry said the Soviet Union would be eligible to join the organization according to the Bank charter, although it requires majority support from member-nations.

C. Steps To Prevent Drain On Foreign Exchange: The Government banned with effect from June 19 a wide range of consumer goods imports in an attempt to stop the drain on foreign reserves.

The ban order was a follow-up to the imposition of penalty re-discount rate of 10 per cent, the highest in the post-War period, to squeeze commercial bank lending.

Among the banned items are preserved meat of all kinds, poultry, milk products, butter and eggs. More items will be added when the main guidelines are worked out.

The squeeze on commercial banks will be drastic, especially on many smaller ones. Commercial banks already charging 12 per cent for top-grade secured loans and a lift to 14 per cent can be compared with blue chip yields of between six and 10 per cent on the local stock exchange.

The reason for this clamp-down on borrowing has been the continuing low levels of foreign reserves, standing at $177 million.

Earlier in the month, banks voluntarily stopped opening letters of credit for all imports for several days as an emergency measure, pending agreement on a list of priority imports.

The Central Bank has already asked motor importers to cut back hard and textile importers to reduce orders. The latest bank rate move is seen as partly window-dressing —a group of American bankers is due in Manila soon to discuss the extension of big loans whose payment dates are fast approaching.

D. World Bank Assistance: A World Bank loan equivalent to $12.5 million for a rural credit project to increase agricultural production in the Philippines was announced in Washington on June 4.

The project was a continuation of an agricultural credit programme which was supported by a loan of $5 million made by the Bank in 1965.

The loan, guaranteed by the Filipino Government, will be for a term of 14 years, including a four-year grace period. It will carry interest at 6-1/2 per cent. The Fidelity Bank, Philadelphia, was participating in the loan to the extent of $50,000. The loan will be made to the Central Bank of the Philippines which will re-lend the proceeds of the loan, along with funds from other sources, to qualified rural banks. The rural banks, in turn, will advance loans for periods ranging from three to ten years to farmers for specified purposes.

Under the project, farmers will be offered medium and long-term loans for buying farm machinery and equipment, and for livestock and fishery development. As a result, it was expected that more rice, sugarcane, pork, poultry and fish, valued at some $29 million, will be produced annually. The net foreign exchange saved or earned could be as much as $13 million per year. Approximately 7,000 beneficiaries engaged in farming, fishing and related activities were expected to participate in the project.

SAUDI ARABIA

A. Report Of Plot Against King Feisal: It was stated on June 17 that a wave of arrests had followed unconfirmed reports that King Feisal had smashed a plot to assassinate him and overthrow his Government.

Saudi officials privately admitted that about 400 persons, suspected of having distributed Communist leaflets, were rounded up.

But conflicting reports, circulated in Jeddah, said that there had been an unsuccessful plot against the life of King Feisal in a bid to establish a Republic. The reports spoke of police and army involvement in the plot.

Another account implicated the sons of former King Saud, who died in exile earlier this year after being deposed by his brother in 1964.

The National Liberation Front of Saudi Arabia, a Left-wing group with little following in the oil-rich kingdom, meanwhile has named 48 persons allegedly thrown into jail by King Feisal. The Front has appealed for their release.

SINGAPORE

A. ECAFE Session: The 25th session of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE) was held in Singapore from April 16 to 28.

Delegates from 30 member-countries, 14 observer-countries and 29 United Nations bodies and specialized agencies, inter-governmental and non-governmental organizations attended the session.

During the session, the four-nation Mekong Committee (Cambodia, Laos, Thailand and South Viet-Nam) held closed-door meetings.

Also, the first Asian Highway Motor Rally from Vientiane to Singapore, an ECAFE project, ended on April 20 with the awarding of trophies by ECAFE's Executive Secretary, U Nyun.

The session was inaugurated by the Singapore President, Inche Yusuf Bin Ishak. It later elected the Foreign Minister of Singapore, Mr. S. Rajaratnam, as Chairman.

Delegates in the open session reviewed the economic problems of the region in general and of their respective countries in particular.

Annual Report:

A highlight of the session was the presentation of the annual report which underscored the apprehension of the Asian countries at the declining amount of aid and the hardening of aid terms.

The report pointed out that two-thirds of the world's population live in the region embraced by ECAFE and their average per capita national income is considerably lower than the other developing regions—Latin America, Africa and West Asia.

Asian nations expect that the amount of aid they should receive would attempt to counter-balance this—but in reality the amount of assistance received per head by the people of Asia is as low as half, compared with the other developing areas.

Japan's delegation produced figures for the three-year period from 1964 to 1966 which showed that the average annual aid per capita is: Africa $6.10, Latin America—$4.40 and South-East Asia—$3.200. Almost half this amount to South-East Asia was channelled to South Viet-Nam. If this country was excluded, the figure for South-East Asia would drop to $1.8 per head.

When various countries added their comments to the pessimistic annual report on the economic situation in Asia, it was obvious that the past trends were not encouraging and the future was even less so.

The report said that commitments of aid had fallen drastically in 1968 and this decline was dominated by the large reduction in commitments by the United States which, as the most important single donor, exercised a big influence on the policies of other donors.

The report said that US aid in 1968 was 22 per cent lower than in 1967, while one-third of the total was earmarked for Viet-Nam. The drastic reduction in US foreign aid appropriations for 1969 quashed any hope for an increase in aid and unless drastic changes in appropriations were made in the near future the latest cuts would affect disbursements in 1970.

The report also pointed out that some US aid terms had hardened.

The only bright spots in ECAFE's otherwise ominous discussion were reports that flow of foreign assistance to Asia from smaller donors had increased "on terms that are significantly more lenient than those of the larger donors".

The report pointed out that West Germany had increased its aid by an estimated 25 per cent in 1968, while Britain's aid continued to hold at the same level of about £205 million. While devaluation appeared to have reduced the real value of British aid by between five to 10 per cent, there was a large amount of other aid, particularly Kennedy Round food aid, compensatory aid to Malaysia and Singapore and contributions to the International Development Association which were not included in the total of aid from Britain.

The report also mentioned that British aid terms continued to be of the softest possible.

Another encouraging point was the Dutch statement that it planned to increase its technical aid to ECAFE this year and to double the amount in 1970 and 1971.

Decisions:

The session ended on April 28 after adoption of a report on its decisions concerning strategy for the second Development Decade and other matters.

The Commission emphasized its crucial role in promoting regional, sub-regional and multi-national economic and social co-operation within a comprehensive frame-work.

It affirmed the need for adequate resources and authority to formulate and execute appropriate plans and projects.

It recommended specific action by developing countries of the region in regard to production, economic development machinery, and co-operation, and proposed action by developed countries on providing aid and assisting in the growth of export incomes of developing countries.

On the question of mineral resources of the sea, the Commission took note of projects undertaken in the Western Pacific area by ECAFE's Committee for Co-ordination of Joint Prospecting for Mineral Resources in Asian Off-shore Areas, and welcomed the proposal of the Council of Ministers for Asian Economic Co-operation to establish a similar co-ordinating body for countries bordering on the Indian Ocean.

Expansion of the activities of ECAFE's Social Development Division and preparation of integrated policy guidelines and work proposals in the social field were recommended in another resolution. The Commission proposed the strengthening of "integrative context of national development plans.

It endorsed the formation of the Asian Coconut Community, and requested member-countries and the UN family of organizations to give it their fullest support and assistance.

In other resolutions, the Commission marked the 50th anniversary of the International Labour Organization (ILO), and pledged its continued co-operation, particularly in development of the Asian manpower plan; favoured outposting to the Commission of UN Headquarters public administration staff, and continued assistance in improving the administrative capability of the countries of the region; called for participation in long-term oceanographic research and exploration as planned for the International Decade of Ocean Exploration in the 1970s; proposed the early establishment of an Asian Handicraft Centre in Singapore, and sought the assistance and co-operation of all concerned to ensure its effective functioning. The Centre would display and sell handicrafts produced in the various countries of the region and would provide a permanent exhibition where traditional handicrafts could be demonstrated by craftsmen.

Subject to endorsement by the Conference of Asian Statisticians to meet in June, the Commission authorized a study by experts of financial and organizational factors involved in establishing a regional computing centre, and preparation of a plan of action for submission to the next session of the Commission.

The Commission recognized the urgency of setting up such a centre to ensure adequate processing of vital data on population, housing, agriculture, industry and other matters.

Session Ends:

The delegates accepted the invitation extended by Afghanistan to hold the next session in Kabul at a date to be fixed later.

In his final summing up, the Executive Secretary, U Nyun, said the conference had been one of the most inspiring and stimulating ever held.

He said the conference's main achievement had been the adoption of a resolution for development of Asia in the next decade.

He made an earnest appeal to developed countries to extend a helping hand to the poorer nations in their bid for economic prosperity.

He added: "We should work out our own salvation with diligence and determination."

The conference chairman, Mr. S. Rajaratnam, said that progress in the last decade in Asian countries had not been as successful as hoped. Asia should learn from its past mistakes to ensure that the 1970s be a decade of development.

He added that the member-countries should abandon their narrow concept of nationalism. "Let us move away from the philosophy of nationalism towards the philosophy of development—the building of factories instead of palaces."

SOUTH YEMEN

A. President Q. M. Al-Sha'abi Resigns: President Qahtan Mohammed Al-Sha'abi resigned on June 22 after five days of a struggle for power within the ruling National Liberation Front.

Accordingly, the powers of the President have been vested in a five-man Presidential Council, including the ousted Interior Minister.

President Al-Sha'abi had held the post since the NLF secured the territory's independence from Britain in November, 1967.

Informed sources said that the struggle was touched off when the Interior Minister. Mr. Mohammed Ali Haithem, was dismissed by President Al-Sha'abi on June 18. Journalists in Aden were not allowed to report the dismissal, although it was broadcast by Aden Radio.

Aden Radio said that Mr. Haithem had been dismissed by President Al-Sha'abi at the request of Mr. Feisal Abdel Latif, his brother-in-law who became Prime Minister on April 6.

The dismissal of Mr. Haithem, who enjoyed considerable support from the Army and Security forces, had increased tension in South Yemen.

The NLF, since South Yemen's Independence, has been divided between extremists and those advocating moderation as a way to remedy the country's grave economic difficulties. Mr. Al-Sha'abi was believed to be inclined towards the moderates, including the armed forces.

Aden Radio did not make it clear whether President Al-Sha'abi's resignation also meant the resignation of Mr. Latif's Cabinet. Mr. Latif was believed to be left of centre.

On June 23, Mr. Mohammed Ali Haithem (29) was named Prime Minister of the People's Republic, and Mr. M. Ali Rabyee (35) as Chairman of the new five-man Presidential Council.

The decisions were taken by the Supreme General Command of the ruling National Liberation Front (NLF).

Background:

The ouster of President Qahtan Al-Sha'abi and his replacement by a five-man Presidential Council, of which at least three members are pro-Peking extremists, forebodes another cycle of internal upheavals in the country which has not known either political or financial stability since its Independence 18 months ago.

The move to oust him was led by the Interior Minister, Mr. Mohammed Ali Haithem, whom President Sha'abi had dismissed five days earlier. Mr. Haithem was supported by the Defence Minister, Mr. Mohammed Saleh Aulaq, and Mr. Abdel Fattah Ismail, former Minister for Culture, among others.

Mr. Sha'abi and the Foreign Minister, Mr. Seif Al-Dhalei, were considered moderates in the National Liberation Front Government. They had tried to hold an uneasy balance between pro-Peking extremists and Centrists within the Front.

In March, 1968, when extremists got the upper hand in the Front and pushed through a "revolutionary" manifesto, the moderate sections of the Army revolted and forced Mr. Sha'abi to dismiss the extremists from the Government.

One of the casualties was Mr. Abdul Fattah Ismail who had to flee to Bulgaria for "medical treatment," Another was Mr. Aly Salem Al Beidy who was replaced as Defence Minister by Mr. Aulaq.

The Leftists counter-attacked two months later, but were put down by the Army. Two leaders of that rebellion—Mr. Salem Rabih and Mr. Aly Antar—are members of the new Presidential Council which also includes Mr. Haithem and Mr. Abdel Fattah Ismail.

THAILAND

A. Baht Revalued: The baht was revalued on June 23 in terms of the American dollar.

The buying rate for the dollar went up from 20.77 baht to 20.875 baht. The selling rate jumped from 20.82 baht to 20.90 baht to the dollar.

The Governor of the Bank of Thailand, Dr. Puey Ungphakorn, said that the increase in the exchange rate was necessary because of the enhancement of discount rates by major banks in industrialized nations.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. American Plans To Pull Out Troops—Midway Island Conference: President R. Nixon of the United States and President Nguyen Van Thieu met on Midway Island on June 8 at the invitation of the American President.

The principal purpose was to review the political, economic and military developments in Viet-Nam and the Paris talks. Their discussions were chiefly private, though they drew on the assistance of senior members of their respective Governments.

After their initial meeting, President Nixon announced that he had ordered the return of 25,000 American soldiers in Viet-Nam. The operation to return the equivalent of a combat division would begin within 30 days and would be completed by the end of August. There are now 540,000 American troops in Viet-Nam.

Both President Thieu and Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, the American commander in Viet-Nam, recommended to him that the withdrawal of 25,000 men could be safely ordered at this time and that South Viet-Namese forces could take their place.

Mr. Thieu said that the rapid progress in training and equipping South Viet-Namese troops made it possible for him to recommend the beginning of the withdrawal of US forces from the country.

Mr. Nixon said that there would be regular reconsiderations of the status of American forces in Viet-Nam to decide on further withdrawals. "No action will be taken which threatens the safety of our troops and the troops of our allies, and no action will be taken which endangers the attainment of our objective of self-determination for the people of South Viet-Nam."

He re-iterated that in re-deploying American troops he would be guided by the three principles he had enunciated in the past. They were: progress in training "South Viet-Namese forces, progress of the Paris talks and the level of enemy activity."

A communique issued at the end of the talks said that President Thieu had asked for additional assistance for his plans for further strengthening the South Viet-Namese armed forces.

President Nixon said he would give the request sympathetic consideration.

On the 10-point plan of the National Liberation Front (see page 9001), they said that "there were certain points which appear not too far" from the position taken by Saigon and Washington.

The communique said in part:

"The two Presidents examined in detail the military situation in Viet-Nam and received a briefing from Viet-Namese and American military commanders. They agreed that the failure of the other side to achieve its objective should convince it of its inability to gain a victory by military means. They expressed the hope that the other side will realize the futility and dangers of its efforts and that it will accept a solution based on the principle of self-determination for the people of South Viet-Nam.

"They agreed that application of the principle of self-determination requires that the people be able to choose without interference or terror. They rejected communist attempts to pre-determine the outcome of future clections before they are held.

"The two Presidents confirmed their conviction that the form of government under which the people of South Viet-Nam will live should be decided by the people themselves. They re-iterated their common resolve to reject any attempt to impose upon the Republic of Viet-Nam any system or programme or any particular form of government, such as coalition, without regard to the will of the people of South Viet-Nam.

"They declared, for their part, that they will respect any decision by the people of South Viet-Nam that is arrived at through free elections.

"The two Presidents agreed that it would be appropriate to offer guarantees and safeguards for free elections. Provisions for international supervision could be written into the political settlement.

"The two Presidents reviewed with particular attention the steps being taken to modernize and improve the Viet-Namese armed forces. President Thieu referred to the principal of replacement of American by Viet-Namese troops which he had first enunciated in his address to the nation of Dececber 31, 1968, and he expressed pleasure in informing President Nixon that the armed forces of the Republic of Viet-Nam were now reaching the point where they can assume an increasingly large share of the burden of combat.

"President Nixon welcomed this development. He and President Thieu thereafter made an announcement regarding the replacement programme. Both Presidents agreed that the replacement programme should be carried out in consonance with the security situation prevailing at the moment.

"President Thieu explained his plans for further strengthening the local forces and asked for additional assistance for that programme. President Nixon said he would give this 'request sympathetic consideration.

"The two Presidents then discussed the negotiations taking place in Paris. They reviewed carefully the positions each had recently enunciated—President Thieu on March 25, when he made the offer to talk directly with the National Liberation Front, the six points he presented on April 7, and President Nixon's May 14 speech.

"The two Presidents are convinced that the proposals they have put forward represent a reasonable basis for peace. They took note of the 10-point proposal tabled by the other side in Paris on May 8, and observed that, despite the fact that it contained certain unacceptable provisions, there were certain points which appear not too far from the positions taken by the Governments of the Republic of Viet-Nam and the United States.

"The two Presidents expressed their intention to seek a just settlement to the conflict in the spirit of patience and goodwill. President Thieu re-iterated his Government's willingness to talk directly to the NLF about moves relating to a peaceful settlement.

"The two Presidents reviewed and re-affirmed the positions taken in concert by the allies at the recent seven-nation conference of Ministers in Bangkok. They re-iterated, in particular, the allied position concerning mutual withdrawals of non-South Viet-Namese forces, agreeing that withdrawals could commence simultaneously and proceed expeditiously on the basis of a mutually acceptable time-table; that all externally introduced forces would have to be withdrawn not only from South Viet-Nam but also from Laos and Cambodia; and that the further introduction of forces into these countries must be prohibited.

"They agreed that the essential element of any arrangement on withdrawal of non-South Viet-Namese forces is that there be adequate assurances and guarantees of compliance with the terms of the arrangement.

"President Thieu informed President Nixon that his Government was devoted to the principle of social and political justice for the people of South Viet-Nam. The policy of national reconciliation had been adopted with this in mind. His offer to negotiate directly with the National Liberation Front—without conditions—had been inspired by this principle.

"If the other side is genuinely interested in finding peace, it should be possible to create an atmosphere in South Viet-Nam in which all of the people of South Viet-Nam can participate in the life of a free, viable, and prosperous State.

"The two Presidents discussed the progress that has been made in economic and political development in Viet-Nam despite the present conflict, including the installation of the Supreme Court and the inspectorate provided for by the Constitution, the widespread holding of village and hamlet elections, and the extension of security in rural areas.

"President Thieu outlined his Government's plans for additional village and hamlet elections and he laid particular stress on his pursuit of a vigorous land re-distribution programme that would give the land to those who work it. President Nixon expressed gratification at this progress, expressed special interest in the new concepts of land distribution developed by President Thieu and offered American cooperation to help achieve it.

"Finally, the two Presidents reviewed the plans now being formulated by the Republic of Viet-Nam for the post-war development of the country. They expressed gratification that, despite the continuation of the conflict, plans were going forward. Given the substantial natural and human resources available, the prospects are excellent for conversion to a peace-time economy, job opportunities, increased domestic production in agriculture and industry, as well as exports.

"President Thieu asked President Nixon for his country's assistance to this end. Economic self-sufficiency could be achieved in a decade of peace. The two Presidents looked forward, after the termination of hostilities, to an era of peace and the economic and national development of South-East Asia."

Hanoi's Condemnation:

North Viet-Nam on June 9 described as a "crude farce" the announcement of President Nixon and President Nguyen Van Thieu on withdrawal of 25,000 troops from South Viet-Nam by the end of August.

A spokesman for the Hanoi delegation to the Paris peace talks asserted that the Midway meeting between the allied leaders showed more clearly than ever "the obstinacy with which the Nixon Administration clings to its policy of aggression and neo-colonialism."

The spokesman said that President Nixon was merely walking in the steps of his predecessor Lyndon B. Johnson.

In Moscow, Tass described the US pull-out plan as a step to stifle domestic dissent and camouflage US "unwillingness to make a serious political decision" to end the war. It said the number of troops to be withdrawn was "only a drop in the sea."

It complained that the withdrawal did not involve a de-escalation of US military activity in Viet-Nam, nor the start of a complete withdrawal of American troops.

President Thieu's Opposition To Coalition Proposal:

President Nguyen Van Thieu, on his return from the Midway talks, on June 9 re-affirmed that South Viet-Nam would never accept a coalition government.

With a firm pledge of no coalition government, no peace Cabinet and no transition government, he stated: "I will not sacrifice the lives of 17 million Viet-Namese people, because as President I am pledged to protect the Constitution."

Prior to appearing before cameras and newsmen at the Presidential Palace, he had talks with the Prime Minister, Mr. Tran Van Huong, the Presidents of the two Chambers of Parliament and the President of the Supreme Court.

In answer to questions, President Thieu hinted that he would agree to modifying the Constitution to permit the national elections called for in Mr. Nixon's eight-point peace plan of May 15.

"Everything is negotiable", he said, "but Saigon could not be expected to change its Constitution unless the other side shows goodwill at the Paris conference". "We must wait", elections must be "free, democratic and free from foreign interference."

The present Constitution provides for no further national elections before 1971.

He re-iterated his offer to hold "direct" and private talks with the National Liberation Front and said he and Mr. Nixon had agreed on "two basic principles: nothing should be done which would harm security of American and allied forces, nor which would infringe on the self-determination of the South Viet-Namese people."

Troop Withdrawals From Laos And Cambodia — Bangkok Conference's Suggestion:

Foreign Ministers of the seven nations fighting in Viet-Nam on May 22 suggested in Bangkok that the proposal to withdraw foreign troops from South Viet-Nam should be extended to include Laos and Cambodia as well.

The Ministers were from Australia, New Zealand, USA, South Korea, the Philippines, Thailand and South Viet-Nam.

In a communique issued at the end of a one-day conference, they said they viewed with grave concern the continuing presence of a large number of North Viet-Namese troops in Laos and their use of Laotian territory in violation of the 1962 Geneva Agreement.

They agreed to continue their active support to South Viet-Nam until such time as a peaceful solution was reached, and agreed that any troop withdrawals should be carried out only on a reciprocal basis.

In general, the Ministers were agreed on the major issues at stake and moves necessary to improve the situation.

The communique said the Ministers reviewed the current Paris peace talks and agreed that troop withdrawals could commence simultaneously and proceed expeditiously on the basis of a mutually acceptable time-table.

They also agreed that all foreign forces would have to be withdrawn not only from South Viet-Nam, but also from Laos and introduction of new forces must be prohibited.

B. NLF Forms "Provisional" Government: The National Liberation Front (NLF) announced in a statement in Paris on June 10 that a "Provisional" Revolutionary Government had been set up in a "liberated area" in South Viet-Nam.

The announcement said that the Government had been formed at a congress held between June 6 and 8.

A spokesman of the Front said that the congress was attended by representatives of NLF, the Alliance of National Democratic and Peace Forces and other "patriotic organizations." The Alliance, which aims its appeal at the middle classes, including professional men and intellectuals, had been repeatedly praised by Hanoi.

Action Programme:

The head of the permanent mission of the NLF in Hanoi, Mr. Nguyen Van Tien, held a news conference on June 11 at which he read out a "Declaration of the Programme of Action of the Provisional Revolutionary Government."

He said the Revolutionary Government's Action Programme had been adopted by a Congress of People's Representatives. The Programme set the aim "to rally the armed forces and the entire people of South Viet-Nam; to step up military and political struggle; to defeat American imperialists; to demand of the United States the holding of serious talks with the 'Provisional' Revolutionary Government of the Republic of South Viet-Nam at the Paris peace talks on the basis of the ten-point programme of the National Liberation Front; to compel the United States to withdraw unconditionally its troops from South Viet-Nam and to put an end to the war."

The Programme stressed the need "to liquidate the Saigon regime; to create a genuinely democratic and free republican system; to hold General Elections on the basis of the principles of equality, genuine freedom and democracy, and without foreign interference." The Programme envisaged the creation of a provisional coalition government representing the interests of all segments of the population.

The Programme sought restoration of normal relations between South and North Viet-Nam; promotion of a foreign policy of peace and neutrality; establishment of diplomatic, economic and cultural relations with all countries, irrespective of their political and social system, including the United States, on the basis of the five principles of peaceful co-existence.

South Viet-Nam, it said, would refrain from joining military blocs and would not allow any State to have military bases, troops and military personnel on its territory.

President Ho Chi-minh of North Viet-Nam called the setting up of the Revolutionary Provisional Government an "important event of historic significance.

Hanoi Radio said that the Revolutionary Provisional Government had a National Flag, National Anthem and motto. The Liberation Front's banner—a star on a red-and-blue background—had been adopted by the Provisional Government.

The Radio announced that the Front's Chairman, Mr. Huynh Tan Phat, had been named Prime Minister, Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, delegate to the Paris peace talks, as Foreign Minister and Mr. Luu Huu Phuoc as Information Minister.

Ten junior Ministers had been named in a Provisional Government of 24.

In Paris, the NLF delegation at the Viet-Nam peace conference became "the delegation of the Provisional Revolutionary Government," and proclaimed that it intended to negotiate with the United States as such.

The Provisional Government was "the supreme executive organ of South Viet-Nam", Mr. Tran Buu Kiem, outgoing leader of the NLF delegation, told a news conference. The Provisional Government desired diplomatic relations with all countries, including USA.

American Reaction:

The US State Department on June 11 dismissed the newly-formed "Revolutionary Government" as "simply a case of old wine in a new bottle."

It said in a statement that creation of the so-called "Revolutionary Government" by the National Liberation Front, political arm of the Viet-Cong, would have no effect on the US negotiating position in the Paris peace talks.

The US State Department spokesman, Mr. Robert J. McCloskey said at a news conference that the United States and South Viet-Nam negotiated there only with "the other side"—meaning North Viet-Nam and NLF, or NLF's "Revolutionary Government, if that was what it chose to call itself. Negotiating with them in no way implies recognition."

In a prepared statement which he read out, he said the US Government had taken note of the creation of the so-called "Provisional Revolutionary Government."

He said: "The roster of members would indicate that this is simply a case of old wine in a new bottle.

"Of the names listed, all have been associated either with NLF or the so-called Alliance for National Democratic Peace Forces, which was established by the Communists after the Tet offensive last year, and the new organization does not amount to any broadening of the old NLF Alliance base.

"We doubt that the new organization will achieve any greater success than its predecessors and the important fact is not, after all, what the other side chooses to call itself."

Moscow Summit's Support To NLF:

On June 10 in Moscow, the Communist Summit Conference in the first official document it adopted proclaimed solidarity with the Viet-Namese people. It expressed support for the National Liberation Front's 10-point peace programme "as a contribution to the work of restoring peace in Viet-Nam".

It proposed that July 20, the 15th anniversary of the Geneva Agreements, be marked as a "day of solidarity with Viet-Nam and the halt of American aggression."

The document called on the United States to end its "obstructionist" positions at the Paris peace talks. USA must also immediately stop "its aggressive actions in Viet-Nam and completely and unconditionally withdraw from South Viet-Nam its own troops and those of its satellites."

Viet-Nam must be recognized by USA as having the right to settle its problems without outside interference, USA "must end all actions directed against the sovereignty and security of North Viet-Nam and must cease intervention and aggression in Laos and violation of Cambodia's territorial integrity." USA must also scrupulously observe the 1954 and 1962 Geneva Agreements.

It said that Thailand, New Zealand, Australia, South Korea, West Germany and Japan must end their "overt or disguised involvement in the US aggression in Viet-Nam."

On June 12, at the peace talks in Paris, Madame Nguyen Thi Binh, speaking as the Foreign Minister of the NLF Government, declared "readiness to continue negotiations with other parties of the conference."

Madame Binh formally declared that NLF had transferred all its State functions, including control of the delegation at the peace talks, to the Provisional Government.

She asserted that the United States was trying to maintain its "neo-colonialist domination" in South Viet-Nam and said this was again demonstrated by the Midway Island meeting between President Nixon and President Nguyen Van Thieu. She described the Midway meeting as "a political farce staged by the United States."

The South Viet-Namese Ambassador, Mr. Pham Dang Lam, circulated a Press statement formally declaring his Government's non-recognition of the Provisional Revolutionary Government.

Mr. Lam recalled that South Viet-Nam had agreed to take part in the conference on the condition that it was between two sides and that it had never recognized NLF as anything but "an instrument created by North Viet-Nam over South Viet-Nam by force.

"Any modification of the designation, structure or composition of this organization is an internal affair of the North Viet-Namese Communist camp and can in no way alter the nature of the meeting."

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. UNDP Assistance: In a review of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), made public on June 1, the Administrator, Mr. Paul Hoffman, said that $242.7 million had been spent during the past decade for large-scale pre-investment projects and smaller technical assistance activities among 33 countries in Asia.

The rest of the allocations were as follows: Africa—$288 million among 44 countries and territories; The Americas—$206.2 million among 37 countries; Middle East—$55.1 million among nine countries; Europe —$48.6 million among 14 countries; and Inter-regional $30 million.

In addition to the money provided by the UNDP, countries receiving assistance from the Programme contributed $1,500 million in cash and kind for projects during the same period.

India was the largest recipient under the Programme. From 1959 to date, 50 major pre-investment projects had been approved for India with a total Special Fund allocation of $50 million (foreign exchange) and the counterpart contribution from the Government of India in rupees was equivalent to $123 million.

India was also one of the most generous contributors to the UN Development Programme. Over the decade, India had contributed the equivalent of $18 million to the Special Fund Programme.

By sectors, the largest allocation of funds went to agricultural activities in all regions, except Europe, where equal amounts were devoted to agricultural and industrial projects.

The expenditures during the past decade were divided among the various sectors as follows: Agriculture $253.8 million; industry $174.1 million; education and science $129.8 million; public utilities $108.2 million; health $72.0 million; multi-sector $53.0 million; public administration and other services $51.8 million; social welfare $17.1 million; housing, building and physical planning $13.1 million.

Mr. Hoffman stated in the report that the period had been marked by accelerating growth in assistance to "virtually every sector of the developing countries."

Steady increases in voluntary contributions, which rose from $55.2 million for the year 1959 to $103.5 million for 1968, made this expansion possible. By 1968 the number of donor countries had reached 119, compared with 82 in 1959.

"The noteworthy aspects of the pattern of voluntary contributions were an unbroken series of increases in their total value from year to year throughout the decade," the report said. Over the 10-year period, contributions totalled $1,268 million, covering 90 per cent of the $ 1,407 million earmarked for projects.

These resources supported large scale pre-investment projects and technical assistance undertakings in such major fields as resource surveys and feasibility studies, education and technical training, applied research, and development planning.

According to the report, 69 of the pre-investment projects—which cost the UNDP $61 million—had attracted, either directly or indirectly, follow-up investment of some $2,800 million (of which $800 million came forward during 1968). Of the total, $2,500 million was to finance development schemes recommended by 57 UNDP-assisted surveys and feasibility studies. The remainder was generated by 12 training and research projects.

More than 73 per cent ($2,050 million) of this follow-up was in the public utilities sector, some $1,700 million being for the construction of power facilities in Argentina, Brazil, India, Laos, Nigeria, Sudan and Thailand. Other follow-up investment was recorded in such sectors as transportation ($271 million); tele-communications ($62 million); agricultural development scheme ($577 million); and industrial plants ($201 million).

B. Irish General Elections: Ireland's ruling Fianna Fail party emerged with another absolute majority in the General Elections on June 18.

The Fianna Fail (soldiers of destiny) had ruled for the past 12 years. It had a majority in Parliament for 32 of the past 37 years.

The Election upset all predictions. Mr. Jack Lynch, the Prime Minister, scored a runaway victory in the Cork constituency, doubling his vote. All his Ministers were reelected.

From the 144 seats the as-you-were Election showed the ruling party with 73, Fine Gael 48, Labour 17, and Independent one.

In the last Parliament, Fianna Fail had 74 seats. Fine Gael (the Irish Party), had 46 and Labour 18.

Voting indicated that Ireland's political parties were still painfully re-grouping after historical divisions of past generations. Labour had emphasized modern issues like the European Common Market and had sought to soft-pedal bitter memories of "the troubles" in 1916.

C. France's New President: Mr. Georges Pompidou, Gen de Gaulle's Premier for six years until July, 1968, was elected on June 15 as the 19th President of France.

Mr. Pompidou received 58 per cent of votes cast in the run-off round of the Presidential election.

He assumed office on June 19. His term will run for seven years.

Mr. Alain Poher, the Interim President of the Republic since Gen. de Gaulle resigned on April 28, received an estimated 42 per cent.

The Communist Party, hoping to assert its control over France's divided Left, had called for voters to stay home, saying that both middle-of-the-road candidates were reactionary. The call apparently worked on quite a few voters.

D. Future Of Monetary System —BIS Report: Gloomy predictions for the balance of the world's monetary system came from the Bank for International Settlements (BIS) in its annual report released on June 9.

The BIS, sometimes called the central banker's central bank, gave its view of the future in a 189-page report, which covered the 12 months up to March 31.

The report said that the international monetary system apparently would continue to operate "under somewhat uncertain and unstable conditions." What remained to be seen was whether bad money would drive out the good, and what the bad money would prove to be—gold, dollars or the new Special Drawings Rights—the "paper gold" which may be issued this year for the first time.

The report named four countries —the United States, Britain, West Germany and France—as the "key sources of imbalance" in the world monetary situation.

Though the world's reserves rose by $2 billion in the period 1967-68, this growth had depended on monetary disturbances. These assets also created liabilities, which creditor countries would not ignore.

The report noted that in 1968, world exports for the first time exceeded $200 billion—more than twice the figure of 10 years before. The increase for the year was an unusually high 11 per cent, due largely to expansion in the United States and West Germany.

Another important feature of the year was the expansion to $25 billion in the total borrowing of Euro-dollars—American dollars held outside the United States. (The BIS is the recognized source for basic figures on the Euro-dollar, a new major force in world finance.)

It sounded a pessimistic note on the United States foreign economic problem which, it said, would not be solved just by stopping inflation since it had a persistent deficit in its international accounts before the inflation started.

CAMBODIA

A. Relations With USA: It was officially announced in Pnom Penh on June 2 that Cambodia had reached agreement with USA to resume diplomatic relations at Charge d'Affaires level.

The Secretary of State Mr. William Rogers, the same day (June 2) described the agreement as a "positive step ... towards peace in South-East Asia."

Twenty-four hours after the announcement by Mr. William Rogers, the US military command in Viet-Nam admitted for the first time that it had bombed and shelled communist troops in Cambodia during its action to defend the beleaguered Special Forces camp at Ben Het recently.

Before Cambodia was recognized again, the American command did not confirm any of the reports that communist positions over the Cambodian frontier were being hit. On June 3, the senior American adviser at Ben Het, Col. George Miller, referred to such action. The command itself said that a few enemy guns had fired at Ben Het from over the frontier. "Allied forces operating in the area immediately returned the fire with artillery and tactical air strikes."

Cambodia had severed relations with the United States in 1965 because of US air raids on Cambodian border villages where the Viet-Cong were suspected to have found sanctuary.

Reported Viet-Cong Pledge To Withdraw Troops:

Western Press reports quoting Pnom Penh Radio on June 22 said that the Viet-Cong had undertaken to withdraw whatever troops it had in Cambodian territory.

It quoted at length from remarks it said the Head of State, Prince Norodom Sihanouk had made in a speech in Svayrieng Province bordering South Viet-Nam.

[Svayrieng Province borders South Viet-Nam across from Tay Ninh Province, long a primary infiltration area for Viet-Cong and North Viet-Namese troops.]

"The other day," the Prince was quoted as saying, "I asked them (the Viet-Cong) to sign a paper saying that while fighting the Americans they had scattered into certain areas of Khmer (Cambodian) territory...

"I told them, you must sign the promise that once the war on the other side (Viet-Nam) is over, all of you must withdraw.

"Now the Viet-Cong have signed, pledging strict respect for Khmer territory...and promising once peace has been restored over there that they will no longer dare to stay on Khmer territory but will leave it immediately. That is what their Ambassador has put down in writing."

He was presumably referring to Mr. Nguyen Van Hieu, ambassador to Pnom Penh of the new Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Viet-Nam. He recognized the organization a week before.

CHINA

A. Administrative Reform: According to a Peking despatch circulated by Agence France-Presse on July 9, a significant administrative reform appears to be going on throughout China to assert party control over the structures which had emerged from the Cultural Revolution.

Since the party's return to the front of the political stage with the Ninth Party Congress in April, party committees have begun emerging inside the revolutionary committees—the administrative legacy of the Cultural Revolution—at provincial and municipal level.

The trend is towards at least partial relegation of "representatives of mass organizations"—one of the three components of revolutionary committees, along with "revolutionary party cadres" and the military—to the role of liaison agents between the party and the bulk of the people.

The goal would be to assure more respect for instructions issued in Peking. The military would presumably remain predominant, but it is noted that the soldiers who invariably lead revolutionary committees are also party members.

Tripartite revolutionary committees were set up throughout the country at the various administrative levels in 1967 and 1968, replacing former administrations. They were first commonly described as "provisional", but this term has disappeared from the official Press.

Instances have been known of difficulties between the central authority and Revolutionary Committees. A vigorous Press campaign has recently insisted on the absolute primacy of the party, in particular over the "representatives of the masses"—of workers, "poor and lower middle peasants" and Red Guards, among others—which played the leading role in setting up the Revolutionary Committees.

"Revolutionary mass organizations must all accept the leadership of the party," the three principal official newspapers said in a joint editorial on July 1, the 48th anniversary of the party's foundation. The article attacked "self-styled heroes" who, it said, were "infatuated with sectarianism".

On June, 27, the People's Daily reported the organization in Shensi Province of training stages in the thought of Mr. Mao Tse-tung for "revolutionary workers" and Red Guards.

"During the great Cultural Revolution most of these people earned the praise of the masses", the newspaper said, "and most became members of Revolutionary Committees at the various levels. But some had the misfortune to succumb to pride," and the training stage was designed to help them to correct the mistaken view that they were "the only Leftists" and "the only revolutionaries".

B. Border Talks With USSR To Continue: The Soviet news agency Tass reported on July 13 that in Khabarovsk the Chinese sides had flatly refused on the previous day (June 12) to continue the negotiations on river navigation along the Far Eastern frontier and had made "malicious attacks" on the Soviet side.

However, the same afternoon, Tass reported that the Chinese delegation to the talks had told the Soviet side that "contrary to statements of July 12, it was decided to remain in Khabarovsk and agreed to the continuation of the Commission's work."

[The Russians and Chinese had begun discussions, on June 18, officially as members of the mixed Soviet-Chinese Commission on shipping on the border rivers of the Amur basin. That Commission was set up in 1951 following a Treaty of that year regulating traffic on the Amur, Ussuri, Argun and Sangacha Rivers and Lake Hanka, which comprise the Far East frontier. In recent years the Commission reflected the growing strain in Soviet-Chinese relations. According to Moscow, in 1967 the Commission's work was disrupted by Peking's attempt to turn the Navigation Commission into a sounding board for China's argument that the Soviet Far Eastern territory was annexed from China in the 19th century as the result of unequal Treaties forced on the Chinese by Czarist Russia. The Commission did not meet in 1968.]

Prior to the talks, the Chinese and the Russians had accused each other of stirring up border trouble that had erupted into bloodshed on the Ussuri River in March, and both sides urged a diplomatic solution to their differences.

According to Tass, the Chinese had been raising issues in the work of the Commission not concerned with river navigation. "During the Commission's work, the Chinese delegation raised the question of so-called 'unequal' treaties, made... slanderous statements, issued threats, etc."

It said the leader of the Chinese delegation had "refused to continue the conference. In doing so, he distorted the real state of things at the conference and made malicious attacks on Soviet representatives. The leader of the Soviet delegation urged the Chinese side to continue the conference, but the Chinese representative flatly refused."

But, on July 13, Tass said the Chinese had agreed "to discuss plans for traffic maintenance work for 1969 and a new wording of the regulations for shipping on both sides of the border sections of the rivers."

Fresh Incident:

Meanwhile, the Soviet Defence Ministry paper, Krasnaya Zvezda (Red Star) said that sailors from the Soviet Pacific fleet were holding training exercises on the Amur River and were ready to rebuff any aggressor.

The article was obviously related to an incident on the Amur River a week earlier in which the Russians claimed that the Chinese had killed one river worker and wounded three in an unprovoked attack.

China on July 8 released the text of a protest Note accusing the Soviet Union of provoking a new "armed conflict" on the border between the two countries. It related to the latest incident on the Amur River.

Peking asserted that Soviet troops had landed on a Chinese island and fired on Chinese workers and militiamen before they were repulsed. It said the Russians had later returned, supported by gunboats, and burned down a civilian house.

A subsequent report by Hsinhua said that the gunboats fired heavy machine guns and cannon "for six minutes." The Chinese did not report any casualties. But, the Soviet version, issued by Tass, accused the Chinese of shooting and killing an unarmed river transport worker and wounding three others.

Marshal Lin Piao Attacks Soviet Leadership:

The Vice-Premier and Defence Minister, Marshal Lin Piao on July 9 attacked the Soviet Union for organizing a World Communist Conference, which was a sinister meeting "directed frantically against China and Albania."

It was the first direct Chinese comment on the 75-party Conference, held in Moscow in June.

He made his comment in a message of greetings to Mr. Beqir Balluku, his Albanian counterpart, on the 26th anniversary of the founding of the Albanian People's Army.

He said that the Moscow meeting was "single-handedly engineered" by the Soviet leaders. He described it as a "sinister anti-Communist, anti-popular and counter-revolutionary" meeting.

He said that Mr. Leonid I. Brezhnev, General Secretary of the Soviet Communist Party, had "made frantic war cries at the sinister meeting, thus further revealing the hideous features of Soviet revisionism and social-imperialism."

Russian Accusation:

Meanwhile, the Soviet Union accused China of perpetrating "the most terrible act of treachery in history", and said that West Germany and the United States were manipulating the Chinese in order to surround and isolate Russia.

An article in the weekly newspaper Literary Gazette, published on July 9—the day after the armed clash on the Amur River—accused Mr. Mao Tse-tung of seeing himself as an Asian Bonaparte who dreamed of conquering neighbouring countries "almost as far as the Black Sea."

The Literary Gazette article said that Mr. Mao was successor to Mr. Churchill, Adolf Hitler, and Mr. J.F. Dulles, all of whom had tried to encircle the Soviet Union at various times. The Americans and "West German revanchists" were looking for an ally in the East to fill the gaps in their present system of treaties.

The newspaper asserted that China was planning to seize or subvert the Mongolian Republic, Korea, Viet-Nam, Cambodia, Laos, Burma, Indonesia, and even India and the Arab countries. Mr. Mao wanted to start a third world war to put his plans into effect.

It said Mr. Mao may "yet become the accomplice of the hawks in the West which are trying to push the world — and, first of all, China — to catastrophe."

FORMOSA

A. Foreign Investment: According to the Foreign Investment Screening Commission, foreign investment in Formosa during the January-May period totalled $43,300,000—an increase of $19,000,000 over the same period in 1968.

The total investment included 56 projects from overseas Chinese and 77 from foreigners.

Most of the overseas Chinese investments were made in the service industry, such as the hotel business, totalling $10 million.

Foreign investors were interested in the electronics industry, which attracted $26 million. The food processing industry and the plastic industry also drew considerable foreign capital.

The Commission approved 31 applications for technical co-operation between domestic and foreign manufacturers during the same period

These covered the electronics, chemical and machinery industries.

INDIA

SUMMARY: A-ICC Session; Foreign Trade; Police Firings In West Bengal; Oil Exploration; National Animal.

A. A-ICC Session—Resolution On Economic Policy And Organizational Changes: The All-India Congress Committee (A-ICC) met in Bangalore on July 10, 11, 12 and 13 and took certain decisions on the economic policy and changes in the Congress Party constitution.

The Committee took up first the question of economic policy. Its Working Committee had earlier asked Mr. C. Subramaniam and Mr. Sadiq Ali to draft a resolution on the subject in the light of the Panel discussion at the Faridabad (annual) session of the Congress and a subsequent discussion by the Congress Working Committee.

But, Mrs. Indira Gandhi had, in the meanwhile, prepared a, Note on the subject and placed it before the Working Committee. It evoked considerable discussion, and a new brief resolution was drafted, with Mrs. Gandhi's Note appended to it, and placed before the A-ICC. In spite of his differences with the resolution and Mrs. Gandhi's Note, Mr. Morarji Desai persuaded himself to move the resolution and Mr. Y. B. Chavan seconded it. It was passed after two days' discussions on July 12.

Resolution On Economic Policy:

The following is the text of the resolution:

"There has been a good deal of discussion in the Congress organization regarding the economic and social policy and the direction to be given in the economy to reach the socialist goal which the Congress is pledged to achieve.

"The Note by the Prime Minister which is appended to this resolution broadly sets out the policies to be pursued and steps to be taken for the purpose of improving the performance of our economy in industry and agriculture and, at the same time, ensure that the process of economic development does not lead to concentration of wealth and economic power in a few hands.

"At the same time, it is necessary to set in motion social forces which will bring about improvement in the standard of living of the tens of millions who today live in subsistence or even lower than subsistence level and the aspect of social justice does not get clouded. Some of the programmes are already in the process of implementation. The A-ICC welcomes the Note of the Prime Minister and calls upon the Central and State Governments to take necessary steps expeditiously to implement the various points mentioned in the Note.

"A report may be submitted to the A-ICC regarding the various decisions taken and steps initiated to implement these programmes."

Mrs. I. Gandhi's Note:

The following is the Note on Economic Policy and Programme by Mrs. Gandhi:

"The time has come to re-state our economic policy and set the direction in which we have to move to achieve our social goal. This has become all the more necessary in view of doubts that have been raised with regard to our intentions and our willingness to take the hard and difficult steps which are necessary. In respect of many of the items, some steps have already been taken, but what is important is to intensify our efforts and to keep the social goal all along in the forefront.

"The Congress has always championed the cause of the weaker sections, minorities and the underprivileged. This should continue to be the policy of the Congress (and take the following steps):

"(a) Impose ceiling on unproductive expenditure and conspicuous consumption of corporate bodies;

"(b) Nationalized financial institutions should introduce a change in credit-worthiness criteria in their lending policies, so as to encourage professional and competent persons;

"(c) Special efforts should be made to finance new entrepreneurs in less developed regions and a special fund should be provided for provision of assistance to backward regions;

"(d) Expeditious appointment of Monopolies Commission manned by persons of integrity;

"(e) Public sector projects should be given more autonomy and manned by young competent persons committed to the project;

"(f) Special effort should be made to build up a cadre of public sector projects;

"(g) The consumer industries should be reserved wherever possible for development in tthe co-operative and small-scale sector and entry of big business should be banned in the manufacture of these products;

"(h) Special efforts should be made to encourage new talent to provide avenues of employment to the young and educated;

"(i) Foreign capital should not be allowed to enter fields in which local technical know-how is available; and

"(j) Heavy penalties should be imposed on those who indulge in restrictive trade practices.

"There are other suggestions which may not fit within the present policy frame-work. However, I have already asked the Finance Ministry and the Planning Commission to look into the feasibility of imposing ceilings on incomes and holdings of urban properties.

"There is strong feeling in the country regarding the nationalization of private commercial banks. We had taken a decision at an earlier A-ICC (session), but perhaps we may review it. Either we can consider the nationalization of the top five or six banks or issue directions that the resources of banks should be reserved to a larger extent for public purposes. Investments of banks in Government securities stood at 24.75 per cent on June 13, 1969. This figure of investment in securities could be raised by five per cent. This will make available about Rs. 200 crores for the public sector. Against this, it may be argued that this will involve denial of credit to trade and industry and will also affect the profitability of banks. But in times of credit squeeze, private industry somehow adjusts itself. They mobilize deposits on their own, cut their inventories, or bring in unaccounted money and somehow manage. The question whether banks' investment in Government securities should not be raised has to be seriously considered. If necessary, this extra five per cent can be invested in special types of securities, proceeds being utilized for quick-yielding schemes like minor irrigation programmes, rural electrification, fisheries etc.

"While it may not be practical to nationalize all import and export, can we not consider the nationalization of the import of raw materials? This would make collective bargaining possible and might get us better prices. The policy of the distribution of such import licences should also be reviewed. We should review the licensing system so that licences are not given only to the bigger (business) houses. Shares could be distributed more equitably.

"I fully realise that over-all development is the best and the only reliable way of increasing employment opportunities. However, the situation is so acute in the country that it has become necessary to have some special programmes to give employment in the rural areas as well as to the educated. Naturally, whatever scheme we think of cannot be adequate to meet the situation, but it should give the impression that we are taking a first step and making a genuine effort.

"I make the following suggestions:

"Agriculture:

"(a) Service co-operatives should be built up in rural areas;

"(b) Special assistance should be provided to small agriculturists and farm co-operatives to enable them to take processing of agro-based and other industries;

"(c) Special attention should be paid to development of minor irrigation projects etc.

"Land Reforms:

"Land reform is no less important. If we do not act urgently, grave political and economic problems will arise. From time to time suggestions have been made to improve the lot of the tenant and of landless agricultural labour, (such as):

"(1) Declare all tenancies as non-resumable;

"(2) Give tenants the right to mortgage their interest in land for obtaining credit;

"(3) Place restrictions on sale of land by Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes and Backward Classes in favour of others;

"(4) Enforce ceiling on land holdings energetically;

"(5) Draw up a programme for distribution of Government waste-land and lands held by Panchayats;

"(6) Enact legislation to protect tenants, agricultural workers from their house sites.

"If these points are agreed to, the following minimum programme is indicated;

"(1) A tenant should not be liable for eviction as long as he pays his rent regularly. Provision to this effect exists in tenancy laws of most States, but the law is not enforced effectively. States should be asked to set up special machinery for effective implementation of this measure. Penalties should be suitably enhanced.

"(2) There should be a proper record of rights of tenants.

"(3) Land ceiling laws already implemented should be enforced.

"(4) Restrictions could be placed on purchases of land belonging to Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, but whether similar restrictions could also be placed on land belonging to Backward Classes is doubtful. The list of Backward Classes is pretty long in many States.

"The suggestion that tenants should be also given the right to hypothecate their interest in land to obtain credit for agricultural development may meet with resistance. There would be no serious objection to credit being made available for short-term purposes, for example, seeds, fertilizers etc., on the security of the crop. But, in regard to long-term loans for such purposes as sinking of wells, installation of pump sets etc., landlords may well insist on their consent being obtained.

"A review of agricultural wages is also called for in the light of increased yields now obtaining. Minimum wages for agricultural labour may have to be prescribed for each tract and enforced. This will enable landless labourers to participate in the fruits of the green revolution."

Action Against Marxist State Governments Demanded:

Earlier, on July 10, a sizable section of the A-ICC demanded the banning of the CPI (Marxist) in the light of the open declaration of the Kerala Chief Minister, Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad, and the Marxist leader, Mr. A. K. Gopalan, that their party's objective in assuming power in States like Kerala and West Bengal was not to provide good administration but to subvert and wreck the Constitution and destroy the democratic system.

The Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, commented that it was high time that "we took such steps as to put a stop to all this, particularly after these people have taken a solemn oath to abide by the Constitution."

Mr. Nijalingappa also urged that it was the bounden duty of all democratic parties in the country to see that the communists were not allowed to carry on as they liked to achieve their avowed objective of creating chaos.

A reference to the Marxist leaders' thesis was contained in an adjournment motion tabled by a Kerala delegate, Mr. A. C. George. He wanted the Committee to take note of the "dangerous situation" created by the statement.

Mr. Nijalingappa read out the Marxist leaders' joint statement which was a confirmation of the statement made by Mr. B. T. Ranadive in London and a reply to the criticism made of it by the Right Communists. Both the CPI and the Muslim League partners in the United Front Government in Kerala had taken exception to Mr. Ranadive's statement.

Changes In Party Constitution:

The A-ICC then took up (on July 10) the various amendments suggested to the party constitution. Mr. S. K. Patil explained the various amendments that had been accepted by the Working Committee and those that had been left for the acceptance of the A-ICC.

The most important of these related to the method of election of delegates and PCC members. Mr. Patil pointed out that while direct election of delegates and PCC members by primary members would conform to the purest form of democracy, there were certain practical difficulties in organizing such elections, monetarily and otherwise. One of the suggestions, therefore, was that primary members could elect 50 members to the constituency committee and the latter should form the electoral college for elections at higher levels.

Mr. Patil justified his committee's proposal to increase the membership fee from four annas to eight annas on the ground that, in the first place, the value of four annas had changed since that fee was introduced in 1920 and, secondly, the party had to have a built-in system of fund collections especially after the amendment of the Company Law banning donations to political parties and for political purposes.

Sharp differences on several aspects of the party constitution were ventilated during the discussion, which remained inconclusive. Responsible group leaders from various States feared the party would completely disintegrate if necessary corrective measures were not taken.

How sharp were the differences on some of the vital issues in the party could be noticed when Mr. Patil criticized the law recently adopted by Parliament prohibiting company donations to parties. He hinted that the law might be challenged in a High Court or the Supreme Court on the ground that it offended the fundamental rights.

On another part of the constitution, the delegates had their way on July 11 when they compelled the High Command to surrender to their demand to amend the party constitution to provide for ten of the 21 members of the Working Committee being elected instead of seven as at present.

There was initial resistance from the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, and Mr. S. K. Patil, who was putting to vote the various constitutional amendments as suggested by the Committee on re-organization and endorsed by the Working Committee. But they both gave in after taking note of the temper of the overwhelming majority of the delegates.

The Committee meeting ended on July 13.

B. Foreign Trade During 1968-69: A perceptible shift in the direction and pattern of India's exports, particularly after the closure of the Suez Canal, was revealed by an official review of foreign trade in 1968-69, released in New Delhi on July 6.

According to the review, India's exports were about Rs. 161 crores more than those of 1967-68, but 60 per cent of the increase was in exports to the Asian and Oceania region, particularly ECAFE countries.

Similarly, 60 per cent of the increase was accounted for by larger exports of non-traditional items such as engineering goods, iron and steel products, chemicals, oil products, paper and paper board and synthetic fibre.

It was evident that the closure of the Suez Canal had rendered it much cheaper for countries in the Asian and Oceania region to import some of their requirements of industrial products from developing countries like India.

Despite this significant shift, traditional export markets continued to predominate India's export trade and still accounted for a major share of the total. The exports in 1968-69 were of the order of Rs. 1,360 crores as against Rs. 1,198.69 crores in the previous year. The increase was Rs. 161 crores or 13.5 per cent. This, together with reduced imports, which totalled Rs. 1,785.84 crores, helped the country to reduce its trade gap by over Rs. 350 crores. Imports of cereals, machinery and transport equipment, oils and fats and iron and steel were less in 1968-69 than in the previous year.

Direction-wise, India's exports to Asian and Oceania countries at Rs. 412 crores were higher than those in the previous year by Rs. 96 crores. To the ECAFE countries alone, the exports at Rs. 344 crores were higher by Rs. 74 crores.

Exports to West Asian countries at Rs. 67.2 crores were higher by Rs. 22.7 crores. There was a marked increase in exports to Kuwait, Iran, Saudi Arabia, UAR, Yemen and Qatar.

Exports to East European countries amounted to Rs. 266 crores or Rs. 40 crores more than those of the previous year. The rise was shared by all countries except Hungary and East Germany. Export to the Soviet Union alone rose by Rs. 27 crores—from Rs. 121.8 crores to Rs. 148.3 crores.

In Western Europe, the United Kingdom remained India's single major trading partner in spite of the fall in its import of Indian goods from Rs. 229 crores to Rs. 201.5 crores. Exports to Belgium, West Germany, France, Italy and the Netherlands were, however, a little higher than in 1967-68.

Exports to African countries at Rs. 72.8 crores were higher only by Rs. 2.6 crores. While there was an increase in exports to Kenya, Ethiopia, Libya, Mauritius, Sierra Leone, Tanzania and Uganda, there was a fall in exports to Tunisia, Zambia and Nigeria.

C. Total Police Firings In West Bengal: The Deputy Chief Minister of West Bengal, Mr. Jyoti Basu, said in the State Assembly in Calcutta on July 14 that the police had fired on 27 occasions in the State between February 25—the day the UF Government assumed power—and May 31.

Seven people were killed in the firing and 26 injured.

In Calcutta, the police had fired on six occasions resulting in the death of two persons and injuries to three. Four people were killed and 12 injured in four cases of police firing in Hooghly district and one person was killed and 10 injured in five police firings in 24-Parganas District.

He said there had been 94 cases of arson in Calcutta and the districts of 24-Parganas, Howrah, and Hooghly between March 1 and June 30. Of these, 80 had occurred in 24-Parganas alone. The reasons for these were communal riots, occupation of land and fisheries, family quarrels and previous enmity.

Replying to another question, he said that 1,294 people had been arrested in the UF regime under the Preventive Detention Act for anti-social acts. Over 700 anti-social elements had been arrested in Calcutta alone.

He said that no one had been arrested under the Act for political reasons. He did not know if the detenus included any Naxalites. The Naxalites were partly political and partly anti-social, and if any Naxalite had been arrested under the Act, it must have been for anti-social activities.

Asked if the Government was detaining the Naxalites under the Act under instructions from the Centre, he said the West Bengal Government did not function under instructions from the Central Government.

He added that Central forces had fired twice in West Bengal without the permission of the State Government. In the firing by the UP provincial armed constabulary at Durgapur on March 24 three persons were injured. In the firing by the defence security force at Cossipore gun and shell factory on April 8, four persons were killed and nine injured. The State Government had protested against these firings and had requested the Centre that no Central police force should be deployed for law and order duty in the State without the permission of the State Government.

D. Oil Exploration Programme: The Oil and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC) has prepared an ambitious Rs. 1,200-crore plan to boost oil exploration and production in the country.

The plan, spread over the next ten years, envisages raising of production from 3.6 million tonnes a year to 14.5 million tonnes by the end of the Five-Year Plan. According to a survey made by the Indian Petroleum Institute, the country's requirements of petroleum products will go up to 34 million tonnes. At present, the installed refining capacity is much more than the crude production, the gap being filled by crude imports. The ONGC plan may, however, be modified in accordance with the results of explorations and the availability of resources. Of the total expenditure, outlay of Rs. 463 crores is for the Fourth Plan and the remaining outlay will be spent during the Fifth Plan.

The Fifth Plan outlay is doubled in view of the fact that there are some proposals for off-shore drilling in deep and shallow waters, construction of a pipeline from Tripura and replacement of drilling equipment.

Against the expenditure of Rs. 1,200 crores in the next ten years, the ONGC hopes to earn about Rs. 850 crores by sale of crude oil and natural gas. The difference of Rs. 3,500 crores could be wiped out in about 3½ years, still leaving a balance of reserves for exploration without any further capital investment.

The production of 14.5 million tonnes of crude oil per year by the end of 1978-79 will comprise 10 million tonnes from land and 4.5 million tonnes from off-shore areas.

It is also proposed to establish an annual production rate of about 912 million cubic metres of gas by 1973-74 from land. If the target of production of gas from the off-shore areas is realised, the Commission will raise the gas production to about 1,500 million cubic metres per year by 1978-79. With these targets in view, the ONGC plans to drill about 1,200 wells whose aggregate depth will be three million metres on land.

E. Naga Extremist Killed: A former self-styled speaker of the Naga extremist underground Parliament, Mr. Chuz Lo Mekrisu, was found dead with a gunshot in the thick jungle near Chesami village, 31 miles from Kohima on July 10.

Documents recovered from the body of the underground leader showed that he had escaped an attempt on his life on July 9. He was believed to have been murdered by the pro-China underground extremists, whom he had lately been criticising for their anti-State activities.

G. Rail Accident Near Jaipur: At least 84 persons were killed and 70 injured when a goods train rammed into the 398 Up Asansol-Puri Passenger on July 14, at Jaipur-Keonjar road on the South-Eastern Railway, 336 km from Howrah.

Three bogies, including the guard's van, were completely smashed.

The victims included the guard of the passenger train.

I. National Animal: The Board for Wild Life on July 9 chose the lion as the "National Animal" of India.

It recommended that the lion should take its place with the peacock, the National Bird.

The Minister for Tourism, Dr Karan Singh, who is President of the Board, said that two reasons had weighed with the Board: the first was that the lion was on the national crest—the Asoka Pillar capitol; and, secondly, it was an animal that they were most anxious to save from extinction.

IRAQ

A. Israeli Spies Arrested: It was disclosed in Baghdad on July 10 that the Government had arrested members of an Israeli spy ring who had admitted delivering a letter bomb to Mr. Yasser Arafat, leader of the El Fatah commandos, in Amman on July 5.

The bomb was defused before it could reach Mr. Arafat.

An official spokesman quoted by Baghdad Radio said that the arrested men included Iraqi and Jordanian soldiers and non-commissioned officers. The detainees had made confessions and had admitted the lefter bomb operation. The letter bore the forged seal of an Iraqi unit stationed in Jordan.

B. Former Premier To Be Tried For Treason: Baghdad newspapers reported on July 9 that a former Prime Minister, Dr. Abdel Rahman al Bazzaz, would be tried with 19 other persons by the Revolutionary Tribunal on a charge of "plotting against the Government."

Among the accused was a former Chief of Staff, Gen. Faisal al Ansari.

The Revolutionary Tribunal, which was set up in December, 1968 is noted for the severity of its sentences. To date, it had decreed nearly 40 executions.

Dr. Bazzaz, who was Prime Minister in 1965 and 1966, was placed under house arrest at the end of 1968. Numerous rumours had circulated about him, including one which said he had committed suicide. The Government implicitly denied these rumours by saying that Dr. Bazzaz would soon be appearing on television to "confess."

Dr. Bazzaz played a major role in the Iraqi-Kurd conflict and in June, 1966 signed with the Kurdish leader, Mustapha Barzani a cease-fire and co-operation agreement that the present regime has promised to honour.

ISRAEL

A. UN Security Resolution On Jerusalem Rejected: The UN Security Council adopted a resolution on July 3, jointly sponsored by Pakistan, Senegal and Zambia, calling on Israel "without any further delay to declare its intentions with regard to the implementation of their resolution" concerning the status of Jerusalem.

In the Council debate on July 1, the "Big Four" Powers warned Israel to refrain from taking measures that might change the status of Jerusalem.

The US Ambassador, Mr. Charles Yost, said that the Israelis had "no right to make changes in laws or in administration other then those which are temporarily necessitated by their security interest."

Lord Caradon (Britain) said that to prejudice the future of Jerusalem would bar the door to peace and make another conflict inevitable.

Mr. Alexei Zakar (Soviet Union) backed Jordan's proposal that a world-wide arms embargo be applied against Israel, while Mr. Armand Berard (France) said that any measures or legislative decisions taken by Israel to modify Jerusalem's status were invalid.

Israel's Rejection:

Israel rejected on July 4 the Security Council resolution strongly censuring her for her moves to annex Jerusalem.

Mr. Yosef Tekoah (Israel) said that the resolution—which also called on the Israelis to rescind immediately measures they had already taken in Jerusalem—could not affect the city's life.

He said: "Life cannot stop in Jerusalem. Life will not stop in Jerusalem. It will continue as it has in the last two years since Jerusalem's rebirth and re-union, for this is the will of the people and this is the historic destiny of that city."

Mr. Tekoah poured scorn on the Arab States and some other opponents of his Government's policies who had spoken in the debate.

He said that there could not be a situation commanding less respect than Pakistan's "donning the mask of law and justice" in presenting a resolution to the Council to censure Israel. "Has not Pakistan's outstanding contribution to international life since its independence been to wage war against a neighbouring country"? he asked. "What value should be attached to a resolution born of such parents?"

Jordan's Ambassador, Mr. Muhammed el-Farra said after the adoption of the resolution that Israel "more than ever before stands alone."

Denouncing Israel's rejection of the resolution on Jerusalem, he said that "sanctions are now the only remaining possible solution to put an end to Israel's arrogance."

Mr. A. Eban's Attack On Security Council:

At a news conference in Tel Aviv on July 4, the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban made a scathing attack on the UN Security Council which had censured Israeli moves to annex all Jerusalem, saying that it was doing nothing to solve the world's real problems.

He said: "If the Security Council expresses criticism, it opens itself to criticism. The Security Council stands, not for the first time, under the judgment of world opinion.

"Here we have a body charged with responsibility for international peace and security. It did nothing whatever to avoid the June, 1967 six-day war. It gave Israel no assistance whatever when her danger was greatest.

"It will not do anything if Israel were again exposed to the danger of destruction. It did not do anything to prevent the invasion of Czechoslovakia. It is not doing anything at all about the tension and warfare in South-East Asia. It is not playing any role in the great humanitarian disaster now occurring in a part of Africa.

"All it is doing is to try to cancel the union and the peace, the tranquillity and the respect for sanctities which prevail in Jerusalem."

Maj.-Gen. M. Dayan Demands Major Border Changes:

The Defence Minister, Maj.-Gen. Dayan, warned on June 27 that in any peace settlement, Israel would want big changes in the lines on the west bank "and such lines as will provide us security. What we are talking about are not minor rectifications but major ones."

He re-iterated that Israel did not contemplate handing back to Syria the Golan Heights captured in the June war.

Gen. Haim Bar-Lev On War Preparedness:

On July 9, the Army Chief of Staff, Gen. Haim Bar-Lev, declared at a graduating officers' class that "the need to prepare for war is a demand of reality, since Arab leaders consider war the only means to turn back the clock of history."

He added: "If they do not plot an all-out war, it is mainly due to their estimate of our military strength."

Taking the UAR as an example, Gen. Bar-Lev said that shooting on the Suez Canal had turned three-quarters of a million Arabs, residents of Canal towns, into refugees. "The Nile valley and the Gulf of Suez are not protected, her (UAR) oil ports are paralysed and her planes cannot supply the air umbrella expected of them. We do not know what conclusions UAR and the other Arab States will draw. What we do know is we must continue to exact the full price for cease-fire infringement."

Reported Soviet Peace Plan:

It was disclosed by Communist diplomats in London on June 25 that the Soviet Union had handed to USA a new West Asia Peace Plan backed by the UAR President, Mr. G. A. Nasser.

The Plan offers a "package" solution which provides for the recognition of Israel by the Arab nations, free navigation through the Suez Canal and the Gulf of Aqaba, and a Big-Power security guarantee for the area.

But, it rejects all suggestions for Arab territorial concessions to Israel, insisting on complete Israeli withdrawal to the pre-1967 borders, under a phased peace settlement.

The Plan outline incorporates "some of the features" of the American proposals which stand rejected, however, in their present form by the Russians and President Nasser.

The Plan was stated to be the result of recent extensive consultations between the Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Andrei Gromyko, and President G. A. Nasser. Mr. Gromyko flew to Cairo earlier in June, 1969 to discuss an American 13-point peace outline, which President Nasser rejected.

Mr. I. Galili's Warning To Arabs:

On June 25, Israel warned the Arab countries that her Army might strike harder in future to counter Arab activity on the cease-fire lines.

The warning was given by the Information Minister, Mr. Israel Galili, speaking at a luncheon in Tel Aviv.

He said that the Israeli Army already was dealing effectively with the position as it existed now. "But it is most likely that in the future the Army will be forced to take more stringent defensive, deterrent and punitive actions to meet even more efficiently the changing conditions, particularly along the Suez Canal and the Jordan cease-fire line."

President N. Podgorny's Promise To Arab Countries:

President N. Podgorny said at a luncheon in Moscow on July 5 to honour the visiting Syrian Premier, Mr. Nureddin Atassi, that the Soviet Union would help improve the Arab armies and stand behind the Arab States against Israeli agression.

He said: "Our country will continue to help by every possible means to strengthen progressive regimes in the Arab States, to develop their economy and culture, and to raise the combat efficiency of their armed forces."

Soviet Military Supplies To Arab Countries:

According to figures released by the Israeli Embassy in Paris on July 3, USSR had supplied 700 fighter aircraft to UAR, Syria and Iraq since the six-day war of June, 1967, also replenishing the Arab losses of armour by 150 per cent.

The value of Soviet armaments supplied to UAR since June, 1967, was put at 10 billion French francs.

It noted that USSR had granted to the three Arab countries exceptionally favourable conditions of payment.

U Thant's Report:

In a special report to the UN Security Council on West Asia on July 7, the UN Secretary-General, U Thant, said that the level of violence in West Asia now was at a higher point than at any time since the six-day war.

If it continued, he said, it could "soon render vain efforts towards a peaceful settlement and it could even be the overture to more general and intensive hostilities in West Asia."

He appealed to all parties to bring to an end immediately all offensive military actions, and to all members of UN to help to make the cease-fire effective. "This is in the vital interests of the whole world."

He said that UN Military Observers in the Canal sector now were operating "under conditions of continuous danger. They cannot be expected to serve as what amounts to defenceless targets in a shooting gallery. I feel it my duty to warn the Council that if the UN Military Observers continue to be fired upon, I will have no choice but to advise the Council, after consultation with the Governments providing the Observers, of the future course of action, including even the possibility of withdrawal of Observers."

More Fighting:

A UAR military spokesman announced on June 23 that Egyptian forces had killed 18 Israelis in two separate commando raids across the Suez Canal. Egyptian casualties for these two operations on the east bank of the Canal were two dead and three wounded.

An Israeli spokesman said that an Israeli unit crossed one mile into Jordan early on June 23, hitting military and civilian targets in retaliation for attacks on Israeli forces.

In another action, he said, an Israeli patrol killed two Arab guerrillas in a brief exchange near Nahal Golan, 14 kilometres east of the Sea of Galilee on the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights.

Cairo Radio said that an Israeli fighter-plane was shot down on June 24 in an air encounter with Egyptian planes.

It quoted an Egyptian military spokesman as saying that the clash took place when four Israeli fighter planes attempted to violate Egyptian air-space but were driven off.

One Israeli aircraft was seen falling in the Gulf of Suez.

A UAR military spokesman said that at least 22 Israelis were killed when an Egyptian Army patrol crossed the Suez Canal on June 23 and overran an Israeli position. It was the third night running that an Egyptian force had made an attack over the Canal.

A police spokesman announced in Tel Aviv that an oil pipeline in Haifa port had been sabotaged by an explosion on June 24.

The explosion was regarded as the most daring act of sabotage inside Israel since the six-day war in June, 1967.

In Amman, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine—one of the Arab guerrilla groups—claimed responsibility for the sabotage. It said its commandos had placed explosive charges under the pipe-line.

As Israeli firemen fought to contain the blaze in Haifa, Israeli and Egyptian fighters clashed on June 24 over the Suez Canal scene of repeated commando raids and artillery duel in the past few days.

Tel Aviv claimed that Israeli aircraft on a routine flight intercepted Egyptian MIG-21s some 30 km south of Suez. One Egyptian MIG was hit. It was seen to explode and crash in Egyptian territory.

An Israeli Army spokesman said that Israeli planes knocked out two UAR jet fighters in an air battle over the Gulf of Suez on June 26.

A group of Soviet-built MIG-21s flying over the northern part of the Gulf of Suez encountered patrolling Israeli fighters.

It was the third UAR MIG-21 that Israel had claimed shooting down in three days. A MIG was said to be downed in the same region—just south of the Suez Canal's southern outlet—on June 24.

Later, a communique from Cairo said that UAR jets "hit" two Israeli fighters after they tried to violate UAR air-space.

Israeli planes attacked inside Jordan on June 26 for the second day in a row. The planes struck against Jordanian Army positions in the Jordan Valley.

On June 29, Israeli commandos carried out a raid in upper Egypt, damaging an electrical high-tension wire in the Squag area, west of the Nile. It was the deepest Israeli commando raid into UAR since the June, 1967 war and snapped the 500-kv power line linking Cairo and the Aswan Dam. It was also the attack closest to Cairo, being 380 km south of the UAR capital and 220 km west of the UAR-Israeli border. The Army disclosed that a second power line was damaged and claimed the attackers met no resistance or interference.

On June 30, a bomb blew up an Israeli Army vehicle in a quiet residential road in the centre of Tel Aviv, injuring at least seven people.

Israeli planes attacked targets inside Jordan on June 30 after light arms fire had been directed across the Jordan River against an Israeli border police patrol.

An Israeli commando unit struck half-way between Assiut and Luxor, 250 miles south of Cairo, near Suhaj, and cut the high-tension power line connecting Aswan and Cairo on June 30.

Arab El Fatah men, sneaking into the Israeli capital of Tel Aviv, left a stolen car packed with bombs in a residential area. The bombs exploded, injuring ten civilians and destroying three other vehicles parked nearby.

There was an Egyptian-Israeli artillery exchange across the Suez Canal for seven hours on July 3.

A Cairo communique said: "Heavy artillery went into action on July 3 with a concentration on Deversoir, Balah, Qantara, El-Shatt and Point Six, all midway along the waterway."

A Syrian Army spokesman said Syrian and Israeli positions exchanged machine-gun fire for nearly half-an-hour across the cease-fire line in the Golan Heights region on July 3.

A UAR military spokesman said in Cairo that an Israeli Mirage fighter plane was shot down in an air battle over the Gulf of Suez on July 6. The UAR planes flew over enemy positions deep in Sinai on a reconnaissance mission and were intercepted by Israeli aircraft. The Mirage was downed in the Gulf of Suez three kilometres to the east of Zaafarana, and its pilot was seen baling out.

It was officially stated on July 26 that all members of a spy ring working for Israel in UAR had been arrested. The alleged spies were arrested on June 2.

On July 7, Israel announced the downing of two Egyptian MIGs over the Red Sea. By Israeli count, they were the eighth and ninth Egyptian aircraft shot down in combat in a fortnight. The tally since the June, 1967 war was claimed to be 27.

A Tel Aviv message said that Israeli jets shot down on July 8 seven Syrian MIG-21s in an aerial battle. TThe MIGs were intercepted as they penetrated Israeli air-space over the Golan Heights, near Kuneitra. All Israeli aircraft returned safely to base.

This was the biggest air battle in West Asia since the six-day war of June, 1967. The dog-fights occurred around altitudes between 10,000 and 30,000 metres.

According to Israeli sources, three persons were hurt by an explosion in the main street of a town in the Israeli-held west bank of Jordan on July 10.

Reports from the Sea of Galilee area said on July 10 that an Israeli army patrol was fired on from Jordanian territory near Sh'ar Hagolan. The fire was returned. There were no Israeli casualties.

An Israeli Army spokesman denied reports that an infantry unit of the UAR had crossed the Suez Canal on July 10 and attacked Israeli fortifications in the Ismailia region.

A military spokesman had earlier announced in Cairo that two UAR infantry platoons supported by army engineers had crossed the Suez Canal early on July 10 and blasted five Israeli fortifications in the al-Kirsh area north of Ismailia.

According to a Cairo report, UAR anti-aircraft guns shot down an Israeli helicopter in the Great Bitter Lake along the Suez Canal on July 10.

According to a Tel Aviv message, Israeli soldiers intercepted two saboteur bands on July 11 and in ensuing clashes killed four Arab infiltrators.

Three Arabs were killed on the slopes of Mount Hermon after they crossed into Israeli-held territory from Syria. The others fled, leaving behind rifles, mines, and one anti-tank mine.

Another band crossed from Jordan. One Arab was killed. Both groups were said to be members of the El Fatah commando organization.

Cairo Radio said that Israeli gunners fired on Suez town across the Suez Canal on July 12.

On July 14, Israeli and UAR artillery fought duels at El Qantara on the northern part of the Suez Canal and opposite Suez port in the south. There were no Israeli casualties in the firing.

Near Beer Menuha, on the edge of the Negev desert, the military reported one Israeli civilian injured when his vehicle ran over a mine hidden in a dirt track.

JAPAN

A. ASPAC Ministerial Conference: The fourth Ministerial Conference of the Asian and Pacific Council (ASPAC) met in Kawana from June 9 to 11.

The Council has as its members Japan, Australia, Formosa, South Korea, Malaysia, New Zealand, the Philippines, Thailand and South Viet-Nam. Laos attended the session as an observer.

The opening session was marked by violent clashes between demonstrators protesting against the Council and the police. Many demonstrators, a large number of them students, and several policemen were injured. The demonstrators contended that the Council was tending to develop into an anti-Communist alliance.

In his opening speech, the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, stressed that the essential factor uniting the Asian and Pacific countries was their ardent desire to pursue social economic development without disturbing others and without being disturbed by external pressure and interference.

He suggested that the region of the world so far referred to as the Asian and Pacific region, as a matter of convenience, should now be known as "Pacific Asia." He said this name clearly signified the part of Asia which faced the Pacific. "At the same time, it denotes a peaceful Asia."

"When this region will become more unified and come to be widely accepted as one geographical unit, then will come the day when this appellation becomes an idiom in daily use."

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Kichi Aichi, who was elected Chairman, told the meeting that the main task of ASPAC was to bring about economic and social construction of the region.

Referring to the oft-repeated charge against ASPAC that it was aimed at a military alliance, he said there could be no denying the importance of the security problem in the region, but that could not constitute any reason for linking the functions of ASPAC with military co-operation. There had never been an actual proposal inside ASPAC for turning the organization into a military alliance.

Thailand's Foreign Minister, Mr. Thanat Khoman, declared that ASPAC harboured no hostility against any one or any nation. ASPAC being no collective organization, he said, member-countries had other arrangements to ensure their individual or collective self-defence.

He argued that while Western colonial Powers had withdrawn from Asia, imperialism was being practised under new guises and new labels by local Asian Powers over Asian peoples and nations. He called on Asian peoples to replace imperialistic domination with more humane and progressive notions of co-operation and partnership.

Expounding a similar theme, the Australian External Affairs Minister, Mr. Gordon Freeth argued that ASPAC was concerned not with things that divided the region but those that held it together.

He did not rule out the possibility that new organizations might be created to meet the security needs of different parts of the region. He did not think the present security arrangements in the region were fully adequate.

He stressed, however, that ASPAC should not be concerned with such a task. Establishment of relations of mutual trust and confidence were essential if ASPAC was to succeed.

The South Korean Foreign Minister, Mr. Kyu Hah Choi, described the Council's common objective as one to get rid of poverty, illiteracy and build a welfare society in Asia and the Pacific. He urged that the Council leap from promise to performance, from blueprint to execution.

All the chief delegates voiced hope in their speeches that Indonesia would join ASPAC.

The Indonesian Ambassador to Tokyo, Mr. D. Ashari, was present at the opening ceremony as a "guest."

They also highlighted the concerted advocacy of "dovish" member-nations of the Asian and Pacific

Council (ASPAC) that the organization should maintain its non-military character. A similar argument was advanced at the first three ministerial meetings of the organization. But this time it appeared to carry specal significance for the following reasons:

In the first place, the contention that ASPAC should be kept as a non-military grouping was made despite the inauguration of the administration of President Richard M. Nixon, who, before he took his office, suggested conversion of the ASPAC into a regional military alliance.

Another reason was that opposition to turning ASPAC into a military and defence organization was markedly strong.

Japan's Mr. Aichi even said: "Outside this organization there are those who raise their voices as if the eventual aim of this organization was a military alignment...As the distinguished delegates are well aware, not a single proposal has even been made within this organization to create a military alliance under the aegis of ASPAC."

Communique:

The Conference issued a communique on June 11 declaring that efforts should be continued to strengthen the political, economic and social structures of member-nations.

The Conference pledged itself to work for reduction of international tension in and around the region.

The communique said that the participating Ministers affirmed that their countries should make an all-out effort to promote economic development.

The Ministers also noted the need for continued assistance by major countries outside the Asian and Pacific region until progress and stability of the region could be ensured by ASPAC nations' own efforts.

The communique stated that the Ministers recognized the need to develop a frame-work for international co-operation "on the broadest possible basis" to assist in the rehabilitation of Viet-Nam and its neighbours as well as to ensure that peace in this part of the region would be "just and durable."

With regard to Korea, the Ministers "expressed concern at the tension created by the provocative and aggressive acts including the increasing armed infiltration into South Korea."

A maritime co-operation scheme proposed by Japan was referred to ASPAC's standing committee for study.

During the closing ceremony, the representatives also signed an Agreement on the establishment of a Food and Fertilizer Technology Centre in Taipeh and a written guideline for the founding of an Economic Co-operation Centre in Bangkok.

Meanwhile, commenting on the three-day Conference, Mr. Aichi said at a news conference that he hoped as many Asian and Pacific nations as possible, including even China, would join the Asian and Pacific Council (ASPAC) in the future. He said, however, that at present he expected such countries as Indonesia, Singapore and Burma to become ASPAC members.

He saw no need to try to integrate ASPAC with other existing regional co-operative organizations such as the Ministerial Conference for the Economic Development of South-East Asia.

He believed that never before had the Japanese people understood the nature of ASPAC better than at present and expressed the hope that ASPAC would contribute to lasting peace in Asia and also the world.

B. Mr. Kichi Aichi On Talks With US Officials On Okinawa: The Foreign Minister, Mr. Kichi Aichi reported to the Diet on June 16 on his recent talks with US Government leaders, including President Richard Nixon, on the reversion of Okinawa (see page 9030).

In reply to questions posed by both Conservative and Opposition members, Mr. Aichi as well as the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, made the following points:

(1) The Japan-US Security Treaty and other related accords will apply to Okinawa after it reverts to Japan—meaning that US installations there would be placed under the same restrictions as those in Japan.

(2) No special arrangements will be made regarding Okinawa's reversion and the United States will not be allowed "free use" of Okinawa bases after the island group is returned to Japan.

(3) In its "prior consultations" with USA under the Security Treaty, however, the Government would say either "yes" or "no" depending on the circumstances involved.

Mr. Sato told the Diet that the Government's attitude on "prior consultation" with the United States would be based on its independent judgment to be made in the national interest.

He also said that the Government could not commit itself beforehand on the stand it would take in prior consultations if it should be sought by USA.

Under Security Treaty arrangements between USA and Japan, the US Government is required to seek "prior consultation" with Japan on a major change in deployment of weaponry in Japan (introduction of nuclear arms) and in freely mounting combat operations from the country.

Mr. Aichi said that his Government would like to discuss with the US Government in what cases the Japanese Government would say "yes" and in what cases "no" when the "prior consultation" clause was invoked under the Security Treaty.

C. Subsidies To Rice Growers: The Government decided on June 20 to peg the producers' price of rice in 1969 at the present 20,640 yen per 150 kg and provide 22,500 million yen in subsidies to rice growers.

It also decided to keep the rice price for consumers for fiscal 1969 at the present level.

The subsidy will be distributed to city, town and village offices, in proportion to the respective volume of rice delivered to the Government during the past three years, for purchase of fertilizers, agricultural chemicals and other farming necessities.

Announcing the new rice prices for the year, the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato pledged in a statement to expedite construction of prosperous modern farming communities through the promotion by the Government of an over-all agricultural modernization policy. To enhance this, the Cabinet also would set up a special ministerial council on the promotion of agriculture.

KOREA (South)

A. Hanging Of North Korean Journalist: Soo Keun Lee (45), a leading North Korean journalist sentenced to death for spying by a Seoul court in May, was hanged at a prison in Seoul on July 3.

Mr. Lee, a former vice-president of North Korea's central news agency, had crossed the border between North and South Korea at the armistice village of Panmunjom on March 22, 1967.

The Seoul district court, in passing sentence, said he had pretended defection to the South while working as an agent under instructions from the North Korean Workers' Party. Mr. Lee slipped out of Seoul with a forged passport on January 27 this year in an attempt to reach Cambodia, but was arrested by South Viet-Namese police during a stopover at Saigon, and flown back to face trial. He did not appeal.

LAOS

A. Pathet Lao Gains: Pathet Lao sources claimed on June 28 that its forces, working in close co-operation with the "patriotic neutralist forces," were in full control of the Muong Soui region.

The sources stressed the military importance of the Muong Soui base which, it said, was equipped with air strips, artillery posts, and large stocks of ammunition. It had been used as a base for the recent attacks on the Xieng Khouang region.

One report said that Sala Pholkhom had also fallen to the Pathet Lao forces; but there was no immediate comment from military authorities.

The Pathet Lao news agency said that some of the forces of Gen. Kong Lae, a former neutralist commander, who had been forcibly enrolled into the Government Army, had revolted. The Government Army was said to be "dispersing in panic" and was "being tracked down by the People's Liberation Army and the local population."

The Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, who was in London when word of the Communist attacks reached him, called it an "invasion" by North Viet-Nam.

Sources in Vientiane said that a Government force of about 500 men had retreated to the north of Muong Soui to form a defensive line after the fall of the town.

A special Cabinet meeting was later held during which officials decided to re-take Muong Soui.

A year which had started grimly enough for the Government with the serious loss of Nakhang in the heart of Sam Neua province, 270 miles north of Vientiane in March, preceded and followed by other military setbacks, had by mid-Summer slowly started to show signs of improvement. In May, the Royal Laotian Army captured but did not hold Xieng Khouang, described as the Pathet Lao capital. The defeat of the Pathet Lao forces in Xieng Khouang then came, according to news agency reports, as a shot in the arm for Vientiane soldiers. Aside from confiscating large caches of military supplies by this initiative, Government troops had achieved their main purpose of relieving the base at Muong Soui. It was hoped at that time that if they could keep up the pressure on the Pathet Lao forces until the rainy season started, it would be impossible for the Pathet Lao to do anything about Muong Soui until the dry season—starting in October—facilitated movement of troops and equipment. At Muong Soui Government troops drove the Pathet Lao forces off some nearby hills, and in other areas they moved on with an unusual sense of purpose. They regained control of several areas and positions. However, on June 24, the position changed. Pathet Lao forces after recapturing Xieng Khouang from Government troops managed to move five battalions of troops back to Muong Soui without being detected by either Laotian or US intelligence.

The strategic position of Muong Soui—one of the three major Government bases in north-east Laos and with one of the area's best airfields—has been obvious to both sides. According to the Pathet Lao, it had been "illegally captured by the US imperialists and their henchmen and used by them as a spring-board to attack the Phou Kouth mountains and other areas in Xieng Khouang." The Government considered Muong Soui to be one of its main defence points on the road between the administrative capital of Vientiane and the Royal Capital in Luang Prabang.

NEPAL

A. Withdrawal Of Indian Military Personnel Requested: On July 12, Nepal officially asked India to withdraw its personnel from the northern checkposts and its military liaison group in Khatmandu.

This request was made by Mr. Bhim Bahadur Pandey, Ambassador to India, when he called on Mr. Surendrapal Singh, India's Deputy Minister for External Affairs.

Reports quoted official sources as saying that Nepal remained "firm on its stand". Nepal, they said, could at no time enter into any treaty or agreement with any country that would "compromise its national interests".

At the same time, officials said: "Nepal does not seek to do anything that may undermine its relations with India". But they added that "Nepal will not agree to do anything that compromises its sovereignty in the name of friendship either."

[There are 18 checkposts along Nepal's northern border which are manned by Nepalese armed personnel with one or more Indian civilians assisting them in maintaining wireless communications with Khatmandu. Half-a-dozen Indian Army officers, with about 12 subordinates form the Indian military liaison group in Khatmandu.]

B. Chinese Envoy: It was learnt in Khatmandu on July 6 that China had appointed Mr. Wang Tse as its new Ambassador to Nepal.

The post of Ambassador at the Chinese Embassy had been lying vacant for nearly two years when the head of the "Chinese mission suddenly left for home in the wake of the Cultural Revolution."

The Counsellor of the Chinese Embassy, who had also left for home during the Cultural Revolution, returned to Khatmandu recently.

C. Mr. R. Shaha Detained: Mr. Rishikesh Shaha, former Foreign Minister and a member of the National Panchayat, was detained under the Security Act in Khatmandu on July 10.

Earlier, on June 26 at a news conference Mr. Shaha had criticised the Prime Minister, Mr. K. Bisht and said that Mr. Bisht had committed a breach of privilege by making a Press statement on the arms assistance agreement with India while the National Panchayat was in session.

D. Ban On Three Newspapers: Publication of two leading language newspapers, Dainik Nepal and Nepal Times, was banned on July 10 for an indefinite period.

E. Plane Crash: A Royal Nepal Airlines Dakota, with 35 people on board, on July 12 crashed near a bridge over the Samri Khola, a small rivulet two miles north of the industrial town of Hetauda. All aboard were killed.

The plane was on a scheduled flight from Khatmandu to Simra. It lost contact with Khatmandu eight minutes after take-off. A day-long search by planes and helicopters failed to locate the missing plane. Meanwhile, a message from one of the search parties in the Himalayan Foothills area reached Khatmandu giving first news of the crash.

According to eye-witness reports, one wing of the plane hit an 8,000-foot-high cliff and caught fire immediately. It plunged to the ground like a ball of fire, leaving hardly any chance of survivors. The high hill is known locally as "Batase Danda" (windy ridge). The plane's wreckage fell in an area about eight miles north of Makwanpur Garhi, in dense tiger-infested jungles.

The site of the crash was wooded and helicopters could not land anywhere near.

Among the 35 people killed were 28 passengers and three infants, besides four members of the crew. There were several Indians among the passengers.

The Royal Nepal Airlines, which was formed in July, 1958, has a remarkably good record and there had been only one major crash during these 11 years. This was in August, 1962 when a Delhi-bound Dakota crashed in the Dhorptan area in West Nepal killing 12 people, including the Nepalese Ambassador to India, Mr. Narpratap Thapa.

SINGAPORE

A. World Bank Loan For Power Supply: The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development has announced a loan of $20.5 million to assist Singapore in expanding its power system.

Demand for power in Singapore has been growing at a phenomenal rate. Pressure has come both from large industrial concerns and from expanding domestic consumer supplies. Between 1964 and 1968, power sales increased at an annual rate exceeding 15 per cent.

The Public Utilities Board which supplies electric power has been meeting this demand by developing higher voltage and building new generating stations and power distribution points. But, substantial improvements cannot be expected without major development projects being undertaken forthwith. It is to this end the World Bank loan is intended. It will cover work undertaken during 1969-71 and will include the installations of 430 mva of primary and 650 mva of secondary distribution transformers together with 250 miles of cabling, switchgear and equipment for substations.

The total investment in electric power up to 1973 is in the region of $115 million. The Public Utilities Board will finance over half of this from its own resources. The entire cost of this project, however, is estimated to be $43.3 million, of which $32.2 million is requirement in foreign exchange. The World Bank loan is intended to cover part of this foreign exchange requirement. It will be for a term of 20 years at interest rate of 6½ per cent.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Withdrawal Of American Combat Troops—President R. Nixon's Deadline: In a nationally televised news conference on June 19, President R. Nixon said that all American combat troops would be withdrawn from Viet-Nam some time in 1970.

In what was described as the most optimistic statement on the war, he said he intended to beat the recommendation of the former Secretary of Defence, Mr. Clark M. Clifford, that about 100,000 troops be withdrawn this year and all ground combat troops by the end of 1970.

He rejected Communist demands that President Nguyen Van Thieu be replaced before serious talks could be held in Paris.

Acknowledging that progress in Paris was disappointing, he said: "We are not going to accede to the demand of the enemy that we dispose of President Thieu before they will talk." Asked if he was "wedded" to Mr. Thieu's Government, he said not in the sense that it had a veto over American actions. But, he said, Mr. Thieu was the elected President and he was co-operating with the United States in attempting to bring the war to an end.

Asked about orders to US commanders in Viet-Nam, he said they were directed to conduct the war with the minimum of American casualties.

CEYLON

A. Governor-General's Address To Parliament: In his Speech from the Throne setting forth Government policy on July 10, the Governor-General, Mr. William Gopallawa, referred to several measures being taken to improve economy at home and to promote regional and international co-operation in political, social and economic fields.

He said that the gross national product had gone up by 8.3 per cent, in spite of an adverse situation facing the export sector.

To meet credit requirements, he said, financial institutions would be re-organized soon. A National Development Bank would be established. Action had been taken to "Ceylonize" and broaden the banking system by permitting certain foreign banks operating in Ceylon to accept deposits from Ceylonese.

In the field of social welfare, a draft Social Insurance Bill and a new Bill on children and young persons would be presented to Parliament.

The following are excerpts from the Speech:

"My Government intends to introduce legislation to establish a Housing Corporation to co-ordinate and expand house-building activities. Legislation to enable tenants of Government and local authorities to purchase their flats and houses will be introduced.

"The re-organization of the Ceylon Institute of Scientific and Industrial Research to provide for the expansion and amplification of the facilities essential for technological work will be undertaken.

"An Atomic Energy Authority will be set up."

On development projects, he said: "Work on the construction of the Mahaveli Ganga Scheme Phase 1, Project 1, Polgolla Diversion, will commence shortly and, with the completion of the headworks, about 60,000 acres of existing paddy fields will be benefited and a further extent of about 90 000 thousand acres of new lands will be provided with irrigation for the first time.

"Financial provision will be made in the next year's estimates for flood protection projects in the Gin Ganga and Nilwala Ganga basins and later for the Kelani Ganga and Kalu Ganga basins. The World Bank has approved a loan of $25 million for the Maskeliya Oya Project Stage II.

"A considerable expansion in the timber exploitation capacity of the State Timber Corporation is being planned.

"My Government will continue to place the greatest emphasis on the development of agriculture and animal husbandry and will continue to give the fullest encouragement and support to farmers to increase food production. A milk powder packing centre and a milk powder manufacturing plant will come into operation in the course of the year.

"Legislation to amend the Paddy Lands Act in order to remove certain legal defects will be introduced. Legislation will be presented to enable subsidies to be paid for the planting of alternative crops in place of tea and rubber on uneconomic tea and rubber lands.

"The recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Co-operative Movement will receive careful consideration.

"The five-year programme providing for the construction and maintenance of 400 miles of agricultural roads at an approximate cost of Rs. 20 million has been prepared and will be implemented commencing from the current session of Parliament."

On industrial growth, he said: "The value of industrial output in 1968 was 46 per cent higher in the private sector than that in 1967, while in the public sector corporations it was 34 per cent higher than in the previous year.

"Production has commenced on several new industrial projects in the public sector. Work has also commenced on a large number of other industrial projects.

"At the end of last year nearly 280 new industrial projects in the private sector received provisional approval in addition to the 116 projects approved in 1967. Action will be taken to establish shortly Industrial Estates in Kandy, Galle and Jaffna.

"A Five-Year Development Programme for the fishing industry has been prepared and is being considered by my Government with a view to its implementation. My Government has set up a Shipping Corporation as a first step in establishing a Merchant Shipping Fleet.

"A Central Tea Board to co-ordinate and intensify Government action in respect of the tea industry will be established.

"The Insurance Corporation has initiated a number of schemes for the benefit of various sectors in the community such as a Housing Loan Scheme, a National Pension Scheme and a Rent-Purchase Housing Scheme. A Defective Title Insurance Scheme and an insurance scheme for farmers and fishermen are being formulated.

"In the field of education, my Government will expand the facilities in schools for teaching of vocational subjects such as agriculture, handicrafts, commerce and home science, and the first all-Island comprehensive residential school will be established in Pallekelle. Technical education will be expanded, and two Senior Technical Institutes and eight Junior Technical Institutes will be established. The establishment of a Technical Teacher Training Institution is under consideration.

"My Government proposes to take immediate measures to expand and diversify the opportunities for the employment of unemployed graduates both in the public and private sectors and will also initiate programes for their gainful self-employment in industry, agriculture and trade. At the same time, it will strengthen and expand the programmes already undertaken to organize the unemployed educated youth in the national service. By these means my Government hopes to make a major impact on the problems of unemployment that affect a developing country."

B. Loan From Britain: An Agreement under which Britain will provide a loan of £4 million to Ceylon was signed in Colombo on July 5.

The money will be used for the purchase from Britain of items such as fertilizers, agricultural and industrial machinery, tractor components, commercial vehicles, port equipment, marine engines, fishing gear, refrigerated milk vans and engineering stores.

The loan is interest-free and is repayable over a period of 25 years including an initial three-year grace period, as were the seven previous loans signed since November, 1965, and will bring Britain's total loans to Ceylon since that date to £17.21 million.

This loan is part of the British aid pledged at the meeting of the Aid Group in Paris in March when Ceylon's economic situation and import needs were considered.

CHINA

A. Attack By Soviet Gun-boats And Planes Alleged: Peking Radio on July 8 charged that Soviet armed units, gunboats and airplanes had intruded into Chinese territorial waters and air-space in Heilungkiang province in north-east China.

In a Chinese-language broadcast monitored in Tokyo, Peking Radio said the charge was contained in a Note delivered to the Soviet Embassy in Peking. The alleged intrusion took place at 9 a.m. on July 8.

The Note was quoted as saying that the intrusion took place on the Bata island district which is on the Chinese side of the main channel of Heilungkiang. Soviet frontier guards embarked on the island and opened fire at the Chinese inhabitants and militiamen who were engaged in production. "The Chinese militiamen were forced to hit back in self-defence under intolerable circumstances. The intruders were driven back." It was not known whether there were any casualties.

Later, a Soviet gunboat had intruded into the vicinity of Bata island and carried out shootings at the island in "a frenzied way." In the afternoon, two gunboats intruded into the same area. Civilian houses on the island were burnt. It added that six aircraft also flew over the island on many occasions.

The protest Note denounced the Soviet Union for carrying out fresh armed provocations on Chinese territory. "The Chinese Government raises the demand that the Soviet Government must not in words but in reality, immediately stop its intrusion into the Chinese territory," it said.

"The Chinese Government solemnly warns the Soviet Government that if you stubbornly go on persisting in your policy of carrying out aggression and armed provocations against China, you are bound to meet with more serious punishment from the Chinese people. The Soviet Government must take full responsibility for all serious consequences arising therefrom."

An earlier Chinese protest at Russian air intrusion had been made in the weeks immediately after the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia. At that time, probably, the Russians were seriously disturbed lest the adverse Chinese reaction to the invasion should prompt China to try to seize an advantage by some incursion across the border in the east.

The Chinese had alleged at the time that there had been many previous intrusions into their air-space.

Mr. A. Gromyko's Charge:

The Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. A. Gromyko, in a speech at the opening of the Supreme Soviet in Moscow on July 10 accused China of preventing progress at the border talks in Khabarovsk (see page 9086).

He declared that "even our most rabid enemies have never used such unworthy methods" as China was now using against the Soviet Union.

He observed that even on such a "narrow question" as navigation on border rivers, with which the Khabarovsk talks were dealing, "it is difficult to say so far anything about the outcome of these talks in view of certain statements made from the very start and later by the Chinese representatives and the recent new provocation by the Chinese side on the Amur River."

He cautiously welcomed American initiatives for a summit meeting and arms limitation talks and repeated Soviet proposals for a European security conference and an Asian collective security arrangement.

He said USSR "cannot be passive" to any development affecting its own security and that of its allies. The Warsaw Pact "will never allow any one to encroach on the security of its members and the gains of socialism in these countries."

"The allegations that socialist countries favour a somewhat curtailed, and not full, sovereignty for States should be firmly rejected. This is nothing but slander," he added in what was clearly a reference to the so-called "Brezhnev doctrine of limited sovereignty."

He said that the Soviet proposal—vague, so far—of a collective security system in Asia "has met with a broad international response, particularly in Asian countries."

JAPAN

A. Tokyo Metropolitan Elections: The Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) on July 13 secured the largest representation in the 126-member Tokyo Metropolitan Assembly by winning 54 seats against 35 it had held in the old Assembly.

Figures for the other parties were: Japan Socialist Party 24; Komeito 25; Communists 18; Democratic Socialists 4; and Independent 1.

The Socialists suffered a severe setback, losing almost half its seats It had 42 seats in the old Assembly. The Komeito won all the seats it contested—the third time that this party had performed such a feat.

Press commentators said that the Socialist Party was badly beaten because of the low quality of its candidates, many of them dull, elderly, retired trade unionists with little experience of broad social issues, and the incompetence of the party machine.

Socialist organizations had "almost collapsed in Tokyo", one disillusioned party worker commented. The party was full of trade unionists "repeating cliches." No wonder it had performed so miserably.

The Socialist Party is at its strongest in the medium-size cities of Japan, not in the big cities. So it was the communists, who doubled their representation to 18 seats, and the Komeito who benefited from social distress, not the Socialists.

The Tokyo municipal elections have long been considered the barometer of Japan's political feeling.

B. Plea For Total Nuclear Test Ban: Japan's attitude towards problems of disarmament was outlined on July 4 at the Disarmament Committee in Geneva by the country's chief delegate, Mr. Koichiro Asakai.

He called for a complete ban on nuclear weapons tests and a halt in the production of fissionable nuclear materials for weapons.

He said that though Japan agreed to the view of prohibiting military use of the ocean floor, in principle, it could support the proposal that would ban purely defensive devices from seabeds.

For verifying compliance with an underground nuclear test ban Agreement, he said, Japan would like to suggest installation of unmanned seismological observatories and exchange of seismological observation data.

He hoped that progress would be made in US-Soviet talks on reduction of strategic missiles.

He welcomed the accumulation of collateral measures for disarmament including the Partial Test Ban Treaty, the Outer Space Treaty and the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. "In promoting these collateral measures, however, we must always take into account the fact that they must be such as to help maintain and strengthen world peace at each stage."

He said that Japan attached special importance to the US-Soviet Agreement on the principles for general and complete disarmament concluded in 1961, which said that "all measures of general and complete disarmament should be balanced so that at no stage of the implementation of the Treaty could any State or group of States gain military advantages and that security is ensured equally for all."

C. Controversy Over White Paper On National Living Environment: The Cabinet in an unprecedented step on July 4 decided to withhold approval of a White Paper on the national living environment in 1968 which emphasized the need to improve the people's welfare.

The Finance Minister, Mr. Takeo Fukuda and several of his colleagues raised strong objections to a part of the White Paper which pointed to Japan's lag in social welfare.

The White Paper had been submitted to the Cabinet by the Director of the Economic Planning Agency, Mr. Wataro Kanno.

Mr. Fukuda questioned the fact that the White Paper used the number of public libraries and the park area to compare the statuses of Japanese and Americans in social facilities for leisure. He argued that the number of libraries and parks were an insufficient yardstick for the comparison intended. He complained that the results of comparison left the impression that the Government was urging people to enjoy their leisure more.

Mr. Fukuda is known to hold a critical view of the recent emphasis in the Japanese society on consumption and material comfort.

Cabinet Ministers were apparently annoyed with frequent observations in the White Paper pointing to deterioration in the living environment for Japanese people brought about by industrial and traffic hazards and frequent accidents. The Ministers also disagreed with the sub-title of the White Paper which urged that priority be given to improvement of living standards. They argued that this would give the impression that the Government was encouraging people to concentrate on their happiness or what Japanese call "my home-ism."

Mr. Kanno agreed to re-write the sections of the White Paper disputed by the other Ministers.

Main Features:

In the text submitted to the Cabinet meeting, the White Paper singled out health, safety, comfort, creativity and equality as the five basic objectives for achievement of an "affluent society of the future."

The report has two chapters—the first concerns itself with the analysis of the "trends in national living environment" and the second with recommendations for measures by the Government to raise the living standards of the people.

In the first chapter, the report said that, while both income and spending of the people had risen, discontent about the unsatisfactory living environment resulting from relative lags in social spendings had also increased during 1968. It reported that a "feeling of poverty" was becoming increasingly noticeable among the people. This was due to increases in public hazards, housing and traffic problems, the outflow of young people from farms, disturbances on university campuses and the problem of the aged.

While the gap had narrowed in the living standards of urban and rural communities on the economic side, the people had begun to complain more about social distortions and inequalities and the lag in opportunities for education and social advancement.

In its analysis of the people's living standards last year, the report said that in 1968, personal income rose by 15.9 per cent from 1967 compared with 16 per cent in 1967.

Personal savings rose by 19.7 per cent in 1968 as compared with 19.4 per cent recorded in 1967, while ownership of cars, colour television sets and coolers became even more widespread among the people.

On the spending side, it said, consumer spendings in 1968 rose by 15.1 per cent in nominal terms and 9.4 per cent in real terms.

The per capita spending of farming households last year was 87.9 per cent as compared with 100 for the average spending by the families of salaried workers, indicating that the gap between the two categories had narrowed by eight points in three years.

D. Aid To Indonesia: Japan and Indonesia initialled in Tokyo on June 28 Notes of Exchange concerning Japan's aid of $120 million to Indonesia for the current fiscal year ending on March 31, 1970.

The Notes were signed at a brief ceremony held at the Foreign Ministry between Mr. Tsunemitsu Ueda, Director of the Foreign Ministry's Economic Co-operation Bureau, and Mr. Widjojo Nitisastro, Chairman of the Indonesian National Development Planning Board.

Japan's aid under the accord included $55 million in the form of commodities, development aid worth $10 million and food aid worth $10 million under Kennedy Round tariff-cutting talks.

In addition, it would provide Indonesia with $45 million worth of various kinds of aid for dam construction, fertilizers and rice. This aid would be extended in the next or subsequent fiscal years.

LAOS

A. Removal Of North Viet-Namese Troops—Request To Britain And Soviet Union: The acting Foreign Minister, Mr. Khamphan

Panya, told a news conference in Vientiane on June 30 that his Government had asked Britain and the Soviet Union to help terminate the fighting in the country and get North Viet-Namese troops out.

Messages from his Government had been handed to the diplomats of the two countries which were co-Chairmen of the 1962 Geneva Conference on Laos.

The messages protested at the alleged North Viet-Namese attack on Muong Soui (see page 9095), a strategic town 160 km north of Vientiane which fell to the Pathet Lao forces a few weeks before. The Minister stated that North Viet-Namese prisoners taken at Muong Soui would be shown to newsmen soon.

In Moscow, the British Ambassador, Sir Duncan Wilson, called at the Foreign Ministry the same day (June 30) to discuss the situation in Laos.

An Embassy spokesman said that he was received by Mr. Mikhail Kapitsa, head of the Ministry's South-East Asia Department, but could give no details of their discussion.

Observers in Moscow noted that past British overtures of this nature had met with no response from the Soviet Government, which had maintained that the tense situation in Laos was due solely to US military intervention.

Military Claims:

On July 4, a Defence Ministry spokesman claimed in Vientiane that Government forces had re-occupied the strategic mountain area of Phou Soung and were continuing to push towards Muong Soui. The mountain is about 10 km east of Phou Koun, where Government forces earlier claimed that they had beaten back an attack by North Viet-Namese troops. There had been a lull since the recapture of Phou Soung.

Gen. Kouprasith, commander of the Fifth Laos Military District, said that many of the 100 North Viet-Namese killed at Phou Koun had fought to the last bullet. The Communists had been vulnerable to air strikes and could not receive new supplies or escape from their trenches once their retreat route had been cut off.

He also disclosed that Government troops had uncovered a big communist cache on June 26 at Saladendin, about 30 km north of Paksane. Another large arms cache was discovered earlier this year at Xieng Khouang, 192 km north-east of Vientiane. (Xieng Khouang was re-captured by Pathet Lao and North Viet-Namese forces in June).

According to Press reports, most military observers did not believe that despite big efforts by Government forces, they had the ability to recapture Muong Soui.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Memorandum On Peace Settlement: To mark the 15th anniversary of the Geneva Agreement on Viet-Nam, the Foreign Ministry in Hanoi issued a memorandum re-iterating that any settlement of the Viet-Nam problem would be possible only if independence, unity and territorial integrity of the country were guaranteed.

It said that the basis of a solution could be found in the 10-point plan of the National Liberation Front of South Viet-Nam (see page 9001).

The memorandum said: "As long as the United States forces are in South Viet-Nam, the South Viet-Namese people cannot have a really free and democratic election free from foreign interference. If the United States means to respect the South Viet-Namese people's right to self-determination through really free and democratic elections, it must not oppose the establishment of a Provisional Coalition Government with a view to holding free General Elections as provided for in the 10-point overall solution of the South Viet-Nam National Front for Liberation."

The memorandum described the formation of the Provisional Government of the Republic of South Viet-Nam and its Advisory Council as "a historic event marking a new and very great victory of heroic South Viet-Namese people. It is a brilliant outcome of military, political and diplomatic victory and inevitable development in the struggle for the rights of the masses of South Viet-Nam that the South Viet-Namese people have been waging for the past 15 years and especially since early 1968.

"The Provisional Revolutionary Government of the Republic of South Viet-Nam is a legal government and the authentic representative of the South Viet-Namese people. It has decided to mobilize the South Viet-Nam armed forces and people to fight until there is not a single foreign aggressor on Viet-Namese soil.

"Since taking office, the Nixon Administration has obdurately refused the unconditional withdrawal of its troops and those of other foreign countries belonging to the US camp from South Viet-Nam. It continues to support the Thieu-Ky-Huong puppet administration and to oppose the South Viet-Nam people's right of self-determination."

Over the past 15 years, the Government of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and the Viet-Namese people had unceasingly remained faithful to the fundamental principles of the Geneva Agreements and had fulfilled their obligations under these Agreements. "After repudiating the Geneva Agreements the United States has been compelled to state its readiness to respect them, but it only distorts them. It has, however, met with miserable failure. The fundamental principles of the 1954 Geneva Agreements on Viet-Nam have firmly stood despite all attempts of sabotage by the United States and its lackeys."

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. President Thieu's Six-Point Plan For Elections: President Nguyen Van Thieu proposed on July 11 the establishment of an Electoral Commission to arrange free elections in the country. To ensure free and fair elections, all parties and groups, including the National Liberation Front, could be represented on the Commission.

He declared: "To move the peace negotiations forward, I feel that a major initiative is needed. To that effect, we are willing to make, as another act of goodwill, a comprehensive offer for the political settlement of the conflict."

He said that both sides in the struggle had said that internal affairs should be decided by the South Viet-Namese themselves in a free and democratic fashion. The only way for people of South Viet-Nam to exercise their right of self-determination was through elections in which they could genuinely express their choice, free from fear and coercion.

He said that free election could be based on six principles, including supervision by an international body. These six principles were:

"(1) All political parties and groups, including NLF, can participate in the elections if they renounce violence and pledge themselves to accept the results of the elections.

"(2) To make sure that the elections would be conducted in all fairness, an Electoral Commission could be set up, in which all political parties and groups, including NLF, could be represented. The Election Commission will assure equal opportunities in the campaigning to all candidates. It will also enable all political parties and groups to participate in watching the polls to see to it that they are honestly counted.

"(3) An international body is to be established to supervise the elections, and to make sure that the elections are held under conditions fair to all.

"(4) We are prepared to discuss with the other side the time-table and the modalities under which the elections will be held.

"(5) There will be no reprisals or discrimination after the elections.

"(6) The Government of Viet-Nam declares that it will abide by the results of the election, whatever these results may be. We challenge the other side to declare the same."

American Support:

In Washington the same day (July 11), President Nixon said that "if Hanoi is ready for serious negotiations and free elections, the proposals made today by South Viet-Nam should open the way at last for a rapid settlement of the conflict."

Mr. Nixon said in a statement that "if the other side genuinely wants peace, it now has a comprehensive set of offers which permit a fair and reasonable settlement." If Hanoi "approaches us in this spirit, it will find us reasonable."

He added that "Hanoi has nothing to gain by waiting."

Proposals Rejected By Hanoi And NLF:

On July 17 in Paris, delegations of North Viet-Nam and the National Liberation Front to the peace talks rejected President Thieu's new peace programme calling for free elections.

But American and South Viet-Namese spokesmen refused to concede that the situation was "utterly hopeless."

The Chief American delegate, Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge, told newsmen after a 4½-hour session: "I am an optimist—unless I am told no 25 times, I am willing to hope for a yes."

In the formal conference session and subsequent news conferences, spokesmen for the North Viet-Namese delegation and the "Provisional" Revolutionary Government of South Viet-Nam (PRG), which represents NLF, came close to saying "no" 25 times.

The strongest statement came from Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh, head of the PRG delegation. In her formal address, she said PRG "categorically exposes and rejects the so-called solution of free elections as a treachery of the United States and the Saigon administration."

The North Viet-Namese also stressed that they had "denounced, condemned and rejected" the South Viet-Namese programme.

The proposals of July 11 by President Thieu were formally presented to "the other side" at the regular weekly session of the stalled peace talks. Mr. Thieu's peace offer would give representatives of the NLF the right to run as candidates in new elections and to sit on supervisory commissions.

Although the Communists had previously denounced Mr. Thieu's plan as "a swindle," the allied delegations went into the talks publicly hoping for a change of heart. In his presentation Mr. Lodge called the election plan "a momentous step." He said: "If your side rejects these proposals out of hand or even refuses to discuss them, the gravest doubt will be cast on your interest in a negotiated settlement of the war."

The South Viet-Namese delegate, Mr. Pham Dang Lam, said: "Your side has been too precipitous in condemning such a generous and sincere peace offer ... In fact you have no valid reason not to view the proposal as a constructive one."

The North Viet-Namese replied by pressing their ten-point peace plan which calls for the formation of a "peace cabinet" to organize elections followed by the creation of a coalition government.

Mrs. Binh, speaking for the PRG, said Mr. Thieu's condition that the Viet-Cong would have to renounce violence in order to participate in the election was tantamount to asking them "to renounce the right of resistance against the United States for national salvation."

She also pointed out that some important qualifications to Mr. Thieu's offer had been added by South Viet-Nam's Foreign Minister, Mr. Tran Chanh Thanh, who had said that the election plan was not open to avowed communists or candidates who made communist propaganda. She added that Mr. Thanh's statement that the South Viet-Namese Army—"the puppet army"—would insure order during election time made it clear that the proposed mixed Election Commission would have no real power or authority.

The South Viet-Namese and American spokesmen refused to shed any light on the apparent contradictions between Mr. Thieu's original proposal and Mr. Thanh's subsequent remarks. They said that if "the other side" wanted to explore these issues they should do so in direct, private talks with the South Viet-Namese.

The North Viet-Namese delegates gave their full support to the PRG stand. Mr. Xuan Thuy, head of Hanoi's delegation, repeated the North Viet-Namese argument that any elections held under American "guns and bayonets" would be rigged. He said the proposal was obviously the result of public pressure on the Nixon Administration and that the American President's warm welcome for Mr. Thieu's announcement sounded "like a mother who praises her child when it sings."

In a question-and-answer session after the conference, he justified the negative Communist attitude to Mr. Thieu's plan by saying that the allies had consistently rejected the Viet-Cong's ten-point peace programme. He said this programme deserved "a serious response." He repeated this answer several times when asked if Hanoi's rejection of Mr. Thieu's plan was "final" and "decisive."

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Man Lands On Moon—"Apollo-XI's" Historic Adventure: Man's most daring adventure yet began on July 16 when Apollo-XI space-craft, with three astronauts on board, was hurled into space from Cape Kennedy in USA on a pioneering nine-day journey to the Moon and back. Two of them—Neil M. Armstrong and Edwin E. Aldrin—landed on the Moon at 1.48 a.m. (IST) on July 21. The third astronaut, Michael Collins, remained in the command ship "Columbia." Armstrong and Aldrin landed on the Moon in a Lunar Module (LEM) called "Eagle". They walked on the Moon for about 2½ hours, had a sleep in the LEM for about four hours—they spent altogether 9½ hours on the Moon—and blasted away to dock with the command ship "Columbia" and returned to Earth. They splashed down in the Pacific near Hawaii on 10.27 p.m. (IST) on July 24. The capsule landed upside-down in the sea, the only major flaw in an otherwise perfect mission.

This had happened earlier with Apollo-VII and Apollo-VIII with no danger to the crew.

The two men went "in peace for all mankind." It was the fulfilment of a dream countless generations of mankind had dreamt of, a commitment President John F. Kennedy had made when he declared landing a man on the Moon in this decade and bringing him back safely a national goal of the United States.

The historic landing came 11 years, nine months and 16 days after the Space Age was inaugurated by the Soviet Union by putting into orbit Sputnik I, the first artificial satellite, on October 4, 1957. It came eight years, three months and eight days after Yuri Gagarin orbited the Earth on April 12, 1961 to become the first spacefarer.

Story Of Voyage:

Despite the enormous complexity of operation and the extreme intricacy of vehicles and machinery employed, the whole mission was, from start to finish, flawless.

The 93-hour count-down was as smooth as could be wished, and at tne end of it precisely at 7.02 p.m. on July 16, the mighty 363-foot-high, 3,817-ton Saturn-V roared into space. The rocket screamed on its pad just for 8.9 seconds as a computer system made certain that all five booster engines generated a total 700,000-lb thrust. When the computer sensed that all was well, it commanded four 40,000-lb steel restraining arms to flip back to free the pulsating giant. With agonizing slowness, the rocket, with the three astronauts aboard, then rose on a white pillar of fire, gradually picking up speed as its hungry power plant gulped fuel at the rate of 15 tons a second. Twelve seconds from lift-off the guidance system tipped the rocket slightly on to a south-east direction and it sped out over the Atlantic into a planned parking Earth orbit. After it had orbited the Earth 1½ times in 2-1/2 hours, the third stage of the rocket burnt for just five minutes and 29 seconds, to wrench Apollo-XI out of the hold of terrestrial gravity. With a jolt the rocket's speed increased from 28,000 km per hour and inserted itself into a planned 73-hour lunar trajectory..

About three hours and 11 minutes after take-off, when the rocket was well settled in its course towards the Moon, the command-service module section separated from the launch rocket's third stage, turned around and then docked with the Lunar Excursion Module (LEM) stored in the rocket's garage section. With this operation, the launch phase of the Apollo-XI mission had been completed with mathematical precision.

Early on the morning of July 20, the LEM pilot Aldrin entered the module "Eagle" through a narrow tunnel connecting it with the Command Module, "Columbia," for inspection. The LEM had not been checked since the blast-off on July 16. If the fragile vehicle had been damaged during take-off, the lunar landing mission would have had to be called off. However, there was nothing amiss. Finding that the module was in perfect condition, Aldrin returned to the Command Module for an eight-hour rest, after which he and Armstrong were to begin the hazardous descent to the lunar surface.

At 11-30 p.m. on July 20, the "Eagle,' 'with Armstrong and Aldrin aboard was separated from the main Apollo ship commanded by Collins, but it was not until an hour later that it was put into a descent orbit. After one hour, the two astronauts cautiously led the Lunar Module out of its 'descent orbit' into a 'powered descent path.' It came down in an arc braking its speed with the descent engine, but seeing it heading towards a crater littered with rocks and boulders, they took manual control of the craft and landed at a level site. It touched down softly in the Sea of Tranquillity at 1.47 a.m. about four miles away from the original targeted landing site.

The high point in the astounding lunar drama was set for 11.47 a.m. (IST) on July 21 when Armstrong was scheduled to step out on the Moon, but the two astronauts were so excited by the momentous achievement that Armstrong asked for permission to advance the 'Moon walk.' The Mission Control at Houston readily agreed. Accordingly, donning his bulky space suit that gave him the life-sustaining environment of his planet, Armstrong crept laboriously down the nine-step ladder at the side of the Lunar Module and stood on the soil of the celestial body at 8-16 a.m. (IST) on July 21. His excitement could be measured from the fact that his heart beat rate for the first 30 minutes doubled as he stood on the Moon.

Twenty minutes after Armstrong had ventured forth alone on the Moon, Aldrin joined him for a busy two-hour exploration of the new world, and also for doing certain miscellaneous chores. The two together collected about 27 kg of rock samples, installed the "peace plaque" and the US flag on the Moon, placed a micro-film of messages from world leaders, and set up three experiments. One experiment consisted of establishing on the Moon a sensitive seismometer which would record any moonquakes and relay them to Earth. Selenologists hope to learn by the experiment a lot about the physical make-up of the Moon and the processes that go on inside it. [Subsequently, it was found that the seismometer was registering nothing, not even the trembling caused by the Lunar Module's take-off from the Moon's surface]. A second experiment related to installing a laser instrument that would enable scientists to measure the distance between the Moon and the Earth at any time to within 15 centimetres of the exact figure. From the figures thus obtained for various time factors, the scientists believe, it would be possible to have a better understanding of the nature of gravity and other connected fundamental questions. The third experiment was more simple as it involved suspending an aluminium foil against sunrays. When exposed to the constant stream of particles expelled by the Sun, it would trap rare gases such as argon, krypton, zenon, neon and helium. Brought back to Earth in a vacuum box, the trapped gases are expected to give scientists new insights into the Sun and the solar wind that blows through the solar system.

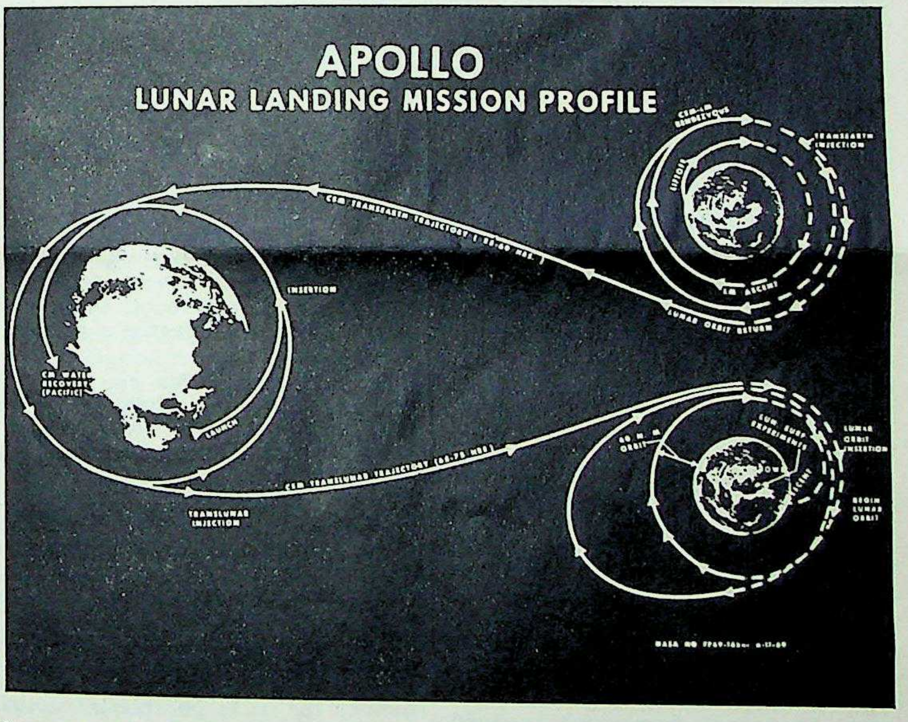
The most highly-prized trophy in the Moon expedition was undoubtedly the 27 kg of rock samples the astronauts brought back with them. Interest in these specimens had sharpened considerably since Aldrin reported that some of the rocks he dug up were "almost wet". Now speculation was rife that there might indeed be water on the Moon, and if there was water, life could also be present. Presence of water also would raise enormous other possibilities, like colonizing the Moon and setting up industries there. But even if they found no water on the Moon ultimately, the rock samples were expected to provide answers to a number of vexing questions. It would be possible to deduce from the rock sample, for instance, the probable age of the Moon, its origin and the major elements that constitute it. It is said that since there is no atmosphere on the Moon, there has been no weathering of its rocks, and so geologically the Moon's past and present are one. It means that clues to the events of billions of years must be strewn across its surface with indisputable clarity.

During their 2½-hour ramble on the Moon's surface, the two astronauts described the new world in vivid detail. Armstrong found the lunar surface fine and powdery which adhered like powdered charcoal to the sole and outside of his boots. There was not the least difficulty in moving about on the lunar surface because of the low gravity. Armstrong, describing a relatively level plain in front of him, said that there were a number of craters from five to 50 feet in diameter and that some ridges were 20 to 30 feet high. There were also thousands of little, one and two-foot craters. He described a hill on the ground track ahead of him, but its distance from him could not be estimated—it could be half-a-mile or might be one mile. [On the Moon, in a desert, estimation of distances is very tricky]. He said that the targeted area where the Lunar Module was scheduled to land originally was extremely rough with a large number of small craters and big boulders, some much larger than five to ten feet in size.

Armstrong confirmed previous reports by Apollo-VIII and Apollo-X astronauts that the Moon was essentially light chalky gray. "Some of the surface rocks that have been fractured by the rocket engine plume are light gray on the outside, but where they have been broken they display a dark, very dark gray interior and looks like country basalt". He gave it a poetic touch: "It (the Moon surface) has a stark beauty all its own. It is different, but it is very pretty out here". On the strength of lunar ground, he said, the spacecraft's foot pads had pressed only an inch or two into the soft lunar surface. His own boots sank only a "small fraction—about one-eighth of an inch".

Aldrin and Armstrong, doing their chores on the lunar surface. were behind schedule by about ten minutes; so, to complete their assigned work they asked for extra time to spend on the Moon. This was granted, but even then a minor sample experiment had to be cancelled for lack of time. Then, after repeated proddings from ground control, the first men on the Moon returned to the Lunar Module, sealed the hatch and settled down for a well-earned rest.

The Houston Control Mission awakened the men from their first sleep on the Moon at 8-30 p.m. (IST) —on July 21—after six hours to get ready for the scheduled lift-off from the Moon at 11-23 p.m. (IST). The "Eagle's" lift-off was the most dangerous part of the project after the actual Moon landing. For instance, if the ascent engine of the Lunar Module failed to respond, the two men would have been left behind and died through lack of oxygen within a short while. But the engine fired exactly at the scheduled moment and for exactly the period pre-planned—seven minutes and 18 seconds. Three minutes from lift-off, "Eagle" achieved its maximum thrust and soared away from the Moon into an elliptical orbit. It then chased the Command Module in orbit 112 km above and 70 km ahead, and later docked with it. When Armstrong and Aldrin rejoined Collins in the Command Module, after some "jerking around", "Eagle" was jettisoned and left behind to remain in lunar orbit and eventually crash on the Moon's surface.



At 10-27 a.m. (IST) on July 24, the last lap of their longest ever journey was begun. With a strong burst of fire they accelerated the Command Module to jerk it out of the lunar orbit and put it on a trans-Earth trajectory 73 hours and 400,000 km long. The firing was exactly right and the correct path was achieved without a hitch.

Since the launching from Cape Kennedy on July 16, Neil Armstrong, Edwin Aldrin and Michael Collins had travelled 1,532,000 km through space and orbited the Moon Moon for 59 hours.

The Time-Table:

Below are the highlights of their historic mission (all timings IST):

July 16:

7.02 p.m.: Saturn rocket blasted off from Cape Kennedy to hurl into space Apollo-XI carrying astronauts Neil A. Armstrong, Edwin E. Aldrin Jr. and Michael Collins;

9.46 p.m.: Third stage of rocket was fired to raise speed from 17,400 miles per hour to 24,200 mph. and Apollo-XI moved out of Earth orbit towards the Moon, 230,000 miles away;

11.11 p.m.: The astronauts separated command ship, pivoted around and linked up nose to nose with lunar module "Eagle", pulling it free from its lodging atop the third stage.

July 17 and 18:

Apollo-XI continued its journey to the Moon. The astronauts made mid-course corrections, as necessary. During this period, they made two colour television transmissions.

10.56 p.m.: Apollo-XI went into elliptical orbit around Moon.

July 20:

4.44 a.m.: Aldrin opened tunnel and entered lunar module for test;

6.51 a.m.: Aldrin returned to command ship;

6.27 p.m.: Aldrin entered lunar module for hop to Moon;

6.52 p.m.: Armstrong joined Aldrin in lunar module;

11.20 p.m.: Lunar module separated from command ship in which Collins was left alone.

July 21:

1.49 a.m.: Lunar module landed in Sea of Tranquillity with its precious human cargo. Man arrived on the Moon. For the next ten hours, Armstrong and Aldrin remained in the LEM checking equipment and making other preparations.

11.42 a.m.: Armstrong opened LEM hatch and began descent on ladder attached to one of its landing legs; on the second rung he paused to open a compartment containing a black-and-white television camera.

11.47 a.m.: Armstrong stepped on the Moon to become the first man to walk on a celestial body.

12.12 p.m.: Aldrin joined Armstrong on the lunar surface. For the next two hours the two astronauts planted the US flag, gathered soil and rock samples, planted scientific equipment to be left behind and took photographs.

2.12 p.m.: Armstrong and Aldrin returned to Lunar Module and for the next nine hours they remained on the lunar surface in LEM.

11.25 p.m.: LEM ascent engine was fired to lift off using descent as launching pad.

July 22:

3.02 a.m.: Command ship docked with LEM. Armstrong and Aldrin then rejoined Collins in the main ship through tunnel.

6.55 a.m.: LEM was jettisoned in lunar orbit.

10.27 p.m.: Apollo-XI engine was fired to blast out of lunar orbit and begin return journey to Earth.

For the next 2½ days the spaceship continued the homeward journey and the astronauts made mid-course corrections.

July 24:

7.08 p.m.: Mid-course correction.

9.54 p.m.: Command module, with the three astronauts on board, entered Earth's atosphere.

10.14 p.m.: Main parachutes of Apollo-XI were opened.

10.21 p.m.: Splash-down in the Pacific Ocean, about 400 miles south-west of Hawaii.

President R. Nixon's Telephone To Moon:

In a telephone talk to the two men on the Moon, President R. Nixon said that through them "the heavens have become a part of man's world."

He told them: "For one priceless moment in the whole history of man, all the people on this Earth are truly one: one in their pride in what you have done and one in our prayers that you will return safely to Earth."

Armstrong replied: "Thank you, Mr. President. It is a great honour and privilege for us to be here representing not only USA but men of peace of all nations, men with interest and the curiosity of man's exploration of the future. It is an honour for us to be able to participate here today."

Mr. Nixon then added: "And thank you very much and I look forward—all of us look forward—to seeing you on the Hornet (the US Navy's Apollo-XI recovery aircraft carrier) on July 24."

Aldrin ended the conversation by saying: "Thank you very much, sir".

Armstrong was the first to set foot on its alien soil warming in the lunar sunrise. His first words at that moment were: "That's one small step for a man, one giant leap for mankind.

"The surface is fine and powdered, like powdered charcoal to the soles of my boot. I can see footprints of my boot in the fine particles."

He stepped first on to one of the four saucer-like footpads of his spacecraft. Then the Moon. He was in the bitter cold of lunar shadows as the camera caught the sight of his left foot pressing into the lunar soil.

Before he was joined by Aldrin, Armstrong scoured the surface of the Moon, appearing phosphorescent in the sunlight, his white suit blinding. He unveiled a plaque fitted to the leg of the descent stage of the Lunar Module and read out aloud the words on it:

> "Here men from the planet Earth first set foot upon the Moon, July 1969 AD. We came in peace for all mankind."

The plaque remains behind on the Moon.

Looking about him, he said: "It has a stark beauty all its own. It is different. But it is very pretty out here."

On the effect of the Moon's gravity, he said: "You have to cross your foot over to stay under where your centre of mass is."

LEM's Vital Statistics:

The Lunar Excursion Module (LEM), which helped man turn space fiction into space fact, was born amidst doubts and uncertainties. The story of its birth is fascinating. Starting from a few drawings, it grew into a sensitive instrument of manned Moon landing. Its flanks were made of wafer-thin aluminium and they could never stand exposure to the atmosphere of the Earth.

The ladder by which the astronauts stepped on to the surface of the Moon was specially made for the one-sixth gravity of the Moon. If the ladder is used on the Earth it could very well come apart. Below are the vital statistics of the LEM:

Weight (empty) approximately: 32,500 lbs.

Height (with legs extended): 22 feet, 11 inches.

Weight (with propellant and crew): 9,000 lbs.

Diameter (diagonally across landing gear): 31 feet.

Habitable volume: 160 cubic feet.

Ascent stage height: 12 feet, 4 inches.

Ascent stage weight (empty): 4,850 lbs.

Ascent stage width: 14 feet, 1 inch.

Ascent stage engine thrust: 3,500 lbs.

Descent stage height (landing gear extended): 100 feet, 7 inches.

Descent stage width (at widest point of its octagonal shape): 14 feet, 1 inch.

Descent stage weight (empty): 4,300 lbs.

Descent stage engine thrust: Throttleable from 1,050 to 9,710 lbs.

Diameter of footpads: 37 inches.

Moon's Wetness May Be Due To Glycerol:

What is the Moon's wetness due to?

Amidst growing speculation about the nature of the liquid below the Moon's surface, as reported by the US astronauts, Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin, a scientist in New Delhi has put forward a hypothesis of this liquid.

According to Dr. B. K. Nayar of the Council of Scientific and Industrial Research, it could not be water. The wetness will most probably be due to glycerol, a pure form of common glycerine.

Water could not exist in a liquid form on lunar surface at its high temperature of 117 Centigrade, 17 degrees higher than the boiling point of water on Earth.

Dr. Nayar says that glycerol satisfies all known facts about interplanetary space. It has a high boiling point, low vapour pressure at Moon temperatures, low thermal conductivity, and a structure consisting of hydrogen, oxygen, carbon, water, ammonia and formaldehyde.

Glycerol has a boiling point of 290 degrees Centigrade, vapour pressure of about a m.m. at the highest Moon temperature of 117 degrees Centigrade, and thermal conductivity of about half that of water.

The sweet, thick, non-toxic, edible glycerol existing on the Moon, he says, might have been the Biblical "manna" which dropped as honey from the heavens to feed the desert wanderers in ancient times.

Indian Parliament's Homage:

The two Houses of the Indian Parliament applauded the American Moon-walkers, Armstrong and Aldrin on July 21, the Lower House allowing itself the liberty of offering a standing ovation to the space heroes.

The Premier, Mrs. Indira Gandhi led the Lok Sabha in offering its tribute to the two Moon-walkers. The third of the trio, Michael Collins, manning the command ship "Columbia", was not forgotten. Mrs. Gandhi made specific mention of Collins and there was repeated ovation as the Opposition joined the Treasury Benches in welcoming "this greatest of adventures."

NASA Officials On Future Inter-Planetary Travels:

US Space Agency officials said on July 22 that Apollo-XI's successful Moon landing demonstrated that man now had the ability to explore all the planets of the solar system —and even aim for the stars beyond.

They added that space travel would not be limited to the young, healthy test-pilot types. One official, aged 55, said he still hoped to go himself.

Dr. George Mueller, Associate Administrator for Manned Space Flights, said there were no practical limits to the exploration of space.

He added: "It seems quite clear that the planets of the solar system are well within our ability to explore—both manned and unmanned—at the present time.

"In order to go to the stars (beyond the solar system), we need to develop a new source of energy—a new source of the giant thrust that is necessary to carry stations from this solar system to its adjacent neighbours in the galaxy.

"However, we at least know in principle what that source of energy could be and it requires only an invention to make it available."

He was referring to nuclear fusion, the source of energy in the Sun and in hydrogen bombs.

Dr. George Gilruth (55), Director of the Manned Space-craft Centre at Houston was asked if he wanted to go into space.

He replied: "I have been hopeful ever since I started working on space —and I know many of us here have—that I will see the time when I could fly into space.

"I'm still hopeful that the next 10 years will see an outgrowth of technology so that one doesn't have to at least be brought into the programme when he is under 40 in order to fly."

Space Station In 1972:

NASA announced on July 23 that America's first manned, earth-orbiting space station would be launched in 1972 to study the Sun and stars.

The announcement marked a change in plans, which earlier called for the first space workshop to be launched in 1971 for medical studies and less elaborate scientific experiments.

Under the new schedule, NASA said, the first two stages of a Saturn-V rocket—the type used to launch Apollo-XI towards the Moon —would orbit an unfuelled third stage outfitted on the ground, with a telescopic instrument.

The instrument would enable astronauts to study the Sun and stars above the veil of the Earth's atmosphere. The atmosphere blocks out high-frequency light waves which scientists need to learn a star's age. Such information could provide clues to the origin of the universe.

Space Workshop Plans:

NASA announced on July 22 that USA planned to put a space workshop into orbit in 1972. It said that the third stage of the giant Saturn-V rocket used to send Apollo spaceships to the Moon would be used to house the orbiting laboratory and observatory. The project will study man's physiological and psychological responses in the space environment, and provide more detailed information on the capabilities for extended manned flight.

The workshop is to be fitted out on the ground and will be launched in a 220-nautical-mile circular Earth orbit. It will be occupied by a crew of three astronauts who will follow in a smaller rocket about a day later.

This project, it was said, superseded earlier plans to use a second stage of the smaller Saturn-1B rocket as its first orbiting workshop in 1971.

Future Travel Costs To Moon:

Now that man's oldest dream has been realized, scientists are busy drawing up a balance sheet—the cost and gains of the Moon conquest —to answer critics. It is very hard to convince the critics that the enormous cost in terms of money, material, man-hours and train power ("which could have been used to solve the Earth's mounting problems") has been worthwhile, but facts are revealing. The main arguments against lunar exploration are based on the premise that a voyage to the Moon is too costly an affair ever to become commonplace, and that, at any rate, not much use will flow from it. Both the points are refuted.

According to experts who have worked out the economics of spaceflight, the present cost is no true indicator of expenses in the years ahead. They predict that a round trip to the Moon could be accomplished within the next two decades for as little as Rs. 40,000 per passenger. They maintain that the present high cost is attributable to the primitive state of rocket technology, and to a poor appreciation of celestial mechanics. Developments on three fronts would help to reduce the cost considerably. They are: use of re-usable boosters and space-ships, feasibility of orbital re-fuelling; and nuclear propulsion. Scientists have no doubt that all three will come within the realm of possibility. In fact, some remarkable progress has already been achieved in developing nuclear propulsion systems in space.

To refute the argument that the Moon is not of much use to Earth-bound men, they merely point out that the discovery of the New World almost 475 years ago by Christopher Columbus had had no great impact immediately on the rest of the world; but in less than 220 years, it had materially altered life in Europe and elsewhere. Probably, history is repeating itself. Now man has discovered another new world almost equal in area to the two Americas put together. Who knows that it will not help man to expand his empire and improve his lot substantially? The prospects are extremely promising. In fact, the possibilities are immense.

Astronomers' Paradise:

It is but natural that man's early visits to the Moon will be taken up with exploration of the celestial body and its surroundings. The absence of atmosphere, water, any major forms of life, and the temperature extremes make it an ideal place for certain kinds of observation and experiment impossible on the Earth. For instance, the Moon is an astronomers' paradise. For optical astronomers, it offers a rare view of the universe, unhindered by atmosphere, cloud or dust. Astro-physicists on the Moon will be able to observe the entire range of electro-magnetic radiation from space. On the Earth most of the scientifically significant part of the radiation spectrum like X-rays and ultra-violet rays are not observable on account of atmospheric absorption. Similarly, the Moon's slow rotation on its axis would give them ample time for accurate observations of the heavens. What is more, its weak gravity will facilitate construction of larger and better telescopes than is physically possible on the Earth.

Radio astronomers too will find a base on the Moon extremely rewarding. Like gamma rays and X-rays, a substantial part of the radio frequencies is also absorbed by the Earth's atmosphere: on the Moon, with no atmosphere to interfere with, radio astronomers should be able to unfold a more enchanting scene of the universe than has been possible hitherto. Electronic civilization on the Earth would make the visible side of the Moon as radio-noisy as a beehive, but a station set up on the far side of the Moon should be completely free from any Earth-based electronic interference.

Moon As Launching Pad:

As a launching pad for space exploration, the Moon offers two significant advantages. It takes about 50 tons of fuel to lift one ton of cargo from the Earth's surface into an orbit. This is partly because the gravity of the Earth is strong and partly because the rocket must fight its way through the dense atmosphere. The Moon has no air and only about one-sixth of the gravity of the Earth. So, whereas the velocity needed to escape the Earth's gravity is 39,000 km an hour, the Moon's escape velocity is only one-sixth of that. This means that on the Moon it would be possible to launch spacecraft almost horizontally, using a catapult system on rails. It has been calculated that a payload able to withstand an acceleration 50 times the forces of the Earth's gravity could be launched from the Moon by a four-mile track. Manned ships whose passengers will not be able to withstand so high a G-force would need a track considerably longer, however.

Practical Uses Of Moon:

Though initial use of the Moon will be confined to scientific explorations of a fundamental nature, man will not be able for long to resist making practical use of it. There is no clear idea about the resources available on the Moon, but judging by the Apollo astronauts' observations, mineral resources may be as abundant or as scarce as on the Earth. The significant point is that, being airless and dustless, the Moon surface is congenial for setting up certain industries which require high vacuum and dust-free environment on the Earth. Such an environment can be created on the Earth, but only at considerable cost. Scientists point out that the manufacture of electronic tubes, computer components, hearing aids, etc. which require high vacuum, could be profitably made on the Moon. For certain metallurgical industries also, the Moon seems to be an ideal place. Pure metals can be manufactured only in high vacuum, out of contact with air or dust particles. Similarly, for electron beam welding and cold welding also, high vacuum is essential.

Sceptics, however, say that the Moon is so hostile that man will never feel at home on it. There is no air and water, and its surface temperature fluctuates between unbearable extremes. What is worse, it is some 400,000 km away. But pro-Moon scientists point out that it is exactly its unique features which are going to be valuable to us. They say that an artificial atmosphere congenial to human beings could be created. This has been done at the South Pole. With proper planning, the temperature extremes on the Moon can be exploited to better advantage.

About the distance that separates Moon from the Earth itself, scientists say that in the age of rockets and radio communication, 400,000 km should not cause any undue concern. When Columbus discovered America there was neither steamship, aeroplane nor radio. The news of his discovery reached Queen Isabella across the Atlantic six months later. Yet, Armstrong's Moon walk was seen by billions and billions of people. The world has been steadily shrinking; distances no longer appearing as formidable as they once used to be. Now it is the turn of the solar system.

Soviet Space Feats:

Year after year and more and more successfully, man is advancing into the depths of outer space, and its mysteries are being unveiled.

It was in October, 1957 that a new age was ushered in, the age of space flights, when the Soviet Union orbited the world's first Sputnik.

The first manned space flight in history was accomplished on April 12, 1961 when the Soviet spaceship Vostok orbited the Earth and made a soft-landing. The first man in space was Yuri Gagarin.

This unprecedented experiment provided practical proof that man can live and work in conditions of weightlessness, that his organism is capable of withstanding the strains involved in blast-off and return to Earth, and that radiation belts are not too protracted and solar eruptions are not so intense.

As a token of the world's admiration for this feat and to engrave the date in mankind's memory, April 12 has been named Cosmonauts Day in USSR.

Since the world's artificial satellite was launched, the Soviet Union has launched a total of some 300 automatic Earth satellites and a series of automatic lunar and planetary probes, and there have been many epoch-making manned flights in spaceships of the Vostok and Soyuz types.

Ten years ago, in 1959, a Soviet rocket carrying the Luna probe first passed close to the Moon. Then came Luna-II, the first to reach the Moon. Soviet space vehicles were the first to photograph its far side and Luna-IX was the first to make a soft-landing and to transmit the first panoramic views of the lunar surface back to Earth.

In 1965, a Soviet probe, Venus-III, reached the planet and effected a smooth descent into its atmosphere.

The automatic link-up in orbit of artificial Earth satellites was first effected by the Soviet Union.

In 1967, Venus-IV reached the planet and for the first time in history the descent capsule took direct measurements of the temperature, pressure density and chemical composition of the atmosphere.

A new and resounding victory was scored in outer space when Venus-V and Venus-VI made a smooth descent in the atmosphere of the planet Venus—Venus-V on May 16 and Venus-VI on May 17, 1969. The two stations delivered to the planet pennants with bas-relief portraits of Lenin and the image of the State emblem of the Soviet Union. For the first time a scientific study of the atmosphere of Venus was made simultaneously in two areas of the planet.

Gherman Titov's 24-hour flight on August 6 and 7, 1961 gave the first and quite definite answer to the question of the possibility of prolonged stay in outer space. Titov covered a total of more than 700,000 km, enough for a return journey to the Moon. In this respect, his flight was the first experimental proof of the possibility of flying to the Moon.

The spaceship Vostok-III, with Andrei Nikolayev aboard, was orbited on August 11, 1962. The next day, the world learned the name of Cosmonaut-4. From now on it was a group flight. The ships travelled along orbits close to each other, with a minimum distance of 6½ km between them. Nikolayev and Popovich were in constant touch in their spectacular twin-flights. Both ships landed on August 15, 1962.

Valery Bykovsky in Vostok-V established a new record of 119 hours in June, 1963. When he reached the second day of his space flight Vostok-VI, piloted by the world's first woman cosmonaut, Valentina Tereshkova, soared into space. The minimum distance between their ships was about five km.

Valentina Tereshkova stayed up for 71 hours, making 48 circuits around the Earth and covering a distance of about 2,000,000 km. Like her partner Valery Bykovsky, Valentina Tereshkova carried out a programme of observation, checked the operation of all the systems of the ship and maintained communication with Earth and with Bykovsky.

In October, 1964, a powerful booster rocket orbited the world's first multi-seater spaceship Voskhoda. It carried on board a crew of three: Engineer-Colonel Vladimir Komarov, Commander and two scientists—Konstantin Feoktistov and Dr. Boris Yegorov. The ship circled the Earth 16 times and 24 hours later, on completion of the programme, safely landed.

The world's first flight of a crew of three Soviet cosmonauts has turned a new significant page in the history of cosmonautics.

In 1968, the Soviet Union carried out another link-up experiment in orbit. Exceptionally important were the experiments conducted with the automatic stations Zond-V and Zond-VI. Zond-V was the first soft-landing (in the Indian Ocean) of a space vehicle after re-entry into the atmosphere at second astronomic velocity.

The flight of Zond-VI showed that it is possible to re-enter at second astronomic velocity and effect a guided descent and landing at a predetermined area making use of aerodynamic lift. Moreover Zond-VI re-entered the atmosphere twice, returning after the first re-entry into outer space to dip down into the atmosphere once again at a lower velocity. This considerably reduced heating and overstrains during deceleration in the atmosphere.

In 1968, the Soviet Union launched about 70 cosmic devices designed for a wider range of scientific experiments. The orbital long-range communication system using Molina-I satellites is being systematically expanded. The latest Molina was launched in April, 1969.

Outer Space Treaty:

The Outer Space Treaty which has been accepted by most countries of the world seeks to ensure peaceful use of outer space.

After long-drawn-out negotiations the Treaty was approved by acclamation by the UN General Assembly on December 19, 1966, and subsequently ratified by the Governments of several countries, including USA and the Soviet Union.

Consisting of a Preamble and 17 Articles, the Space Treaty makes the following main points:

—Outer space and the celestial bodies are considered an international scientific preserve where military bases, weapons and national sovereignty claims are banned.

—The Moon and other celestial bodies shall be used exclusively for peaceful purposes, and shall, with outer space, be free for exploration and use by all.

—Nations are prohibited from placing nuclear or other mass-destruction weapons in Earth orbit or installing them on celestial bodies. [There is none there now and detection systems could readily detect such placement.]

—All nations must unconditionally aid and return astronauts in distress, and launching nations are liable for damages caused by their space vehicles.

—All nations are committed to report activities in outer space to UN and the international community to the greatest extent feasible.

—Tracking station arrangements should be made bilaterally with requests considered on the basis of equality.

Basic Facts Of Moon:

Although many key questions about the Moon remain unanswered, lunar scientists have accumulated an impressive store of basic facts. Here are some of them:

The Moon is a nearly spherical body with a diameter of about 2,160 miles (3,478 km), roughly one-fourth that of Earth. It has one-sixth the gravity and one-eightieth the mass of Earth. Its density is 3.3 times that of water compared to 5.5 for the Earth's density.

All of this means that the Moon is rather small and light in weight, and explains its lack of atmosphere —there is not enough gravity to hold one.

The Moon rotates on its axis once every 27-1/3 days as it circles the Earth in exactly the same length of time. As a result, it keeps the same face (actually up to 59 per cent of its total surface) pointed perpetually towards Earth.

On its elliptical path around the Earth, the Moon comes as close as 221,460 miles (356,650 km) and moves as far away as 252,710 miles (406,863 km). Its mean or average distance is roughly 239,000 miles (384,793 km).

Like the Earth, the Moon has no light of its own, receiving all from the Sun or reflected from Earth. Its days and nights last about 14 Earth days.

Absence of an atmosphere produces fearsome temperatures as high as 250 degrees F (120 degrees C) during the lunar day and as low as minus 280 degrees F (minus 172 degrees C) at night.

Lunar experts generally agree that there is no water on the surface, but some believe it could exist as ice below the surface.

The chances of any form of organic life on the Moon—even the most primitive—are very remote. As one landing lunar scientist once observed, "the Moon is the kind of place where you would put things to sterilize them."

Legends About Moon:

Different communities have their Moon legends. The Khasis (Assam) believe that U Byani (the Moon) was the youngest of four; his three sisters were Ka Sngi (Sun), Ka Um (water) and Ka Ding (fire). The lustrous Byani grew to be a young man of loose morals and had his face smeared with ash for incestuous desire.

Australian tribes thought the Moon was a mischievous being flitting about the universe. Once he swallowed the Sun god, causing the first solar eclipse.

According to an American Indian legend, the Moon was a maiden banished from the Earth because she was always complaining.

The Bomitaba tribe of the Congo believes that the Moon was once a Sun. With two Suns making the Earth very hot, one of them suggested that they both take a bath to cool things a bit. While one made a fake dive, the other plunged into water and emerged as the pale, cool Moon.

The Slavs thought up a formula which answers many questions. The Moon, whose name is Myesyats, was a beauty who mated with the Sun. Their off-spring were the stars. When things did not work out well for the couple, there were Earthquakes.

The inhabitants of the Admiralty Islands had a simpler explanation. The first inhabitants of the world threw two mushrooms into the sky. One became the Sun, the other the Moon.

According to the Papuans of New Guinea, the Moon was originally in a pitcher. It escaped when some curious boys opened the pitcher. The boys made a desperate attempt to catch it, and that was how the dark spot came to be there.

Early Prophets:

Apart from its breath-taking techno-scientific achievement, Moon travel is not a new idea. Romantic people have been exercised by it long before they knew for certain that the shimmering disc in the firmament was a world like their own. They had, however, neither any accurate concept of the problems Moon travellers would face, nor any inkling of the complex machinery that would be required to solve them. Thus, Lucian of Samos in the second century AD sent the hero of one of his novels to the Moon with the help of a pair of wings. Almost 1,500 years later, Johannes Kepler, the illustrious German astronomer, transported the hero of his novel Somnium to the Moon by supernatural means (magic). This was unpardonable for an astronomer of his standing, but it could not be helped then. Even scientists were not aware of the problems involved; and worse still, they were not totally free from an age which still believed in magic. Indeed, his own mother had been charged with witchcraft.

Four years after Kepler's story was published, Bishop Godwin's hero in Man in the Moon flew to the Moon on a flimsy raft towed by trained swans. During the next two centuries, there was a steady trickle of books about spaceflights. Some were pure fantasy, but others made at least occasional attempts to be scientific. Undoubtedly, the most imaginative fiction writer of this period was Cyrano de Bergerac (Voyage to the Moon and Sun) who used rocket propulsion for the first time, although he did not have any idea of its advantages in space.

By the second half of the 19th century, space fiction had run into difficulties. Too much was known about the problems of inter-planetary flight and science had not progressed enough to suggest ways to conquer them. The literary stalemate was broken by the wizard of space fiction, Jules Verne, with his famous story "From the Earth to the Moon" (1865). It is the first space fiction to be based on sound scientific principles. He knew that there was gravity to be overcome and that there was no air in space. He also recognized the need for an initial escape velocity to get away from the Earth. He knew of rocket propulsion but used it only for steering in space. For the purpose of sending his heroes into space, he used an enormous gun. Verne could not imagine a way of decelerating the landing of his men on the Moon, so he made them circumnavigate the Moon and return to Earth—which exactly was what was done by the first lunar-nauts in Apollo-VIII. Prophetically, Verne's Moon travellers also took off from a place in Florida (where Cape Kennedy launching pad is situated) and splashed down in the Pacific from where US naval-men rescued them.

H. G. Wells was as adventurist as Verne but less scientific in his approach. To send his men to the Moon (First Men in the Moon), he invented "Cavorite", a substance that would act as a gravity insulator. His heroes had only to climb into a vessel coated with this material to take off. Though the idea of anti-gravity is not entirely absurd, it is difficult to imagine any substance inherently possessing this property; for this very characteristic should make it disappear from the Earth.

Here is how H. G. Wells described the landing of his space adventurers, Bedford and Cavor: "Now we had come to the real danger of our journey. We had to drop ever closer to the Moon as we spun about it, to slacken our pace and watch our chance, until at last we could dare to drop upon its surface... For a long time we had all our windows closed and hung silently while hurtling through space... Then for a flash Cavor opened a window moonward, and we saw that we were dropping towards a huge central crater with a number of minor craters grouped in a sort of cross about it....

"There came a jar...over clutch, bump, clutch bump over...

"We were still alive, and we were lying in the darkness of the shadow of the wall of the great crater into which we had fallen...

"It was the wildest and most desolate of scenes. We were in an enormous amphitheatre, a vast circular plain, the floor of the giant crater. Its cliff-like walls closed us in on every side. From the westward the light of the unseen Sun fell upon them, reaching to the very foot of the cliff, and showed a disordered escarpment of drab and greyish rock..."

CEYLON

A. Parliament Approves Throne Speech: The House of Representatives approved on July 25 a Government-sponsored Motion of Thanks to the Governor-General for the Throne Speech (see page 9097) after rejecting various Opposition amendments. The debate lasted five days.

In his reply to the debate, the Prime Minister, Mr. Dudley Senanayake, referred to the demand for an immediate ban on the Dravida Munnetra Kazhagam and asked: "Will you give me the legislative power to ban any political party which has foreign links and which works against the nation's interest?" An Opposition front bench member replied: "We shall give that power only against the DMK."

Mr. Senanayake explained that there were other political parties which had definite foreign links, whereas the Indian DMK had denied any connexions with the DMK in Ceylon.

He explained the Tamil Federal Party's breakaway from the Government, in reply to allegations made earlier in the debate by the Secretary of the Party, Mr. A. Amirthalingam, a member representing a North Ceylon constituency, and assured the Federal members that he would never forget the assistance they had given his party at a critical time.

He said he had to withdraw the District Councils Bill because of the misleading propaganda carried on by the Opposition and because the country had turned against him. However, as the introduction of district councils legislation was one of the promises he had held out to Federal Party members when they joined the Government, he had told them while withdrawing the Bill that he was prepared to resign the Premiership on the issue. But the Federal Party had told him that there was no need for him to resign.

B. Mr. D. Senanayake's Visit To UAR: The Prime Minister, Mr. Dudley Senanayake, paid an official visit to the United Arab Republic from May 27 to 31 at the invitation of President Gamal Abdel Nasser.

On arrival in Cairo, where he was given a ceremonial welcome, and at State receptions, Mr. Senanayake stressed the traditionally strong historic, cultural and religious ties between Ceylon and Egypt. His engagements in the country included visits to several places of interest, including the Aswan High Dam.

He had talks with President Nasser on a wide range of issues, particularly the situation in West Asia.

At a news conference in Cairo on May 31, he expressed the hope that the Big Four talks would lead to a solution of the West Asia crisis on the basis of the November 22, 1967 resolution of the UN Security Council.

A joint communique issued on May 31 said that Mr. Senanayake had expressed Ceylon's support for the "legitimate rights of the Palestinian people including their right to their homelands or to receive compensation in accordance with the UN resolution."

He re-affirmed his country's position that Israel's forces should withdraw unconditionally from Arab territory to positions they occupied prior to June 5, 1967.

On Viet-Nam, President Nasser and Mr. Senanayake said that a "settlement could only be reached by the free will of the Viet-Namese people based on the principle of self-determination and without foreign influence." They affirmed their conviction that the Geneva Agreement of 1954 provided a satisfactory basis for a settlement of the issue.

They condemned colonialism and expressed support for the liberation movements in Angola, Mozambique and Rhodesia.

They expressed satisfaction at the progress of relations between Ceylon and UAR in political, economic and cultural fields.

Both leaders wanted expansion of trade between the two countries and felt this could be done by an increased trade in tea and cotton particularly, among other products.

C. World Bank Loan: The World Bank announced on July 23 grant of a $21 million loan to install 115 megawatts of electric generating capacity and associated transmission facilities in Ceylon.

The loan, to be given to the Ceylon Electricity Board, will be guaranteed by the Government. It will be for a term of 25 years, including a five-year grace period, with interest at 6½ per cent.

The project being assisted by the Bank loan should meet Ceylon's electric power requirements until 1974. It consists of the second stage of a three-stage development of the Maskeliya River which includes a diversion dam, a pressure tunnel and penstocks, a 90-mw hydro-electric station, a 132-kv switchyard and about five miles of transmission lines to connect the plant to the existing net-work. Also included is a 25-mw gas turbine extension to the existing Grandpass thermal station at Colombo and the services of consultants. The gas turbine is to be commissioned about the end of 1971 to meet the deficit in energy which would otherwise arise until the hydro-electric plant is commissioned in late 1972. It will later be used for peaking purposes. The Board will execute the project and procurement is being carried out on the basis of international competitive bidding.

The total cost of the project is estimated at $31.5 million. The Bank loan of $21 million will cover the foreign exchange cost of major civil works, of electrical and mechanical equipment, interest on the Bank loan during construction and the services of engineering and other consultants to help the Ceylon Electricity Board set up its new organization, re-organize its accounting system and re-value its assets. The remaining costs will be financed by the Ceylon Electricity Board from domestic sources.

D. New Tamil Party Formed: A new political party called Ela Suya Atchi Kazhagam of Tamil-speaking people of North Ceylon has been formed, headed by a former member of the Federal Party and Member of Parliament, Mr. V. Navaratnam.

The party, it is claimed, has the backing of a number of educated people who are opposed to the Federal Party and Tamil Congress politics.

Addressing the first meeting of the party, Mr. Navaratnam said on July 31 that Tamils should either live with dignity and self-respect as a separate nation or assimilate themselves with the Sinhala people. Ruling out the latter proposition, he said that Tamils should fight for full responsible Government.

INDIA

SUMMARY: New Acting President; Mr. Morarji Desai Resigns; Bank Nationalization Bill Passed; Mr. R. Nixon's Visit; Mrs. Gandhi's Visits Abroad; Mr. H. Bourguiba (Jr)'s Visit.

A. Mr. Justice Hidayatullah Becomes Acting President: The Acting President of India, Mr. V. V. Giri, announced on July 13 that he was contesting for the post of President of India, the election for which was scheduled for August 16.

His announcement followed an announcement by the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, in Bangalore on July 23 that the Speaker of the Lok Sabha, Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy, had been selected as the Congress candidate for the Presidentship.

Mr. Sanjiva Reddy resigned the post of Speakership on July 19 and Mr. V.V. Giri also announced his resignation as Acting President. But, he actually handed over to the Chief Justice of India, Mr. Justice Hidayatullah, who because Acting President on July 20, until a new President was elected on August 16.

B. Mr. Morarji Desai Resigns: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, relieved Mr. Morarji Desai, Deputy Premier and Finance Minister, of the Finance portfolio about noon on July 16. A few hours later, Mr. Desai submitted his resignation from the Cabinet.

But, the Prime Minister did not accept the resignation immediately, because some efforts were being made to get Mr. Desai to revise his decision. She later accepted the resignation on July 19.

A Rashtrapati Bhavan communique said that the Prime Minister would assume charge of Finance.

Although some political quarters attributed Mrs. Gandhi's step as a "retaliation" to her being ignored by the Congress Parliamentary Board at Bangalore in deciding upon the selection of Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy as the Presidential candidate on July 12, Mrs. Gandhi's supporters felt that she took the step in order to implement the economic resolution passed by the All-India Congress Committee (see page 9087) in Bangalore on July 11.

Mr. Desai told newsmen on July 16 that he had heard something about his being relieved of the Finance portfolio on July 14 from some persons indirectly.

He added: "She (Mrs. Gandhi) has not talked to me (in the last three days). I received her letter saying she has relieved me of the Finance portfolio only two hours ago."

Asked how he saw the Prime Minister's action, Mr. Desai said: "She wants to have her own way. I do not know, it may be a kind of retaliation. But I have done nothing to deserve this."

The correspondence between Mrs. Gandhi and Mr. Morarji Desai, released on July 21, made the startling disclosure of the Prime Minister having told the UP Chief Minister, Mr. C. B. Gupta, that some Congress leaders were "conspiring" against her.

Mrs. Gandhi, however, denied that her charge was directed against Mr. Desai, but Mr. Desai stated that Mr. Gupta confirmed that Mrs. Gandhi's reference was to him.

Copies of the correspondence were placed on the table of the Lok Sabha on July 21 by Mr. Desai after an explanatory statement on his resignation from the Cabinet.

In his letter of July 17—the day after Mrs. Gandhi stripped him of the Finance portfolio—Mr. Desai wrote to her that Mr. Gupta had met him that afternoon (July 17) and told him about his talk with Mrs. Gandhi. "I was amazed and shocked," Mr. Desai said in that letter, "to hear that you told him that I was organizing a party obviously with a view to ousting you from leadership,. In one breath you have recognized my loyalty to the party and its leader, in another you gave Mr. Gupta to understand that I was conspiring against you. Groupism and conspiracy are not in my grain."

In her reply to this letter two days later (July 19), Mrs. Gandhi did not refer to her talk with Mr. Gupta, but she apparently denied having made any such charge against Mr. Desai when he met her the previous day.

Referring to his talks with Mrs. Gandhi on the statement made by Mr. Gupta, Mr. Desai in his final letter to the Prime Minister went on record to repeat that she had made the charge against him. He said: "You will recollect what you told Mr. Gupta before he met and conveyed it to me. I asked you about this new political dimension that you have introduced and you protested that what you told Mr. Gupta was not with reference to me, but that it applied to others. May I say that I have asked Mr. Gupta again and he emphatically maintains that your statement was with reference to me."

Statement In Lok Sabha:

Mr. Morarji Desai told the Lok Sabha on July 21 that the "summary" manner in which he was relieved of the Finance portfolio would have made his continuance in the Central Cabinet dishonourable.

He said he could have continued in the Government only at the cost of his self-respect and as a silent spectator of methods that may endanger the basic principles of democracy.

C. Banks Nationalized – Ordinance Issued–Bill Passed: Within an hour of the formal exit of Mr. Morarji Desai from the Central Cabinet on July 19, the Government announced its decision to nationalize 14 major commercial banks in the country.

The momentous decision, which evoked mixed reaction in political circles in the Capital, pushed into the background the party polemics arising out of Mr. Desai's resignation after he was stripped of the Finance portfolio by Mrs. Gandhi on July 16.

The Cabinet decision, which was unanimous, was followed by an Ordinance signed by the Acting President, Mr. V. V. Giri (who relinquished office on July 20.)

The Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, who attended the Cabinet meeting, the former Congress President, Mr. K. Kamaraj and Mr. Atulya Ghosh, who have all been ardent advocates of bank nationalization, welcomed the Government's decision, in spite of their differences with the Prime Minister over the manner in which she had eased Mr. Desai out of the Government.

Since the decision was based on the economic resolution adopted at the A-ICC session at Bangalore on July 11 (see page 9087), Congress members assailed it, but a few like Mr. S. K. Patil deprecated Mrs. Gandhi's attempt to take sole credit for the measure.

Though foreign banks operating in India have been kept out of the scope of nationalization, the Reserve Bank was asked to instruct them not to increase their deposits.

The Ordinance excluded from the scope of nationalization branches of banks incorporated outside India and Indian scheduled banks with deposits of less than Rs. 50 crores at the end of June, 1969.

According to an official release, shareholders of the 14 nationalized banks—which have deposits of over Rs. 50 crores each—would be paid compensation on the basis of the net value of their assets less their liabilities. Their capital plus reserves were estimated at Rs. 66 crores.

A Tribunal, consisting of a Chairman and two members, would be set up to hear disputes with regard to the payment of compensation. The amount of compensation will be paid to each existing bank in marketable Central Government securities.

In order to avoid confusion among the public, the Government made it clear that when the banks re-opened on July 21, they would operate normally as before and there would be no change in the relations of the depositors and borrowers with their banks.

Further, the identity of each nationalized bank would be preserved and the Chairman of the existing banks would be the Custodian of their nationalized units, unless the Government felt that a new person must be appointed Custodian in the cases of any specific bank.

The Boards of Directors of the nationalized banks were dissolved and would be replaced by advisory boards. Employees of the acquired banks would, however, become automatically employees of the new Corporation on their existing terms and conditions of service.

The Government of India reserved for itself powers to frame, in consultation with the Reserve Bank, one or more schemes for carrying out the provisions of the Ordinance in relation to existing banks. Rules framed under the Ordinance would be placed before Parliament within 30 days.

Thus, the Government took over control of the deposits of the 14 banks, totalling about Rs. 2,741 crores or nearly 70 per cent of the aggregate amount of deposits under the banking system. As against this, the advances of the nationalized banks at the end of the year stood at Rs. 1,745 crores, or nearly 66 per cent of the total advances of Rs. 2,776 crores.

As a result of the nationalization of the 14 banks, it was stated that it would now be possible to "serve better the needs of development of the economy in conformity with national priorities and objectives," and prevent their use for speculative and unproductive purposes.

Mrs. I. Gandhi's Broadcast:

In a broadcast on July 19 commending the nationalization of banks in the country, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, offered the assurance that this was not a prelude to a take-over by the State of other economic activities.

She emphasized that nationalization would not mean any change in the relationship of the 14 banks taken over with their depositors or borrowers. They would continue to retain their separate identity. The same executives would be in control and their existing financing arrangements would not be disturbed.

She traced the step back to the 1954 resolution of Parliament, accepting the concept of a socialist pattern of society. She cited also the increasing role of public financing agencies to suggest that nationalization was a logical sequel while being necessary even otherwise as part of the strategy to gain control over the commanding heights of the economy.

Mrs. I. Gandhi's Statement In Parliament:

In a statement to Parliament on July 21 seeking to justify the nationalization of 14 major commercial banks, Mrs. Gandhi assured private industry and trade that their credit needs would continue to be met.

One of the objects of the nationalized banks, she said, would be to foster the growth of new and progressive entrepreneurs and create fresh opportunities for hitherto neglected and backward areas in different parts of the country.

Included in her rationale of nationalization was the better service banks would be able to provide to farmers and thus promote agricultural production.

She also thought that public ownership would help curb credit for speculative and unproductive purposes.

Also, she said, "by severing the link between the major banks and the bigger industrial groups which have so far been controlled by them, the Government believes that the step it has taken will also bring about the right atmosphere for development of adequate professional management in the banking field."

The broad aim behind nationalization, she claimed, was the need to "impart an element of dynamism and new vigour into the process of our development so that the targets of the Fourth Five-Year Plan, in the public and private sectors, cannot only be fulfilled but, if possible, exceeded."

Her justification thus had two main points: "First, that nationalization would not deprive the private sector of funds and, second, savings would now be mobilized for use in productive purposes in accordance with the Government's plans and priorities."

She added: "The Government believes that public ownership of the major banks, for which there has been widespread public support, will help in the most effective mobilization and deployment of national resources, so that our objectives can be realized with a greater degree of assurance."

Banks Nationalized:

The names of the banks nationalized are:

(1)_ Central Bank of India; (2) Bank of India; (3) Punjab National Bank; (4) Bank of Baroda; (5) United Commercial Bank; (6) Canara Bank; (7) United Bank of India; (8) Dena Bank; (9) Syndicate Bank; (10) Union Bank of India; (11) Allahabad Bank; (12) Indian Bank; (13) Bank of Maharashtra; and (14) Indian Overseas Bank.

Deposits Of Nationalized Banks:

According to the statistics of the Reserve Bank of India, the 14 top banks nationalized commanded 72 per cent of the total deposits of the Indian scheduled banks and 65 per cent of the total advances made at the end of 1968.

The total deposits of the 14 banks at the end of 1968 stood at Rs. 2,741.76 crores and advances at Rs. 1,743.66 crores.

Even among the 14 banks, the bulk of the deposits and advances is controlled by the first five major banks—Central Bank, Bank of India, Punjab National Bank, Bank of Baroda and the United Commercial Bank.

The total owned funds of the 14 banks at the end of 1968 amounted to Rs. 66 crores. Five major banks accounted for 64 per cent of the total owned funds, while their share in the aggregate net profit was about 70 per cent.

Although the owned funds of the 14 banks was only Rs. 66 crores, the total compensation to be paid by the Government to the shareholders may be about Rs. 70 crores as the scrip of some banks commanded a premium on the share markets.

The scrip of the banks in the share market ranged from 160 per cent in the case of the Allahabad Bank to six per cent in the case of the Bank of Maharashtra. On this basis, there is likely to be a demand for a mark-up in compensation calculated on book value.

The following is the deposits and advances position of the top 14 banks at the end of 1968:

	(Rs. in Deposits	crores) Advances
Central Bank	433.27	296.27
Bank of India	394.97	253.05
Punjab National	355.90	209.40
Bank of Baroda	313.50	196.14
United Commercial	249.58	144.00
Canara Bank	146.44	96.72
United Bank	143.89	99.61
Dena Bank	131.88	74.08
Union Bank	115.22	68.63
Allahabad Bank	112.72	69.93
Syndicate Bank	112.19	70.61
Indian Overseas Bank	93.22	58.32
Indian Bank	84.59	57.16
Bank of Maharashtra	73.02	49.74
Total	2,741.76	1,743.66

Reactions:

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Gandhi, received bouquets and brickbats for nationalizing the 14 major banks.

The Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, hailed it as "a historic step" in the march towards socialism.

The Swatantra leader, Mr. M. R. Masani, called it a "reckless" move and described Mrs. Gandhi as a "security risk."

Mr. A. B. Vajpayee, Jana Sangh President, said that bank nationalization was an "anti-people" measure and contended that Mrs. Gandhi's Government had no mandate to take over banks.

But the reaction in other Opposition parties was favourable. The BKD Chairman, Mr. Charan Singh, congratulated the Prime Minister on her "right step" and hoped that the nationalized banks would be effectively managed.

Mr. K. Kamaraj and Mr. Atulya Ghosh expressed satisfaction. But, Mr. S. K. Patil did not like the "hasty manner" in which it had been done, though he did not disapprove of the measure.

The Swatantra Party leader, Mr. C. Rajagopalachari, doubted if the nationalization of banks by an Ordinance was permissible under the Constitution.

He said: "There are many points involved which bring into play fundamental rights as against the so-called nationalization which in effect is a kind of confiscation. An Ordinance cannot go beyond Parliamentary legislation as far as the Constitution is concerned. It is even immoral to issue an Ordinance the day before Parliament is meeting."

Mr. J. R. D. Tata described it as a "tragic mistake". He said: "I am surprised that the Central Government should have come out with an Ordinance on bank nationalization when Parliament is to meet only within 48 hours.

"The same purpose which the Government has in view could have been well served by social control. It is also a dangerous step to concentrate in this way all the financial resources of the country (comprising bank deposits and life insurance funds) because they may go into wrong hands after the next general elections when the political situation in the country might be fluid as it is at present in some of the States. This will shake confidence of the people in business and industry both in India and abroad."

Mr. Jayaprakash Narayan told a public meeting in Rajkot on July 27 that the nationalization of banks was "wrong and unwarranted." He said that the step would not solve the economic ills of the country but would only enhance the powers of the present rulers and bureaucrats. Nationalization could not be a shortcut to improve the lot of the have-nots unless there was a fundamental change in the socio-economic structure.

Industrialists, bankers and businessmen received the nationalization step with dismay. They were quick to point out that the measure went farther than what the Prime Minister, Mrs. Gandhi, had said on this issue in her recent Note to the All-India Congress Committee in Bangalore.

The bankers, particularly, were taken aback by the nationalization as there was a categorical official denial of any such move only the previous day.

Mr. Ramnath A. Podar, President of the Federation of the Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry, said: "It is regrettable that no solution could be found for retaining Mr. Morarji Desai in the Cabinet. As regards bank nationalization, even after hearing the Prime Minister's broadcast, I feel it is a hasty step, particularly when social control on banks was working successfully. I am afraid it will have repercussions on the country's economic growth."

The President of the Bombay Stock Exchange, Mr. Dhirajilal Maganlal, said that nationalization would retard the progress of the country, including economic and industrial development.

Mr. Arvind Mafatlal, industrialist, said that nationalization would create more chaotic economic and political conditions in the country.

Mr. Lalchand Hirachand, a former Chairman of the Maharashtra Chamber of Commerce and President of the Bombay unit of the Swatantra Party, said that it would affect the economy of the country to a large extent.

Mr. Pravinchandra Gandhi, chairman of the Dena Bank, said that there was no necessity for nationalization when social control was being implemented very satisfactorily and correctly by all the banks.

Chinese Comment:

In its first comment on recent developments in India, the New China News Agency said on July 26 that nationalization of banks was a measure adopted by Mrs. Indira Gandhi "to deceive the people and strike at Morarji Desai's faction which opposes this programme so as to maintain her unstable rule."

It said that Mrs. Gandhi's programme was essentially one for developing bureaucratic capitalism under the guise of nationalization, or, in other words, "for following the non-capitalist road much advocated by Soviet revisionists."

It noted an Indian Press commentary that "under Mrs. Gandhi's stewardship the country is being deliberately mortgaged to the Soviet Union whose growing influence is perceptible not only in the conduct of foreign affairs, but in the trend of internal policies, particularly economic."

It added: "The feud between Mrs. Indira Gandhi and Mr. Morarji Desai reflects the bitter rivalry between US imperialism and Soviet revisionism in India, while they are colluding jointly with Indian reactionaries to oppose Chinese communism and the people. This dog-fight is developing as Presidential elections are drawing near."

Supreme Court's Stay Order:

On July 22, a Full Bench of eight Judges of the Supreme Court, presided over by Mr. Justice Shah, acting Chief Justice, issued rule nisi against the Union of India in the writ petitions filed by Mr. M. R. Masani, MP., leader of the Swatantra Party, Mr. Balraj Madhok, MP, Jana Sangh leader, and Mr. R. C. Cooper, shareholder and director of some banks, challenging the constitutional validity of the bank nationalization Ordinance.

The Court fixed August 11 for the final hearing of the petitions.

Tne Court also granted interim stay of the Ordinance in respect of three matters: (1) restraining the Union of India from removing the present chairmen of various banks, (2) from appointing a new board of advisers and (3) from giving directions contrary to the banking policies as laid down by the existing Banking Laws Act.

Mrs. I. Gandhi's Statement On Stay Order:

But, Mrs Gandhi told Parliament the same afternoon (July 22) that the Supreme Court's stay order did not affect the Central Government's take-over of the 14 major banks or their normal functioning.

She pointed out that the stay order was in respect of three matters: first, that the Union of India will not appoint any board of advisers; secondly, it will not remove chairmen of various banks; and, thirdly, it will not give any directions contrary to the provisions of the banking laws.

The Government had been advised, she said, that the stay order did not affect the transfer of the banks and their capital to the Central Government. The ownership of the banks thus continued to vest in the Central Government.

The former boards of directors also stood dissolved. In view of the Court's direction against appointment of advisory boards, the Reserve Bank would, during the interim period, advise the banks, as might be proper, in exercise of its powers under the Banking Regulation Act.

She did not think that the Court's direction against removal of chairmen of various banks would affect the ability of chairmen-custodians to perform their duties properly.

As regards the third direction, she said that the Reserve Bank would take special care to ensure that nothing was done which was contrary to the public interest or to the interest of depositors.

Bank Nationalization Bill Passed:

The Bank Nationalization Bill was introduced in the Lok Sabha on July 25 after an hour's procedural wrangle over the waiver of notice and the propriety of undertaking legislation while the validity of the Ordinance in this regard was still under dispute in the Supreme Court.

When a division was demanded on the motion for leave to introduce the Bill, there were 260 votes for and 46 against, with two abstentions. Congressmen and the Leftist groups supported the motion while the Swatantra and Jana Sangh groups opposed it. The DMK group was conspicuous by its absence from the House.

Except for certain minor changes and some clarifications, the Bill retained the spirit of the Ordinance promulgated by the Government to take over commercial banks with deposits of over Rs. 50 crores.

Indeed, the Bill was more or less on the same lines as the Ordinance and retained the provisions, the operation of which was stayed by the Supreme Court, relating to the Government's power to change Custodian-Chairmen of the nationalized banks, constitution of Boards of Advisers to assist the Custodian-Chairmen and issuing of directions on policy matters.

The Statement of Objects and Reasons of the Bill said that the banks were being taken over in order to serve better the needs of development of the economy in conformity with national policy and objectives and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto. The banking system which touched the lives of millions had to be inspired by a larger social purpose and had to subserve national priorities and objectives such as rapid growth in agriculture, small industries and exports, raising of employment levels, encouragement of new entrepreneurs and the development of backward areas.

For this purpose, it was necessary for the Government to take direct responsibility for the extension and diversification of banking services and for the working of a substantial part of the banking system. It was with this in view that the 14 commercial banks with deposits of over Rs. 50 crores were nationalized.

The Bill, which had retrospective effect from July 19, the day on which the Ordinance was promulgated, excluded foreign banks from its operation. A new provision included in it and which did not form part of the Ordinance barred the application of the Bill to the assets, rights, powers, privileges and property, cash balances and investments in any country outside India of any of these banks operating in that country if, under the laws of that country, it was not permissible for a Government-owned bank to carry on business there.

The Chairman of the existing bank (pre-nationalization) holding office as such immediately before the commencement of the Act (July 19, 1969) would be the Custodian of the corresponding new bank and would receive the same emoluments as he was receiving immediately before such commencement. The Section of the Ordinance dealing with removal from office of directors was enlarged to provide for the existing bank constituting a Board of Directors or appointing any managing or other directors to transact business of the nature specified in the Bill.

The listed functions included work relating to compensation or appearance before the tribunal for obtaining determination as to the amount of compensation, and carrying on of business of banking in any country outside India where the local law prohibits business by a Government bank. The new Section also provided that the new bank (post-nationalization) could advance any amount to the existing bank for discharging some of those functions and that the amount so advanced would be recouped from out of the compensation payable to the existing bank.

Every Custodian of the new bank would be deemed to be a public servant for certain purposes specified in Chapter VI of the Indian Penal Code.

Clause 3 of the Bill said that on the commencement of the Act the entire paid-up capital of the bank shall stand vested in and allotted to the Government. The undertaking of every existing bank should also be transferred to and should vest in the corresponding new bank.

The Bill repealed the second schedule attached to the Ordinance about compensation and other provisions on the subject except that it was now made clear that up to Rs. 100 the compensation would be paid by a cheque drawn on the Reserve Bank. Higher amounts would be paid in promissory notes or stock certificates of the Central Government issued and repayable at par and maturing at the end of ten years from the date on which the compensation was paid and carrying interest at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum.

The financial memorandum accompanying the Bill said that it was not possible "at this stage to indicate the precise amount of the compensation payable by the Central Government, but it is estimated that it may be about Rs. 75 crores." This amount, the memorandum said, might have to be paid by the Government over a period of two to three years, but it was not possible to indicate the exact quantum of compensations that may have to be disbursed in the current or the following financial years.

On August 4, the Lok Sabha unanimously passed the Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertakings) Bill.

Under a last-minute change effected by the Government in the scheme for payment of compensation, it is the erstwhile banks, and not shareholders as declared earlier, who will get the compensation amount. The banks can choose either the 10-year Government bonds bearing 4.5 per cent interest or the 30-year bonds carrying 5.5 per cent interest.

It was also provided that, if the banks so desire, they can get half their paid-up capital early in cash as "interim payment," but on the condition that the amount will be distributed among shareholders.

Another official amendment passed said that the Advisory Boards of the 14 nationalized banks would consist of representatives of the depositors, employees, farmers, workers and artisans to be elected in a prescribed manner and also such other persons as the Government might appoint by Gazette notification.

Yet another official amendment adopted enable the Government to split the nationalized banks into two or more corporations or to range the nationalized banks with each other or with other banks. When the Bill was voted, the only members present besides those on the Congress benches were the Communists, a lone DMK member, Mr. S. Kandappan, and the saffron-clad Jana Sangh back-bencher, Swami Brahmanand, who had declared his support for the Bill.

The Swatantra group had walked out protesting against what it called "rushing through the measure." The Jana Sangh members followed, but not before Mr. Atal Bihari Vajpayee had issued a stern warning that the Government might face serious difficulties for the haste with which banks were nationalized.

Replying to the debate, the Central Law Minister, Mr. P. Govinda Menon, who piloted the Bill, pleaded for "indulgence" of the Chair and the House in correcting a position on which the Government was keen. Two amendments which the Government did not want moved were in fact moved, and a few remained to be moved.

The House, accordingly, gave him leave so that the decisions under the two amendments stood rescinded, and the other verbal change carried.

Before the House moved into the third reading stage, some of the Opposition members tried unsuccessfully to get the Government accept amendments. Many of these were on the controversial compensation clause. Mr. N. Dandekar (Swatantra) wanted compensation according to the value of paid-up capital, and in cash. Mr. Ananda Nambiar and Mr. P. Ramamurthi (both CPM) and Mr. Madhu Limaye (SSP) wanted compensation to be calculated according to the market value.

Mr. Bibhuti Mishra and Mr. Randhir Singh (both Cong.) felt the compensation proposals for the banks were discriminatory in their favour compared to what the Government had paid after abolition of the zamindari system.

The Bill took approximately 20 hours against the original allotment of ten hours.

The Rajya Sabha passed the Bill on August 8 and the President gave his assent to it on August 9.

Appeal To President To Withhold Consent:

An appeal to the Acting President to withhold his assent to the Bank Nationalization Bill was made by 52 MPs, mostly belonging to the Swatantra and Jana Sangh group on August 7.

They pointed out that an important constitutional issue, namely, the proper construction of Article 123, was pending before the Supreme Court. The Court, they urged, should not be faced with a fait accompli as Parliament had been by the issue of an Ordinance.

The obvious motive of the Bill being "rushed" through Parliament, they said, was to secure the Acting President's assent, so that it could be enacted as an Act of Parliament, "with a view to frustrating the hearing of certain petitions that seek to challenge the validity of the Ordinance, for which the Supreme Court has fixed August 11."

The petitions challenged not only the manner in which the Ordinance was promulgated but also the substance of the legislation. The issue whether the scheme of nationalization was ultra vires the Constitution was also being raised.

Now that the Government had "flouted the canons of propriety and due respect for the highest judiciary of the country, we can appeal to you to withhold assent to the Bill under Article III of the Constitution."

The Acting President rejected the appeal.

Supreme Court's Verdict On Ordinance:

On August 11, the Full Bench of 11 Judges of the Supreme Court, presided over by the acting Chief Justice, Mr. Justice J. C. Shah, directed the writ petition by Mr. R. C. Cooper challenging the Bank Nationalization Ordinance to be kept pending for a fortnight to enable him to file another petition if any challenging the validity of the Banking Company's (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertaking) Act 1969.

It also allowed the petitions by Mr. M. R. Masani and Mr. Balraj Madhok to be withdrawn, with liberty to file them afresh, and vacated the stay in respect of three matters granted at the earlier hearing on July 22.

D. President R. Nixon's Visit: The US President, Mr. Richard M. Nixon, accompanied by his wife arrived in New Delhi on July 31 on a day's official visit. Welcoming them at Palam airport, Mr. M. Hidayatullah, the Acting President, referred to the "three intrepid Americans" for their epoch-making moon-landing, "the most unique voyage of discovery of all times," and expressed satisfaction that "the achievement will be used for peaceful purposes only and for universal good."

Mr. Nixon, in reply, referred to the late Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru's remark 16 years ago that "what we need is a generation of uninterrupted peace," and said that the goal of the new US Administration was that the present generation should be remembered not merely as a generation during which man first set foot on the Moon, but "one that was dedicated to the achievement of uninterrupted peace, with justice and honour and freedom for all."

Mr. Nixon and the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi later had talks on various political and economic issues. Mr. Nixon expressed anxiety that not much progress had been made in resolving some of the problems affecting Indo-Pakistan relations, but made it clear that he had no intention of mediating between the two countries. Mrs. Gandhi said that what the Big Powers could do to help was to refrain from supplying arms so that resources vitally needed for economic development would not be diverted for military purposes. She said that in the ultimate analysis, the economic stability and the strength of a country determined its ability to resist aggression. Until they acquired strength, the Big Powers could give some sort of guarantee about their security. Mr. Nixon was understood to have told Mrs. Gandhi that no decision had been taken regarding supply of arms to Pakistan and none would be taken during his visit to Pakistan. Mr. Nixon's view regarding nationalization of banks was that the people in USA would not be able to appreciate the measure and that it might make future appropriations towards aid to India more difficult. He, however, assured her of his Administration's intention to support continuing assistance to India's efforts to improve its economic structure. He evinced interest in India's idea of an international Agreement or convention to be signed by Big Powers and countries of South and South-East Asia guaranteeing their sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity and promised to give further thought to it.

Explaining US policy in regard to developments in Asia, he said that while each nation must evolve its own pattern of development, USA would help remove economic backwardness, lack of social progress, political instability and the feeling of insecurity through economic and technical aid without getting directly involved in the internal situations of these countries and that if there was a violation of recognized international frontiers by any major Power, USA would not remain a passive spectator. He spoke of his proposal of bi-lateral discussions with the Soviet Union on reducing international tension, and disarmament.

The talks were continued on August 1, when Mr. Nixon said that he would not join the condominium with the Soviet Union against China and make it feel isolated. As for Viet-Nam, he wanted to end the war early, but was keen that the Viet-Namese people were enabled to choose the kind of Government they wanted. The talks ended with expressions of satisfaction on both sides, and a feeling that they had contributed to the strengthening of friendship between the two countries.

Earlier, at a banquet at Rashtrapati Bhavan on July 31, Mr. Hidayatullah proposed a toast to the US President characterizing his tour "as a journey in quest of peace" and placed emphasis on economic progress as the basis of political stability and peace.

Mr. Nixon, in reply, quoted at length from Mahatma Gandhi's speeches at whose samadhi he had earlier laid a wreath. Gandhiji, he said, was an architect of profound and far-reaching change through peaceful methods. The pursuit of peace, he said, meant building a structure of stability within which the rights of each nation were respected—right to national independence, to self-determination and to be secure within its own borders, free from intimidation.

Mr. Nixon left for Pakistan on August 1 with, as he put it, "a sense of destiny and a feeling of greater confidence in the future of India." He added that his talks with the leaders of India had been "most helpful in establishing new channels of communication and a new attitude in the relations between USA and India."

E. Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Visits To Japan And Indonesia: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, paid goodwill visits to Japan and Indonesia for ten days beginning on June 23.

The visits were viewed by commentators as eminently satisfactory in achieving the objectives for which the trip was made, namely, the promotion of goodwill and the forging of better bonds with these countries.

In Japan:

In Japan, which she visited from June 23 to 28, Mrs. Gandhi found a large measure of agreement with her Japanese counterpart, Mr. Eisaku Sato, on pressing international issues and bilateral issues.

The discussions between them were held in an atmosphere of cordiality and the two Prime Ministers found their thinking alike on the need for complete disarmament, early solution of the Viet-Nam problem and for respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States without external interference in the internal affairs of any State, whether through direct or indirect means.

The highlight of the talks on bilateral relations was their agreement on the expanding scope for economic co-operation between the two countries.

The two Prime Ministers also agreed to make increasing efforts for educational, cultural and scientific co-operation.

Perhaps the most substantial outcome of Mrs. Gandhi's visit was the decision of the two countries to strengthen bilateral economic relations and to carry this a step further towards economic collaboration in third countries, thereby advancing the concept of regional economic co-operation. As regards bilateral economic relations, the three outstanding results of the talks held by officials accompanying Mrs. Gandhi with their Japanese counterparts were Japan's decision to restore project aid which had been suspended three years ago, its willingness to consider the possibility of resuming suppliers' credits and last but not least, agreement to examine the scope for trade expansion.

It was clearly spelled out in a joint communique that Japan had agreed to resume project aid to India "starting with the development of an outer harbour at Vishakhapatnam and oil exploration." Thus, Japan firmly committed itself to assisting the Vishakhapatnam outer harbour project and in the exploration of oil in the Gulf of Cambay.

The Indian and Japanese interpretations of the part of the communique—issued at the end of Mrs. Gandhi's visit to Tokyo—referring to the resumption of project aid did not quite seem to tally. The Indian interpretation was that it was unconditional resumption, but the Japanese Foreign Minister, Mr. Kichi Aichi, answering questions by Indian correspondents covering Mrs. Gandhi's visit, did not commit himself firmly on this question.

According to him, it would be a case of case-by-case decisions. Whatever projects had been pending would now get the green light, but yet the implication of his answer was that the decision did not represent a blanket resumption. In any case, for the time being, the Vishakhapatnam and oil exploration projects were firmly in the works. The Vishakhapatnam project involves a foreign exchange expenditure of $12 million.

Apart from talks with Japanese political leaders, Mrs. Gandhi's engagements included a call on Emperor Hirohito and the Empress, visits to centres of interest, participation in the ground-laying ceremony of the Indian pavilion at the site of next year's World Exposition Fair and meetings with the Indian community.

She also received an honorary degree of Doctor of Law from Waseda University.

Addressing the Foreign Correspondents' Club in Tokyo on June 28, Mrs. Gandhi expressed complete satisfaction with her visit which was chiefly one of goodwill and understanding, and with the outcome of her talks with Japanese leaders.

Replying to a question if India would develop nuclear arms to balance China's nuclear strength and whether it planned to sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, she said India's policy was to develop nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, but her country was not planning to sign the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Questioned if she could 'kill' rumours that the Soviet Union might have obtained a naval base in India, she said while foreign ships coming to Indian ports on friendly visits would be allowed entry, the country did not believe in bases. "I have not heard of any rumours," she said.

Asked whether she favoured a total and complete withdrawal of American forces from mainland Asia in the foreseeable future, she said: "We don't believe in foreign armies being on the soil of other countries because it does create tension." Asked whether this would include North Viet-Namese troops also when India called for withdrawal of all foreign troops, she said: "All foreign troops—we will leave it at that."

The same day (June 27), talking to Indian correspondents covering Mrs. Gandhi's visit, Mr. Aichi referred to the wide and friendly coverage which the Press had given Mrs. Gandhi's visit and added that he could not recall any other instance where the visit of a Prime Minister had evoked such warmth in Japan.

In what appeared to those present as a departure from previously known policy, Mr. Aichi indicated that Japan would have no objection to India's membership of the South-East Asian Ministerial Conference, provided there was a consensus among other member-countries and said that "depending on circumstances" Japan might even propose India's membership.

He added that the question was "certainly worth studying," especially since India was a member of the Asian Development Bank. Japan also welcomed India's participation in the Asian and Pacific Council (ASPAC). Japan would "very much welcome" India's help in matters connected with regional co-operation, especially for the rehabilitation of South-East Asia and Indo-China States after the end of the Viet-Nam war. He noted that ASPAC transcended ideological considerations. "I would certainly think India can very effectively co-operate in an organization like this to bring stability to this part of the world". While he did not say so in so many words, one implication of his remarks was that the doors of the South-East Asian Ministerial Conference would be opened to India if it joined ASPAC.

A joint communique was issued on June 28 on Mrs. Gandhi's talks with Mr. Sato. It said in part:

"The two Prime Ministers reviewed the economic developments in their respective countries. The Prime Minister of Japan noted with satisfaction the steady recovery of Indian economy in the recent years as well as bright prospects for the future and paid a tribute to the determined efforts being made by the Indian people for realisation of social and economic progress. He welcomed the launching in April, 1969 of India's Fourth Five-Year Plan providing effective frame-work for her economic growth.

"The two Prime Ministers expressed satisfaction at the progress achieved over past years in the field of economic and technical co-operation between the two countries. The Prime Minister of India expressed appreciation for the economic assistance received from Japan and for the re-affirmation by Mr. Sato that Japan would continue to play an active part in the Aid-India Consortium organized by the World Bank. The two Prime Ministers agreed that there was scope for greater co-operation between the two countries in various fields of economic development in India. The Prime Minister of Japan agreed to resume project aid to India starting with the development of the outer harbour at Visakhapatnam and oil exploration. It was decided that consultations would be held between the two Governments in the near future to work out detailed arrangements for this purpose.

"The Prime Ministers noted progressive increase in trade between the two countries. They recognized the scope for further growth of trade both ways and agreed to hold close consultations at various levels to ensure long-term development of trade relations between the two countries on the basis of greater diversification and complementarity."

It added: "The two Prime Ministers re-iterated their faith in the principles of the United Nations Charter. They stressed that the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all States should be respected and that there should be no external interference in the internal affairs of any State, whether through direct or indirect means. They further emphasized the need to resolve all international disputes without resort to force or threat of force and without endangering international peace and justice.

"The Prime Ministers expressed the view that conclusion of a Treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control would be a lasting contribution to the maintenance of world peace and security. The Prime Minister of Japan expressed his appreciation for India's support of Japan's membership in the 18-Nation Disarmament Committee. The two Prime Ministers agreed that their Governments should closely co-operate in the future work of the Committee.

"The two Prime Ministers welcomed the talks currently continuing in Paris on the Viet-Nam question and expressed the hope that a just and lasting solution of the Viet-Nam problem should be found soon consistent with the wishes of the Viet-Namese people."

In Indonesia:

Mrs. Gandhi flew to Djakarta from Tokyo on June 28 on a five-day visit, which she described on her arrival as "one more link in the chain of friendship binding Indonesia and India together."

She held talks with President Suharto on June 30 and July 1 in an atmosphere described in Indonesian official circles as most conducive to a further improvement of the close relations existing between the two countries. Their discussions centred mainly on the situation in South-East Asia and bilateral relations.

Speaking at a banquet given in her honour by the Indonesian President on June 29, she expressed confidence that countries in Asia could defend themselves after foreign Powers were withdrawn from the region.

She said: "There is much talk about power vacuum, and I am asked questions on the vacuum that might come about when various nations withdraw their forces from one region. I do not like to prophesy what will happen, but it could have been said that when the British left India and the Dutch left Indonesia, a vacuum was created but each of our nations filled it. I have no doubt that the countries of our region can themselves fill the vacuum."

She said it was of the utmost importance to have internal unity and freedom from external threats. "Out of the seven largest countries of the world, five are in Asia and among these five are Indonesia and India. We hope our whole region will be an area of peace and co-operation without the domination of any Power and free of tension and antagonism."

President Suharto said that the principles of non-alignment and co-existence based on mutual respect were the best answer for easing world tension, preventing war and maintaining peace. "Indonesia upholds these principles which have inspired the Afro-Asian Conference in Bandung in 1955, of which India and Indonesia were two main sponsors."

He said the fact that Indonesia was concentrating its efforts on economic development did not mean that Indonesia was keeping away from problems of the region and of the world. With adequate economic capacity, Indonesia would be able to contribute more effectively to world peace, particularly in Asia.

He expressed the hope that Indonesia's ancient relations with India would be improved and co-operation between the two countries intensified.

According to a joint communique issued on July 2, the discussions between Mrs. Gandhi and Gen. Suharto had helped them to indentify "common objectives in many spheres."

They stressed the need to promote economic co-operation between all countries of this region on the basis of equality and mutual benefit.

The communique envisaged greater co-operation in various fields and expressed the desire of the two Governments to take concrete steps to further this objective. It also mentioned the need for frequent exchange of visits between representatives of the two countries at all levels.

Indo-Pakistani relations were among the issues, other than bilateral ones, mentioned in the communique. After Mrs. Gandhi apprised Gen. Suharto of India's efforts for normalization of these relations on the lines of the Tashkent Declaration, President Suharto expressed the hope that India and Pakistan would succeed in resolving their mutual differences peacefully and bilaterally.

Exchanging views on the Arab-Israeli conflict, Mrs. Gandhi and Gen. Suharto hoped for early return of peace and stability in the area on the basis of full implementation of the UN Security Council resolution of November, 1967.

The communique said in part:

"The Prime Minister conveyed to the President the Indian people's good wishes for the success of the Indonesian development plans and expressed the willingness of the Indian Government to extend such co-operation for the furtherance of development plans as the Indonesian Government might wish to avail of and the Government of India is in a position to render.

"The President and the Premier re-affirmed their faith in the principles of the United Nations Charter and expressed the firm hope that all countries would take steps to strengthen the world Organization. The Premier informed the President of the efforts India had made and was making to normalize relations with Pakistan on the lines of the Tashkent Declaration with the aim of reducing tensions in the sub-continent and creating conditions for the development of mutual co-operation among the countries of the region. The President hoped India and Pakistan would succeed in resolving mutual differences peacefully and bilaterally.

"The two leaders welcomed the current efforts on resolving the Viet-Nam conflict and hoped that the Paris negotiations would lead to an early peaceful settlement of the problem. Both sides recognized that the Viet-Namese people should be left to settle their own future free from foreign interference. They hoped respect for sovereignty, integrity, neutrality and independence of Viet-Nam, Cambodia and Laos would be ensured."

It added: "In stressing the importance of regional co-operation, they welcomed the formation of the Asian Council of Ministers of the UN Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East.

"They expressed concern over persisting and increasing economic disparities between the developing and developed countries and were firmly of the view that this gap should be narrowed and bridged in the interest of peace and harmony both by efforts of the countries themselves and with help from developed countries in accordance with the principles put forward at the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) I and II.

"The Prime Minister renewed her invitation to the President and Mrs. Suharto to visit India and it was accepted."

F. Foreign And Domestic Situation—Mrs. I. Gandhi's News Conference: At a news conference in New Delhi on July 31, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi said that the law and order situation in the country was "not ideal," but she did not see it developing into a threat to either India's political stability or the survival of democracy.

The way ahead was not going to be easy, but she believed that the country had already come through the most difficult stage.

She suggested that India had nothing to fear from communism. The strongest emotion in Asia was nationalism, but in any event communism today was of many different kinds. In India itself, two States were governed by communist-led coalitions.

Offering an assessment of the danger from China to India, she said that although the two armies were positioned practically face to face at some points along the long border, there was no active confrontation. "At this moment it is largely a propaganda war."

On China's future role, she felt that a settlement in Viet-Nam would be more lasting if Peking was associated with it. She confessed, however, that the Chinese were very unpredictable. Their future stance much depended on how the situation developed within China itself.

Answering a number of questions on Viet-Nam, she said that USA had come a long way towards India's policies. "We have from the beginning stressed that the Viet-Namese should be left to decide their own future without interference, and that all foreign troops should be withdrawn."

Discussing ideas about collective security for Asia, she said that putting together countries which were not strong economically, and "certainly not strong militarily" would not add to their strength. "But we do believe in economic co-operation. That is the basis of strength and that would enable each country to become strong."

While India did not see any vacuum emerging in Asia as a result of US disengagement and Britain's withdrawal, it may well be necessary to guarantee the security of small nations during the transition period. But this was not so simple, she added. "Suppose two Powers get together and the third is not in, there is again a reaction." It would not be good to give any country the feeling that others were "ganging up" against it.

G. Mr. H. Bourguiba (Jr)'s Visit: The Tunisian Foreign Minister, Mr. Habib Bourguiba (Jr), arrived in New Delhi on June 20 on a five-day visit.

He was received at Palam airport by the Minister for Industrial Development, Internal Trade and Company Affairs, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed and other officials.

The same day (June 20), Mr. Bourguiba met the Foreign Trade Minister, Mr. B. R. Bhagat, when he expressed the hope that Indian and Tunisian officials would soon examine the possibilities of setting up joint ventures, and identify areas where these would be possible.

The officials would also study what concrete steps should be taken by both countries to restore the level of trade between them, which had suffered a setback because of the Suez Canal closure.

Mr. Bourguiba emphasized that "imaginative" ways would have to be found to retrieve the lost ground on the trade front. On joint ventures, he said there was great scope for them.

The two Ministers reviewed the trends in international trade in relation to the developing countries.

Mr. Bhagat and Mr. Bourguiba agreed that the UN Conference on Trade and Development should move in the direction where "practical solutions" to problems of trade of the developing world could be found.

Mr. Bourguiba said his country wanted to switch over its trade with advanced countries to developing countries provided the prices and quality of goods were guaranteed. Tunisia always considered trade with developing countries as an "auto-investment."

The trilateral trade between India, Tunisia and Bulgaria also figured in the discussions.

Among Mr. Bourguiba's various engagements were a news conference, at which he discussed his country's foreign policy, and an address to the Indian Council for World Affairs.

Cultural Agreement Signed:

The first Cultural Agreement between India and Tunisia providing for exchanges in educational, scientific and cultural fields was signed in New Delhi on June 24.

The Agreement, which is permanent in character, was signed by the Education Minister, Dr. V. K. R. V. Rao and Mr. Bourguiba on behalf of their respective Governments.

The Agreement sought to strengthen Indo-Tunisian relations in the three fields through exchange of teachers, research workers, students and specialists by granting scholarships or subsidies to each other's nationals.

It also provided for mutual training facilities and exchange of literary, artistic, scientific and technical books, journals, taped music and films of educational interest.

It was also proposed to organize in both countries artistic, cultural and scientific exhibitions, conferences, and theatrical performances. Sportsmen, journalists and tourists would be exchanged.

The Agreement provided for a study of conditions under which each other's degrees and diplomas could be recognized.

The Agreement would remain in force for ever, unless terminated by either party by giving six months' notice.

The Joint Communique:

In a joint communique issued on June 24, Tunisia joined India in urging that the Indo-Pakistani differences "be settled through peaceful negotiations and without resort to force."

The communique expressed the hope that "in the interests of the sub-continent, the relations between India and Pakistan would soon register significant improvement."

The communique reflected a greater understanding between India and Tunisia in bilateral and international spheres.

Mr. Bourguiba left New Delhi on June 25 for Karachi.

H. US Aid For Electrification: India and USA signed in New Delhi on July 27 an Agreement whereby Rs. 105 crores were made available from PL 480 funds to finance the Rural Electrification Corporation Private Limited which had been registered under the Indian Companies Act with a capital of Rs. 150 crores.

About Rs. 45 crores has been contributed by the Government towards the share capital of the Corporation.

The Agreement providing for the US grant was signed by Mr. K. G. R. Iyer, Joint Secretary in the Ministry of Irrigation and Power, on behalf of the Corporation, and Mr. John P. Lewis, Minister-Director, USAID Mission to India.

An announcement said that a significant expansion in rural electrification in the country over the next five years would be carried out by the Corporation. It will energize about half-a-million new electrically operated pumps. These pumps will irrigate about 2.5 million acres and increase annual food production by about 1.5 million tons.

The newly-formed Corporation will finance rural electrification projects undertaken by the State Electricity Boards, subscribe to special rural electrification bonds issued by them and give loans to rural electric co-operatives. The programme to be financed will include not only extension of electric lines for pumps for intensive agriculture, but also power for small-scale rural industries, lift irrigation from rivers, and domestic lighting.

Capital requirements of rural electric co-operatives will also be financed by the Corporation. With technical assistance provided by USAID and US rural electric co-operatives, five pilot projects in five States will shortly be undertaken. Other such co-operatives will be organized later.

I. Trade Accord With Yugoslavia And UAR: Representatives of India, UAR and Yugoslavia, at their conference held in Cairo on July 15 and 16, decided on wide-ranging measures to further free trade among them and to study possibilities of joint industrial projects.

They agreed to add another 57 groups of articles to the tariff preferences system for 70 articles agreed in December, 1967.

The three countries were represented by Dr. Hassan Abbas Zaky, UAR's Minister of Economy and Foreign Trade, Mr. Miran Mejak, member of Yugoslavia's Federal Executive Council and Mr. K. B. Lall, Secretary of India's Ministry of Foreign Trade.

They declared in a joint communique that the 1967 agreement had already helped trade between them. The new items were not immediately disclosed, but tariffs on them would be cut by 52 per cent from October 1.

The three countries decided to set up working parties to study possibilities of co-operation in the production of cars, scooters, tractors, small engines and electrical equipment, television components and other products. These groups will submit reports by the end of April, 1970.

The communique said: "In respect of industrial projects undertaken in pursuance of tripartite co-operation, the three Governments will accord, on a long-term basis, appropriate customs duty exemptions and will provide commercial support and assistance for the granting of industrial licences, the procurement or sale of raw materials and components and for the marketing of finished products."

The Ministers decided to give further consideration to establishing joint shipping services or pooling arrangements for maritime services and facilities. Other fields of co-operation to be studied are telecommunications, banking and insurance.

Package tourist group arrangements will also be encouraged between the three countries.

J. Purchase Of Iron-ore By Rumania: Under an Agreement concluded in July in Bucharest, Rumania has agreed to buy 23.4 million tonnes of Indian iron-ore, valued at over Rs. 100 crores, in the course of the next 11 years.

Under the Agreement, the supply will increase from the present level of 0.8 million tonnes a year to 1.4 million tonnes in 1970. Thereafter there will be a steady rise every year, the supply reaching a level of 2.5 million tonnes from 1978 onwards.

K. West German Aid For Agricultural Development: An Indo-West German Agreement for undertaking an integrated development programme in the Almora district of UP was signed in New Delhi on July 31.

West Germany had been giving assistance for the integrated agricultural development of the hill districts of Mandi and Kangra in Himachal Pradesh and the district of Nilgiris in Tamil Nadu.

The Indo-German agricultural development project was first introduced in Mandi district in 1962. For Nilgiris, the Agreement was signed in June, 1966.

The project for Almora district has its origin in an Indo-German-FAO fertilizer supply project, under which about 1,000 tonnes of fertilizers were made available in December, 1967.

L. Fertilizer Credit Guarantee Corporation: About Rs. 20 crores will be given by USA from its PL 480 funds in India towards establishing a Fertilizer Credit Guarantee Corporation, which will be a subsidiary of the Reserve Bank.

The Corporation will have a working capital of about Rs. 30 crores—Rs. 20 crores from PL 480 funds (which would be given as a grant) and Rs. 10 crores from the Government of India. It will be registered under the Companies Act.

The formation of the Corporation follows the recommendation made by the Venkatappiah Committee which studied the question of fertilizer credit. The Committee had placed total distribution credit needs at Rs. 297 crores in 1970-71.

Another scheme under consideration to utilize PL 480 funds is for the creation of an Agricultural Refinance Corporation. The scope of activity of this Corporation will be much wider than the Fertilizer Credit Guarantee Corporation.

If the second scheme also goes through, nearly Rs. 225 crores will be taken away from the accumulated PL 480 funds. It was only recently that Rs. 105 crores was given from PL 480 funds for the setting up of a Rural Electrification Corporation.

M. Tariffs Imposed On Cotton Textile Exports To Britain: India's cotton textile exports to Britain will be subject to 15 per cent tariffs with effect from January 1, 1972.

This followed the British Government's decision to accept the recommendation of the Textile Council to replace the present quota system for Commonwealth countries with tariff.

The decision was announced in the House of Commons on July 22 by Mr. Anthony Crosland, President of the Board of Trade.

Mr. Crosland said he had no reason to believe that developing countries with the exception of India would in future export less to Britain. This implied the fear that Indian exports would be badly hit. But his assurance to India was that Britain would, at the time of considering India's general aid requirements in 1972, take into account any adverse effect the tariff had on its exports.

Commonwealth circles in London felt that the decision represented a fundamental change in Britain's commercial policy towards the Commonwealth.

JAPAN

A. Russian Request For Soft Loans Rejected: A Finance Ministry official confirmed on May 20 that the Government had expressed its inability to accommodate a Russian request for soft loans to finance imports from Japan.

He said that the request had been made on an informal basis by the Soviet Union's Vice-Minister of Foreign Trade, Mr. V. S. Alhimov, during a recent visit to Japan.

Requests for similar loans to East European countries, including Poland, Hungary, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia, also had been rejected.

Moscow was seeking an agreement between the Export-Import Bank of Japan and the Soviet Foreign Trade Bank to establish an account for the Russians in the Japanese bank. The Export-Import Bank would then organize a financing group of Japanese foreign exchange banks to supply yen for the Soviet account. The yen would be used to settle Soviet payments for imports from Japan.

According to reports, the Russians were hoping to secure a loan term of over 10 years at an interest of less than 6 per cent per year. The Soviet official had argued that the funds would be used to buy more products from Japan, which had a trade deficit with the Soviet Union. The yen would also be used for Soviet-Japanese development projects in Siberia.

However, the Ministry of Finance was not impressed by these arguments and informally let it be known that it found the Soviet proposal unacceptable. Japan, the Ministry spokesmen said, granted soft loans only to developing countries, not to industrial nations such as the Soviet Union.

B. Chinese Charge Of Arms Expansion: The Hsinhua news agency on July 8 accused the Japanese Government of stepping up arms expansion and war preparations to "further its expansionist designs in Asia."

The agency said: "Stepping into the shoes of aggression of Hideki Tojo (Japan's wartime Premier), the reactionary Sato Government is doing its utmost to push Japan onto the road of militarism and planning to build an up-to-date army to carry out aggression and expansion abroad.

"The plan for arms expansion made public by the Japanese 'Defence Agency' at the end of June has fully revealed this intention. This arms expansion plan trumpets about conscription, universal military training and other measures.

"It advocates the building of a so-called 'sustained fighting capacity' and stipulates the addition and deployment of several army divisions of tens of thousands of men outside the present 13 divisions of the self-defence forces."

It alleged that the plan also called for the development of a nuclear retaliatory force including nuclear warheads and a delivery system.

It said that the Sato Government's "accelerated arms expansion and war preparations were carried out at the orders of USA." "Heavily battered by the Asian people, US imperialism is strongly urging Japan to share its military obligations, using Japan as a tool for pushing its policies of war and aggression in Asia and a shock force in its war of making the Asians fight the Asians.

"The reactionary Sato Government's accelerated arms expansion and war preparations have also had strong support and encouragement from Soviet revisionist social imperialism."

INDIA

A. Andhra Pradesh Cabinet Reshuffle: The Andhra Pradesh Governor, Mr. Khandubhai Desai, accepted the resignations tendered by all the eight Telengana Ministers from the State Cabinet on July 14 and relieved them from their offices immediately.

The Ministers whose resignations were accepted were: Mr. V. B. Raju (Revenue), Mr. J. V. Narsinga Rao (Communications), Mr. P. V. Narsimharao (Education), Mr. B. V. Gurumurthy (Industries), Mr. K. V. Narayana Reddy (Labour), Mr. Arige Ramaswamy (Social Welfare), Mr. Mohamed Ibrahim Ali Ansari (Health) and Mr. S. Siddha Reddy (Irrigation).

While Mr. Gurumurthy tendered his resignation on June 27, the other seven Ministers submitted their resignations on June 28. The Chief Minister had forwarded all the eight resignations to the Governor on June 28 with advice that their resignations might be accepted when alternative arrangements were made. Accordingly, the Government informed the eight Ministers and requested them to continue in office till then.

On July 17, the seven remaining Ministers from Andhra area also resigned to enable the Chief Minister to re-constitute the Ministry with unfettered freedom.

On July 18, the Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy re-constituted his Cabinet. It consists of 18 Cabinet Ministers and 11 Ministers of State.

Eleven of the Cabinet Ministers and six Ministers of State hail from the Andhra region and seven Cabinet Ministers and five Ministers of State are from Telengana.

Mr J. V. Narsinga Rao, Communications Minister from Telengana in the out-going Ministry, was designated as Deputy Chief Minister.

From the old Ministry, Mr. P. Thimma Reddy, Mr. Thota Ramaswamy, Mr. N. Chenchurama Naidu, Mr. K. Vijayabhaskar Reddy and Mr. R. Ramalinga Raju of the Andhra region and Mr. J. V. Narasimha Rao, Mr. S. Siddha Reddy and Mr. Ibrahim Ali Ansari of Telengana were retained.

Among those dropped were the Law Minister, Mr. T.V. Raghavulu and the Excise Minister, Mr. V. Satyanarayana from the Andhra region and the Revenue Minister, Mr. V. B. Raju, the Industry Minister, Mr. B. V. Gurumurthy, the Labour Minister, Mr. K. V. Narayana Reddy and the Social Welfare Minister, Mr. A. Ramaswamy.

Allocation Of Portfolios:

Between them the Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, and the Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. J. V. Narsinga Rao, kept to themselves a number of major portfolios.

The Chief Minister is to hold charge of General Administration, Services, Co-operation, Major Industries, Excise and Prohibition, Tribal Welfare, Law Courts, Prisons and Legislature.

Mr. Narsinga Rao will be in charge of Planning, Bureau of Economics, Buildings, Roads, Highways, Public Gardens, City Water Works, PWD Workshops and concurrent subjects relating to Railways and Telegraphs.

The new allocation did not create a separate department for Telengana Affairs under the direct charge of the Deputy Chief Minister, who is from Telengana.

Another important Telengana Minister, Mr. J. Vengalrao, was given Home, Police, Arms Act, Passports, Cinematograph and Elections.

During the peak of Telengana agitation there was strong resentment against the Chief Minister holding the Law and Order portfolio. The transfer of the Police portfolio to a Telengana Minister would take away the sting from earlier criticism.

Mr. P. Thimma Reddy took over Revenue from Mr. V. B. Raju and lost his Agriculture portfolio to Mr. Kakani Venkataratnam, President of the Pradesh Congress Committee.

The portfolios of other Cabinet Ministers are:

Mr. Thota Ramaswamy—Panchayati Raj;

Mr. M. N. Lakshminarasiah—Transport;

Mr. N. Chenchurama Naidu—Municipal Administration;

Mr. C. Ramalinga Raju—Religious and Charitable Endowments;

Mr. S. Siddha Reddy—Major Irrigation;

Mr. Mohammed Ibrahim Ali Ansari—Health and Medical;

Mr. A. Bhagvantha Rao—Handlooms;

Mr. V. Krishnamurthy Naidu—Power;

Mr. G. Sanjiva Reddy—Labour; and

Mr. D. Perumallu—Social Welfare excluding Women's Welfare.

Ministers of State:

Mr. Sagi Suryanarayanan Raju—Forests;

Mr. A. Vasudeva Rao—Information and Public Relations;

Mr. A. Sanjiva Reddy—Civil Supplies;

Mr. Ramachandra Rao Kalyani—Marketing;

Mr. R. Narpa Reddy—Medium Irrigation;

Mrs. Roda Mistry—Women's Welfare and Tourism;

Mr. G. C. Venkanna—Small-Scale Industries;

Mr. V. Purushotham Reddy—Minor Irrigation;

Raja Narasimha—Housing;

B. Expansion Of Punjab Cabinet: The six-man Punjab Cabinet was expanded in Chandigarh on July 21 by the inclusion of four full-fledged Ministers, six Ministers of State and a Chief Parliamentary Secretary.

The three Ministers who were sworn-in the same day were: Mr. Balwant Singh, former Excise and Taxation Minister in the first United Front Ministry (Kapurthala), Mr. Prakash Singh Badal (Giddarbaha) and Mr. Surjit Singh, an advocate of Barnala. The fourth Minister, Mr. Manmohan Kalia (JS) could not reach in time to be sworn-in along with the others.

The following six Ministers of State were also sworn-in: Mr. Satnam Singh Bajwa, a former Minister of State, Mr. Mohan Singh Tur, Mr. Jagdev Singh, Mr. Rawal Singh, Mr. Randhir Singh and Mr. Jiwan Singh Umranangal. The Chief Parliamentary Secretary is Mr. Gurmeet Singh (Akali).

Mr. Balwant Singh was allocated Food and Supplies, and Colonization; Mr. Parkash Singh Badal, Community Development, Panchayati Raj, Animal Husbandry, Dairy and Fisheries; and Mr. Surjit Singh, Education and Language.

The portfolios allocated to Mr. Balwant Singh and Mr. Badal had so far been held by the Chief Minister, Mr. Gurnam Singh, along with about two dozen other portfolios. The Education and Language portfolio was transferred from Mr. Sohan Singh Bassi to Mr. Surjit Singh.

Of the six Ministers of State, Mr. Satnam Singh Bajwa was given independent charge of Forests and Wild Life Preservation, Welfare of Defence Services and Civil Aviation. He was attached to the Chief Minister in Jails Department, to the Finance Minister, Mr. Krishan Lal, in the Finance Department, and to Mr. Balwant Singh in the Food and Supplies Department.

Mr. Mohan Singh Tur was attached to the Chief Minister for Administration of Sikh Gurdwara Act, 1925, and Mr. Sohan Singh Bassi in the Irrigation Department. Mr. Jagdev Singh was attached to Mr. Parkash Singh Badal in Community Development and Animal Husbandry.

Mr. Ravel Singh was attached to Mr. Balramdas Tandon in Industries and Cottage Industries, and was given independent charge of Health and Family Planning. Mr. Randhir Singh was attached to Mr. Sohan Singh Bassi in PWD (B and R) Department. Mr. Jiwan Singh Umranangal was attached to Mr. Krishan Lal in Labour and Employment and Local Self-Government Departments and to Mr. Atma Singh in Revenue Department.

C. UP Budget For 1969-70: The UP Government's Budget proposals for 1969-70, announced in Lucknow on July 21, did not contain any new taxation measure, though there was a big overall deficit of over Rs. 39 crores.

Additional resources to the extent of only Rs. 3.96 crores were sought to be raised by rationalizing and stepping up existing taxes and duties.

Of this amount, Rs. 2.87 crores accounted for measures already taken, the rest to be covered by amending legislation to realize Rs. 56,00,000 by raising sales tax on unclassified items from 2 per cent to 3 per cent, Rs. 51,00,000 by increasing taxes on motor vehicles and stage carriages, Rs. 30,00,000 by changing the method of computation of stamp duty and Rs. 300,000 by raising sales tax on motor spirit from 9 paise to 10 paise per litre.

Presenting the Budget to the State Assembly, the State Finance Minister, Mr. L. K. Acharya, said that the estimated revenue receipts were Rs. 389.44 crores and the expenditure Rs. 438.08 crores.

These receipts included the Central grant for Plan expenditure amounting to Rs. 45.47 crores (Rs. 28 crores for the State Plan schemes, and Rs. 17.47 crores for Centrally sponsored schemes), and anticipated net extra receipts of Rs. 2.87 crores from measures taken in the current financial year for raising the State's resources.

Similarly, the estimated revenue expenditure included Rs. 39.49 crores for State Plan schemes and Rs. 17.69 crores for Centrally sponsored schemes. Excluding receipts and expenditure relating to Plan schemes, the revenue receipts and expenditure stood at Rs. 341.10 crores and Rs. 380.90 crores respectively, showing a deficit of Rs. 39.80 crores on the non-Plan side.

He added that the net provision for capital expenditure in the current year, including disbursement for loans and advances by the State Government, was estimated at Rs. 84.88 crores, and with this year's net borrowing of Rs. 59.84 crores, the capital account disclosed a deficit of Rs. 25.04 crores. The total deficit on the revenue and capital account taken together, as such, was estimated at Rs. 73.68 crores, against which net receipts under public account (including withdrawal of Rs. 11.97 crores from reserves) were estimated at Rs. 34.01 crores.

D. Prohibition Ordinance In Rajasthan: The Rajasthan Governor, Mr. Hukam Singh, promulgated in Jaipur on July 22 an Ordinance to introduce and extend the prohibition of manufacture, sale and consumption of liquor in the State.

The Rajasthan Prohibition Ordinance, as it is entitled, extends to the whole of the State and comes into effect in places on dates the State Government may notify from time to time.

In order to administer the Ordinance, the State Government has been empowered to appoint a Prohibition Commissioner with the rank of excise commissioner and other junior officers.

The Ordinance provides that any one found importing, exporting, transporting, consuming or buying liquor, or found in a state of intoxication, would be punished with a maximum imprisonment of two years and a fine of Rs. 2,000.

All offences under the Ordinance will be cognizable, but the Prohibition Commissioner will have the powers to compound the offences.

E. Cost Of Rajasthan Canal Project: According to revised estimates announced in Jaipur on July 21, the cost of construction of the Rajasthan Canal has gone up by Rs. 87 crores from Rs. 184 crores in 1963 to Rs. 271 crores now.

The project estimates were revised following an increase in the cost of the Beas Dam, the decision for lining the distribution system of the project, rise in the cost of material and increased labour charges.

The share cost of the Beas Dam increased from Rs. 45 crores to Rs. 75 crores and the cost of the works, involving Stages I and II rose from Rs. 75 crores and Rs. 64 crores to Rs. 110 crores and Rs. 86 crores, respectively.

On account of the increase in the intensity of irrigation from 78 per cent to 110 per cent, irrigation facilities from the Canal would now be increased to 3,500,000 acres annually instead of 2,875,000 acres as estimated in 1963.

According to estimates prepared in 1963, the first stage of the project—the main Canal with the distribution system—was proposed to be completed up to 122 miles by 1968-69 and the second stage by 1977-78.

With the completion of the branches and distributaries of the Canal, the irrigated area has increased from 3,570 acres in 1961-62 to 240,000 acres in 1968-69. This year irrigation benefits will reach approximately 265,000 acres of land.

F. First Facsimile Edition Of Newspaper: A new step forward in the development of the Indian Press was taken on July 26 when

The Hindu of Madras came out with a facsimile edition of the paper in Coimbatore.

This was the first time a newspaper in India was using this advanced electronic process for publishing an away-from-headquarters edition.

Under this process, pictures of the various pages (page proofs) of the paper, edited and composed in Madras, are transmitted to Coimbatore over the telephone co-axial cable and from the facsimiles, zinc engravings are made and the paper printed.

G. Thirty-nine Race Horses Perish In Bangalore Fire: Thirty-nine race horses, including some top class animals, died in a big fire that broke out in the thatched stables at the Palace Ground premises in Bangalore on July 25.

Thirty-four of them were burnt to death in the fire that razed to the ground three rows of thatched stables in the Polo Ground, and another five, let loose from adjoining stables, succumbed later to burn injuries.

Some of the trainers who had their horses stabled there said later that many of their charges were in a dazed condition and a large number of them had received burn injuries. In all about 350 horses were said to have been stabled in the area.

The fire, which claimed some of the best Calcutta-based horses aged between two and six, was described by the racing circles as "the worst-ever disaster in the Indian turf history."

All the horses that were burnt alive were stated to have come from Calcutta. Among them was champion three-year-old Amalfy. Calcutta had sent 250 horses out of a total of 600 horses that had come from different centres for the current Bangalore season which ended on July 30. Besides the animals, the riding kits and fodder stocks were also destroyed in the fire.

H. Wealthiest Men: According to information given by the Minister of State for Finance, Mr. P. C. Sethi in the Lok Sabha on July 21, the wealthiest man in India during 1967-68 was an industrialist—Mr. V. D. Chougule of Vasco, Goa.

The next ten men with over Rs. 1 crore during 1967-68 after Mr. Chougule, were: Maharaja Fatehsinghrao P. Gaekwad, the Nizam's Miscellaneous Trust, the late Dr. Kameshwar Prasad Singh of Darbhanga, the late Nizam Sir Mir Osman Ali Khan Bahadur through legal representatives, Maharaja Rama Varma of Travancore, Raja Vikramsinghji of Gondal, Maharao Madansinghji Saheb of Kutch, the late Maharaja J. M. Scindia of Gwalior by legal representatives and Mr. V. M. Salgaonkar of Vasco, Goa.

The number of persons with wealth over Rs. 1 crore was 24 in 1967-68.

NEPAL

A. Chinese Envoy Presents Credentials: Presenting his credentials to King Mahendra in Khatmandu on July 27, China's new Ambassador, Mr. Wang Tse, assured that his Government would always stand on the side of the Nepalese Government and people in their struggle to safeguard the sovereignty and independence of the country. It would also help fight "imperialist forces."

He said that there had been "long-standing traditional friendship between the peoples of China and Nepal who have always lived together on amicable terms." He re-iterated that Sino-Nepalese relations were founded on the Five Principles of peaceful co-existence. Since the King had taken over State affairs, the relations had been strengthened. China treasured its friendship with Nepal.

Accepting his credentials, the King thanked the Government and people of China for their "friendly help and sincere assistance in our task of national reconstruction."

He appreciated China's achievements in the economic field and said that Nepal had always tried its best to get China its rightful place in the United Nations. "We shall continue our efforts in this direction."

B. Arrangements For Withdrawal Of Indian Military Personnel—Rashtriya Panchayat Resolution: On July 25, the Rashtriya Panchayat (Parliament), approved a private resolution asking the Government to make arrangements for withdrawal of Indian personnel from northern border checkposts and also of the Indian Military Liaison Group with a view "to further strengthening friendly relations between the two countries."

Approving the resolution, the Foreign Minister, Mr. Gehendra Bahadur Rajbhandari, said that one of the problems facing Nepal after the 1951 Revolution was the modernization and training of the Royal Army. An Indian Military Mission composed of 50 men, including officers, had been invited to Nepal for that.

He added: "Nepal feels that the Indian Military Liaison Group has already completed the work for which it was invited." The Indian personnel in the Kingdom's checkposts and the Indian Military Group were now "no longer necessary, as Nepalis were available to man these posts."

PAKISTAN

A. President R. Nixon's Visit: The US President, Mr. Richard M. Nixon, arrived in Lahore on August 1 from New Delhi on a 22-hour visit.

On his arrival at Lahore airport, Mr. Nixon, alluding to the strains in US-Pakistan relations resulting from Pakistan's friendship with China, said that he wanted US-Pakistan friendship to be restored on the basis of "mutual trust," and hoped that during his stay he could lay the basis for "eliminating any differences of opinion between the two countries."

He later conferred with President Yahya Khan "in complete frankness and in an atmosphere of great cordiality." The talks were "of an exploratory nature." The general question of the principle of Asian security was discussed but, as a Pakistani spokesman said, "specifics were not gone into." Economic aid to Pakistan was discussed "at some length", while problems between Pakistan and India were discussed "in a general way, the Pakistani side bringing up the Kashmir question as one of "utmost importance." Radio Pakistan quoted a US spokesman as saying that Mr. Nixon heard the Pakistani view, but offered no specific comments. A passing reference only was made to China in the general context of Asian security.

The same evening, President Yahya Khan decorated Mr. Nixon with Nishan-e-Pakistan, the highest civil award of the country.

Mr. Nixon left for Rumania on August 2.

B. Proposal For Joint Machinery —President Yahya Khan's Reply To Mrs. I. Gandhi: In a letter replying to the Indian Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi's communication in which she proposed the establishment of joint machinery to examine various issues between the two countries, President Yahya Khan said on August 1 that his country was ready to enter into a dialogue with India for normalizing and improving their relations, provided both sides made it clear that the talks would "encompass all outstanding issues with a view to finding solutions."

He said that Pakistan's idea of a joint body had been conveyed to the Secretary for External Affairs, Mr. Kewal Singh, during his recent visit to Rawalpindi.

Considering the responsibility that rested on the two Governments for the well-being of several hundred millions of people, he said, "I don't know if there is any other acceptable approach to the problem of placing India-Pakistan relations on a permanent and friendly basis. This was the spirit in which we discussed matters with Mr. Kewal Singh. This is also the spirit in which I am replying to your letter."

"Any two neighbours in our situation are bound to have differences and disagreement, some superficial, some deep-seated. The superficial ones fade away in a hundred ways in course of time and in neighbourly dealings, but the deep-seated ones vitiate the atmosphere and poison relations. It is they which must be eliminated so that minor and transitory issues do not get blown out of proportion."

He added that the removal of minor problems alone would not bring about "that feeling of mutual trust without which friendship among neighbours is illusory." For this reason they should take steps to settle the deep-seated matters.

C. Preparation For Elections—President Yahya Khan's Broadcast To Nation: In a broadcast to the nation on August 1, the second since he took over as President, Gen. Yahya Khan announced the appointment of a Chief Election Commissioner to "commence the work of preparing for elections," but indicated that the poll might not take place until after a year or 1½ years.

He called upon the political parties to settle their differences, warning that if broad agreement was not reached within a reasonable period of time he would "go to the nation to have their verdict on the Constitution before elections are held."

Observers noted that Gen. Yahya Khan's warning was similar to F-M Ayub Khan's issued to warring political groups towards the end of his regime, when he had threatened to impose a Constitution of his own choice if they did not come to an agreement.

Gen. Yahya Khan also announced that he would appoint a Council of Ministers composed of civilians who would be barred from contesting the proposed elections. The princely States of Dir, Swat and Chitral would be merged in West Pakistan (Mr. Ayub Khan's two sons are married to the daughters of the Wali of Swat). To give the people of East Pakistan a greater sense of participation in the defence of the nation, recruitment to the Army from the East Wing would be doubled forthwith.

He offered to permit the political parties to call meetings of their working committees, but made it clear that there would be no change in the character of the Martial Law administration.

In a brief reference to Indo-Pakistan relations, he expressed the hope that the Farakka talks would yield positive results before long and that India would "see the wisdom of starting discussions on the question of Jammu and Kashmir."

He said that with the signing of official maps and papers relating to the Rann of Kutch and transfer of areas, "we have closed the final chapter of one of the unhappy pasts with India."

He spoke only briefly of his country's relations with China and he said: "From the People's Republic of China, a new Ambassador has arrived with a message of friendship and goodwill from Chairman Mao and other distinguished Chinese leaders."

Reviewing the achievements of his four-month-old administration, he said that one of its main aims—restoration of sanity in the country—had been achieved insofar as it related to law and order.

On the economic front, he spoke of the measures taken to strike a balance between rapid economic growth and broad social objectives.

D. National Budget For 1969-70: The country's new national Budget, presented at a news conference in Rawalpindi on June 28 by a member of the President's Administrative Council, Vice-Admiral S. M. Ahsan, said that Pakistan would spend $520 million on defence during the next financial year—(July 1, 1969—June 30, 1970)—which amounts to 54 per cent of total revenue receipts.

A defence budget of Rs. 2,600 million for the new fiscal year, which began on July 1, was also announced.

The figures revealed by the Navy Chief, Vice-Admiral S. M. Ahsan, showed a Rs. 150-million increase over last year's defence spending.

Admiral Ahsan said that an unavoidable increase in defence spending since 1965 was partly responsible for a 28 per cent cut in money available for the country's current Five-Year Development Plan.

The defence outlay accounted for over half the revenue budget of Rs 4,883 million in the new Budget.

Capital Budget:

In the capital budget, it was proposed that Rs. 5,04,36,00,000 be spent on economic development in the new fiscal year.

A special feature was a block provision of Rs. 400 million for the social sector, including education and welfare, reflecting the Government's concern over the country's out-dated educational system and poverty among urban workers as causes of discontent.

East Pakistan, which feels itself poor in relation to the richer Western Province, gets 53 per cent of the total development outlay against 47 per cent for West Pakistan.

Tax Reductions:

Vice-Admiral Ahsan also announced removal or reduction of taxes on many household items, including cooking fat, tea and soap.

At the same time, he raised the customs duty on cars worth more than Rs. 11,000 from 200 per cent to 300 per cent and raised import duty on machinery and components from 35 to 50 per cent in West Pakistan and from 25 to 30 per cent in East Pakistan.

A new 5 per cent customs duty will be levied on agricultural machinery, while duty was abolished on imported motor-cycles scooters and motorized rickshaws, and reduced on items including tyres for tractors and aluminium tubing.

The growth rate of Pakistan's gross national product had slowed from 7.5 per cent in the fiscal year 1967-68 to 5.2 per cent in 1968-69.

But this still compared favourably with the average of 5.5 per cent growth rate during the successful Second Five-Year Plan from 1960 to 1965.

Comment:

An analysis of published data on Pakistan's Budget shows that country spends 7.5 per cent of its gross national product on defence against India's 3.46 per cent.

Since the 1965 India-Pakistan conflict, Pakistan has procured or has arranged to procure military equipment worth Rs. 350 crores. The figure includes supplies made by the Soviet Union and China. It, however, does not include financial assistance of about Rs. 125 crores given by China for purchase of military hardware from other sources. Addition of this would make China Pakistan's largest source of military aid.

According to "Military Balance 1968-69", published by the Institute for Strategic Studies, London, the total strength of Pakistan's armed forces, including para-military forces which are practically on the same footing as the regular forces, is about 524,000. The pay and allowances of the defence personnel total Rs. 162 crores.

According to the analysis, if the published figure of a Defence Budget of Rs. 260 crores is to be believed after payment of salaries, the Pakistan Government will be left with only Rs. 98 crores for such items of expenditure as purchase of ordnance stores, transportation charges, capital charges and pensions. The conclusion is, therefore, inescapable that Pakistan has intentionally understated its Defence Budget to mislead its own people and the world at large.

The analysis finds that in an attempt to conceal the huge military expenditure, such items as pay of civilians in defence employment, construction of airfields and expenditure on para-military forces, which normally form a large percentage of a country's defence expenditure, have been excluded.

The value of the massive military aid received by Pakistan from USA till 1965, computed at between $1,500 and $2,000 million was not reflected in any of the Budgets. In the same way the aid received from China and other sources since 1965 was also not reflected in the Budget.

E. Feasibility Agreement With Canada: Pakistan and Canada have signed an Agreement providing for a grant of $125,000 (Canadian) to finance feasibility study of foodgrain storage and handling requirements at Karachi port and in West Pakistan.

The amount will be available as a grant under Canadian-Pakistan bilateral arrangements.

The Agreement envisages preparation of a comprehensive report to include recommended programmes for the development of storage and handling systems and facilities in the Province.

The feasibility study will be carried out by a group of Canadian consultants who will study all phases of foodgrain storage and handling from the village level up to and including the port.

Recommendations made in the report will cover both the short-term and long-term (up to 2000 AD) grain handling and storage requirements for West Pakistan.

F. Soviet Aid For East Wing: An Agreement was signed in Dacca on July 29 by representatives of the East Pakistan Industrial Development Corporation and a Soviet firm under which the Soviet Union would supply machinery and technical assistance for setting up a general electric manufacturing plant in Chittagong.

The plant, estimated to cost $39,916,000, will produce sophisticated electrical goods such as power transformers, switch gears and capacitors.

It will be the first modern plant to produce electrical goods on an industrial scale. It will save foreign exchange of $8,430,000 annually for the next five years and over $16,866,000 afterwards.

G. Economic Survey: According to an Economic Survey, the first pre-Budget document released by the Government on June 22, the per capita income was estimated to have risen to Rs. 408 during 1968-69 from Rs. 399 in 1967-68.

The document said there was an increase in the growth rate of GNP in 1967-68 to 7.5 per cent due to the improved agricultural production in both East and West Pakistan The growth of agricultural sector in the country that year was "quite impressive."

The growth rate, however, declined considerably to 5.2 per cent in 1968-69 because of unfavourable weather conditions and floods.

Wheat production increased by over 20,00,000 tons to 63,17,000 tons in 1967-68, up from 42,66,000 tons in 1966-67. East Pakistan still had not overcome food deficiency "and it may take a longer time than many of us had thought to become self-sufficient in foodgrain production." But, rice production increased from 94,00,000 tons in 1966-67 to 109,95,000 tons in 1967-68. The production was estimated to be the same in 1968-69.

According to the Survey, "the growth rate in the large-scale industry sector declined from 7.8 per cent in 1967-68 to 7.4 per cent in 1968-69." This sector did not maintain the desired tempo of production because of reduced availability of raw materials due to lesser imports under PL 480 programme and from the country's own resources.

It said: "Production dislocation towards the end of 1968 and early 1969, stemming from political and labour unrest, also caused some setback."

In a separate report, the Planning Commission had estimated that in May the total loss resulting from political unrest would not be more than Rs. 10,00,00,000.

According to the Survey, there was a considerable rise in prices and the cost of living during the last year. The price situation was "under considerable strain during the period April, 1968 to March, 1969. The wholesale price index which had decreased by 9.2 per cent during April, 1967 to March, 1968, increased by 19.6 per cent during April, 1968 to March, 1969. The increase during this period was continuous up to November, 1968, the index rising from 125.72 in April, 1968 to 140.78 in November, 1968. Subsequently it fell, and stood at 135.1 in March, 1969.”

The price rise was particularly sharp in East Pakistan where food prices increased considerably on account of a poorer harvest following two successive floods during 1968. The food index, which stood at 128 in April, 1968, rose to 155.83 in November, 1968. It fell to 145.57 in March, 1969.

In West Pakistan, the rise in the price index was moderate and might be attributed to increase in the prices of food and manufactures, the indices of which rose from 133.67 and 123.58 in April, 1968 to 138.61 and 128.57 respectively in November, 1969. The food index declined afterwards to 130.89 in March, 1969, the manufactures index continued rising to 132.11 in March, 1969.

H. East Pakistan Budget For 1969-70: The East Pakistan Budget for 1969-70 presented recently by the Martial Law Administrator, Maj.-Gen. Muzaffaruddin, revealed a disappointing picture of the economy of the East Wing.

The Gross Domestic Product of East Pakistan during 1968-69 grew only at the rate of 2.6 per cent, as against the growth rate of 8.6 per cent in 1967-68 and the envisaged target of 5.1 per cent for 1968-69.

The reason for this drastic decline in the growth rate of the GDP during 1968-69 was a decline in agricultural production and a shortfall in industrial production which grew only at the rate of 7 per cent as against the estimated growth of 12 per cent.

In the agricultural sector, jute production fell from 68,50,000 bales in 1967-68 to 58,61,000 bales in 1968-69; production of sugarcane fell from 75,89,000 tons in 1967-68 to 74,29,000 tons in 1968-69; tea production fell from 65 million lbs in 1967-68 to 62 million lbs in 1968-69; production of wheat, potato and groundnut registered marginal increase which could not offset the decline in the production of major crops. Rice production, however, remained the same as in 1967-68, i.e., 10.9 million tonnes.

This great set-back in agriculture was attributed to unfavourable weather conditions and natural calamities like floods. East Pakistan, during 1968-69, imported 7,50,000 tons of wheat from abroad and 2,50,000 tons of rice from West Pakistan to fill the gap between production and requirements.

I. Merger Of Khudai Khidmatgars With Awami League: It was made known on July 27 that remnants of Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan's organization, the Khudai Khidmatgars, had decided to merge with Sheikh Mujibur Rehman's Awami League “in a bid to wage war against the autocratic and dictatorial forces in Pakistan.”

A leader of the Khudai Khidmatgars said that in the present circumstances it was imperative that all democratic forces in the country unite to fight autocracy and dictatorship.

The council of the Khudai Khidmatgars, at a meeting held recently at Peshawar, decided to disband the organization.

It was also learnt that Sheikh Mujibur Rehman had pledged full support for the demand of the Pushtu-speaking people for complete autonomy.

A. Emergency Military Plan With USA: The US State Department admitted on July 10 the existence of an emergency military plan between Thailand and USA.

The Department spokesman, Mr. Robert McCloskey, however, stressed that the plan contained no defence measures not already laid down in the S-EATO and it was in no way a secret agreement between Washington and Bangkok, as had been alleged by a Democratic Senator, Mr. William Fulbright, Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Mr. McCloskey also stressed that the plan could only be applied by the agreement and consent of the parties concerned.

Meanwhile, in Bangkok, the Director of the Budget Bureau has announced that the Government would spend an all-time record of 30,000 million baht (about £600 million)—much of it on defence—in the financial year beginning on October 1.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. President Ho Chi-Minh Re-States Demand For Total Withdrawal Of American Troops: President Ho Chi-Minh in a statement, issued in Hanoi on July 19, denounced the US plan to withdraw 25,000 troops from South Viet-Nam (see page 8999) as “a trick” and re-iterated that American withdrawal must be “total and unconditional.”

The statement, commemorating the 15th anniversary of the Geneva Accord, called for a peaceful settlement on the basis of the 10-point plan (page 9001) of the National Liberation Front now being pursued by the Provisional Revolutionary Government at the Paris talks.

The statement said: “The armed forces and people of the North have shattered into pieces the US war of destruction. The armed forces and people of the South are defeating its local war. Since early Spring of 1968 the situation has changed in our favour and developed into disadvantage for the enemy, 4/5th of South Viet-Nam's territory and 3/4th of South Viet-Nam's population have been liberated.

“Under these victorious conditions, the South Viet-Nam Congress of People's Representatives was held and the Provisional Revolutionary Government of the Republic of South Viet-Nam and the Advisory Council were unanimously elected. This Government was immediately recognized by over 20 fraternal countries and warmly hailed by the world people.”

About the American plan for phased withdrawal, it said: "Nixon carries on the scheme of de-Americanization of the war in an attempt to use the puppet troops to fight against the South Viet-Namese people.

"At the Paris conference, the US imperialists still stubbornly trot out extremely absurd demands and refuse to seriously discuss the reasonable and logical 10-point overall solution put forward by the South Viet-Nam National Front for Liberation and being pursued by the Provisional Revolutionary Government of the Republic of South Viet-Nam.

"The Nixon plan to withdraw 25,000 US troops is an attempt to appease the American and world public opinion. That is a mere trick.

"The Viet-Namese people resolutely demand that all US troops and troops of its satellites must be completely withdrawn. It should not be the withdrawal of merely 25,000 or 250,000 or 500,000, but it must be a total and unconditional withdrawal.

"After the total withdrawal of the US and satellite troops and the complete liberation of South Viet-Nam from foreign invasion, the Provisional Revolutionary Government—as provided for in the 10-point overall solution—will organize free and democratic elections to enable the South Viet-Namese people to determine for themselves their own political regime, elect a Constituent Assembly, work out a Constitution and set up an official Coalition Government of South Viet-Nam without any foreign country being allowed to interfere.

"As long as US troops remain and the puppet administration continues in existence in South Viet-Nam, there absolutely cannot be really free and democratic elections."

An editorial in the leading North Viet-Nam daily, Nhan Dan on July 19 quoted President Ho as saying that the people of Viet-Nam were determined to carry on fighting, not only until the withdrawal of all American troops but also until the downfall of the "Saigon puppet regime." The newspaper called on the North to continue the struggle "heedless of difficulties."

The same theme was taken up at a rally in Hanoi on July 18, when the warning was given: "The fight of our people still has to go through many arduous and fierce trials." One aim of the rally, which was attended by leading political figures from both North and South Viet-Nam, seemed to be to counter the "doves" in the communist ranks who would like to slacken the war effort now that the United States was withdrawing.

The general tone of the statements issued in Hanoi to marking the 15th anniversary of the Geneva Agreement suggested that the hard-liners had the upper hand in Hanoi. They implied that North Viet-Nam believed that concessions to the United States were unnecessary because they were convinced that the Americans had already lost the war.

However, observers said, the declarations of the communists' determination to fight on to a final military victory may be an attempt to mollify North Viet-Nam's main ally, China, which had always opposed a negotiated settlement as a "fraud."

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

SUMMARY: Five-Power Defence Conference; SDR Scheme; Moon Discoveries; Move For World Bank Aid For Mekong Basin; Collective Security System Proposed By USSR; Non-Aligned Consultative Conference.

A. Five-Power Defence Conference In Canberra: Delegations from Australia, Malaysia, New Zealand, Singapore and Britain met in Canberra on June 19 and 20 in pursuance of the Agreement reached in Kuala Lumpur in June, 1968 (see page 8448) that there should be further consultations at the ministerial level on questions arising from British military withdrawal from South-East Asia.

The Conference proceedings after the opening speeches were private. Welcoming the delegations, the Australian Prime Minister, Mr. J. G. Gorton, emphasized that Australia's decision to keep forces in the area after December, 1971 was evidence of a genuine practical wish to keep the area secure and to assist Australia's neighbours. "But I again re-state the Australian policy that internal disturbances are a matter for the Governments themselves. Australian forces will never be used to keep internal order or become involved in internal policies."

He referred twice to the fact that the defence of Malaya and Singapore was indivisible. This may have been a slip of the tongue for Malaysia, but certainly he did not qualify in any way the statement he had made in Parliament in February that Australian forces would help to defend what he called the whole Malay Peninsula, including Singapore.

In that statement he had also suggested pointedly that an Australian presence would make it easier for Malaysian troops to go to east Malaysia.

The Malaysian Deputy Prime Minister, Tun Abdul Razak, described the situation after the race riots as exclusively an internal matter, and some observers believed that this might have shown his impatience at foreign advice. He argued that the riots did not indicate any basic racial animosity, a view apparently shared by the Singapore Premier, Mr. Lee Kuan Yew, who had described the recent events in Malaysia and Singapore as "our little difficulties."

Mr. Lee went on to warn the Australians that if their ground forces were withdrawn, "in the nature of things a shift would take place and it is unlikely that the status quo ante would ever be restored". This warning came after suggestions which he made that other countries, perhaps Japan and even Russia, might be interested.

Mr. Denis Healey, the British Defence Secretary, firmly disposed of the rumour that Britain might slow down the withdrawal of her forces from South-East Asia. He said: "There is no question of changing the basic decision we announced 18 months ago. There is no likelihood of the present Government changing this decision and you must make up your own minds whether any other British Government is likely to do so either."

He said that Britain's contribution to the exercise "Bersatu Padu" (complete unity) in 1970 in the eastern part of the Malay Peninsula, which will be the biggest British exercise outside Europe since the end of the War, would cost £2 million. It would involve two battalions with supporting troops and 40 combat aircraft as well as a squadron of Hercules aircraft.

Integrated Air Defence Command: According to Canberra reports, efficient radar backing for an integrated air defence command covering Malaysia and Singapore now seems to be assured as a result of the five-Power talks.

A communique said that there would be another Ministerial meeting after the big Commonwealth exercise to be held next year. Malaysia has undertaken to have one of its two new mobile radar systems operating to cover Butterworth on the west coast by September, 1971, when the British will close their station at Western Hill. The second mobile system will be in east Malaysia.

The Australians agreed to provide the first air defence commander, who will be wholly detached from the Royal Australian Air Force. This produced a strong adverse reaction from Malaysia, an official spokesman arguing that it should be made clear now that the commander would be subject to the joint political direction of all five Powers (or four after 1971).

The Australian refusal to approve what would have amounted to yet another commitment with serious implications upset the Malaysians, who were already disturbed by the unnecessarily heavy emphasis placed by Mr. Gorton on the distinction drawn by the Australians between their support for Malaya and for Sabah and Sarawak.

Communique:

The communique said in part: "The representatives of Malaysia, Singapore and the United Kingdom welcomed the announcements that had been made by the Governments of Australia and New Zealand with respect to the continued stationing of elements of their armed forces in Malaysia and Singapore after the British withdrawal in 1971. The representatives of Malaysia, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand also welcomed the re-affirmation by the representative of the United Kingdom Government of its intention to continue exercising and training in the area. The Conference saw these steps as a practical expression of the desire of the countries concerned to assist Malaysia and Singapore in developing their own effective defence capability and as a contribution to the security and stability of the area.

"The Conference noted the arrangements made by the Singapore Government in regard to certain of the former Royal Navy facilities, which would ensure the continuing availability of dockyard and other maintenance support. The Conference welcomed the readiness of Malaysia to maintain and operate the Armament Depot on Singapore Island for the use of the partner countries requiring such facilities and the plan whereby the Malaysian Navy would train Singapore naval personnel, which was a demonstration of the close co-operation between the two countries.

"The Conference also welcomed the advice of the Singapore Government that the existing Royal Navy facilities in the Stores Basin area could be made available to meet requirements for the continuing presence of the Australian and New Zealand Navies. It was agreed that the Naval Advisory Working Groups should be re-convened to continue the study of the transfer of Royal Navy sea and shore training facilities and of other naval facilities that would be required in the Singapore area.

"In the discussion of air defence matters arising from the report of the Air Force Advisory Working Group, the Conference noted with satisfaction the constructive developments which had occurred since the last Ministerial meeting. These included the deployment of a second squadron of Australian supersonic Mirage fighters to Butterworth, with arrangements for the rotation of an element at the Tengah Air Base in Singapore and the availability of Australian aircraft after 1971 for assignment as might be appropriate to the proposed integrated air defence system; the arrangements made between Singapore and the United Kingdom for the acquisition by Singapore of Bloodhound missiles; the development of the Singapore Air Force; the impending transfer of a number of Australian Sabre jet fighters to the Royal Malaysian Air Force; the arrangements made by Malaysia and Singapore for the provision and manning in good time of the radar facilities appropriate to the integrated air defence system; and the contribution being made by the United Kingdom and Australia in the training of Malaysian and Singapore personnel. The Conference welcomed the information conveyed to the meeting by the Malaysian delegation that the Malaysian Government had entered into a contract for the supply of radar equipment, of which one set will be positioned at Butterworth and will be operational in September, 1971, when the British Government closes Western Hill.

"The Conference agreed that the integrated system for the air defence of Malaysia and Singapore, which was accepted at the Kuala Lumpur conference, should be further developed. Consultations would continue regarding detailed arrangements that might govern contributions to the establishment of the system and the arrangements for its control. The Conference welcomed the positive response by Australia to the proposal of the Air Force Advisory Working Group that when the form of the air defence system had been finally settled, Australia should provide the first air defence Commander.

"The Conference agreed that there should be close consultations at various levels to carry forward the momentum of defence co-operation and that the form of these consultations should be left to the Governments concerned to arrange as circumstances might require. The Ministers agreed that they themselves would meet again after the major Commonwealth exercise planned for the middle of 1970."

B. Special Drawing Rights Scheme—IMF Agreement Amended: The proposed amendment to the International Monetary Fund's (IMF) Articles of Agreement establishing a new facility based on Special Drawing Rights and making certain changes in the Fund's rules and practices came into force in Washington on July 28.

The amendment was accepted—as required under the Articles—by three-fifths of the Fund's members representing four-fifths of the total voting power.

The amendment entered into force for all 111 members of the IMF whether or not they had accepted it.

This was the greatest single achievement in the continuing evolution of an international monetary system since the Bretton Woods Conference.

[The Special Drawing Rights are a final reserve assets equivalent to gold but not convertible into gold, and are to be issued independent of the balance of payments of any country.]

Under the amended Articles, two separate accounts will be maintained in the Fund—a General Account and a Special Drawing Account. The Fund will carry on its present operations and transactions through the General Account and its transactions relating to Special Drawing Rights through the Special Drawing Account.

To become a participant in the Special Drawing Account, a member has to deposit with the Fund an Instrument setting forth that it undertakes all the obligations of a participant in that Account. Only Fund members may become participants.

At present, 47 members having 68.98 per cent of the total quotas of the Fund have deposited Instruments of Participation. The decisions to allocate Special Drawing Rights are reserved to the Board of Governors and may only be made by an 85 per cent majority of the total voting power of the participants on the basis of proposals made by the IMF Managing Director with the concurrence of its executive directors.

India's percentage of the total quotas is 3.5 per cent and when the figure for SDRs is finally agreed on—it could be about $3 billion, though Americans are pressing for a higher sum—she would automatically be allocated what is due to her.

But, this is primarily a bookkeeping entry. The SDRs cannot be used, for example, to finance the import of food or steel. They are intended to help the participants to make the necessary adjustments in the case of balance of payments difficulties, though it is expected that each participant will keep an average of 30 per cent of its SDRs with it over a period of five years.

C. Fall In Flow Of Funds To Developing Countries: According to a recent UN report, the net flow of financial resources from economically advanced to developing countries in 1968 apparently fell further behind an aid target set by the international community.

Loans, investments and official donations from developed market economies reached $11,250 million in 1968—a gain of 7 per cent over 1967. During this period, however, the gross national product of these countries expanded by an estimated 8.5 per cent in current prices.

The probable result was "that the ratio of total net transfers to gross national product receded fractionally from its 1967 average of 0.68 per cent."

[The aid target endorsed by the General Assembly in December, 1968 calls for each economically advanced country to provide financial resources equal to one per cent of its gross national product annually to the developing countries.]

Credit commitments by the centrally planned economies in 1968 totalled $748 million—a fourth greater than in 1967—but information on the actual movement of resources from those countries to the developing countries in 1968 was lacking when the study was made.

These findings and other information about the financial outlays of international organizations, receipts by developing countries, and the reverse flow of resources from developing countries were contained in a preliminary report, prepared by the Secretary-General, U Thant, entitled "International Flow of Long-Term Capital, and Official Donations, 1964-68."

The report was based on the most recent information gathered by United Nations concerning the various channels by which financial resources were made available to the developing countries. Totals for long-term capital flow were net of repayments or repatriation of capital.

The channels of resources included bilateral public and private transfers, as well as resources donated through international organizations. Among the sources of transfers were the developed market economies, the centrally planned economies, regional banks, and country groupings such as the Development Assistance Committee of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development.

The outlays of the major international lending and assistance organizations were lower in 1968 than in 1967, mainly because of a "sharp decline" in disbursement by the International Development Association (IDA).

The report also noted a sharp increase in the activities of the regional banks. The Inter-American Development Bank disbursed a record $165 million; and the Asian Development Bank negotiated loans totalling almost $42 million.

Despite a trade deficit greater than average for recent years, developing countries were able to add more than $1,000 million to their international reserves, which involve holdings of gold, convertible foreign exchange, and among members, drawing rights on the International Monetary Fund.

The principal changes in receipts of financial resources among reporting countries involved the borrowing of long-term private capital, which increased by one-fourth over 1967. Public borrowing was also higher.

There was scant evidence regarding the outflow of resources from developing countries for 1968. Although various economic guideposts did not coincide, "on balance it would appear that, taking all three components (loan repayments, payments of investment income, and changes in the value of developing country assets) into account, the net outflow was greater in 1968 than in 1967."

D. Distance To Moon—Laser Beams Bounced Off: Astronomers at Lick Observatory in California reported on August 2 that they had bounced laser beams off a reflector left on the Moon by the US astronauts. Success came after 12 days of failure.

About 500 pulses of red light, 81 times brighter than the Sun's rays, were fired at 30-second intervals. The rays bounced back to the Observatory in 2.5 seconds each.

The Observatory had established the exact distance between the Moon and the Earth. The distance, as measured by them to the nearest 45 metres (150 feet), was 226,970.9 miles.

One of the astronomers, Dr. James Faller told correspondents that the laser reflector was working well and should remain in operation for at least seven years.

Elements In Moon Dust:

On July 30 in Houston (Texas), scientists discovered titanium, a valuable element used in high stress alloys, in the Moon dust brought back by the Apollo-XI astronauts.

The scientists reported that they had analysed "a pinch of lunar dust" and found that it also contained a high proportion of titanium compared with terrestrial rocks.

The presence of titanium, found in earth-bound igneous rocks and clay, could be one of the most precious secrets the Moon had given up so far. The high melting point substance is a vital ingredient in alloys used for jet engines, missiles and chemical equipment.

The scientists found no sign of germs—or any other form of life—on the Moon samples.

Twenty-four mice, injected with lunar material, were reported to be "in very good health."

Future Moon Voyages:

The Director of the US Apollo Space Programme, Gen. Samuel Phillips, predicted on August 1 that in future voyages to the Moon, astronauts may be able to walk as far as five miles from their moon-landing craft.

He said that Apollo-XI astronaut Neil A. Armstrong, the first man on the Moon, had told him he had walked about 200 feet from the moon-landing craft when he went behind it, out of TV camera range. Plans originally had called for Armstrong and his companion, Edwin R. Aldrin, to move no more than 50 or 75 feet from their craft.

Gen. Phillips said he hoped that the Apollo-XII astronauts would be able to range up to 1,500 feet from their landing craft when they made their lunar mission in November. The Apollo-XII astronauts would also attempt to bring back to Earth parts of the Surveyor III landing craft which reached the Moon in April, 1967. "We will want to study what effects its presence in a lunar environment for 2½ years has had on it. Scientific and engineering results could be interesting."

One of the objectives of the US Moon landing, he said, was to study the value of a base on the Moon and how and where to build it. He thought that by the 1980's there would be some kind of lunar base camp.

E. Proposed "Grand Tour" Of Outer Planets: A panel of American scientists urged the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) on August 3 to undertake a "grand tour" of the outermost planets in a quest for the secrets of life and fuller understanding of how the universe and solar system came into being.

Their proposed "national programme," the scientists said, could be carried out with unmanned spacecraft for "a fraction of the total cost" of projects to which the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) was currently committed.

The "grand tour" of Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune and Pluto was made economically and technologically feasible in the late 1970s by the fact that these planets would be in favourable positions that would not occur again until the year 2155.

From Jupiter, spacecraft would be able to use the gravitation pull of each planet as "free energy" to boost them ever deeper into the fringes of solar space.

The programme for exploration of the farthest planets was recommended to NASA in a report published by the Space Science Board of the National Academy of Sciences.

It recommended that NASA should present to Congress in its next budget (fiscal 1971) "a long-term plan for the exploration of the outer parts of the solar system." The space agency already was working on plans for grand tour missions beginning in the 1970s that would last from eight to 11 years. Whether they would mature into authorized commitments depended on Congress and the Administration.

The missions recommended by the Space Science Board would include "a search for and an identification of organic substances of importance to life."

The report proposed these projects: a probe of Jupiter's atmosphere (from a mother ship flying by), 1974: a Jupiter orbit flight, 1977; grand tour mission to Jupiter Uranus and Neptune, 1979; Jupiter and Uranus atmospheric entry probes in early 1980s.

F. Miss Universe: Raven-haired 18-year-old Miss Gloria Diaz of the Philippines was crowned Miss Universe in Miami Beach (Florida) on July 19.

The first runner-up was Miss Finland, Harriet Ericksson. She was followed by Miss Australia (Joanne Barrett), Miss Israel (Shava Devy) and Miss Japan (Kikuyo Ohsuka).

Miss Diaz, who speaks English and Spanish, was selected from 66 contestants. She received $10,000 in cash for winning the title and another $10,000 in a personal appearance contract. She also received numerous other prizes.

The dark-eyed Miss Diaz, whose vital statistics are 34-1/2-23-34-1/2 comes from Panaque, Rizal, and is a student at St. Theresa School. She is 5 feet 5 inches tall and weighs 115 lbs.

B. World Increase In Food Output: The Director-General of the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), Mr. Addeke H. Boerma, has reported to the UN Economic and Social Council that world food production in 1968 increased between two and three per cent and kept "at least" abreast of population growth.

According to him, food production in the Far East showed a "large and heartening increase."

He said that the food requirements of developing countries would increase at an average yearly rate of 3.9 per cent until 1985 and that a "long, arduous and extremely expensive struggle" would be necessary to achieve an equivalent increase of food production.

On July 18, he told a meeting of the UN Preparatory Committee for the Second Development Decade in Geneva that a target agricultural growth of six per cent a year of the gross domestic product of developing countries during the 70's represented "a goal both desirable and attainable."

He disclosed that the indicative world plan for agricultural growth being prepared by his Organization for submission to the next session of the FAO plenary conference in the Autumn retained a figure close to six per cent as the higher variant.

Even this figure presupposes "a drastic improvement in recent trends," he said. However, he would support this target percentage "assuming that a really substantial effort is made by the developed and the developing countries."

So far as agriculture was concerned, the growth rate which should be aimed at depended primarily on the growth of demand for agricultural products. In turn, the growth of demand could be traced mainly to population increase, exports and rising personal incomes. A GDP rate of six per cent per annum "already requires agriculture to grow much faster than in recent years," he emphasized, and a still higher target "would require that resources be concentrated very largely on economic goals." It would be "hazardous to shoot at a higher GDP target" if social objectives were to be pursued at the same time.

He recalled that food production represented in economic terms "about 85 per cent of the total output of the agricultural sector." The Indicative World Plan estimated that the rate of increase of demand for food in developing countries over the period 1962-85 would be 3.9 per cent a year, while the actual growth of food production for domestic consumption in the developing countries had been between 2.6 and 2.7 per cent a year from the mid-50's to the mid-60's. A major acceleration in the rate of increase would, therefore, be necessary. But about half of the food production in the developing world came from the subsistence sector and rapid increase in this sector was unlikely. "This means that most of the weight of the increased requirements will fall on those zones that produce for the market," and the increase in marketed output could be put at about five per cent a year. This again meant an increase in per caput productivity of about 50 per cent in a decade, "a dynamic rate of growth indeed."

The problem was also one of quality since people with rising incomes bought not only "more food but also better food, especially products of animal origin." FAO estimated that the demand for meat, milk, fish and eggs would increase faster than the demand for cereals—"in Asia more than twice as fast, and overall something like 80 per cent faster." "Our projections and studies have left us somewhat pessimistic concerning the feasibility of the developing countries meeting this growth in demand."

Besides these considerations, which were basically economic, there remained the human problem of "the protein gap." Animal protein was not necessarily a solution, and "indeed, we consider that vegetable protein offers far more practicable chances of overcoming" this nutritional problem.

He also discussed the problem of employment, pointing out that in Asia employment needs of agriculture up to 1985 "may increase faster than the agricultural labour force," but the population increase in that Continent will produce "an intolerable strain on land resources in a few decades." This problem, which was also alarming in other regions, "can, of course, only be met by measures permitting a stabilization of the population." In the meanwhile, "we can hope to do little more in rural areas than prevent the employment situation from deteriorating further."

H. USA Eases Curbs On Trade With China: The US State Department in Washington announced on July 21 easing of trade and travel restrictions towards China.

A spokesman said the action was "consistent with the Nixon Administration's desire to relax tensions and facilitate the development of peaceful contacts between the people of the United States and Communist China."

The announcement came a day before President Nixon and the Secretary of State, Mr. William Rogers, set out on travels that took them to a number of Asian capitals in three weeks.

He announced the following decisions:

(1) American tourists and American residents abroad will thereafter be able to purchase up to $100 worth of goods originating in China. Such purchases were formerly prohibited by the US Government.

(2) Six types of American citizens can have their passports automatically validated or travel to China when the new regulations go into effect. These categories are members of Congress, journalists, professional teachers, scholars with post-graduate degrees and students presently in college, scientists and medical doctors, and representatives of the American Red Cross.

I. Move For World Bank Aid For Mekong Basin Development: The President of the World Bank, Mr. Robert McNamara on July 7 welcomed UN suggestions that the Bank should become more closely associated with the development of the Mekong Basin in which four Asian States—Cambodia, Laos, Thailand and South Viet-Nam—are keenly interested.

Answering a letter sent last April by the UN Secretary General, U Thant, inviting the Bank to take a greater interest in the Mekong project Mr. McNamara said it would be "desirable to work out mutually satisfactory arrangements which would enable the Bank to support UN and the Mekong Committee in formulating an overall plan for the development of the Basin."

[The Committee for co-ordination and investigations of the Lower Mekong Basin was formed in 1957 by the four Governments concerned under the aegis of the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE).]

In his letter to Mr. McNamara, U Thant had said that the co-operating effort for the development of the Mekong Basin was entering "a new and critical phase" in which it would be in the interest of all concerned if the World Bank was more closely associated with the whole project."

In his answer, Mr. McNamara said that the World Bank should first become more fully informed of the work already done by the Mekong Committee. He announced that he had organized a special unit in the World Bank to start on this information drive immediately.

He also said that he had discussed Mekong Basin affairs with the President of the Asian Development Bank and with a number of countries which are Bank members. All had agreed that the World Bank should give an affirmative answer to U Thant's proposal.

He also stressed the need for the World Bank to work in close co-operation with the Asian Development Bank. "If the World Bank is to become involved in this matter, it would expect to work closely with the Asian Development Bank as well as the UN and the Mekong Committee."

J. Collective Security System In Asia Proposed—Mr. A. Gromyko's Address To Supreme Soviet: The Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Andrei Gromyko, in an address to the Supreme Soviet (Parliament) in Moscow on July 10, expressed the hope that the proposal for a system of collective security in Asia would be given serious consideration by Asian Governments.

He added that the question required discussion and consultation on the part of the Governments concerned.

He appeared to be generally pleased with the response that Mr. Brezhnev's idea of Asian security system had evoked in Asian capitals. He, however, denied that the system which Russia had in mind was directed against any country. Any such suggestion was without foundation. The system implied collective efforts by all Asian States.

In a two-hour review of the international situation and Soviet foreign policy, which political observers described as balanced, constructive and exhaustive, Mr. Gromyko spoke warmly of growing ties of friendship with India, explained the threat posed by China, and renewed the Russian offer to the United States to move steadily towards detente and disarmament.

He said: "As a result of the strengthening of relations between two sides an atmosphere has been created in relations between the Soviet Union and India in which all questions which arise are resolved in a spirit of confidence and trust, as it should always be the case between good friends. The Soviet Union will do everything necessary to further develop and strengthen friendly co-operation between our country and India, one of the great Asian nations." There was also readiness for continuation and strengthening of friendly relations between the Soviet Union and Pakistan in economy, culture and other fields.

He indicated Soviet willingness for summit talks with thte United States when he said that the US President's "pronouncements in favour of a well-prepared Soviet-American summit have not, of course, gone unnoticed in the Soviet Union."

He said that Soviet policy was still one of "restoring and developing Sino-Soviet friendship, while, of course, rebuffing any provocations."

He rejected Chinese territorial claims against the Soviet Union as false and hoped the Chinese leaders would come to "the only correct conclusion—that incidents must be avoided, that in the relations between our countries the language of animosity and strength is inappropriate."

He added that the Soviet Union would like to hold wide-ranging talks with its hostile neighbour, China, on the whole problem of mutual relations between them.

He said that the Warsaw Pact would never allow any encroachment on the socialist gains of its member-countries.

At the same time, he rejected as "nothing but slander" the Western allegation that the Soviet Union favoured a curtailed form of sovereignty for its allies.

In a reference to the West Asian situation, he strongly attacked Israeli policies but said it was too early to forecast how the current four-Power talks at United Nations would end.

He also repeated Soviet calls for the full withdrawal of American troops from South Viet-Nam and backed the Viet-Namese communists' stand on ending the war.

He dealt at length with an alleged upsurge of neo-Nazi activities in West Germany but said that the Soviet Government was ready to continue contacts with Bonn on the possibility of an exchange of declarations of non-aggression.

He also proposed the setting up of a nuclear-free area in the Mediterranean.

K. Non-Aligned Consultative Conference: The Consultative Conference of Non-Aligned Countries approved by acclamation a draft final document in Belgrade on July 11 emphasizing the usefulness of adequate preparations before a meeting of the non-aligned countries' Heads of State.

The seven-page document also reaffirmed the attachment of the States participating in the Conference to the principle of non-alignment.

It expressed support for the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and "all peoples fighting for their independence... and against all forms of foreign domination."

It denounced the "increasingly frequent recourse to the politics of force, including armed intervention, subversive activities and interference in other nations' internal affairs."

It deplored the fact that no measurable progress had been achieved towards security through disarmament.

It expressed its support for the "heroic struggle" the people of Viet-Nam had been waging for years for liberty and independence, and expressed the hope that the Paris peace talks would produce results soon.

The action of imperialist, colonialist and racist forces was being intensified in Africa, particularly Rhodesia, South Africa and the Portuguese possessions.

On West Asia, it expressed support for the restoration of "the Arab people of Palestine in their usurped homeland." The continued occupation of territories of UAR, Jordan and Syria constituted "a violation of UN principles, a challenge to the objectives of non-alignment and a grave threat to peace."

Consequently, it called for "the immediate withdrawal of foreign troops from all occupied Arab territories."

It called for the "re-establishment of the People's Republic of China in its legitimate rights and an adaptation of the structures of UN so as to allow all States to play their full part."

It called for improved access to the markets of developed countries and expressed its support for the Algiers Charter and for the proposal by the Organization of African Unity on the convocation of a meeting of Ministers from "the 77 developing countries."

Delegations undertook to develop mutual relations between their countries, to step up co-operation, and to co-ordinate their efforts within UN.

India was among the five countries which expressed reservations on the clause recommending China's admission to United Nations during the drafting of the final communique at the consultative meeting of 51 non-aligned countries. The other countries were Afghanistan, Burma, Laos and Jamaica.

Iraq and Syria protested that the final communique was not "tough" concerning the withdrawal of Israeli troops from occupied territories.

Algeria and Mauritania, too, protested because the Conference "contained too many countries which should not be with us, and did not contain those which ought to be with us."

Pakistan and Peru sent delegations to the Conference in case their countries were admitted to the non-aligned group. The semi-official Pakistani delegation was composed of four Ambassadors, including the Ambassador to France.

L. Monkey Launched Into Space By USA: Bonny, a 14-lb male pigtail monkey born in the jungles of Thailand, was launched by USA on June 28 on a 30-day Earth-orbiting mission to help measure the effects of prolonged weightlessness.

Wearing a nylon flight suit and strapped into an "astronaut" couch, Bonny was blasted aloft aboard Biosatellite III, a spacecraft weighing over 1,500 lbs. The craft was launched towards a 250-mile-high orbit by a Thor-Delta rocket.

Because it was the monkey's regular sleep period, he was dozing when the rocket ignited, but radio data showed he awakened quickly as the rocket took off. Officials reported that his heart rate rose from 160 to 200, but it returned to normal shortly after he had achieved orbit. Two hours after launching he was reported in good condition and settling back to rest again.

The satellite with the monkey aboard was catalogued as the 4,000th object launched by the United States.

Returns Safely But Dies:

But, Bonny died suddenly at midnight on July 8, 12 hours after he had landed in the Pacific Ocean following 130 orbits around the Earth in a space capsule.

A. Plans For Gulf Defence Force: The Times (London) reported on July 17 an account of the land, sea and air forces which are recommended as the Union Defence Force for the Union of Arab Emirates (UAE—the seven Trucial Sheikhdoms together with Qatar and Bahrain) after the withdrawal of the British forces from the Gulf by the end of 1971.

These recommendations, which have been accepted by the Council of Rulers of the UAE, were made in the report of Maj.-Gen. Sir John Willoughby as military adviser to the Union.

The report had not been published, but it was known that the recommendations amounted broadly for the Army to the expansion of the fully trained and well-tried Trucial Oman Scouts (now about 1,400 British officers and Arab infantry) into a brigade group of, initially, rather more than 2,000 officers and men.

For the Union's Navy the purchase of eight naval patrol craft was recommended, and for the Air Force the purchase of nine Tiger-cat fire units to defend air bases, and also six Hawker Hunter aircraft and a number of light air support and air transport aircraft.

These naval and air units would be joined, in case of external threat, by the forces of individual States in the Union, notably Abu Dhabi, which is by far the richest member. For the poorer rulers the Union forces also presumably constitute a balancing element as they contemplate Abu Dhabi's otherwise dominant position.

The rulers had decided in October, 1968 to set up the Union Defence Force with combined training and a unified command. In addition they agreed then that individual UAE members could maintain their own separate State forces. Abu Dhabi is now recruiting the Abu Dhabi Defence Force, including some 2,400 infantry and 12 Hunter fighter aircraft, and Bahrain, Qatar, Dubai and Ras al Khaymah are in the process of developing small forces—Ras al Khaymah has just announced the setting up of a force of 300 men. The kernel of the defence forces as a deterrent against any disruption of stable conditions in the area would be, however, the Union Defence Force supported in particular by Abu Dhabi.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Moves For Bases In Indian Ocean; Air Force Appointments; States' Loans; Telengana Agitation Losses; Naxalite Activities; Jute Workers' Strike.

A. Moves For Military Bases In Indian Ocean—Protests To Russia And USA: It was learnt in London on July 12 that India had protested to Russia and USA against what it believed were Soviet and US moves to build rival military bases in the Indian Ocean.

There had been no evidence from the Soviet Union or USA to indicate India's suspicions were justified. Nevertheless, the Indian Government seemed convinced that Russia was planning to transform the Pakistani port of Gwadur, west of Karachi, into a submarine base, ostensibly for Pakistani use and that USA had already begun transforming certain islands in the British Indian Ocean territory into an air and sea transit, communications and storage base.

Taking up the Gwadur affair with the Soviet Union and the American affair with Britain, India had protested against any action which, it feared, would have the effect of importing Big Power rivalries and tensions into the hitherto untroubled Indian Ocean.

Unofficial sources gave the following account of two diplomatic episodes:

In Moscow in recent weeks India had challenged Russia about reports that Pakistan was to be supplied with Soviet submarines and that Gwadur was to be developed as a base able to accommodate and service submarines of the Soviet fleet. The Soviet Union had denied any such intentions. But, India recalled that the Kremlin also had denied plans to provide arms to Pakistan and yet had been doing so.

It was Moscow's general policy not to acquire overseas military bases but to help friendly foreign Powers to build such facilities for themselves.

Then the Russians were in a position—as in the case of the UAR port of Alexandria—to share in the use of these facilities. This, India feared, would happen in Gwadur, which is near Iran's frontier.

In London, the External Affairs Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh, protested strongly to Britain against the use of its Indian Ocean islands for US military purposes. Mr. Singh advised the British Foreign Secretary, Mr. Michael Stewart, that India was against the build-up of US base facilities in such islands as Aldabra and Diego Suarez.

Mr. Stewart denied that the Americans were planning to build any full-scale military base in this British territory. He insisted that only refuelling and communications facilities, including a satellite tracking station, were being planned. US military authorities were known to be surveying the islands for these purposes.

B. Deputy Chief Of Air Staff—Other Appointments: Air Marshal O. P. Mehra, Air Officer-in-Charge for Maintenance at Air Headquarters, was appointed on August 7 Deputy Chief of the Air Staff in place of Air Marshal M. M. Engineer, who took over as AOC-in-C, Western Air Command.

Air Marshal Mehra was born in January, 1919 and educated at Government College, Lahore where he obtained a Master's Degree in History in April, 1940. In the same year he joined the Indian Air Force. He served for a considerable time in the North-West Frontier Province and later saw action on the Arakan Front in Burma during World War II.

On August 11, Air Vice-Marshal Y. V. Malse, till now Air Officer in-Charge, Administration, was promoted Air Marshal and took over as Air

Officer-in-Charge, Maintenance, succeeding Air Marshal O. P. Mehra.

C. CPI (M) Central Committee Criticises World Communist Conference: The Central Committee of the CPI (M), meeting in Calcutta on July 19, criticised the document of the recent World Communist Conference in Moscow for its "old revisionist understanding" which had sharply divided the world Communist movement.

The Committee expressed the CPI (M)'s firm support to all efforts for joint action against imperialism, but held that consistent struggle against imperialism was not possible unless the Communist parties overcame revisionist and dogmatic deviations.

In a statement, the Central Committee declared that the Moscow document nourished illusions about imperialism accepting peaceful co-existence and solving problems in the spirit of peaceful co-existence. According to the document, the most urgent anti-imperialist task was the struggle for peace; and the most urgent task of the struggle for peace was a Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. "This is how the anti-imperialist movement is being derailed."

The document was also attacked by the Marxists for its revisionist outlook on the role of economic competition between the socialist and imperialist systems, its underestimate of the great role of national liberations struggles, and its belief in the peaceful transition to socialism from capitalism. "Such an erroneous thesis and open concession to it in the background of the monstrous militarization of capitalist States are to fly in the face of facts and realities and to abandon the Marxist-Leninist stand-point on the States as organized violence in the hands of the class in power."

It also strongly protested against the activities of "the revisionist leaders of the Right CPI (of India) who were given an honoured place at the Conference." It alleged that the Rightists had utilized the forum of the Conference to slander and attack China, exposing their "hypocritical claim" to support joint anti-imperiallist action. "Above all, they slandered our party, told base lies and covered their splitting activities in the mass organizations and the United Front Ministries."

D. New States' Loans: Fifteen State Governments announced on August 11 the issue of their new loans carring interest of 5-3/4 per cent per annum for amounts aggregating Rs. 155 crores.

Only Maharashtra and Gujarat announced their loans with an issue price at par. The remaining 13 States announced their issue price at Rs. 99.50 per cent.

Maharashtra topped the list with a loan of Rs. 22 crores. Next came Tamil Nadu with Rs. 20 crores and Gujarat with Rs. 16 crores.

The borrowing programme of other States was as follow: Andhra Pradesh Rs. 14.50 crores, Assam Rs. 4.50 crores, Bihar Rs. 5.50 crores, Haryana Rs. 5 crores, Kerala Rs. 6 crores, Madhya Pradesh Rs. 8 crores, Mysore Rs. 10 crores, Orissa Rs. 6.50 crores, Punjab Rs. 6 crores, Rajasthan Rs. 7 crores, Uttar Pradesh Rs. 13 crores and West Bengal Rs. 11 crores.

All loans opened for subscriptions on September 1 and closed on September 6.

The loans will be redeemable at par after 12 years i.e. on September 1, 1981 and interest will be paid half-yearly on March 1 and September 1 every year.

The 4 per cent 1969 development loans of 12 States and 4-1/2 per cent 1969 development loans of Bombay and Mysore were accepted at par for conversion into the new loans.

E. Total Debt Of States: According to a review of the finances of of State Governments, published in the Reserve Bank's bulletin on August 4, the total outstanding debt of the State Governments had increased by an annual average of 12.2 per cent since 1960.

The debts had risen from 20.6 per cent of national income (revised series) in 1960-61 to 24.3 per cent in 1967-68, the latest year for which national income data were available.

The total outstanding debt of the 16 State Governments was estimated to be Rs. 7,648 crores at the end of March, 1970, showing an increase of Rs. 371 crores over the outstanding amount of Rs. 7,227 crores at the end of March, 1969.

Of the total outstanding debt anticipated at the end of March, 1970, loans from the Centre would account for Rs. 5,807 crores (75.9 per cent) of the total debt; market borrowing for Rs. 1.101 crores (14.4 per cent); unfunded debt for Rs. 431 crores; and other loans from financial institutions for Rs. 210 crores.

The review made by the economic department of the Reserve Bank was based on the Budgets for 1969-70 of 13 State Governments and vote-on-account Budgets in the case of Andhra, Uttar Pradesh and West Bengal. The review excluded the Budget of Nagaland and those of Union Territories.

G. Naga Hostiles Violate Cease-fire: Three jawans were killed and three others injured when armed Naga hostiles ambushed a convoy of three army vehicles at Chemenyu on the Kohima-Wokha road on August 4.

Curfew was clamped on Kohima, the State capital of Nagaland.

The Nagaland Government thereafter lodged a strongly-worded complaint with the peace observer team over what it called the "unprovoked heavy mortar firings by the underground on the midnight of August 1."

The complaint described the underground action a serious violation of the suspension of operations agreement. It said the underground had opened unprovoked heavy mortar and small arms fire on two security forces posts and some civilian houses.

On August 8, two Naga hostiles and two jawans were killed in a clash after an army convoy was ambushed in the Chakasang area, about 75 km from Kohima. Two hostiles were captured in the encounter which took place on the road between Zumheboto and Chazuba.

This was the third ambush in eight days. Twelve people, including five rebels and four civilians, had so far been killed.

H. Telengana Agitation Losses: The total loss suffered from the seven-month-old Telengana agitation was assessed on August 9 by official statistics at Rs. 50 crores.

This does not include the loss of another Rs. 50 crores that would have otherwise been invested in the State by industrialists from outside, who have been scared away by the agitation.

The "statistics of destruction" compiled officially stated that till the end of July, about 55 buses were burnt, resulting in a loss of Rs. 25,00,000, while damage caused to 30 buses claimed Rs. 1,75,000. The loss of earning to the State Road Transport Corporation was about Rs. 3 crores. Forty members of the staff were injured in the violence.

The Electricity Board suffered a loss of over Rs. 9,00,000 from the closing of the Kothagudem thermal units for some time and also on account of the damage and destruction of property there.

Three mobile tank units, one ambulance and one water tank of the Fire Services Department were damaged in Hyderabad city. Three drivers and one fireman were seriously injured.

The Railways suffered a loss of Rs. 2,00,000 as a result of destruction of property, in addition to the loss of earnings which had not yet been estimated. Six railway bogies and one engine were set on fire. There were nine cases of removal of fish-plates and rails and 11 cases of placing of boulders on the track.

Six railway bridges were attacked. There were 16 cases of burning of sleepers and 12 cases of pelting of stones on railway stations. Railway signal equipment and cabins were attacked at 20 stations and 50 trains were stopped by stone-throwing. There were eight cases of removal of hose pipes.

There were 78 instances of attack on post offices and several electricity poles were uprooted. Ninety-two private vehicles and 48 hotels and cinema houses were attacked. Seven grape gardens were destroyed.

Looting of shops and houses numbered 55. Three tobacco firms were attacked besides a bank, a poultry farm and four cases of burning of Government vehicles, 96 cases of stoning police personnel and 65 schools and 68 Government offices being attacked.

I. Naxalite Activities In Andhra Pradesh: Twelve Naxalites were shot dead in an encounter with the police in the Parvathipuram agency area of Srikakulam district of Andhra Pradesh on August 3.

The encounter took place on the Tulsi hills where the police flushed the Naxalites. When the Naxalites saw the police party, they opened fire with muzzleloaders. The police recovered four of these.

According to official circles, this was the fourth major encounter between the police and the Naxalites in recent months.

Over 25 top Naxalites had been arrested so far and the authorities hoped this particular action would be a setback to the Naxalite movement.

With the recent arrival of two more battalions of the Special Armed Police, the authorities had intensified the drive against the Naxalites in Khammam, Warangal and Karimnagar districts of Telengana.

J. Assam Assembly Ratifies Reorganization Bill: The Assam Assembly on August 6 unanimously ratified the Constitution (Twenty-second) Amendment Bill relating to the re-organization of Assam.

The Bill had earlier been passed by Parliament. Winding up the debate in the Assembly, the Chief Minister, Mr. B. P. Chaliha said this was a remarkable step for the unity of the hills and plains people of this region. The proper implementation of the scheme would depend on the conduct of the people of Assam, the Government and the Opposition parties.

Leaders of the Hill State People's Democratic Party forced their way into the visitors' gallery of the Assembly and threw leaflets. They also tried to make speeches.

Later, the House reprimanded the party leader, Mr. Bareh, a former chairman of the Shillong Municipal Board, who said he had no other way to represent his party's case to the Assembly as it had no members in the House.

K. Kerala Order On Cases Against Central Employees—High Court's Ruling: A Full Bench of the Kerala High Court on August 6 held that the Kerala Government's order withdrawing the cases against the Central Government employees who had participated in the one-day token strike on September 19, 1968 was a defiance of the law.

Setting aside the lower court orders granting consent for the withdrawal of these cases and acquittal of the accused, the Court directed re-trial of the offenders by the district magistrates or magistrates other than those who had heard these cases earlier.

It observed: "The State Government, instead of acting for the furtherance of the objects of the law has, through the impugned order (issued on December 24, 1968) contributed to further the mischief of the offender."

M. Jute Workers' Strike: A strike by workers in the jute industry began in Calcutta on August 3. It ended after eight days on August 12.

An Agreement between representatives of the jute mill-owners and the four central trade union organizations to end the strike was signed in Calcutta on August 11.

The terms of settlement were:

(1) The question of revision of the wage structure in the industry will be referred to a suitable machinery to be set up with such composition, terms of reference and time limit as may be agreed upon by both parties. It is agreed that permanent posts in the mills will be manned by permanent hands; the fixation of permanent complement will also be referred to the machinery.

(2) Pending revision of the wage structure, an interim increase of Rs. 30 per month in the basic wages of the workmen will be paid with effect from August 1. There will be no variation in the dearness allowance payable as at the end of July, 1969 consequent upon any change in the consumers' price index of Calcutta; any adjustment on this again will be made after the wage structure has been revised.

(3) An ad hoc payment of amount equal to the interim increase for one month—Rs. 30—will be made to each workman who was on the roll on August 1, 1969. The payment will be made in the first half of November.

(4) Workmen will call off the strike and resume work on August 12.

The additional burden on the industry as a result of the agreement has been estimated at Rs. 70,00,000 a month. The loss of production due to the eight-day strike is put at about Rs. 9 crores.

ISRAEL

A. West Asia Fighting: There was continued fighting, both on land and in the air, between Israeli forces on one side and UAR, Jordanian and Syrian forces on the other in the four weeks from July 15 to August 11. The accent was on air attacks.

On July 15 and 16, UAR and Israeli guns roared intermittently across the Suez Canal and one Israeli soldier was killed. The firing centered in the Dwad Suwar region, midway along the waterway.

Later on July 16, the Israelis claimed that Arab gunners in Jordan twice opened machine-gun and mortar fire on Israeli Army patrols in the Beisan Valley on the Israel-Jordan frontier.

Palestinian commandos claimed to have killed a "certain number" of Israeli soldiers and wounded several others in five clashes in Israeli-occupied territory from July 14 to 16. Six commandos were killed in the clashes. Several Israeli vehicles were destroyed.

On July 20, UAR claimed that its ground and air forces had shot down 17 Israeli planes during Israeli air raids on UAR positions.

A military communique said that UAR and Israeli planes fought when two formations of Israeli Mirages attacked UAR positions near the town of Ismailia, midway along the Suez Canal.

According to the Israeli State radio, five UAR jets were downed in action at the Suez Canal.

A UAR spokesman said that Israeli attacks on positions including Port Said, Port Fuad and Qantara were made by five successive formations of six planes. He added that in the meantime, UAR's artillery engaged Israeli artillery and tanks along the northern sector of the Canal from Deversoir in the south to Port Fuad in the north.

The air action came after Israeli commandos had raided an Egyptian island fortress in the Gulf of Suez earlier on July 20 in their costliest commando action since the June, 1967 six-day war.

Meanwhile, according to Cairo Radio, UAR planes attacked Israeli targets inside the Sinai desert and destroyed a land missile unit and two radar stations on the road leading from El Arish.

According to a Tel Aviv spokesman, Israeli planes struck at UAR artillery and missile bases in the northern sector of the Suez Canal on July 20. A battery of Soviet-made ground-to-air SA-2 missiles was hit during the operation. It was the first time since the 1967 war that Israeli aircraft had bombed military targets on the UAR front.

An Israeli military spokesman said that Israeli jet planes struck at two separate fronts in a matter of hours on July 22 as they swooped on UAR gun emplacements along the Suez Canal and on two El Fatah guerrilla bases inside Jordan. Israeli planes hit gun positions on the Suez Canal for the second time in three days.

Israeli sources claimed that their jets also went into action on July 22 as they attacked the Ma'ad and Hirbetmarka El Fatah bases about six km east of the River Jordan.

A UAR military spokesman said that six UAR civilians were injured and a number of buildings damaged when Israeli heavy guns opened up on civilian targets in Suez and Port Tawfik. A duel between Egyptian and Israeli forces raged for six hours in which heavy artillery, tanks and rockets were used.

In New York, Israel denied on July 24 UAR allegations that its planes had attacked civilian objectives.

The Israeli Ambassador to UN, Mr. Yosef Tekoah, wrote to the UN Security Council that since UAR forces along the Suez Canal carried out "incessant acts of aggression, Israel has no choice but to resort to measures of self-defence."

He added: "These measures are directed exclusively against UAR military positions and against bases from which attacks against Israeli forces originate. Allegations made by the UAR authorities that these measures are aimed against civilian targets are without foundation in fact."

Israeli military sources said that on July 24, nine Soviet-built UAR aircraft were shot down in renewed air and ground action along the Suez Canal. The figure of nine— which was not officially confirmed —would be the biggest bag of Arab planes in one day by the Israelis since the 1967 war. If confirmed, the latest tally would mean that the Israelis had so far shot down 42 Soviet-built UAR planes since the six-day war for a claimed cost of five Israeli aircraft.

These raids came less than 24 hours after President Nasser's statement in Cairo on July 23 that "the Egyptian Army is now ready and able to strike back at Israel on a large scale."

A UAR military spokesman said that on July 25, UAR gunners shot down three Israeli jets over the Suez Canal, bringing the total number of Israeli aircraft downed in the past two days to ten.

UAR MIG fighters also penetrated up to 50 kilometres into Israeli-held Sinai territory where they were able to strike at Israeli targets. All the planes returned unharmed with the exception of one whose pilot parachuted to safety.

According to a Tel Aviv report, Israeli planes bombed and strafed UAR positions in the northern part of the Suez Canal zone on July 25 for 1½ hours. The raid followed UAR shelling in the area.

It was stated in Cairo that UAR had mounted a massive air attack on Israeli positions in Sinai inflicting "heavy casualties" in men and material on July 27. This was the third time in a week that the UAR Air Force had crossed into Sinai to launch an offensive since the Arab-Israeli war in June, 1967.

Observers thought that the steady UAR air activity inside Israeli-held territory marked a definite change in UAR's military posture which until a week earlier had been confined to defensive measures against Israeli attacks.

Cairo Radio said that UAR anti-aircraft guns shot down an Israeli Skyhawk in the Tawfik port region on July 28.

An Israeli military spokesman confirmed a report from Amman that the Israeli Air Force had bombarded concentrations of troops in the Irbid area in the north of the Jordan Valley.

On July 31, an Israeli military spokesman said that the Syrian Air Force attacked an Israeli Army position in the Mount Hermon area while Syrian artillery shelled Kuneitra and Telabouid in the Golan Heights. Neither action caused Israeli casualties. Israeli jets had bombed a Palestinian commando concentration inside Syrian territory on July 30.

Sporadic artillery duels between Egyptian and Israeli batteries erupted along the southern sector of the Suez Canal on August 1. The exchange was the first since July 29.

On August 2, Israeli troops shelled Arab guerrilla posts across the Lebanese border after a rocket attack on the Israeli township of Kiryal Shmoneh. This was the second attack on the township in 48 hours. The attack followed the visit to Kiryal Shmoneh by several Israeli leaders, including the Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir on August 1.

Israeli and Egyptian forces continued exchanges of artillery and light arms fire across the Suez Canal throughout the night of August 5.

Israeli jets crossed the Jordan River on August 6 to strike at Jordanian gun emplacements which had shelled the village of Ashdot Yaacov in the Jordan Valley, south of the Sea of Galilee.

Arab guerrillas claimed on August 8 that they had launched an attack on Israeli outposts in the northern Jordan valley, described by them as the heaviest attack since the June, 1967 war.

A communique issued by the Palestine armed struggle command said that the assault, along a six-km front, involved "several hundred" guerrillas. It claimed that 60 Israelis were killed or wounded. No mention was made of guerrilla casualties.

An Israeli military spokesman said on August 8 that Israeli planes launched a "very heavy" attack against Jordanian headquarter positions, camps and other sites on August 17.

He added that all Israeli planes returned to base, and denied Jordanian claims that two Israeli aircraft were shot down. The hour-long air offensive was supported by tank fire directed against Jordanian frontier positions in the area.

Fourteen Israeli fighters took part in the raid, which lasted an hour. The planes strafed a village in the Irbid district, 28 miles north of Amman, with rockets. Two military personnel and two civilians were wounded.

According to Amman Radio, Jordanian anti-aircraft fire shot down three Israeli aircraft in three separate incidents on August 10.

Curfew was clamped on several areas of Gaza town, where four Israeli soldiers were wounded in a guerrilla attack on August 9.

Israeli aircraft bombed military targets in Jordan and an irrigation canal in Ghor on August 10.

Israelis and Arabs clashed along the Jordan River frontier in the Beisan valley for the second successive day on August 9.

A man and two boys were wounded when Arab gunners in Jordan fired a number of 82-mm mortar shells at Yardena settlement, 15 km south of the Sea of Galilee.

President G. A. Nasser On Liberation Of Occupied Areas:

The UAR President, Col. G. A. Nasser declared at a meeting of the Arab Socialist Union on July 23 that Egypt would fight to liberate all occupied Arab lands, especially Jerusalem.

He went on: "When I say the restoration of our lands, I do not mean Egypt alone. I don't mean just Sinai alone, but all Arab lands and above all Jerusalem. We shall recover the West Bank (of the Jordan River) and the Golan Heights."

America had continued to back Israel, he charged, despite statements by President Kennedy and President Johnson that they would not support any aggression in West Asia. "American arms supplies to Israel while it occupies Arab land mean that USA supports this occupation."

Britain too was supplying Israel with weapons, he charged, but said that British support was stealthy and "under the table" so as not to endanger Britain's interests in the Arab world.

He added: "New efforts are imminent to co-ordinate Arab action at the highest level, with the Palestinian resistance organizations taking part. New efforts would also be made to strengthen the eastern front, which had a vital role to play. The struggle would be very long."

UN Observer Killed:

A Swedish member of the UN Observer Corps in the Suez Canal region, Major B. R. Plane, was killed during sporadic shelling between Israeli and UAR forces at the southern end of the waterway on July 27. He was fatally wounded at Port Ibrahim, on the UAR side of the Canal.

Major Plane was the first UN military observer to be killed in the Suez Canal region since the June, 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

Following Major Plane's death, UN announced on July 29 that it had temporarily closed down three of its 18 cease-fire observation posts along the Suez Canal.

A UN spokesman told newsmen that the Chief Observer, Lt-Gen. Odd Bull had closed down observation posts "Red" and "Kilo" because the shelters there were "totally inadequate" for the Observers' safety and "Mike" because its water supply and electrical system had been knocked out.

JAPAN

A. National Development Programme: The Government approved on May 31 what was officially described as the new comprehensive National Development Programme.

The Programme,, with 1985 as the target year, will serve as the basis for measures to solve the worsening problems of excessive congestion, sparsity of population and a growing inter-regional gap, and to promote the development of man-power suitable for the emerging "information-centred society" for creating desirable environment for the Japanese people.

The Programme was first formulated in 1962. It has now been revised and new formulae have been incorporated.

It prescribes: (1) concentration of pivotal managerial functions in big cities; (2) establishment of new net-works of transportation, communication and distribution to make these functions systematic; (3) connexion of various localities with big cities through the new net-works to promote industrial development that can bring the characteristics of each locality into full play; (4) creation of desirable environments throughout the country with primary emphasis on human responsibility to protect nature and preserve living environments; and (5) great reliance upon co-operation between the Government and private quarters, and the participation of private "developers," such as realty and construction firms.

The Programme consists of three sections— namely, the "basic plan for comprehensive national land development," "basic idea for comprehensive regional development" and "methods for attaining the planned targets."

To solve problems of excessive congestion and sparsity, the Programme envisions the following basic frame-work with 1985 as the target year. That is, as for land utilization, the total area of waste-land will decline to one-third, while that of roads and residential land will nearly double compared with 1965.

The population will rise to about 120 million, and the number of households will reach approximately 35 million or 1.5 times the 1965 level. Working hours will be shortened, with leisure time increasing 1.4-fold. The gross national product (GNP) will climb to between $360,000 million and $420,000 million. The labour force, meanwhile, will increase to 56 million, of which people in agricultural, forestry and fishery industries will account for less than five million, while white-collar workers will rise to 18 million.

The Programme has three main tasks, which form basic pillars —that is, "formation of a new framework of national land development," "enforcement of industrial development projects," and "preservation of environment."

As for the new "frame-work," transport and communication net-works throughout the country will be expanded further. The net-works will have key routes connecting seven big cities—namely, Sapporo, Sendai, Tokyo, Nagoya, Osaka, Hiroshima and Fukuoka—with which innumerable local cities will be linked. The net-works will serve as guideways for the dispersal of population, industry and culture to local areas, while the seven big cities will be re-organized, with primary emphasis on pivotal managerial functions.

As for industrial development projects, planning will be based on the characteristics of each locality in the context of the new transport, communication and distribution net-works.

In the sphere of agriculture, forestry and fishery, for instance, 10 million head of cattle will be necessary to meet the future needs for meat and milk. Therefore, stock raising centres will be built in several areas, including Hokkaido and Kyushu.

As for the manufacturing industry, the improvement of transport net-works will enable them to disperse, and therefore, super-sized industrial bases and crude oil import bases will be constructed in remote districts. Meanwhile, to cope with an expansion of consumption, distribution and processing with storage, distribution and processing functions will be built near major consuming centres.

The people's outdoor recreation hours will double in comparison with 1965. Therefore, well-equipped natural sightseeing and recreation areas covering about 50,000 hectares in all will be developed in mountainous and wooded regions.

The preservation of the environment is a special feature of the Programme. In this field, the natural and cultural heritage will be protected, every effort will be made to prevent public hazard, such as air and water pollution, educational, cultural, transport and sanitary facilities will be improved in provincial cities to make them attractive, medium and super-high apartment houses will be built in big cities, and the "housing-park formula" combining parks and multi-story residential complexes will be adopted in the suburbs of big cities, and water resources will be developed over extensive areas. The cumulative total of such investments is estimated at some 30,000,000 million yen to 50,000,000 million yen ($83,00 million to $140,000 million).

As for large-scale development projects, three types are envisaged. One of them concerns the formation of new transport, communication and other net-works. The second type concerns the construction and improvement of the development bases for agriculture, manufacturing industries, distribution, sightseeing, etc. While these are mostly production capital investments, the projects for realizing them will be pushed along with those for social overhead capital. The third type includes projects to be carried out from a view-point of preserving the environment.

If these basic projects are to be carried out smoothly, it is essential to draw up, in the greatest possible detail, fundamental plans for the comprehensive development of each bloc, which will respect the bloc's individuality and independence and make the most of its characteristics, while giving due consideration to nation-wide co-operation. To that end, the Programme divides the country into seven blocks:

Hokkaido: This region will develop as stock-raising and industrial centres to utilize its relatively vast land and rich natural resources. It will serve as a base for interchanges with Siberia, Alaska and similar adjacent areas.

Tohoku (north-east): The target is to develop this region as a base for trade with the northern areas, as an industrial district adjacent to the Capital Region, and as the nation's biggest food supply centre.

Capital Region: This block will serve as a national centre of government, economy and culture as well as a gateway for international exchanges.

Chubu Region (central Japan): Full of potential viability, this area is expected to develop as sites of secondary and tertiary industries and highly productive agriculture.

Kinki Region (west Japan): It will grow as an economic and cultural centre abreast with the Capital Region, and will serve as the core of western Japan.

Chugoku and Shikoku: The region will develop as the nerve centre of the national economy in western Japan in close conjunction with the Kinki and Kyushu Regions. With the completion of a giant bridge linking Honshu and Shikoku, the coastal industries of the Seto Inland Sea area will grow and expand in a big way with Hiroshima as the core.

Kyushu: This region will not only undergo rapid industrialization, but will also develop as a food supply centre, a sightseeing centre and a base for trade with South-East Asia.

To carry out these plans and projects with success, the Programme has adopted the "mixed government-al private formula" to place great expectations on the participation of private "developers." It also refers to the need to study reforms for the existing local administrative structure, since it is essential to promote the "great sphere administration."

Full studies are also called for regarding the problem of securing land for public use and housing projects and the problem of adjusting and revising the legal systems concerned, both of which the Programme describes as important.

B. Concern Over Gas Leakage In Okinawa: An accidental leakage of poisonous nerve gas on July 8 in Okinawa injured 25 people, causing widespread consternation in Japan.

The Foreign Ministry on July 18 questioned the United States Minister, Mr. David Osborn, on the incident.

It was the first report that the United States might have stockpiled the gas overseas and it caused resentment in Japan, which is seeking the return of Okinawa. The island has been administered by the United States since 1945.

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Kichi Aichi, said he had asked USA "not to cause uneasiness among the people of Okinawa" by storing the gas there.

The Chief Cabinet Secretary, Mr. Shigeru Hori said later that Mr. Osborn had confirmed that no VX gas weapons were deployed at any US bases in Japan proper. Mr. Hori did not know what was in Okinawa, but he said he believed it was strictly safeguarded by US military authorities.

Mr. Hori's statement regarding the US attitude was elaborated later by Mr. Naraichi Fujiyama, Director-General of the Public Information Bureau of the Foreign Ministry. He said at a news conference that Mr. Osborn told Mr. Fumihiko Togo, Director-General of the American Affairs Bureau of the Foreign Ministry on July 19 that USA had no chemical weapons in Japan proper and did not intend to have them in the future.

Mr. Osborn also told Mr. Togo that there was no possibility the gas would leak over a wide area and cause serious damage. He also said that USA would exert its utmost effort to prevent the occurrence of similar accidents.

US Admission:

The US Pentagon on July 18 admitted that 24 Americans on Okinawa had received medical treatment after a mishap, but refused to confirm or deny a Press report that nerve gas was involved.

In a statement, it said: "As a result of a mishap on Okinawa which occurred on July 8 while they were working on a maintenance operation, 23 United States military personnel and one United States civilian employee were placed under medical observation. All were released and returned to full duty within about six hours. No other persons were involved."

Ryukyu Government's Demand:

Meanwhile, Mr. Chobyo Yara, Chief Executive of the Ryukyu Government, said on July 19 that he would demand that USA remove all nerve gas from Okinawa.

Speaking at a news conference at Naha, Mr. Yara said the storing of such gas for military use in Okinawa had already been confirmed by authorities in Washington.

He said removal of chemical warfare weapons should be added to the objectives of the campaign for removal of nuclear installations and the B-52 bombers and stoppage of the entry of nuclear submarines into Okinawan ports.

He said the gas leakage incident should not be allowed to affect adversely Okinawa's reversion now in sight.

The Okinawa Prefectural Reversion Council (Fukkikyo) issued a statement expressing serious concern over the reported accidental release of lethal gas and demanding immediate removal of such weapons from the Island.

The Okinawa Legislature, meanwhile, also took action on the leakage incident. All the Leftist parties —Socialist Masses, Socialist and Okinawa People's—agreed that they should make preparations to propose a resolution calling for outright removal from Okinawa of all chemical warfare weapons.

C. New Speaker And Deputy Speaker Elected: Mr. Mitsujiro Ishii and Mr. Hisao Kodaira, Speaker and Deputy Speaker of the House of Representatives, resigned in the third week of July in the wake of a chaotic Lower House plenary session in which a controversial Health Insurance Bill was passed.

The Lower House cleared the Bill through a standing vote, in contravention to a previous agreement providing for a roll-call vote.

Mr. Ishii and Mr. Kodaira submitted their resignations to Mr. Torao Chino, the Lower House's Secretary-General. They issued a formal statement declaring that they were resigning "in order to make Diet proceedings more orderly."

In the statement, Mr. Ishii declared that the ruling party and the Opposition had confronted each other, with both sides resolved to give no ground. "Under such circumstances, I had to take such a voting procedure."

The House later elected Mr. Takechiyo Matsuda, 84-year-old former Education Minister, as the new Speaker. Mr. Sensuke Fujieda, chairman of the ruling party's public information committee, was named as Deputy Speaker.

They said at a news conference that they would exercise "fair judgment" in handling parliamentary business. Both stressed that they could do so even without withdrawing from the membership of their party as demanded by the Opposition.

A veteran parliamentarian elected to the House 11 times, Mr. Matsuda told newsmen that he would try with all his might to normalize activities in the Diet. "The minority opinion should be taken into consideration, but the ultimate decision must be made by majority principle, which has proved to be the best method of decision-making in a democracy."

The four major Opposition parties, in the meantime, demanded that the Speaker and Deputy Speaker do their best to help prevent the Tories from taking "forcible" action in handling Bills in the Diet.

D. White Paper On Labour: According to a recent White Paper issued by the Labour Ministry, about five jobs await every boy or girl who leaves school. Yet the supply of labour, especially of people graduating from middle school and high school, has become even tighter in the past year.

As one solution to the growing shortage of workers, it recommended greater movement of labour between industries, vocations and regions.

In 1968, the average wage of workers rose by 14.2 per cent nominally and 8.5 per cent after price adjustments. In nominal terms it was the highest rise since 1954 and after price adjustments the highest since 1953.

At the same time, labour productivity rose by 14 per cent in 1968, owing mainly to large investments in labour-saving machinery.

It said manufacturing and construction industries were feeling a particularly acute shortage of young workers. This was partly because of an increase in employment in service industries where wages were relatively higher and partly because of a decline in the number of school leavers seeking "blue collar" jobs.

It said consumer prices had been rising fast, while wholesale prices had remained stable, mainly because of differences in the growth of productivity between industries. For instance, productivity was relatively low in agriculture, forestry, fisheries, service industries, and the construction business. These had to raise prices or rates to cover rising wages of their workers under the influence of other industries with higher productivity.

The objective of the labour policy in the future would be to help the national economy secure a long-range growth despite a growing labour shortage. For this purpose, it would be important to make a long-range review of the population problem.

At the same time, it was essential to create conditions for smooth mobility between industries, vocations and regions to match the changes in industrial structure and provide greater efficiency of the national economy as a whole.

It also stressed the need for increased vocational training to improve the quality of labour and increase its adaptability to new technology.

KOREA (South)

A. Referendum Move: President Park Chung Hee, in a nation-wide TV and radio speech on July 25, endorsed the move of the ruling Democratic Republican Party (DRP) to amend the Constitution to let him run for a third term in 1971.

He said he would hold a "national referendum." If the people voted against the amendment, he would interpret it as a vote of no-confidence and he would at once resign, taking his Government with him.

His timing aroused much speculation. Some observers felt that he wanted to announce it before the US Secretary of State, Mr. William P. Rogers, arrived on July 31 and before he himself visited President Nixon in California on August 22. These observers interpreted the announcement as an answer to any Opposition charges that his move was dictated by Washington. Other observers saw in the decision an effort to gain momentum while militant student rioters were on vacation and while a coalition of opposition elements was still in the early stages of organizing.

[There was violent clashes recently between the police and students protesting against the bid to amend the Constitution which at present forbids him to serve a third term. Five universities were closed and scores of others postponed their pre-vacation examinations.]

The debate on giving the President a third consecutive term had been publicly discussed since the beginning of the year.

An indirect indication of the Government's real intentions came in mid-April when five of the ruling party's more influential members were expelled for a revolt against its leadership. On April 8, a large number of DRP members, in an unprecedented gesture of defiance, sided with the Opposition in wanting to dismiss the Education Minister, Mr. Kwon O-Pyong, who had enjoyed the President's confidence. Some observers felt that the party leadership with President Park at the top was so shocked by his open revolt that they felt tough measures were essential to quell any future attempts at rebellion. Significantly, all the expelled had been doggedly opposed to amending the Constitution.

DRP has 108 seats in the 175-member Assembly. The Opposition New Democrats have 46. Independents number six. A group of members previously expelled from the Government has 14. The Government needs two-thirds for approval—117 votes. This means winning back some expelled members or Independents. If two-thirds approve, the amendment goes to a national referendum. Within 60 days thereafter at least half of the eligible voters must vote, and a simple majority must vote "yes" for the amendment to take effect.

A joint struggle committee composed of former politicians and New Democrats held a joint rally in Seoul on July 19. About 50,000 people heard the New Democrat leader, Dr. Yu Chin-O assail any third-term effort.

A. Czech Diplomat Disappears: It was disclosed in Beirut on August 7 that Mr. Frantisek August, Third Secretary of the Czechoslovak Embassy, had disappeared with his wife and two children.

There was, however, no official comment on the case. The Embassy merely said that the whereabouts of the Augusts had been unknown for the past three days.

Border authorities said their exit lists showed no family of this name to have left the country.

MALAYSIA

A. UMNO Purge: Tengku Abdul Rehman's United Malay National Organization (UMNO) on July 12 expelled from its Executive Council a member who had been campaigning for his resignation as Prime Minister.

The member, Dr. Mahathir Bin Muhammad, had circulated an open letter blaming the Tengku for the race riots—the result, he said, of the Malays' resentment of his leadership.

A party statement after a three-hour meeting said he had committed a serious breach of party discipline, which if unchecked would have destroyed unity within the party and the Government.

Stringent security precautions were taken throughout the city while the meeting was held. A special watch was kept on Malay university students, who the previous evening had supported the call for the Tengku's resignation. Another notable political figure departed from the scene, at least temporarily, when Dato Harun bin Haji Idris, the Selangor Chief Minister, left the same day (July 12) for Geneva and London. The May 13 riots had begun after a gathering at his house when Chinese were murdered on the road outside. A statement said he would arrange medical attention for his wife in Geneva and then fly to London to see the Sultan of Selangor, who is on a world tour.

Tengku Abdul Rehman On His Resignation:

Addressing a rally of his supporters at Kejang, near Kuala Lumpur, on August 6, the Tengku said he would step down from the office of Prime Minister and retire from public life only when he decided that he should do it and he would not let "ultras or extremists" decide this for him.

He said: "I was thinking of retiring from public life, but now that there is a cry from extremists for my ouster, I shall not oblige them. I will decide for myself when I should go and will not let these ultras or extremists decide for me."

He added: "There has been no coup within the Government. I am there very much Prime Minister and wish to continue in that position."

B. Time-limit For Language Change-over: The Government on July 11 set a time-limit on use of English as the main language in secondary schools and universities.

The Education Minister, Dato Abdul Rahman Ya'kub said that final secondary school examinations in English would be in 1977.

From 1978, university entrance examinations would be in Bhasa Malaysia—the national language—and universities and other tertiary institutions would switch to Malay in 1983.

More than half the children in State secondary schools in Malaysia attend English-speaking institutions and English is the main language of commerce as well as in Singapore.

PAKISTAN

A. Civilian Council Of Ministers Appointed: President Yahya Khan appointed on August 4 a seven-member civilian Council of Ministers, giving greater representation to the country's East Wing.

None of the four Ministers from East Pakistan or the three from West Pakistan belonged to any existing political party.

The Ministers were: Dr. A. M. Malik, Mr. Abdul Rashid, Mr. A. K. M. Hafeezuddin, Nawab Muzaffar Ali Quizilbash, Mr. Mohammad Shamsul Haq, Maj-Gen. Sher Ali Khan and Mr. Ahsan-ul-Haq.

Dr. Malik was a member of the Suhrawardy Cabinet and had held ministerial posts in the Ayub Government. He had also served as Pakistan's High Commissioner to Australia.

Mr. Abdul Rashid had been Chief Minister of North-West Frontier Province and Inspector-General of the area.

Mr. Hafeezuddin, a former Inspector-General of East Pakistan Police, was Chairman of the East Pakistan Industrial Development Corporation and later Ambassador to Switzerland.

Nawab Quizilbash was Chief Minister of West Punjab, while Mr. Shamsul Haq was Vice-Chancellor of Rajshahi University.

Mr. Abdul Rashid was given the Home Minister and additional charge of Kashmir Affairs and the Frontier Region, while Nawab Quizilbash was appointed Finance Minister.

The other five Ministers were allotted the following portfolios:

Dr. A. Malik—Health, Labour and Family Planning;

Mr. Hafeezuddin—Industries and Natural Resources;

Mr. Shamsul Haq—Education and Scientific Research;

Gen. Sher Ali Khan—Information and Broadcasting; and

Mr. Ahsan-ul-Haq—Commerce.

The appointment of the Cabinet came seven days after Gen. Yahya Khan had announced his decision to take civilians into a Council of Ministers. In a broadcast to the nation, he, however, had made it clear that the civilian Ministers would not be able to contest the General Election that he hoped could be held after a year.

B. Barter Deal With USSR: It was disclosed in Moscow on August 4 that Pakistan had entered into a deal with the Soviet Union for exchange of rice for low-grade Soviet kerosene.

Last year, the Soviet Union did not import any rice from Pakistan, but in the previous year it had purchased about 16 million roubles' worth of rice.

The barter was outside the long-term Trade Agreement under which exchange of commodities touched the peak in 1967.

Overall trade for 1968 dropped to 43 million roubles' worth from 59 million in 1967.

In the current year, the effort is apparently to reach the target of 50 million roubles envisaged in the long-term Agreement.

C. Construction Of Road In "Occupied" Kashmir—Indian Protest Rejected: On August 9, Pakistan rejected India's protest against its recent construction of a new road of strategic significance in "occupied" Kashmir with Chinese help.

In its reply to the Indian protest Note dated June 25, Pakistan contended that Jammu and Kashmir had not been "recognized as part of Indian territory" and as such India had "no locus standi" to lodge any protest with Pakistan on the construction of the Kara Karan highway.

It said India's Note went against its declared intention of improving relations with Pakistan. It took exception to what it called the threat contained in the Indian Note.

D. Ban On Exchange Of Publications With India: The Government has banned the flow of printed material between India and Pakistan.

Newspapers and books posted in Pakistan for India were returned by the Customs wing of the post office to the senders. Similarly, delivery of Indian newspapers and periodicals in Pakistan was withheld.

Though the ban was enforced much earlier, the Customs officials confirmed only recently that they had received the instructions.

According to Morning News, published from Karachi and Dacca, the Customs had issued show-cause notices to all those who had been regularly getting periodicals and newspapers from India. They had been asked to show cause why proceeding for infringement of Customs and foreign exchange regulations should not be instituted against them. Such notices had also been issued to a number of Pakistani newspapers who had been getting Indian journals on an exchange basis.

Meanwhile, there has been criticism of the decision to stop the import of all printed material. From India, numerous letters in leading newspapers such as Imroze and Nawa-e-Waqt of Lahore, have complained that even religious books printed at such reputed centres as Deoband and Azamgarh in India had not been delivered to readers in Pakistan.

The ban on the import of religious books has caused great hardship to students of theology in Pakistan, because good books in Urdu dealing with the various aspects of Islamic learning are published only in India.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Racial Problem In Britain: A massive report on Britain's growing race problem, published in London on July 10, has found the situation "profoundly disturbing".

The report, sponsored by the Institute of Race Relations, was based on five years of study and research. Entitled "Colour and Citizenship: A Report on British Race Relations," it examined all facets of the race problem, and made a series of recommendations.

The Institute, an unofficial and non-political body, had commissioned the 800-page report with financial support from the Nuffield Foundation, considering the race problem "a national issue of the first importance". Mr. E. J. B. Rose, a former Director of the International Press Institute in Zurich, was chosen Director and Editor-in-Chief of the survey.

Its most startling conclusion was that the re-establishment of compulsory national service for Britain's young men was "well worth considering". (The draft in Britain was discontinued in 1960.)

The lack of a coherent immigration policy, it said, "has been one of the main factors in the deterioration of race relations in Britain".

It estimated the present Coloured population at more than 1,100,000. It predicted that by 1986 it would number between 2.074,000 and 2,373,000. (The total population of the UK at present is about 55 million).

Breaking down the expected Coloured population of 2,074,000 in 1986, the report said that 768.009 of the Coloured residents would be of Indian origin, 408,000 Pakistani, 474,000 Jamaican, 341.000 other Caribbean countries and 83,000 African. "We are dealing with minorities who are here to stay and they and their children will be part of the future of this country. This is not a situation which can be altered by anything short of a deliberate coercion of these minorities into departure."

B. World Economic Situation—UN Report: A report on the world economic situation, prepared by the UN Economic and Social Council and released on July 6, said that "world production of goods and services in 1968 was almost six per cent above the figure for 1967," a slow-down year.

It added: "The world economy continued to expand vigorously in the early months of 1969." The outstanding problem was still how to correct the imbalances that had emerged during the 1960s with the least possible damage to economic growth.

It said that the six per cent rate of growth in world domestic product was higher than expected and topped the 1960-67 average in all three country groupings—developed market economies, centrally-planned economies, and developing countries. It put the US rate at 5 per cent.

It indicated that in 1968, 24 out of 40 developing countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America had reached or exceeded the goal of the present UN Development Decade for each developing country—a 5 per cent annual growth rate by 1970.

It showed that world exports last year grew by 12 per cent, "one of the highest rates on record." Some of the most important causes of the economic upsurge were good harvests, reflationary policies in some countries and "unexpected resilience of demand" despite anti-inflationary measures in others.

In terms of its impact on activity in other countries, however, "the upswing in the United States was by far the most important single factor." In USA in 1968, domestic demand and prices rose faster, unemployment fell and a copper strike and heavy steel buying in anticipation of a strike put pressure on resources. As a result, US imports went up by $6.3 billion to $33 billion and that meant bigger US imports, especially of automobiles, iron and steel, and copper and especially from Canada, Japan and West Germany.

C. Multiple Rocket Launcher Developed By West Germany: On June 6, West Germany paraded a new conventional weapons system —a multiple rocket launcher—said by experts to have the surface destructive power of a small atomic bomb.

A Bonn defence expert said the new weapons system was "the substitute for West Germany's missing atomic potential." It could be fired either singly or in various massed combinations.

Eight prototypes of the recent developed launcher, capable of firing 36 rockets to a distance of 15 km. were trundled past West German Government leaders and senior NATO officers watching an armed forces parade in Adenau, marking NATO's 20th anniversary.

D. Ban On Land Travel To Gibraltar: The Spanish Government announced in Madrid on June 7 that it would allow no land travel to Gibraltar from June 9.

The statement said no persons, whatever their nationality, would be allowed through the Linea de la Conception check-point.

The ban was expected to hit Gibraltar's economy hard as some 4,600 Spanish workers commute to the Crown Colony daily. The Government would pay an adequate compensation to the workers.

The announcement was an answer to the new Constitution Britain had granted to the "Rock" on May 30. It said the British Constitution to Gibraltar was a "challenge to the United Nations and a violation of the Treaty of Utrecht dating back to 1713."

E. Space "Junk" Orbiting Earth: There are 1,556 satellites and pieces of space "junk" orbiting the Earth.

The North American Air Defence Command (NORAD) tracks these objects continually as part of America's defence net-work.

NORAD lists 355 of these objects as "payloads"—satellites that are or were sending information back to Earth. The remaining 1,201 are classified as "junk"—spent rocket stages or pieces of satellites that have partially disintegrated.

The largest is the US weather balloon, Pageos, launched on June 24, 1966 and mearuring 100 feet in diameter.

The smallest is a piece of debris which NORAD describes as "about the size of a slice of bread".

F. Europa Rocket Launching Fails: The European Launcher Development Organization's (ELDO) Europa F-8 rocket crashed into the Pacific Ocean 13 minutes after blast-off from the Woomera range in Australia on July 3 when the German third stage failed to ignite.

The 100-ton rocket reached a height of 137 miles before it plunged into the Pacific about 2,900 miles north of Woomera.

The 108-foot rocket had blasted off at 22.54 GMT after a perfect countdown and the British Blue Streak first stage and the French Coralie second stage functioned perfectly. But the rocket was 273 miles north of the launch pad when the final stage failed to burn and the rocket continued its free flight until it crashed.

The launch, which came after two postponements because of bad weather, was the ninth of ten planned from the Woomera site before the project moved to French Guiana. The F-8 firing was aimed at testing the operation and the performance of the three-stage satellite launcher which would eventually put an Italian-designed satellite into north-south Polar orbit.

The Europa project was a joint venture sponsored by Britain, France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium and Holland, with Australia supplying range and support facilities.

G. "Intelsat" Satellite Stationed Over Indian Ocean: The international scheme of global communication through satellites was completed on June 25 when the Intelsat F-3 satellite was stationed over the Indian Ocean at a height of 36,000 km.

Two other satellites were already stationed over the Atlantic and the Pacific.

With the help of the satellite over the Indian Ocean, all countries between Japan in the east and Britain in the west can communicate between themselves by reflecting micro-waves via the satellite.

India is expected to be in a position to use the satellite only in January, 1970 when the earth station of the Overseas Communication Service at Arvi, about 50 miles from Poona, is likely to be commissioned.

At present, only five countries of the region which have earth stations already, can use the satellite. These are Britain, Japan, Kuwait, Bahrain and Indonesia. By the end of the year, seven more earth stations will be ready in the area, and the total will rise to 19 by the end of 1970.

The satellite over the Indian Ocean was launched on the synchronous equatorial orbit and moved in location of 62.5 degrees East longitude. It has the capability of providing up to 1,200 telephone channels each with several lines. The channels will be shared by the International Tele-communications Satellite Consortium (Intelsat) members in proportion to the costs of the system. India, which along with 67 other countries, is a member of the Consortium, fromed an Asian Pacific group with six other countries to contribute 1.5 per cent of the cost and acquire voting authority for the group.

The satellite will make it possible to establish wide band communications free from fading and possible for a subscriber of telephones to talk without undue interference. This is a multi-access system whereby every country in the region, which can see the satellite, can work with every other country of the region and meet its requirements of tele-communications.

In due course, with the development of the switching centre at Bombay and adoption of the global switching plan, it will be possible for a subscriber of telephone or telex in one country to directly call a subscriber in any other country.

H. Life In Outer Space—Soviet Scientists' Conclusions: According to a USSR Government report on space research during 1968, Soviet scientists have concluded that life is impossible on the Moon but possible on Mars and not to be ruled out on Venus, hot as that planet is.

The report was published in UN's annual review of national and international space activities, a General Assembly document.

"With the development of space research," it said, "the problem of detecting life on the celestial bodies closest to the Earth by means of spacecraft is becoming a priority matter. Greater attention has been paid to developing methods of detecting signs of life on other planets."

Besides that, "Soviet scientists are investigating the possible limits on the existence of life," to see whether it can exist under conditions different from those on Earth. They seem to think life cannot exist without natural agents that can move matter around, presumably to bring food, remove wastes and spread seeds for living things without built-in means of locomotion.

But they seem to think life can exist at much higher than earthly temperatures. "On Mars, where free liquid water is absent, life is possible using matter transfer by frost, ice in the soil, water vapour and the wind."

I. World Population: According to the UN Statistical Year-Book, world population in mid-1967, the latest date for which meaningful statistics had been collated, was 3,420 million—516 million above the mid-1958 figure.

Asia, excluding the Soviet Union, had the largest population of 1,907 million, of which 720 million were estimated to live in China and 511 million in India.

Europe had 452 million people and was the most densely populated Continent.

Oceania with only 18,100,000 people had the least density—two people per square kilometre.

Latin America's population of 529 million exceeded that of North America by 39 million and also showed the biggest annual increase —29.9 per cent.

Africa had 328 million people and showed an annual increase of 2.4 per cent.

J. Britain Sinking—"Science Journal's" Findings: The Science Journal, in its number published in London on June 28, disclosed that Britain was sinking.

It said that research had shown that the whole of Britain south of a line from North Wales to Yorkshire was sinking gradually into the English Channel and the North Sea, while the northern half of the country and Scotland were slowly rising. The south-eastern part of Britain was most seriously threatened.

It claimed that within 1,500 years some districts of London could have disappeared below the sea.

In the nearer future, it said, Britain's East Coast would become increasingly vulnerable to flooding at times when high tides coincide with strong winds, as was the case in 1953.

These predictions came from Mr. Richard Taylor, who specialises in technological research at the British Steel Corporation, and Dr. Ian Smalleq, a lecturer in civil engineering at Leeds University.

In a detailed study of earth movements, they said: "The tilting occurs about a line running from Devon, through South Wales and across the middle of England to North Yorkshire. The land to the north and west of this line is rising and to the south and east, sinking."

They said that Britain was not the only country which could one day be facing disaster. The situation was absolutely critical in Holland which was low-lying now and was sinking still lower. "The overall sinking in Britain affects all the lands bordering the North Sea."

Harlech Castle in Wales, they suggested, provided evidence that the west of Britain was being uplifted. "The Castle was built in 1286 on the mid-Wales coast with a water gate for easy access to the sea—it is now one kilometre from the sea and stands on a cliff."

K. St. Peter's Letters Consigned To Vatican Archives: Pope Paul on June 28 consigned a priceless 3rd Century papyrus, believed to be the oldest transcript of two letters written by St. Peter, to the Vatican archives.

At a brief ceremony in the Vatican library, the Pope described the document given him by a Swiss collector, Mr. Martin Bodmer, as a "precious text" and thanked Mr. Bodmer in his absence for the gift.

There had been controversy about the two letters, which were sent by St. Peter, the first Pope, to encourage faith among the Christians in Asia Minor and were included in the Canon of Holy Scripture. The first letter was accepted as genuine, but there has been some doubt among scholars about the second.

The papyrus, written in Greek, was first published 10 years ago after being found in North Africa, where strong Christian communities existed in the early centuries after Christ.

It was the first time both letters, transcribed from St. Peter's original text, were found together, and Vatican scholars hailed this as proving the genuine nature of both epistles.

L. Solar Observatory Put Into Orbit By USA: A complex new solar observatory rocketed into orbit on August 9 from Cape Kennedy equipped to zoom its telescopic eyes on more than 10,000 points around the Sun's boiling surface for close-up studies of solar flares and sun spots.

The $12-million spacecraft was called OSO-6 (sixth Orbiting Solar Observatory). With the launch occurring during a period of near-peak flare activity in the Sun's 11-year solar cycle, the satellite could lead to the best understanding yet of solar radiation storms that disrupt radio communications on Earth and are a potential hazard to Moon-bound astronauts.

OSO-6 reports were expected to help scientists in their efforts to devise ways to predict the development of solar flares and provide advance warning of intense radiation activity that could affect the scheduling of Apollo Moon flights. Astronauts were protected from solar radiation by the walls of their spaceships, but they had no such protection when they were walking on the lunar surface.

A. East Zone Davis Cup Final: India took a commanding 2-0 lead in the East Zone Davis Cup final in Poona on May 10 when Ramanathan Krishnan out-played the Japanese second-stringer, Ichizo Konishi 6-2, 6-4, 6-4 in 75 minutes.

Premjit Lall, touching his most aggressive form, defeated the Japanese champion, Koji Watanabe, 6-2, 6-3, 6-4, in 85 minutes.

On May 11, India clinched the East Zone Davis Cup final when she took a 3-0 lead over Japan in the best-of-five series.

Having won both the opening singles, India also triumphed in the doubles when Premjit Lall and Jaideep Mukherjea defeated Koji Watanabe and Junzo Kawamori in a close four-set tussle 6-3, 13-11, 7-9 6-4 in 2½ hours.

On May 12, playing for the third day in succession, Premjit Lall defeated Ichizo Konishi, 6-3, 6-1, 6-1, in just an hour.

Shiv Prakash Misra, who substituted for Krishnan, downed Koji Watanbe, 6-3, 6-3, 5-7, 6-2 in the final match. India thus handed a five-nil drubbing to Japan. This was the ninth time in a row that India beat her opponents in the East Zone Davis Cup final.

B. Wimbledon Tennis Title: Australia's top tennis player, Rod Laver, won the Wimbledon tennis men's singles title in the final played on July 5.

He beat his fellow Australian John Newcombe 6-4, 5-7, 6-4, 6-4.

Laver had won the world's premier tennis title twice as an amateur and took the first open Wimbledon crown in 1968. He now needed to win only the United States title to complete the grand slam of all four major championships in the same season for the second time.

Australians John Newcombe and Tony Roche retained their Wimbledon men's doubles tennis title when they beat Tom Okker (Holland) and Marty Riessen (US) 7-5, 1-9, 6-3 in the final.

Kazuko Sawamatsu, Japanese girl champion, won the junior girls' crown beating Brenda Kirk (South Africa) 6-3, 1-6, 7-5.

Australians Margaret Court and Judy Tegart won the women's title by beating Americans Patti Hogan and Margaret Michael 9-7, 6-2.

Earlier, on July 4, Britain's leading player, Mrs. Anne Jones won the women's singles title, beating Mrs. Billie Jean King of USA 3-6, 6-3, 6-2.

A. Budget For 1969-70: Several new proposals were made by the Minister for Finance, Mr. U. B. Wanninayake, while presenting to Parliament the Budget estimates for the financial year beginning October 1.

The estimates provided for an annual expenditure of Rs. 12.5 crores in implementing the recommendations of a Salaries Commission which had recently proposed a general upward revision of public service salaries.

Mr. Wanninayake said the success of the Government's economic policies was clearly shown by the high rate of growth achieved in the last few years: 4.4 per cent in 1967 and 8.3 per cent in 1968 (in real terms). The most impressive performance was in the field of agriculture. Rice production which had slumped to 36 million bushels in 1965 had risen to 65 million bushels in 1968 and was expected to rise further to 71 million bushels this year, almost double the 1965 level. Rubber production had risen from 261 million lbs in 1965 to 328 million lbs in 1968.

He said the growth in industry was also substantial. Between 1965 and 1968 the value of output of State Industrial Corporations rose from Rs. 70 million to Rs. 262 million, while production in the private sector also recorded a substantial increase. The pattern of industrial output had also changed. The share of investment and intermediate goods in total output had increased from 37 per cent in 1964 to 50 per cent in 1968.

Gross domestic capital production had increased by 8.6 per cent in 1966, 15.1 per cent in 1967 and 14.7 per cent in 1968.

New Revenue Proposals:

The new revenue measures introduced in the Budget included:

(a) New export duties for a range of products including cocoa, cardamom, cinnamon and graphite, to yield Rs. 2 crores additional revenue;

(b) Changes in the business turnover tax including its application to cigarettes and the lowering of the exemption limit to Rs. 75,000 per year, to yield an additional Rs. 5 crores; and

(c) Higher telephone call charges to bring in a further Rs. 60,00,000.

A sum of Rs. 3 crores will be credited to revenue from the profits of State corporations. The total addition to revenue from these measures will be Rs. 10.6 crores.

More funds are expected to be available from institutional investors like the Ceylon Insurance Corporation, and the rate of interest offered on deposits with the savings institutions would be raised to promote domestic savings.

Mr. Wanninayake said that the trends for this year seemed to indicate a growth in real national product of 6 per cent. He visualized a somewhat lower rate of expansion for domestic agriculture, industry and the service sector and a slightly higher rate of growth for export agriculture.

Export earnings, he said, were expected to rise by Rs. 5.5 crores to Rs. 203 crores. Income from tea exports was expected to be lower by Rs. 4.6 crores at Rs. 111.5 crores, but export receipts from rubber, coconut and minor products were expected to expand.

With a greater volume of foreign aid likely to be available, the Budget envisaged an increase in import capacity by Rs. 20 crores to Rs. 254 crores.

Remittances To India:

Invisible transactions were expected to show a net deficit of Rs. 8 crores. Increased provision for outward payments was made for remittances to India in respect of repatriates under the Indo-Ceylon Agreement, and for remittances of profits and dividends to investors abroad.

The total current account payments deficit, on merchandise and invisibles, was expected to be Rs. 59 crores, as against Rs. 34.6 crores in 1968. Foreign loan payments falling due in 1969 would total Rs. 38 crores, making the total foreign payments deficit Rs. 97 crores.

The following sources of finance would be available to meet this payments deficit: commodity aid Rs. 42.3 crores, project aid Rs. 13.6 crores, suppliers' credits Rs. 27.9 crores, IMF drawings Rs. 7.7 crores; and other credits Rs. 5.5 crores; total: Rs. 97 crores.

B. Shipping Corporation To Ply Four Ships: The Shipping Corporation has signed an Agreement with the Shipping Corporation of India providing for co-operation between them.

The Ceylon Corporation proposes to operate as early as practicable a fleet of four ships which will operate on the UK/Continent/Ceylon route. In due course the Corporation expects to extend its operations to other routes, e.g. Ceylon/Far East.

The Corporation has decided to purchase immediately one second-hand vessel at a cost of approximately Rs. 11 million and to charter at least one other ship. It will apply for membership of the Ceylon/UK/Eire and Ceylon/Continental Conference Lines.

It hopes to obtain progressively a reasonable share in the carriage of Ceylon's exports and imports which now total Rs. 450 crores annually. A substantial portion of these imports and exports is made by Government departments and agencies.

The Chairman of the Corporation is Mr. K. Alva Pillai, a retired senior administrator, who is also Chairman of the Petroleum Corporation. The authorized capital of the Corporation is Rs. 10 crores, of which Rs. 16 million worth of shares are to be issued for a start.

D. Private Sales Of Tea Allowed: Private sales of tea to all countries have been allowed from August 1.

Private sales of tea outside the auctions were allowed to USA and Canada as a trial measure from March, 1967 for six months. This concession was extended from time to time.

The Government decided subsequently on December 31, 1968 that private sales to the following countries should be allowed until further notice: USA, Canada, Ireland, West Germany, Italy, France, Belgium, Netherlands and Luxembourg.

The Government has now decided that from August 1, private sales of tea outside the auctions be allowed as a trial measure to all countries.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Mr. V. V. Giri Elected President; Independence Day Anniversary; Farakka Barrage Issue; Trade Pact With Afghanistan; New Speaker Of Lok Sabha.

A. Mr. V. V. Giri Elected President Of India: Mr. V. V. Giri was declared elected President on August 20. Polling took place on August 16.

Mr. Giri greeted his victory with a statement suggesting that he considered it a "success of the democratic tradition for which we have laid a secure base."

The Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, congratulated Mr. Giri on his victory. At the same time he expressed regret that a "large number of Congressmen" had not done their duty and had voted against the party's candidate, Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy.

Mr. Giri was elected in the second count, needing only 16,654 second preference votes to win. He secured over 15,000 Parliament votes and the remaining margin was made good by votes from the States. He won by a margin of 14,650 votes.

In the most closely-contested Presidential election in India's history, Mr. Giri obtained a lead of 87,967 votes over Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy in in the first count, but failed to get an absolute majority of the valid votes polled.

In a day of fluctuating fortunes, with Mr. Giri's supporters downcast until the Uttar Pradesh Assembly results were announced, the outcome of the election remained in the balance until after 10 p.m. because of Mr. Reddy's expected gains in second preference votes from the Jana Sangh and Swatantra Party.

The most surprising result was from UP, which gave Mr. Giri a score of 181 to 138 in a State in which Mr. Reddy's supporters had expected to secure a majority. Other surprises were provided by Bihar (where Mr. Giri again made a good showing), Haryana (where he secured a surprising edge over Mr. Reddy) and Orissa (where the Giri-Reddy score-card stood at 67 to 15)

In Parliament, the voting in the first count indicated that defections among Congress Members of Parliament reached the level of over 170. Defections from the Congress in the States reached an average of 30 per cent.

What tipped the scales in favour of Mr. Giri was the support gained by him from the Opposition parties. Apart from the expected support he received from the two Communist Parties, DMK and Akalis, he seemed to have obtained crucial support from BKD members in UP and some members of other Opposition parties. There were, on the other hand, defections from DMK to the Congress in Tamil Nadu.

The counting of the votes in Parliament House was spread over 11 hours. When the time came for the official announcement, the Returning Officer proclaimed: "I, S. L. Shakdher, Returning Officer for the Presidential election, hereby declare Mr. V. V. Giri, of 4, Giri Road, Theogarayanagar, Madras-17, duly elected to the office of the President of India."

He said that Mr. Giri had secured 4,20,077 votes and Mr. Reddy 4,05,427 votes.

In the States, 39 MLAs had voted for some of the other candidates, the total value of their votes being 5,049.

Seventy-one ballot papers were rejected.

The votes polled by the different candidates were:

Mr. V. V. Giri 4,20,077; Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy 4,05,427; Mr. C. D. Deshmukh 1,12,769; Mrs. Gurcharan Kaur 940; Mr. Hari Ram 125; Mr. Khubi Ram 94; Mr. Babulal Mag 576; Mr. P. N. Rajbhoj 831; Mr. C. D. Senani 5,814 and Mr. S. M. Anirudh 125.

Mr. Giri was the first non-Congress President to be elected since Independence.

Second Preference Votes:

It was the large chunk of 8,178 second preference votes from Uttar Pradesh that set Mr. Giri on the road to victory.

In the initial count too, it was UP that turned the tide in favour of Mr. Giri after he heavily trailed behind the Congress candidate, Mr. Sanjiva Reddy, in the States.

Mr. Reddy nearly wiped out his colossal first count deficit of 81,967 votes with the aid of 52,992 second preference votes he secured from Opposition Members of Parliament. In some of the States too—Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, UP—Mr. Reddy got sizable second preference votes, but not enough to wipe out the deficit and set him ahead of Mr. Giri.

The following is the break-down of transfer of votes from Mr. C. D. Deshmukh to Mr. Giri and Mr. Reddy, the transfer from other candidates being insignificant:

From Mr. Deshmukh to Mr. Giri:

Invalid Votes:

Votes cast by nine MPs and 71 MLAs were not found in order and rejected by the Returning Officer.

The value of the invalid votes was 13,149.

While there was not a single invalid vote in the Haryana Legislature, the largest number of invalid votes—nine—came from Andhra Pradesh.

Nagaland came second in invalid votes with a total of seven, closely followed by five States—Assam, Rajasthan, Tamil Nadu, UP and Mysore each with six.

While Orissa had five invalid votes, Madhya Pradesh and Bihar had four each. West Bengal and Gujarat had the lowest number of invalid votes—one each.

Andhra Pradesh lost the maximum value of votes—1,125—closely followed by UP with a total of 1,044.

In the 1967 Presidential election 42 ballot papers, including those of MPs, were found invalid.

Messages:

Mr. Giri is the oldest person to be elected to the nation's highest office. He is 75.

The first President, Dr. Rajendra Prasad, was 66 at the time of his election, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan 74 and Dr. Zakir Husain 70.

Mr. V. V. Giri said in a statement after his election victory was announced: "I am indeed grateful to the electorate consisting of the representatives of the people for choosing me to the highest office in the land. In all humility, I consider this as not my victory but the success of the democratic traditions for which we have laid a secure base.

"It will be my earnest endeavour to do my humble bit to the cause of our people. I deem this position as yet another opportunity of service to my fellow-countrymen.

"It will be my duty to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution and in this I am sure the goodwill, support and co-operation of all sections of the population will be available to me in full measure."

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, sent a message of felicitations to Mr. Giri on his election.

It said: "I have been trying for the last one hour or so to speak to you on the telephone but your line has been understandably busy tonight.

"May I offer my warmest felicitations on your election to the highest office in the land. I assure you both on my personal behalf and also on behalf of the Government of our cooperation and support at all times. With good wishes."

Drama Of Result:

Even before the result was announced, it became clear that the Congress Party lay deeply divided and faced the prospect of a split.

Mr. Giri's dramatic entry into the field as an Independent candidate—immediately after the Congress Parliamentary Board had nominated Mr. Sanjiva Reddy despite Mrs. Gandhi's objections in Bangalore on July 12 (and announced on July 13), took the party into the throes of the biggest crisis it had faced in independent India.

The point of no return was reached when Mrs. Gandhi came out in favour of Mr. Giri by demanding the right of a free vote. Her equivocation over supporting Mr. Sanjiva Reddy and her strategy in utilizing two of her Cabinet Ministers—Mr. Jagjivan Ram and Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed—to pave the way for her repudiation of the party's candidate were climactic moments for the Congress.

Mr. Giri's election was thus Mrs Gandhi's victory in her battle with her critics in the party.

The cross-voting in the Congress —40 per cent at the Centre and 20 per cent in the States—coupled with the second preference votes of the P-SP and BKD defectors decisively swung the balance in favour of Mr. Giri.

Candidates In Field:

Twenty-four candidates had entered the Presidential contest. This was the largest number of contestants so far for the highest office in the Indian Union.

The scrutiny of nominations took place on July 26 and the last date for withdrawal of candidature was July 29. Fifteen candidates were left in the field. Polling took place on August 16.

The main contenders were Mr N. Sanjiva Reddy, the official Congress candidate; Mr. V. V. Giri, (Independent) supported mainly by the Communists, SSP, Muslim League and DMK and most of the constituent units of the United Front Governments in West Bengal and Kerala; Mr. C. D. Deshmukh, whose main sponsors were the Swatantra Party, Jana Sangh and Bharatiya Kranti Dal.

Altogether 44 nominations, including nine for Mr. Reddy, and six each for Mr. V. V. Giri and Dr. C. D. Deshmukh were filed. Of the 24 candidates who filed their nominations, 11 filed on the last day.

The 1967 Presidential election in which the late Dr. Zakir Husain defeated Mr. K. Subba Rao was contested by 17 candidates. Nine of them had not received a single vote and six had secured votes ranging between 125 and 1,300.

Mr. Giri Assumes Office:

Mr. V. V. Giri took office as President of India on August 24.

The oath of office was administered by the acting Chief Justice, Mr. J. C. Shah, and a 31-gun salute boomed in salute to signal the installation of the new President.

In his address on the occasion, Mr. Giri spoke of his election as a victory of the people.

While his predecessors had been "men of intellectual eminence and erudition", he said, he had spent a major part of his life in the working class movement and "by instinct and training, I am first and foremost a servant of the people."

He spoke of India as being the world's largest democracy and reminded his audience of the constant threats to it. "Democracy can save itself only by a process of constant and continuous renewal."

He added: "A deep concern for national welfare alone can make our democracy meaningful and lasting."

Calling upon the people to remove "the glaring inequalities between man and man," he said: "While the Constitution and the laws ensure an ordered society, it is only our hard work and disciplined conduct that will enable us to achieve the social objectives and economic goals that we have set before us."

Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy's Selection As Congress Candidate:

The Congress Central Parliamentary Board decided in Bangalore on July 12, by four votes to two, to nominate Mr. Sanjiva Reddy, Speaker of the Lok Sabha, as the party's candidate for the office of President.

A formal announcement of the Board's decision was withheld because of Mrs. Indira Gandhi's opposition to Mr. Reddy's candidature. Obviously not reconciled with the Board's verdict, she was understood to have warned the Board that it might have to face serious consequences if it did not revise its decision.

Mrs. Gandhi had formally proposed the name of Mr. Jagjivan Ram for President. But it was not acceptable to the majority in the Board. The only other member to support Mr. Jagjivan Ram was Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed. Mr. Jagjivan Ram himself did not participate in the voting.

Mrs. Gandhi had earlier shown her preference for the Acting President, Mr. V. V. Giri, but his name did not figure during the discussions. She had obviously given up the idea of sponsoring his name after consulting her close associates.

The Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, remarked that Mr. Reddy was the best candidate among the various names that had been mentioned.

On July 13, Mr. Nijalingappa announced that the Central Parliamentary Board had decided to set up Mr. Sanjiva Reddy, Speaker of the Lok Sabha, as the party's candidate for the Presidentship.

Mr. V. V. Giri Enters Field:

Within hours of the official announcement of Mr. Sanjiva Reddy's candidature for Presidentship by the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, on July 13, the 74-year-old Acting President, Mr. V. V. Giri, declared that he would oppose him.

In a 1,000-word statement, issued in New Delhi on July 13, Mr. Giri regretted the decision of the Congress Parliamentary Board and announced that he would contest for the highest office as an Independent.

While he did not wish to question the motives of the Congress Parliamentary Board in nominating Mr. Reddy, Mr. Giri said the members of the Board "have neither done justice to the country nor have they been fair to the organization to which they belong."

Mr. Giri's unexpected decision took both Congress and Opposition circles by surprise.

Mr. Giri & Mr. Reddy Resign Their Posts:

Both the contending Presidential candidates—the Acting President, Mr. V. V. Giri, and the Speaker of the Lok Sabha, Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy—tendered the resignation of their offices on July 19.

Mr. Giri's resignation letter, addressed to the President of India, stated: "I, V. V. Giri, hereby resign my office as Vice-President of India with effect from the forenoon of July 20, 1969."

Mr. Sanjiva Reddy's one-line letter of resignation was handed over to the Deputy Speaker of the Lok Sabha, Mr. R. K. Khadilkar, on July 19.

The Chief Justice of India, Mr. M. Hidayatullah, was sworn-in on July 20 as Acting President to discharge the functions of the President. The acting Chief Justice, Mr. J. C. Shah, administered the oath of office to Mr. Hidayatullah.

Process Of Election:

The President is elected by an electoral college consisting of the elected members of both Houses of Parliament and the elected members of the States' Legislative Assemblies.

According to the Constitution, "as far as practicable, there shall be uniformity in the scale of representation of the different States at the election of the President."

To ensure such uniformity among the States as well as parity between the States as a whole and the Union, the number of votes which each elected Member of Parliament and the Legislative Assembly of each State is entitled to cast is determined in the following manner:

Every elected member of an Assembly has as many votes as there are multiples of 1,000 in the quotient obtained by dividing the population of the State by the total number of the elected members of the Assembly.

Each elected member of the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha has as many votes as may be obtained by dividing the total number of votes assigned to the members of the Legislative Assemblies of the State by the total number of the elected members of both Houses of Parliament.

The value of each MLA's vote is as follows:

State	No. of MLAs	Value of votes
Andhra Pradesh	287	125
Assam	126	94
Bihar	318	146
Gujarat	168	123
Haryana	81	94
Jammu & Kashmir	75	59
Kerala	133	127
Madhya Pradesh	296	109
Maharashtra	270	146
Mysore	216	109
Nagaland	46	7
Orissa	140	125
Punjab	104	107
Rajasthan	184	110
Tamil Nadu	234	144
Uttar Pradesh	425	174
West Bengal	280	125

There were, incidentally, 26 vacant seats in the State Assemblies (Andhra Pradesh 1, Assam 10, Haryana 1, Jammu and Kashmir 3, Kerala 1, Madhya Pradesh 2, Maharashtra 1, Mysore 2, Orissa 1, Rajasthan 2, Tamil Nadu 1, and West Bengal 1.)

Although Bihar is under President's Rule, the State Assembly had not been dissolved; it was only suspended. Bihar MLAs were, therefore, entitled to vote.

For the present Presidential election the total value of all the votes assigned to the MLAs of the 17 States came to 430,847.

The total value of votes for Parliament (Lok Sabha and Rajya Sabha) was 430,848.

In order to ensure parity between the States as a whole and the Union of India, this number was divided equally among the 748 elected MPs (520 in the Lok Sabha and 228 in the Rajya Sabha). This came to 576, which was the value of every MP's vote.

Under the Constitution, the election of the President must be held in accordance with the system of proportional representation by means of the single transferable vote. The ballot is secret.

It is interesting to note that the Presidential and Vice-Presidential Elections Act contains no provision similar to Sections 34 and 158 of the Representation of the People Act, 1951, requiring security deposits from candidates and providing for their forfeiture in the event of the candidates failing to secure a minimum number of votes.

B. Independence Day: August 15 was celebrated as the 22nd anniversary of Independence throughout the country, when parades and functions were held to mark the occasion.

The highlight of the celebrations was the unfurling of the National Flag from the ramparts of the historic Red Fort in New Delhi by the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, who assured the people in an address that she was with them. "Whatever I do and wherever I am, my only aim will be to serve the common people."

The theme of her entire half-hour address was, in fact, the people. She recalled the past pledges of the party and said that even though many steps had been taken to improve the lot of the common man, much more remained to be done.

In this context, she referred to bank nationalization and said it marked an important step forward in the march towards socialism. She was happy to note it had been well received by the people.

Contrary to expectations, she did not announce any new economic measures or even reveal what she had in mind. On the other hand, she told a rally of Harijans from Haryana later that "the Government would not be hasty in taking further radical reforms." It would for the present concentrate its energies on successful implementation of bank nationalization.

She said that the goal of democratic socialism was chosen long ago on the banks of the River Ravi, and re-affirmed later at the Congress sessions in Lucknow, Avadi and Bhuvaneshwar. Many important steps had been taken to reach the goal and yet many more had to be taken.

In a direct reference to industrialists and capitalists, she urged them to realise that bank nationalization was not directed against them or to harm their interests. They should realise that what was in the interest of the vast majority was also in their interest.

She strongly refuted the charge that bank nationalization had been done at the instance of any foreign Power. "To say that is to insult the whole nation. I know the people of India love peace and democracy and they will not allow anything to endanger them." Whatever its policies and programmes might be, they were born out of the country's own history, culture and genius."

The same evening, the Acting President, Mr. M. Hidayatullah, held a reception at Rashtrapati Bhavan which was attended by distinguished people from all walks of life.

C. Moratorium On Bank Of Behar: The Government of India declared moratorium on the Bank of Behar Ltd., a leading bank of the State, for a period of three months, on August 9.

The Order of Moratorium was issued under Section 45(2) of the Banking Regulation Act 1949 and would remain effective till November 9.

The order was served on the Bank through the local branch of the Reserve Bank of India.

Under the moratorium, no depositor can draw more than ten per cent up to a maximum of Rs. 250 of his deposits.

The moratorium was considered a prelude to the take-over of the bank.

D. Farakka Barrage Dispute With Pakistan: A joint communique issued in New Delhi on July 26 at the end of 12-day talks between representatives of India and Pakistan stated that the two countries would hold another Secretary-level meeting in Islamabad in about four months to complete consideration of technical issues and take up substantive aspects of the Farakka Barrage.

The communique said that considerable ground had been covered regarding technical issues during the talks. The leader of the Pakistan delegation, Mr. A.G.N. Kazi, emphasized that both sides should now take up the substantive issues as all the technical information sought by India had been supplied.

He commended four proposals for the settlement of Farakka dispute. They were:

(a) Guarantees to Pakistan of fixed minimum deliveries of Ganges waters on a monthly basis at an agreed point;

(b) Construction and maintenance of such works, if any, as may be necessary in India in connexion with the construction of the Ganges Barrage in Pakistan;

(c) Setting up of a permanent Ganges Commission, to implement the agreement; and

(d) Machinery and procedures for settlement of differences and disputes consistent with the international usage.

E. Trade Agreement With Afghanistan: India and Afghanistan signed in New Delhi on August 16 a Trade Agreement for 1969-70.

Under the Agreement, India will import from Afghanistan specified quantities of fresh and dry fruits besides asafoetida, cummin seeds and medicinal herbs. The imports will be paid for by the importers in India by counter-exports of certain specified goods in accordance with procedures agreed between the two countries in July, 1968.

During 1968-69, India exported goods worth Rs. 9.68 crores to Afghanistan against Rs. 6.95 crores during 1967-68.

H. West Bengal Policemen Break Into State Assembly Hall: About 500 policemen of West Bengal made a forcible entry into the State Assembly hall in Calcutta on July 31 as a protest against what they called the United Front Government's "failure to give them protection in the performance of their duties."

The policemen had come in a procession with the body of a police constable who was killed in a clash with some people reported to be supporters of the SUC, a constituent of the UF, at Bharatgarh village in 24-Parganas District on July 29. Starting with 2,000 policemen, they first clashed with the Superintendent of Police of Alipur District headquarters, whom they severely assaulted on his refusal to join the procession. The procession originally headed for the Secretariat, but it suddenly turned its course and marched towards the Assembly, brushed aside policemen on duty and entered the building before the gates could be closed. Some of them entered into the Assembly chamber where they smashed furniture, broke microphones, destroyed papers and shouted slogans against the State Government, especially against the Deputy Chief Minister and Home Minister, Mr. Jyoti Basu. Six of the members of the Assembly and a Minister, Mr. Bishwanath Mukherjee were assaulted. The Speaker got out of his room through a window before the policemen could enter his chamber. When about 50 policemen entered his room, Mr. Basu told them that they were wholly mistaken if they thought the police could do anything if they had the rifles. He admonished them severely for their behaviour. The policemen ultimately left the building after having stayed there for over an hour.

The incident was discussed in the House when it re-assembled. Mr. Jyoti Basu said that it was due to a "conspiracy behind it." Mr. Siddharatha Shankar Roy, leader of the Congress Party, denying knowledge of any conspiracy said that there could be no question of any party supporting such a rampage. The next day, on August 1, he said in the Assembly that the West Bengal police were riven with groups and cliques which were pitted against each other, resulting in the incident. The Cabinet held an urgent meeting on July 31, and decided to take stern measures against the guilty policemen.

The Chief Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee in a broadcast the same evening condemned "this wild attitude of policemen at the instigation of some conspirators" and exhorted policemen to devote themselves to the service of the people. He appealed to the people of West Bengal to remain vigilant about such a conspiracy.

The State Government sent a detailed report of the incident to the Central Government and alerted the Army on August 1 as a precautionary measure. The guarding of police armouries at five important places was entrusted by the State Government to Eastern Frontier Rifles—a para-military force known for its loyalty and discipline. Mr. Basu presided over a meeting of the District Magistrates on August 2 and asked them to be vigilant about the growing incidents of violence in the State. By that time 13 policemen had been summarily dismissed and evidence was being collected against 27 others including a few gazetted officers.

The West Bengal Government announced on August 4 the appointment of a one-man committee under Mr. Ranjit Gupta, adviser to the Chief Minister, to enquire into the circumstances of the attack by policemen on the Assembly and the Superintendent of Police, Alipur. A Government spokesman said that the purpose of the enquiry was to determine whether any action could reasonably have been taken for preventing the incident. If so, persons responsible for failure to take action must be pin-pointed.

The Rajya Sabha discussed the matter in New Delhi on August 5. A demand was made by some members for a judicial enquiry or a probe by a Parliamentary Committee. Mr. V. C. Shukla, Minister of State for Home Affairs, winding up the debate, expressed the hope that "the lesson will not be lost on the UF Government and others that the use of police for party ends often boomerangs."

The members of the expedition reached the summit in batches, despite rain and mist. Two members of the party and a sherpa were stranded in heavy rain and mist on their way to the summit. They were, however, rescued after six hours by two sherpas.

The leader of the party and a member also succeeded in climbing another unnamed peak in the same region.

SINGAPORE

A. Increase In Freight Rates: Shipping lines operating freight services from Singapore and Malaysia to ports in India, Pakistan, Burma, the Persian Gulf and Ceylon announced on August 1 a 7.5 per cent increase in their freight rates.

The shipping lines involved were those operating the Straits-Burma-Karachi-Persian Gulf Conference, the Straits-Calcutta-East Pakistan Conference, the Straits-Rangoon Rate Agreement and the Straits-Colombo Rate Agreement.

The new rates were to be effective from November 1 in the case of the Straits-Colombo Agreement and October 1 for other Agreements.

The rates were to apply to most types of freight, but there might be some exceptions yet to be announced.

The announcement said that the increase had been necessitated by the continuous rise in operating costs.

B. Mr. Lim Chin Siong To Be Released: Official sources in Singapore indicated on July 23 that the Secretary-General of the Barisan Socialists, Mr. Lim Chin Siong, would be released soon when he would leave the country, possibly to study in Britain.

At his request Mr. Lim met the Prime Minister, Mr. Lee Kuan Yew, on July 22 and his plans for overseas study were discussed.

In a letter to Mr. Lee Kuan Yew made public on July 22, Mr. Lim said he now disagreed with Barisan policies and its extra-parliamentary struggle which included the use of violence to achieve its objectives. He had decided to resign from all his posts in the party.

He considered Singapore's independence as genuine and wholeheartedly supported it.

He said he had completely lost confidence in the international communist movement. "The Soviet Union, which has experienced nearly five decades of revolution, now takes to the road of restoring capitalism and has become an arch enemy of the Chinese Communist Party."

[Mr. Lim (35) was jailed in February, 1963 after going to prison twice before when the British still controlled Singapore. He was a founder-member of the ruling People's Action Party, but broke away with a group of dissident members to form the Barisan Socialists to oppose Singapore's merger with Malaysia.]

TURKEY

A. Remains Of Noah's Ark Found: Pieces of wood dating back about 4,000 years and believed to be the remains of Noah's Ark were found by a US archaeological expedition in a glacier on Mount Ararat on July 31 and August 2.

The 17,000-foot mountain is a top secret military area adjacent to the Soviet frontier.

Mr. R. E. Crawford, President of the Scientific Exploration and Archaeological Research Foundation, told newsmen that this was the first announcement of the find.

Mr. Harry Crawford, who led a six-man field team, said the pieces were found at an altitude of 14,000 feet, on the north-west slope of the mountain. The discovery was made in a glacier, at a depth of more than 20 metres. Mr. Fernand Navarra of Bordeaux (France) said he had been four times to the spot of the recent finding where he had discovered hand-hewn timber in 1945. An analysis of a 1½-metre piece of the timber at the time indicated that it was approximately 4,000 years old.

The recent discovery was presumed to be as ancient. The wood was being examined by research centres in Turkey, France and USA.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Parliament Resolution On President Thieu's Peace Proposals: The House of Representatives on July 23 unanimously urged President Nguyen Van Thieu to make no more concessions at the Paris peace talks, and called on the Government not to submit to "foreign" pressure.

This stand was taken in a resolution approved at a special session to examine the President's July 11 proposals that the National Liberation Front (Viet-Cong) should take part in "free" elections to be held in South Viet-Nam (see page 9100).

The resolution made the following points:

"The Executive must capitalize on its peace initiatives while reassuring public opinion at home, and must also re-state South Viet-Nam's position on the peace issue; President Thieu must abstain from making any new concession; political figures who claim that the National Liberation Front is not communist should not be included prematurely in the Cabinet, which is due to be reshuffled soon."

The House gave a promise to refuse from now on to "bow in silence to pressure dictated by a foreign country."

Gen. Cao Ky's Allegation:

Earlier, on July 15, the Vice-President, Gen. Nguyen Cao Ky, accused the American "doves" of selling his country to the communists.

Speaking to officer cadets of the National Defence College in Saigon, he said: "I do not accept the views of a number of American politicians who, to keep their power, want to sell our country to the communists at a very cheap price. Their money does not make me or my people bow our heads before them.

"I am not worried whether the Americans leave (Viet-Nam) or stay," he added. "We must fight by ourselves." He accused the United States of taking too long to train South Viet-Namese forces. He saw no point in carrying on with the Paris peace talks "for ever." As the communists had rejected all Saigon's peace initiatives so far, "there is nothing left but to carry on fighting."

[The Vice-President was appointed special adviser to the Saigon delegation in Paris when the talks resumed there in January. However, he had not been in the French capital since April 12, and had said he would not go back until there was some sign that the North Viet-Namese and Viet-Cong wanted more substantive and serious discussions.]

Re-unification Proposed:

On July 18, the Saigon Government proposed the re-unification of North and South Viet-Nam through General Elections under international supervision.

The proposal was made in a statement marking the 15th anniversary of the signing on July 20, 1954 of the Geneva Agreements which ended the Indo-China war.

The statement added: "The Republic of Viet-Nam Government calls on the North Viet-Namese authorities to end their aggression against South Viet-Nam and to concentrate all efforts in the competition to rebuild the country and to heal all the sorrows of war so that both the North and South Viet-Namese people can live in peace."

Some political observers dismissed the challenge as a diplomatic rebuff to a North Viet-Namese statement saying that USA had prevented the holding of General Elections in 1956 to re-unify Viet-Nam.

Other observers considered the statement a significant new development, even though it was bound to be spurned by North Viet-Nam. It was issued on the eve of a news conference by President Thieu to clarify his challenge to the National Liberation Front to take part in internationally supervised elections to decide South Viet-Nam's future.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. World Communist Conference: Representatives of 75 Communist Parties met in conference in Moscow from June 5 to 17 at the invitation of the Soviet Party.

Among the principal communist parties which did not send delegates to the conference were those of China, North Viet-Nam, North Korea and Japan. Participants included a delegation from East Pakistan.

[It was the third conference of its kind. The first conference in 1957 was called on the joint initiative of Moscow and Peking. It was designed to re-establish unity of the world Communist movement, badly shaken by the Khruschev report to the 20th Congress of the Soviet Party. The second in 1960, with 81 parties attending, failed to heal the differences between the Soviet Union and China.]

The deliberations of the Conference were not open to the Press.

At the opening session, the First Secretary of the Soviet Party, Mr. Leonid Brezhnev, hoped the Conference would represent "an important step on the path to the mobilization of all liberating and progressive revolutionary forces for the struggle against imperialism." It would also make a "great contribution to the work and cohesion of the international communist movement on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism."

A highlight of the early stages of the Conference was the Rumanian protest against critical references to China by some delegations.

On June 7, ignoring Rumanian objections, Mr. Brezhnev, in the course of a long speech, made a bitter attack on China. He said: "We are strong enough to counter any threat of war, including the threat of nuclear war brandished at us by the People's Daily two days ago. The nationalist policies of Mao Tse-tung and his group have endangered the socialist victories won in People's China."

He said the Chinese Communist Party had "replied with insults" to the invitation he had sent to it to take part in the World Conference of communist parties and accused it of preparing for war. He added: "And it can be clearly seen what kind of war it has in mind."

The most significant part of his speech was his mention of a system of collective security for Asia. However, beyond a bare mention of the idea, he did not go into details.

The proposal aroused considerable interest in diplomatic circles. Many viewed it as a move directed against China.

Another frontal attack on China came from the Mongolian leader, Mr. Y. Tsedenbal.

The Chairman of the Indian Communist Party, Mr. S. A. Dange, invited the Conference to help in the process of unifying the Leftist forces in his country. He said that efforts towards re-unification of the Communist movement had achieved limited success so far.

He described as a good beginning the recent dialogue between his party and Marxists in Calcutta and said: "We will do everything to carry forward this development."

The Conference ended on June 17, with 70 of the 75 parties signing the main document setting out a "programme of joint action against imperialism."

The Dominican party declined to sign the document. Britain and Norway wanted to consult their Central Committees before signing. Cuba and Sweden with only observer status at the Conference did not sign. Of the 70 parties which signed, Australia, Italy, San Marino and Reunion Island parties signed the document with the reservation that they accepted only the chapter on anti-imperialist action. The Italian, Australian and San Marino delegations appended statements to the main document saying they could approve only of the third section which deals with the tasks of the "anti-imperialist struggle."

They rejected the analysis of the international situation, a prescription for relations between parties and a section on relations with non-communist forces.

The Rumanian, Swiss and Spanish delegations signed with reservations, which were also issued with the document itself.

Main Document:

The document released steered clear of the controversy over the Sino-Soviet dispute and invasion of Czechoslovakia. The only reference to the dissidents was an emphasis on the need for struggle against all deviations from Marxism-Leninism.

It called for the restoration of the "lawful right of the People's Republic of China in UN and the return of Taiwan at present under American military occupation."

It contained two direct references to India. In the first it accused "imperialists" of persisting in their attempt to pressurize India to abandon the path of non-alignment and independent economic development. The other was a reference to United Front Governments in some States with Communist participation which was mentioned among other developments in various parts of the world to illustrate the claims of rapid strides being made by democratic movements.

Without mentioning any one by name, another passage, relating to deviationist tendencies, said: "Each Communist Party's national and international responsibilities are indivisible. Marxists-Leninists are both patriots and internationalists; they reject both national narrow-mindedness and negation or under-estimation of national interests and striving for hegemony."

The document appealed to the people:

"To demand an end to the US aggression in Viet-Nam, to demand independence, freedom and peace for Viet-Nam;

"To ensure elimination of the consequences of the Israeli aggression in West Asia on the basis of the UN Security Council resolution;

"To fight for the complete liquidation of colonialism and neo-colonialism, for the achievement of independence by all oppressed peoples, for the extirpation of racialism, for the abolition of corrupt regimes acting as henchmen of foreign monopolies."

The Conference called for multiplication of effort in the struggle for the complete implementation of the principles of peaceful co-existence of States irrespective of their social systems, for the relaxation of international tension, for the settlement of unsolved international issues through talks, against encroachments of imperialists on the independence and sovereignty of the peoples, for their right to determine their future and their destiny themselves, and for the development of broad equitable co-operation between countries.

It said: "Let us launch a struggle for the creation of an effective system of collective security in Europe and for the liquidation of the world's cleavage into military groups, for the establishment of an atmosphere of co-operation and mutual understanding among the peoples. The way to this would be paved by a pan-European conference of States."

World peace, it said, could not depend on the "equilibrium of fears." Lasting peace was unthinkable without an end to the arms race. "It is necessary to seek the ban of nuclear weapons and the destruction of their stockpiles, general and complete disarmament.

"We, Communist, irrespective of trials, have persevered in boundless loyalty to Lenin's ideals of international peace and friendship. The unity of all the progressive peace-loving forces is the call of our time. United solidly, we shall ensure the victory of the sacred cause of world peace."

The appeal gave a broad analysis of the world situation. It said: "It is imperialism, above all American imperialism, that steps up the arms race, aggravates the international tension, fans conflicts and local wars in different parts of the world." The struggle for peace "merges with the struggle for the freedom of the peoples, for progress and democracy, for riddance from foreign oppression."

It said: "The consistent peace-loving policy of the first State of socialism—the Soviet Union—and of other socialist nations, the mounting struggle of the working people in the capitalist countries, the growth of the national liberation movement, actions of broad sections of the world democratic public and peace champions have ended with the fatal inevitability of a new world war and have created a concrete opportunity for implementing the people's aspirations for peace."

The Conference did not adopt any formal resolution or statement denouncing China.

B. French Franc Devalued: The French Government on August 8 devalued the franc by 12.5 per cent.

It was the first devaluation of the franc since December, 1958.

The Economics Minister, Mr. Valery Giscard d'Estaing, announced that the devaluation would take effect from August 11.

The surprise decision was taken at an emergency Cabinet meeting called by President Georges Pompidou, less than nine months after the former President, Mr. Charles de Gaulle had vetoed a similar measure in November, 1968.

Mr. Pompidou told the Cabinet that it was "common sense" to bring the French franc into line with the rate to which it had already dropped in foreign trade transactions. "Devaluation is only a starting basis for our financial recovery. I expect vigorous action by Ministers in the monetary, budgetary and financial sectors."

A communique issued at the end of the Cabinet meeting said the Government had agreed in principle that the parity of the franc would be changed to the basis of one franc to 0.16 gms of gold. The previous parity was 0.18 gms.

The devaluation of the franc was the eighth since the end of World War II.

On November 2, 1944, the franc was set at 49.625 to the dollar and 200 to the £.

The first change was on December 26, 1945, when the franc was devalued to 119.1067 to the dollar and 480 to the £. This remained the official value until January 26, 1948, when the rate was fixed at 214.39 to the dollar and 864 to the £. Nine months later, on October 18, the franc was further devalued to 263.59 to the dollar and 1,062.29 to the £. The franc held at this rate for another six months until on April 27, 1949, a new rate was set at 272.10 to the dollar and 1,097 to the £.

Devaluation of sterling altered the rate and the next adjustment on September 20, 1949 fixed the franc at 350 to the dollar and 980 to the £. This rate stood for eight years until, on August 11, 1957, Mr. Felix Gaillard, then Finance Minister, announced "operation 20 per cent," which was a form of devaluation without the unpopular word being used. Under the operation, foreign currency received a premium of 20 per cent, and the dollar and £ both rose, the dollar to 420 francs and the £ to 1,176 francs. For certain essential imports the old rate of 350 and 980 stood.

But two months later, on October 26, 1957 Mr. Gaillard completed the operation and it was extended to all commercial operations and a single exchange rate—420 francs to the dollar and 1,176 francs to the £—was fixed.

The last previous devaluation of 17 per cent was on December 29, 1958, when the franc was fixed at 492 to the dollar and 1,382 to the £ only a few months after Gen. de Gaulle came to power.

Price Freeze:

Devaluation of the French franc triggered successively on August 10 a sharp price freeze in France, parallel devaluation by 14 African nations and West Germany's reaffirmation of its decision not to revalue the Mark upwards.

The French price freeze, covering industrial prices and shop-keepers margins and lasting until September 15, gave the Government a breathing space following the devaluation. The freeze aims to avoid price rises which would make French exports dearer and imports cheaper—thus undoing one of the major effects of devaluation.

West Germany stood by its decision, taken in May, 1969, not to revalue the Mark upwards. The Government also stressed it would not allow German farmers to suffer through any Common Market repercussions following the franc's devaluation. Belgium, meanwhile, declared that it was not devaluing its currency.

In Washington, the International Monetary Fund approved the French Government's decision to devalue and said the new value of the French franc at 5.555419 to the US dollar was now effective.

Zambian Copper Mines Nationalized:

The French franc's devaluation was overtaken in the London markets by the nationalization by President K. Kaunda of Zambia's copper mining industry, the third largest in the world.

American and British shareholders own most of it and in the stock market in London $10 million were wiped off the copper shares in hectic trading.

The prevailing opinion was that Mr. Kaunda had acted to meet the pressures building up among the activists in his party and that it might be the beginning of similar actions in other parts of Africa.

Only a modest backlash of the devaluation of the franc was felt in London and European capitals, when stock markets opened on August 11. The £ fell, but confidence in official quarters was enough to check panic. In Zurich and Frankfurt, some demand for the Deutschmark was reported, but the bankers' initial conclusion was that the first day after the devaluation had not shown signs of a crisis. But the future, according to them, still remained uncertain and instability in monetary markets would continue. For the £ sterling, a great deal would depend on the trade figures for July.

The real crisis of the franc's devaluation was in Brussels, where, though the devaluation had been officially welcomed, Common Market partners of France were furious because they were not consulted in advance as provided by the Treaty of Rome.

A greater worry was the effect of the devaluation on the Market's agricultural policy. Under the present method of calculating agricultural subsidies, French farmers would benefit by the percentage of the devaluation at the cost of the farmers of the other members of the EEC. France, the biggest agricultural producer was already the major beneficiary of the Market's agricultural system and the new advantage she gains would make other members pay out more and also depress their agricultural prices. Inner conflicts may thereby be provoked unless the agricultural system was changed. The prospects of British entry would also depend on what was decided.

Indian Reaction:

First official reaction in New Delhi to the devaluation of the French franc was that it would not have any major repercussion on Indo-French trading pattern.

India's trade with France was somewhat limited, as compared to her trade with dollar and sterling areas. Therefore, the effect of the franc devaluation was expected to be only marginal.

As a result of the devaluation, French goods should become cheaper in terms of Indian rupees while India's exports to France would be costlier to her. But items of export from India were not of such a nature as to cause any adverse impact significantly.

India's exports to France were worth about Rs. 15 crores in 1967-68, and approximately Rs. 20 crores in 1968-69. The major export item was leather. Imports from France were about Rs. 35 to Rs. 36 crores in each of the two years.

C. "Luna-15" Launched By USSR: The Soviet Union launched on July 13 an unmanned spaceship, Luna-15, in an apparent bid to achieve the same objectives as America's Apollo-XI mission, but without landing a man on the Moon.

According to Tass, Luna-15 "would conduct scientific exploration of the Moon and space near the Moon." All instruments aboard the spaceship were working perfectly.

On July 19, Luna-15 was put into a new orbit that brought it within 16 km of the Moon. The spaceship was described in an orbit ranging from 16 km to 110 km, at an angle of 127 degrees to the plane of the lunar equator. Tass said the orbiting period lasted 1 hour and 54 minutes.

Jordell Bank astronomers in UK earlier said it meant the unmanned Soviet probe was either "doing reconnaissance or preparing to land on the Moon." They said Luna-15 and the American Apollo-XI were still far apart as they circled the Moon but the implication was that the Soviet craft was being moved towards a position where it could take a look at what the Americans were doing.

On July 21, the Soviet Union landed Luna-15 on the Moon's surface, 805 km from where America's Apollo astronauts were preparing to take off on their journey back to Earth.

Signals picked up at the giant radio telescope at Jordell Bank in UK indicated that after four days of Moon-orbiting, the unmanned probe had landed on the Moon's Sea of Crises.

The last Soviet Moon-shot was in November, 1968 when the unmanned Zond-6 circled the Moon and returned to the Earth. Two months earlier its predecessor, Zond-5, was the first craft to make a circumlunar flight and return to the Earth. It carried a cargo of live tortoises, wine-flies and meal worms.

The last shot in the Luna series, Luna-14, went into orbit around the Moon in April, 1967, but did not return to Earth.

D. "Zond-7" Space Probe Launched By USSR: The Soviet Union launched on August 8 an automatic station, Zond-7, to photograph the Moon and test some improved systems incorporated in rocket-space equipment.

[Russia uses the term "automatic station" to describe unmanned space probes. The Zond series has been used in the past for deeper space probes beyond the Moon. It has always been unmanned.]

An announcement by Tass made it clear that a new equipment was on board this time, but gave no other indication of the purpose of the flight.

Zond-7 was first put in orbit around the Earth and then set on a course towards the Moon. The trip normally takes 3-1/2 days.

On August 11, Zond-7 was reported to be on its way back to Earth after circling the Moon. It took measurements of the physical characteristics of near-lunar space and photographed the lunar space, but Tass did not state which area of the Moon was studied. Nor did it give any indication of the precise object of the study.

After carrying out planned astro-orientation and turns, when the station was about 260,000 km from the Earth, a propulsion unit was switched on to give the craft a required correcting impulse of pre-set value. As a result of this correction manoeuvre, the automatic station was put on a trajectory towards the Moon.

On August 8, Zond-7 started sending back pictures of parts of the lunar surface. Six days later, on August 14, it made a soft-landing on a pre-set target on Earth.

E. Analysis Of Lunar Rocks: American scientists and geologists on August 6 found black silt and a few Moon chunks splashed with colourful crystals when they opened the second, and last, box of lunar surface material gathered by astronauts Armstrong and Aldrin during their Moon stay.

The box contained small rocks, ranging from gravel to orange-size. They were covered with the same powdery black Moon dust found in the first box, opened more than a week earlier.

One of the geologists observing the box opening, Dr. Jeff Warner, said that white, pink and greyish-brown crystals were scattered over the surfaces of several of the rocks, which appeared to be rather soft.

Some scientists said the crystals indicated the rocks were molten at one time and apparently cooled quickly. Such molten rock could have been caused by volcanic action or the heat generated by meteor impacts.

Reporting on analysis of the gas content of some of the dust, they said they were surprised by the large amount of rare gases, believed to have come from the Sun. They heated Moon dust to 1,600 degrees centigrade, driving off gases they identified as the result of "solar wind." Bombardment by solar wind, composed of atoms flung out from the Sun, could cause the surface layers of Moon rocks to flake off into Moon dust, Radiation damage could explain the dust's grey colour.

There were large amounts of helium, neon and argon in the dust as well as hydrogen, crypton and xenon. The isotopic ratios of the gases showed that they came from the Sun.

Meanwhile, in the biological laboratory in Houston, the colony of mice injected with lunar material showed no ill effects. All 19 human inmates of the quarantine area, including the Apollo-XI astronauts, were also in good health.

Three Minerals Identified:

On August 9, however, a Moon rock, different from others and bearing marked resemblance to some Earth rocks, led scientists to believe that the Moon may have had a more complicated and dynamic history than suspected.

After examining the grey, 2-lb rock through a microscope that magnified it 50 times, the Space Agency geologist, Dr. Jeff Warner, said that he could identify three minerals—olivine, pyroxene and feldspar. The main difference between this rock and the others gathered on the lunar surface by Apollo-XI astronauts was that it was the only one seen so far with an abundance of olivine—a combination of iron and magnesium.

Dr. Warner said the make-up of the minerals in the lunar rock was such that it seemed to have been formed in several stages rather than in one single process. Some of the olivine seemed to be concentrated in certain areas instead of being spread around. Earth rock like this was known as dunite, after Dunn Mountain in Australia. Other sections of the rock containing all three minerals are similar to what was called gabbro on Earth.

F. "Mariner" Spacecrafts' Findings About Mars: Giving details of the scientific findings by the two Mariner spacecraft launched by USA, Dr. Charles Barth, physicist at the Colorado University, said on August 2 that information from Mariner-6 indicated that the atmosphere on Mars lacked nitrogen, an essential ingredient for life as it is known on Earth.

He said: "Our conclusion on the basis of preliminary results is that there is no nitrogen in the atmosphere." Mariner-6 ultraviolet tests revealed a lack of nitrogen. But instruments indicated that the mystery planet did have in its atmosphere hydrogen, oxygen, carbon, carbon monoxide and carbon dioxide.

On August 2, Mariner-7, feared lost three days earlier when it was out of contact for seven hours, began taking its first series of pictures of Mars.

Scientists at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena (California) said that after taking two test pictures Mariner-7 was now working well as it headed in for the second photographic reconnaissance of the red planet in five days.

The probe's twin, Mariner-6, was moving out into solar orbit after swooping to within 2,000 miles of the Martian surface to send back to Earth the closest photographs ever of the planet.

The photographs sent by Mariner-6 revealed no evidence of vegetation on the crater-pocked surface of Mars. There was also no sign of life-giving nitrogen either in the upper atmosphere or circulating between the planet's surface and the atmosphere.

Scientists said they saw no clouds in the equatorial area Mariner-6 passed over and no signs of the atmospheric blue haze seen around Mars from Earth telescopes. The faint canals criss-crossing Mars had proved to be vague dark splotches when seen from Mariner-6's closest fly-by point of 3,427 km.

A dramatic view of the Earth framed by the jagged ice peaks of the Martian South Pole astounded scientists as they watched the pictures sent over 60 million miles of space by Mariner-7.

The pictures, gleaming close-ups of ice-walled craters and snowy wastes on the south polar cap, were taken 24 hours earlier as Mariner-7 swept down over the planet's South Pole at a height of 2,000 nautical miles. They showed the rim of the polar ice-cap—thought to be straight until the first pictures of the region were sent back by Mariner-7's twin —Mariner-6 as jagged and indented with patches of snow, with an orange-coloured desert immediately above. Craters pockmarked both the polar cap and desert regions. One indentation about 20 miles long looked like a giant human footprint.

The most dramatic pictures came after the camera angles changed to snap the South Pole. As the afternoon sun played on the snowy surface, glimpses of the Earth could be seen through the southern rim of craters at the extremity of the polar ice-cap.

Scientists at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory had ordered a last-minute switch in the camera angles to photograph the exact area of the South Pole and a blue haze which had been seen hovering above it in long-distance photographs sent back as Mariner approached the red planet.

The southernmost pictures were among the most spectacular, showing streaks of limestone-type patterns. Scientists peering closely at the pictures eventually decided they were frost drifts. Dr. Conrad Giovy, Professor of Atmosphere Science at the University of Washington, said he was unable to make out the blue haze seen in the long-distance photographs.

Gases Present In Martian Atmosphere:

A Jet Propulsion Laboratory scientist, Dr. G. Pimentel, said on August 7 that Mariner-7 had detected gases above the Martian south pole which could indicate the existence of life on the planet.

He said the two gases detected were methane and ammonia, which are at the origin of the life evolution chain on Earth. "If these elements really exist, we can't escape the fact that they might be of biological origin." This was the first report of organic substances from the passes of Mariner-6 and 7.

Contrary to findings by other experimenters, who said the south polar cap appeared to be solid carbon dioxide, Dr. Pimentel said his instruments showed that the cap was made of water ice with a cloud of frozen particles above it. This cloud would protect any micro-organisms in the polar cap area from deadly solar radiation.

But Dr. Norman Horowitz, of the California Institute of Technology, cautioned that "methane and ammonia can be produced biologically and non-biologically and are very common components of our cosmos."

He said all indications from Mariner-7 and its twin Mariner-6, which flew over the Martian equatorial region five days before Mariner-7, were that Mars was a hostile desert bombarded by destructive ultra-violet rays from the Sun. "Certainly no terrestrial species could live on Mars. If there are inhabitants on Mars, then those inhabitants must be microbes."

AFGHANISTAN

A. Restoration Of Transit Facilities With India—Mr. N. A. Etemadi's Appeal To Pakistan: In Kabul on August 28, the Premier, Mr. Noor Ahmed Etemadi, called on Pakistan to restore the transit facilities for trade between Afghanistan and India.

He said that the continued closure of the transit route to India had imposed an unnecessary burden on Afghanistan and entailed additional freight costs. He hoped the new Pakistani authorities would not continue what was in fact a kind of economic pressure on Afghanistan.

He regretted that his Government's readiness to co-operate with all countries in the field of land transit had been misinterpreted in Pakistan and in some foreign Press circles.

He explained that his Government had not made any proposal on regional co-operation because it believed that the settlement of the transit question was a pre-condition for such co-operation.

On Pakhtoonistan:

Regarding the problem of Pakhtoonistan, Mr. Etemadi re-affirmed that Afghanistan regarded the 1947 referendum as void because it was incomplete and had been "rigged."

Afghanistan continued to insist on the Pakhtoons' right of self-determination. Consequently, it would not recognize any alteration of the present situation in the area which was not based on the expressed and confirmed wishes of the population.

His Government, he said, was hoping that unlike the former Pakistani regime the present Government would take a realistic and farsighted view of the problem. He was confident that the problem of Pakhtoonistan could be solved in an atmosphere of brotherhood and that fruitful co-operation would develop between Pakistan and Afghanistan.

CEYLON

A. State Banks To Operate In India: India informed Ceylon on July 12 that it had no objection to two State banks—the Bank of Ceylon and the People's Bank—opening branch offices in India on the same terms and conditions on which other foreign banks were allowed to function.

This cleared the way for three Indian banks operating in Colombo to entertain new accounts from Ceylonese constituents as soon as Cabinet approval was given.

While the Ceylonese State banks have no immediate plans to have branch offices in India, the Government was apparently anxious to have the formal Indian assent for them to do so as a prequisite for permitting the Indian banks in Ceylon to expand their business among Ceylonese clients.

An agreement on other points, such as credit for Ceylon's development projects and training of local bank personnel, was reached earlier on the same lines as other foreign banks which were recently allowed to extend their activities to Ceylonese.

INDIA

SUMMARY: New Vice-President; Congress Party Crisis; Surrender Of Nagas; Jana Sangh And CPI On Political Situation; National Labour Commission's Report; Economic Performance During 1967-68; Commission To Inquire Into Birla Firms.

A. Mr. G. S. Pathak Elected Vice-President: Mr. G. S. Pathak, Governor of Mysore, was elected Vice-President of India on August 30. He secured 400 of 725 valid votes as against 169 polled by Mr. Sivasanmugham Pillai and 156 by Mr. H. V. Kamath.

Three other candidates, who were also in the run, did not poll a single vote.

It was presumed that about 50 Congressmen exercised their right of "free vote." Their votes were distributed between Mr. Kamath and Mr. Pillai.

Of the 759 members of the electoral college for the Vice-Presidential election, 24 members of Lok Sabha and nine of the Rajya Sabha failed to turn up at the Parliament polling office. One vote was declared invalid.

When Mr. Pathak was informed of his electoral success, he said: "I am grateful to the Members of Parliament and through them, to my countrymen for the honour they have conferred on me by electing me to this high office. I deem it yet another opportunity to serve the nation. It shall be my constant endeavour to justify the confidence and trust reposed in me. The good wishes of my fellow-countrymen will always be a source of strength to me."

Within an hour of his election as Vice-President, Mr. Pathak submitted his resignation as Governor to the President. The resignation became effective from the forenoon of August 31.

Mr. Pathak was sworn-in as Vice-President on August 31.

The Chief Justice of Mysore, Mr. A. R. Somanath Iyer was sworn-in as acting Governor of Mysore by the senior-most judge, Mr. M. Sadasivayya, on August 31.

Cross Voting:

An analysis of the pattern of voting in the Vice-Presidential election showed that there was cross voting not only on the part of Congressmen but also by members of some of the Opposition parties.

More Congress MPs seem to have voted against the party mandate for Mr. H. V. Kamath than for Mr. Sivasanmugham Pillai.

In the cross voting for Mr. Pillai, Harijan solidarity played an important part. In Mr. Kamath's case, three factors were believed to have worked in his favour. His many contacts as an old parliamentarian, his Maharashtra connexions, and last but not the least, the grievance that some Congress MPs bore against Mrs. Gandhi for having demanded a free vote to Mr. Sanjiva Reddy's disadvantage (see page 9146).

But the cross voting was not all from the Congress to the Opposition candidates. The total Opposition strength in the electoral college is 327 compared with a total of 325 votes polled by Mr. Pillai and Mr. Kamath. Considering that the two got between them 50 to 60 Congress votes, there was cross voting to the same extent in Mr. G. S. Pathak's favour by non-Congress MPs, including Independents.

Mr. G. S. Pathak's Career:

When 73-year-old Mr. Pathak assumed office as Governor on May 13, 1967, he took over from Mr. Giri, who subsequently became Vice-President and now the President.

Born on February 28, 1896, Mr. Pathak was educated at Government College, Lahore, and at the University of Allahabad. He started practice of law at Bareilly in 1919 and later shifted to the Allahabad High Court in 1928.

While at Allahabad, Mr. Pathak came in contact with Mr. Moti Lal Nehru, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and subsequently Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru and Mr. H. N. Kunzru.

Mr. Pathak was appointed a Judge of the Allahabad High Court in 1945. After having served as a judge, he left the Bench in 1946 and resumed practice. His public life also started then. In 1951, Mr. Nehru appointed him honorary legal adviser, particularly in international law.

Mr. Pathak went to United Nations seven times as a member of the Indian delegation between 1946 and 1959 to give expert legal advice on the Kashmir issue. In 1957, he visited several South American countries as Special Representative of the Prime Minister with the honorary rank of Ambassador to apprise them of India's stand on Kashmir.

He was elected to the Rajya Sabha in April, 1960 and had served on a number of parliamentary committees. Soon after Mrs. Indira Gandhi became Prime Minister in 1966, Mr. Pathak joined the Central Cabinet as Law Minister, a position which he held till the end of the third Lok Sabha in April, 1967. He served as President of the All-India Seva Samiti, member of the Indian Commission of Jurists, the International Law Association and the Law Commission of India.

B. No-Confidence Move Against Central Government Fails To Get Support: The Lok Sabha refused leave to Mr. Madhu Limaye and two of his SSP colleagues on August 28 to table a motion of no-confidence in the Central Council of Ministers.

The Speaker put the motion to vote as soon as Mr. Limaye rose to seek leave of the House. Only 14 SSP members, three short of the party's total strength, stood up in support. The rest of the Opposition sat motionless, seemingly unconcerned about it.

There were cheers from the Congress benches and Mr. Limaye's observation that his purpose had been served was drowned in the noise. Pointing an accusing finger at the rest of the Opposition, Mr. Limaye added: "Now we know who is for what."

In the meantime, the Speaker had announced the rejection of the motion, the required 50 members not having risen in support.

This was one of the rare occasions when a censure motion was refused leave. Most such motions in the past had secured the necessary support without much ado. Indeed, for some time now, every session of the Lok Sabha has had at least one such motion to tackle. To that extent, this was a break from what was threatening to become a tradition.

Mr. Limaye's motion, read out by the Speaker, was: "This Government is a Government of contradictions in collusion with big business, foreign capital, feudal relics, bureaucracy and has, recently, encouraged destruction of democracy and the Constitution in Uttar Pradesh."

Spokesmen of some of the Opposition groups later attributed their refusal to support the motion to the SSP's failure to consult them in advance.

This was the sixth motion of no-confidence in the Government headed by Mrs. Indira Gandhi and the first that failed to muster support. The other five motions were rejected.

C. Congress Party Crisis: The following is a resume of political developments which led to the gravest crisis ever faced by the Congress Party as a result of the selection and defeat of Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy in the election for President of India.

The Congress Working Committee, while discussing a Note on economic policies at Bangalore on July 9 (see page 9087) was confronted with another Note from the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, differing with the official Note and suggesting radical changes including nationalization of major banks and import of raw materials, land reforms etc. This threatened a major crisis in the Party and the Central Government. The Working Committee, however, accepted on July 11 the Prime Minister's Note with amendments as suggested in Mr. Y. B. Chavan's resolution, leaving nationalization of banks to be implemented by the Government.

On July 13, also in Bangalore, the Congress Parliamentary Board nominated Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy as the Party's candidate for Presidential election, rejecting the candidature of Mr. Jagjivan Ram sponsored by Mrs. Indira Gandhi. Mrs. Gandhi was reported to have taken offence and told Mr. Nijalingappa that "this is not the way to treat the Prime Minister of the country". She linked Mr. Reddy's nomination with opposition to her economic policies.

The same day (July 13), Mr. V. V. Giri, the Acting President, announced his own candidature for the Presidential election, as an independent candidate. He resigned from the posts of Acting President and Vice-President and handed over to Mr. M. Hidayatullah, Chief Justice of India, who was sworn-in as Acting President on July 20.

Both Mr. Reddy and Mr. V. V. Giri filed their nomination papers on July 21.

Meanwhile, on July 16, Mrs. Gandhi relieved Mr. Morarji Desai of the Finance portfolio in the Central Government. Mr. Desai immediately resigned and his resignation was accepted on July 19. The same day, the Acting President promulgated an Ordinance nationalizing 14 major banks which controlled 85 per cent of total bank deposits in the country. A Bill to nationalize banks was introduced and passed in Parliament. It received the President's assent on August 9.

On August 11, Mr. Jagjivan Ram and Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed wrote to the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, criticising his contact with the Jana Sangh and Swatantra Party on a "personal level" which indicated an effort at "collusion to topple down the Central Government." They foresaw "grave repercussions of this move on the Presidential election." Mr. Nijalingappa repudiated these charges. In a letter to Mr. Nijalingappa dated August 15, Mrs. Gandhi wrote that while she desired unity in the party, the Congress could not merely serve as a machine for securing the election of a candidate (Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy) "chosen by a small group," specially by making alliances divorced from policies with the Swatantra and Jana Sangh parties.

On August 12, Mrs. Gandhi and her two colleagues, Mr. Jagjivan Ram and Mr. F. A. Ahmed, demanded of the Congress President the right to a "free vote" in the Presidential election. Mr. Nijalingappa opposed the move and suspended Mr. Arjun Arora, MP, from the party on August 14 for asking for the same right earlier.

On August 13, Mrs. Gandhi turned down Mr. Nijalingappa's request to issue a whip to Party members, as she said she could not be party to "winning elections by clouding principles."

The Presidential election took place on August 16.

On August 18, the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa asked for an explanation from Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Jagjivan Ram and Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed for their attitude in the election. Mrs. Gandhi, on the other hand, warned of "disastrous consequences" for the party if any disciplinary action was taken against those who voted according to their conscience.

Addressing about 100 MPs later on August 18, she referred to an impression that had been created in the world that the Prime Minister of India had been demoted in her own political organization annd that she had swallowed many insults to maintain unity in the Party.

However, in the poll held on August 16 and after counting of votes on August 20 for the Presidentship, Mr. V.V. Giri was elected as President of India. This was acclaimed as a "strategic victory" for Mrs. Gandhi by her supporters.

The Congress Working Committee met in New Delhi on August 25 to review the events which led to dissensions and break-up of Party discipline and decided to withdraw notices calling for an explanation from Mrs. Indira Gandhi and her two Cabinet colleagues for demanding "free vote" in the Presidential election, defined the spheres of action respectively of the Congress President and the Prime Minister to eliminate friction, asked for adherence to Party programmes and policies and exonerated Mr. Nijalingappa of alleged "collusion" with certain Opposition political parties to topple down Mrs. Gandhi's Ministry. The resolution of the Working Committee covered, directly or indirectly, the main issues of discord between factions led by the Congress President and the Prime Minister which centred on ideological differences on the economic programme, manner of selecting the Congress nominee for Presidential election, allegation against the Congress President to collude with Opposition parties to topple down the Government, demand for "free vote" in the Presidential election and the threat of disciplinary action which followed the demand, and Mrs. Gandhi's allegations of attempts to denigrate her office both in India and abroad. The relationship between the Congress President and Prime Minister were broadly defined and emphasis laid on the fact that the two offices were not rival centres of power, but that the health of the Party depended to a large extent on how they ran the organization.

The resolution stated that what was needed was that the disease should be treated rather than the symptoms. The immediate danger of a split in the party was thus averted.

On August 29, obviously attempting to set at rest the controversy about Mr. Morarji Desai's exit from the Central Cabinet, Mrs. Gandhi maintained that the discretion of the Prime Minister could not be fettered by the organizational wing in the selection of Ministers and other matters which fell exclusively within her jurisdiction. The Prime Minister or the State Chief Minister was the "arch-stone" which formed the basis of the democratic structure. She was addressing a meeting of the Congress Parliamentary Party.

Once chosen to this high office, she said, he or she must have full discretion. If the person concerned did not command the confidence of Parliament or the legislature, he or she must quit. Democracy could not be successful by proceeding in an arbitrary way.

[Mrs. Gandhi seemed to have had in mind the statement made in Bangalore on August 28 by Mr. Nijalingappa that Mr. Desai's resignation was still a "live issue."]

She quoted Mr. Nehru as having told a conference of PCC Presidents in 1954 that it would be "most unjustified" to expect that Ministers should hold office at the pleasure of the PCCs. If this happened, the Parliamentary Party could not function and democracy would be reduced to a mockery.

To re-inforce her argument that the Prime Minister had unfettered discretion so far as the running of the Parliamentary Party was concerned, Mrs. Gandhi referred to the controversy between the former British Prime Minister, Lord Attlee, and the then Chairman of the Labour Party, Mr. Harold Laski, and pointed out how Lord Attlee could not accept the views of his party chief. This was a matter of recent history.

In her 45-minute speech, she touched on the recent crisis facing the party and went on to explain at some length the roles of the leader of the Congress Parliamentary Party and the Congress President.

This issue, she said, had cropped up in all democracies. There was no question of denigrating any person or showing disrespect to him. As had been stated in the recent resolution of the Congress Working Committee, the two roles were complementary. While both should work together, their spheres of activity were different.

The Congress President's sphere was the organizational sphere. It was the party which should broadly lay down the direction in which it wanted its Parliamentary wing to go. How the Congress Governments should function and how the policies and programmes should be implemented should be left to Parliament and Legislative Assemblies.

She reminded the CPP that the Prime Minister was not only responsible to the Congress Party but had wider responsibilities. She had also to deal with State Governments and heads of foreign Governments. As Prime Minister, he or she represented the country in dealing with Governments and peoples of other countries.

D. Pakistan Opposed To Resumption Of Trade—Mr. Dinesh Singh's View: The External Affairs Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh, stated on September 2 in reply to a letter from a West Bengal MP that President Yahya Khan's reply to Mrs. Indira Gandhi's communication in August, "as also all other indications we have had from Pakistan", showed "quite clearly" that Pakistani leaders were firmly opposed to taking any steps to permit resumption of trade with India.

He said India had been keen to normalize trade and travel relations between India and Pakistan and had removed the ban on trade with Pakistan a long time back. India had also made several proposals in this respect.

There were, however, "several indications that the people of Pakistan desire and realise the benefits of trade between India and Pakistan. For example, in recent weeks, Pakistan Observer, a daily newspaper published in East Pakistan, had carried a number of articles strongly suggesting that there should be normalization of trade and travel relations between the two countries to persuade the people of Pakistan that trade and other contacts with India can only be of benefit to them."

F. Surrender Of Naga Hostiles: A group of 85 Naga hostiles, including eight self-styled officers, on July 28 surrendered with their arms to the civil authorities at Melury, east of Kohima.

The arms included three light machine-guns, a 73-mm rocket launcher, a 51-mm mortar, a sten-gun, a tommygun and 42 rifles. This was the first time that such a large group had surrendered with their arms.

On August 2, seven persons, including five personnel of the Central Reserve Police, were shot and killed by an armed band of underground Nagas at Krikima, about 32 miles south-east of Kohima.

They were proceeding in an army jeep towards Kohima when they were ambushed and shot dead. Six of them, including an officer of the Subsidiary Intelligence Bureau of the Central Home Ministry, died on the spot. The driver of the jeep died later in an Army hospital.

In an earlier incident, two jawans were wounded by another band of hostile Nagas who opened rifle and mortar fire on a security force post at Barabasti in Kohima town.

Nagaland's Chief Minister, Mr. Hokishe Sema, told the Legislative Assembly in Kohima on August 16 that since the cessation of operations in Nagaland in September, 1964, about 1,800 underground Nagas had surrendered with 237 weapons.

The number of the rebels captured during this period was 472 with 146 weapons. Adequate steps had been taken for rehabilitating these underground Nagas.

About 150 China-trained Naga hostiles sneaked back to the cease-fire-bound Ukhrul sub-division of Manipur from Upper Burma during the last few days of August, 1969. A heavy movement of the so-called federal Naga army was also reported from the Mao sub-division of Manipur bordering Nagaland.

Two Naga hostiles were killed and another two were captured on September 3 in a major encounter with security forces in the Konyak area of Tuensang district, bordering on Burma. Eight rifles, four of them with Chinese markings, and a large quantity of ammunition were captured.

Army Vehicles Convoy Ambushed: On August 22, one Naga hostile was killed and one captured in an exchange of fire following an ambush of a convoy of army vehicles at Cheswema village, 12 miles from Kohima.

Two men of the Security Forces received serious injuries in the ambush, which was laid by an estimated 40 Naga hostiles. One worker of the State Public Works Department was killed.

This was the fourth ambush in the last one month in Nagaland.

Details of the ambush showed that it was well-planned, with trenches dug on either side at the site on the Kohima-Wokha road. But, the hostiles misjudged the strength of the convoy and opened premature fire. The Security Forces were able to hit back effectively. When the hostiles were charged from both sides, they disappeared into the thick jungle after one of them was killed and another captured.

Reliable reports said that the hostile gang was led by the self-styled "major-general" Iyali Metha. The same gang was believed to be responsible for the earlier ambushes in the area this month, in one of which seven persons were killed. The hostiles were reported to have used mortars and light machine-guns.

These acts were believed to have been committed by the underground to provoke the Security Forces and earn the support and sympathy of villagers.

Cease-fire Agreement Extended: The Governor of Assam and Nagaland, Mr. B. K. Nehru announced on August 31 the extension of the suspension of operations agreement by another month.

The underground Nagas also extended the cease-fire for the same period.

G. Jana Sangh Working Committee Adopts Political Resolution: The Working Committee of the Bharatiya Jana Sangh, in its main political resolution adopted in New Delhi on September 1, declared that the real need of the moment was for all who believed in nationalism and democracy to appreciate that, while parties might disagree in respect of the path to economic progress, the nation could not be divided in its basic commitment to nationalism and democracy.

"Let no one shut his eyes to the fact that both the Indian Communist Parties refuse to commit themselves to either of these basic values," it said, recalling the statements of leading Indian Communists that their aim was to wreck the Constitution from within.

It noted with pleasure that even the Swatantra Party—"the enthusiastic spokesman of economic Rightism"—had in its latest resolution admitted the irrelevance of the terminology of "Left" and "Right." "In fact, the Jana Sangh has been of the view that the terms 'Left' and 'Right' are not quite relevant to the Indian context, and the more they are stressed the easier it becomes for Communists to cloak their extra-territorial loyalties behind the veneer of 'progressive Leftism'."

The Jana Sangh would continue to spread popular awareness about communist intentions and exert to bring together all groups which could work in concert to checkmate "this anti-national and anti-democratic front."

About the Presidential election on August 16, the resolution said that the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi and her supporters had been labouring hard to project the contest as a confrontation between Leftists and Rightists. No analysis could be more fallacious and off the mark. The schism precipitated within the Congress itself provided proof of this fallacy. Surely, Mrs. Indira Gandhi and her Congress supporters could not be regarded as more authentic specimens of Left economics than

Mr. Chavan, Mr. Kamaraj and Mr. Asoka Mehta. Yet, these two sets of Congressmen were on opposite sides of the fence.

According to the resolution, the alignment of forces during the Presidential poll was based on two factors: first, the attitude of the various political parties and groups towards communists in general and the "developing Mrs. Gandhi-Communist axis in particular and, second, the personal equation forged by various sections with the Prime Minister." The Jana Sangh's decision to cast its second preference votes for Mr. Sanjiva Reddy was prompted in the main by the first of these two considerations.

The resolution accused Mrs. Gandhi of taking "unabashed recourse" to casteism and communalism. The entire machinery of the Central Government, including All-India Radio, was harnessed to the election campaign. Even the Press was sought to be bullied and coerced into toeing the official line. The "witch-hunting of independent journalists and cartoonists who refused to truckle to official pressure" continued even after the election.

While an open split in the Congress had been averted, the resolution felt that the Congress would never be the same again. Even more disastrous to the Congress could be the Prime Minister's open bid to denigrate the authority of the party and assign to it a position subservient to that of the legislative wing.

On Bank Nationalization:

The Jana Sangh Working Committee's resolution on bank nationalization said that, in order to do away with the possibility of haphazard steps being taken by politicians on considerations that were not strictly economic, a "really autonomous monetary authority to control the issue of currency and credit be constituted by changing the status, character and composition of the Reserve Bank of India and by giving independent economists an effective voice on the Board of Directors."

It said that social control over banks should have been given a fair trial. The fact was that nationalization was resorted to without assessing the results of the experiment of social control.

That the Government took the decision to nationalize the banks without due thought and without preparing any blueprint was evidenced by the fact that up to now there had been no clarity regarding such important aspects as rationalization of branch expansion, structure of interest rates, new role of the co-operative sector, the inconsistency involved in leaving foreign banks out of the scheme of nationalization, the procedure for ensuring public accountability on the part of banks taken over by the Government, and the problem of providing properly trained and competent managerial personnel for them.

The resolution directed all the Sangh branches to organize a nation-wide campaign from September 15 to educate public opinion on the party's new image of being neither to the Left nor Right, but having the "common man's approach," particularly in the economic field.

During the campaign, party workers will demand that drivers of hand-carts, bullock carts, cycle-rickshaws, scooters and taxis—the class that has welcomed the nationalization of banks—should be given loans on easy terms by the Government and the nationalized banks to enable them to buy their own vehicles.

A demand will also be made and popularized that the Government and the nationalized banks should give loans to small farmers to buy pumping sets, tractors and tubewells on the same terms as loans are advanced to industry, and that even small artisans such as washermen, barbers, weavers and cobblers be given credit to buy their implements and suitable sites to carry on their avocations.

The Sangh went even to the extent of considering such socialistic measures as imposition of a ceiling on urban property. It will seek the opinion of the Pradesh working committees on this and a decision will be taken at the all-India session of the party to be held in Patna at the end of December. The party also asked for implementation of the law on ceiling on agricultural land.

In its resolution, the Working Committee turned the focus only on such points in its manifesto as were beneficial to the common man. It said the nationalization of banks had made it imperative that the Fourth Five-Year Plan be re-cast to take into account the additional resources that would be available. The re-drafted Plan should achieve the objectives of provision of: (1) full employment to all able-bodied persons; (2) primary education and elementary health services for every person in five years; (3) clean drinking water supply in every village; and (4) a reduction in growing economic disparities to the ratio of 1:20.

To achieve these objectives and to re-draft the Plan, the Working Committee suggested a round-table conference of representatives of varied economic interests and economists.

H. CPI National Council Meeting: The National Council of the Right Communist Party stated in New Delhi on September 1 that all possibilities of arriving at a reasonable understanding with the Marxist Party in Kerala had now been destroyed by the latter's desire to dominate the United Front.

It said that the Marxist Party had refused even to accept those proposals which had been accepted by the other major constituents of the United Front like the ISP, the Muslim League and the RSP.

It pointed out that the crisis had now taken a turn for the worse with the departure of the Chief Minister, Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad, for East Germany for medical treatment.

The Council felt that only by speeding up the implementation of the minimum programme of the United Front and taking quick steps to give relief to the people, would the United Front Governments both in Kerala and West Bengal be able to fulfil their role of leading the democratic movement in the country.

It explained that the present political situation in the country demanded the utmost unity of all Left and democratic forces to utilize the opportunities that had now opened up for forcing the Central Government to take more and more radical steps in the economic, political and social spheres. "It would be disastrous for any party, therefore, now to do anything to sow the seeds of disruption among Left and democratic forces. The National Council of CPI hopes that better sense will prevail with the CP (Marxist) and they would realise the supreme necessity of unity among all Left and democratic forces and abandon the path of disruption that they are now following."

Resolution On Political Situation:

A resolution on the political situation said that the CPI National Council considered the recent political developments at the Centre in the wake of the Presidential election to be a turning point in the political life of the country.

It explained that alignments of forces in the Presidential election was basically political in character and it was not just a struggle for power among the contending groups.

It said that progressive elements in the Congress Party had achieved victory for the time being by frustrating the Syndicate's conspiracy for a Rightist take-over of the Central Government. It pointed out that though the Syndicate had now been forced to make a temporary retreat, yet this defeat of the Syndicate-Swatantra-Jana Sangh combine should not be taken to mean that the danger of Rightist offensive had been eliminated.

It claimed that it had now repudiated certain subjective schemes and opportunist theories. "Democratic struggle means no longer the line between the Congress as a whole on the one side and all the Opposition parties ranged against it on the other. Neither is the struggle confined within the formula—Congress vs. the Left opposition."

I. National Labour Commission's Report: In its report released in New Delhi on August 29, the National Labour Commission recommended setting up of permanent industrial relations commissions both at the Centre and in the States and also standing labour courts in the States.

The Commission, which was headed by the former Chief Justice of India, Dr. P. B. Gajendragadkar, and the second appointed in 40 years, rejected the pleas for a common labour code and a national minimum wage. It favoured, however, enhancement of contribution to the employees' provident fund and immediate appointment of a pay commission for Government employees.

The industrial relations commissions would be high-powered bodies, independent of the executives. They would have three main functions: adjudication on industrial disputes, conciliation and certification of unions as representative unions. The commission at the Centre would deal with disputes involving questions of national importance or those likely to involve establishments situated in more than one State. There would also be an industrial relations commission in each State for settlement of disputes for which the State Government was the appropriate authority.

On minimum wages, the Commission re-iterated the principle that in the matter of paying wages as prescribed under the Minimum Wages Act, the capacity of the employer was irrelevant. It recognized workers' claim to the need-based minimum wage, but stipulated that capacity of the industry to pay was relevant in fixing the wage. Finding a national minimum wage as unfeasible if related to conditions in more advanced regions and of little practical benefit if based on conditions in less developed areas, the Commission suggested that regional minima could be fixed.

Having recognized the legitimacy of strikes and lock-outs for 30 days in certain given situations, the Commission left it open to terminate the strike or lock-out even before the prescribed period after considering the motion in that behalf from the appropriate Government. The penalties which had been provided for unjustified strikes or lock-outs would, in the Commission's opinion, ultimately avoid strikes and lock-outs and would in due course persuade the parties to sit round the table earnestly and settle their differences by negotiations.

J. State Take-over Of Import Of Raw Materials: The Minister for Foreign Trade, Mr. B. R. Bhagat, said in the Rajya Sabha on August 21 that the "policy decision" of the Government in respect of import of raw materials "is that we will take over progresssively import of industrial raw materials."

He was asked whether, in view of alleged abuses of the export and import licences, the Government thought that the time was fit for nationalizing or canalizing all export-import trade through Government agencies.

Mr. Bhagat replied: "The policy in that respect is very clear, and already we are taking more and more items both in import and in export for canalization. As for the imports of raw materials, the policy decisions is that we will take over progressively import of industrial raw materials—even in export items according to the items concerned, their suitability and in the public interest we will take them over in the public sector."

According to official sources, no new major decision was taken by the Ministry. The policy as stated by the Deputy Minister of Foreign Trade, Mr. Ram Sevak, in the Lok Sabha on August 20 stood.

He had said: "It is the policy of the Government to extend progressively the scope of activities of the State trading agencies in the import and export trade. In accordance with this policy, import and export of a number of commodities have been canalized through STC and MMTC. Such canalization is proposed to be extended in future to such items as are found suitable for State trading."

K. Economic Performance During 1967-68: A detailed appraisal of performance of the economy in 1967-68, the second year of the interregnum between the Third and Fourth Plans, has indicated that the strains under which it had operated since the end of the Third Plan continued till about the middle of the year, but the latter half marked a turning-point in the course of the economy.

These observations were made in the Annual Plan progress report for 1967-68, prepared by the Planning Commission, copies of which were presented to Parliament on August 30.

The document stated that the average index for agricultural production as a whole recorded a rise of 22.6 per cent to 161.8 in 1967-68 from 132 in 1966-67. The rate of growth of industrial production was, however, 0.5 per cent only, as compared to 0.2 per cent in 1966-67. This was considered significant inasmuch as the declining trend in the annual rate of growth of industrial production, observed since 1964-65, was reversed.

The national income in real terms was higher by 8.9 per cent in 1967-68, in contrast to a decline of 5.6 per cent in 1965-66 and a marginal increase of 0.9 per cent in 1966-67.

The total outlay for 1967-68 was originally fixed at Rs. 2.246 crores, which was slightly in excess of the anticipated Plan expenditure of Rs. 2,221 crores in 1966-67. Subsequently, the figure was revised to Rs. 2,240 crores, as a result of adjustments in the outlays of certain States and Union Territories.

The distribution of Plan expenditure of Rs. 2,110 crores as between the Centre, States and Union Territories was Rs. 1,030 crores for the Centre, Rs. 1,022 crores for States, and Rs. 58 crores for Union Territories.

Plan expenditure had declined from a level of Rs. 2,329 crores in 1965-66, the last year of the Third Plan, to Rs. 2,165 crores or by 7 per cent in 1966-67. The year under review witnessed a further decline of 3.5 per cent in the actual Plan expenditure.

Imports, on the other hand, registered a further fall due to the continued recession in some industries and further progress in import substitution. As a consequence, the payments situation became somewhat easier in contrast to the difficult situation in earlier months.

The rate of investment in the economy further slackened to 11.3 per cent in 1967-68 from 11.8 per cent in the preceding year. Here too, the decline was mainly in the rate of public investment, which went down from 7.9 per cent in 1966-67 to 6.4 per cent in 1967-68 due to fall in both public savings as well as draft on private savings made by the Central and State Governments through the various forms of borrowings. The rate of private investment, on the contrary, registered an improvement from 3.9 per cent in 1967-68, mainly arising from replenishment of food stocks and inventory accumulation in certain industries.

The document added that while the economy showed signs of recovery during the latter half of the year, the employment situation remained more or less static, particularly in the organized sector.

L. Objectives Of Annual Plan: Internal price stability and external payments equilibrium are the two prime objectives of the Annual Plan for 1969-70, the first year of the Fourth Five-Year Plan.

The size of the Plan, the allocations to different sectors and outlays on major projects are on the lines indicated in the Central Budget for 1969-70.

A copy of the Annual Plan was placed on the table of Parliament on August 29 by the Minister for Parliamentary Affairs, Mr. K. Raghuramaiah, on behalf of the Prime Minister.

The report, released five months after the commencement of the Plan, said that the aggregate outlay in the public sector would be Rs. 2,271 crores in 1969-70 or about 15.8 per cent of the total investment proposed for the Fourth Plan.

As compared to the estimated investment of Rs. 1,785 crores in fixed assets during 1968-69, Rs. 185 crores more have been provided in the Plan for 1969-70 for fixed investment in public sector projects.

The Annual Plan aims at a step-up in the rate of investment to 12 per cent of the national income from the previous year's level of 11.3 per cent and an increase in net fixed investment in the public sector of 10 per cent over the level in 1968-69. During the current year, a growth of 5.5 per cent in the national income through a growth of five per cent in net output from agriculture and eight per cent in organized industry has been assumed. Prices are to be stabilized around the level reached in 1968-69 by a more efficient management of supplies of foodgrains and important agricultural raw materials.

M. FICCI Committee On Economic Programme: A two-day meeting of the committee of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry (FICCI) in New Delhi on August 31, through a consensus, expressed the opinion that recent events in the country—which began with the Bangalore session of the Congress —had "re-affirmed the nation's faith in democracy."

At the same time, the meeting felt, it would be wrong not to deal with the contrary forces at work, an indication of which was to be found in the manner in which rule of the law was being sedulously undermined in certain parts of the country and in the statements made by persons in high positions, such as Mr. A. K. Gopalan, MP, and Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad, Chief Minister of Kerala, that the Constitution should be wrecked from within.

A communique issued by the Federation said: "The meeting was unanimous that all possible support should be lent to all programmes that strengthen democracy in the country. Certainly, a better life for the people, larger employment potential to young men, and more opportunities to more and more people should be speedily brought about.

"Applying this yardstick, the meeting doubted whether the nationalization of the 14 major banks was going to make a difference over what was being achieved under social control. However, as a decision had already been taken and the law was on the statute book, it would be necessary that proper safeguards are taken to ensure that the banking system continued to promote the development of all the sectors which depended on banks for their financial requirements. It was equally important that banks continued to function with efficiency and courtesy.

"The meeting considered the economic policy and programme of the A-ICC and was of the opinion that some of the programmes enunciated in the Prime Minister's note at Bangalore were indeed welcome. In fact, some of them were being suggested by the business community itself, such as those relating to the autonomous functioning of public sector projects and their being manned by competent persons.

"Equally welcome was the desire for making special efforts to finance new entrepreneurs in less developed regions, to set up service co-operatives in rural areas and the like. As regards some other items of the programme, such as the purchase of Government requirements from public sector undertakings exclusively, imposition of ceilings on incomes and holdings of urban properties, the meeting thought they should be studied in greater detail.

"In fact, some of them, including the nationalization of the import of raw materials, may not only not achieve the desired objectives, but may even come in the way of the efficient functioning of the economy and also retard development. This, the meeting felt, may do damage to the nation, particularly at a time when the economy has been showing definite signs of improvement and, in fact, seems to be poised for a new step forward.

"The meeting was of the view that the new expectations that had been aroused in the people will have to be matched by a commensurate developmental effort in which all the sectors of society have to play their part. Should development be slowed down, social inequalities were bound to grow and stability would be difficult to maintain."

N. LIC Business During 1968-69: The business of the Life Insurance Corporation (LIC) showed a marked rise during 1968-69, cashing in on an all-round recovery and revival in the country's industrial output.

The total new business rose to Rs. 929.35 crores in 1968-69—a new record for paid-for business. Another significant feature was that in 1968-69, 993,000 policies comprising 68.5 per cent of the total number of policies issued in India were issued on the lives of people insuring for the first time.

Premium income went up to Rs. 234.78 crores from Rs. 213.01 crores in the previous year. The total net income was Rs. 308.49 crores against Rs. 274.06 crores in the previous year. The lapse ratio was slightly lower at 6.3 per cent.

The LIC's efforts to bring new sectors and classes under its business paid dividends. Thus, during 1968-69, 664,000 policies, namely, 48 per cent, were issued under the non-medical scheme assuring a new business of Rs. 207.95 crores. Under the salary-saving scheme, the sum assured was Rs. 164.96 crores against Rs. 141 crores in 1967-68.

The overall expense ratio for 1968-69 for life business came to 27.54 per cent against 27.52 per cent in the previous year. The renewed expense ratio was 15.91 per cent against 15.90 per cent in the previous year.

O. Smuggling Of Foreign Goods: Smuggled foreign goods worth Rs. 19.57 crores were seized by the Customs at Bombay, Calcutta and Madras ports during 1968-69 and the number of cases detected was 26,020.

These figures compared with Rs. 17.06 crores worth of goods seized in 15,033 cases in 1967-68 at the three ports.

Between the beginning of 1967 and the middle of March this year, the Customs authorities and revenue intelligence raided and seized contraband goods worth Rs. 15.5 crores in Bombay, Rs. 1.58 crores in Delhi, Rs. 1.63 crores in Calcutta and Rs. 3.03 crores in Madras. The number of persons arrested was 1,485. Prosecutions were launched in 456 cases and 162 persons were convicted while 82 were acquitted. Cases against others are pending.

The total number of seizures was 24,816, the number of Indian nationals arrested was 1,469 and of foreign nationals 183, of whom 23 were let off.

In March and April alone this year, gold weighing 1,142 kg was seized by the Central excise authorities. In due course this will be deposited with the mint. The value of gold deposited with the mint during 1966-68 was of Rs. 92,96,000, Rs. 1,70,43,000 and Rs. 3,05,54,000 respectively.

P. Commission To Inquire Into Birla Firms' Improprieties: The Government of India announced in the Rajya Sabha on August 29 that it had decided to appoint a Commission to inquire comprehensively into allegations that improprieties and irregularities in licensing procedures and industrial financing had benefited larger industrial houses, including the Birla group of firms.

In his statement, the Minister of Industrial Development and Company Affairs, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, said that inquiry would be held into certain lapses, improprieties and acts of omission and commission by the Birla group of companies and some other industrial houses. He did not name the latter but said they had been referred to in the Dutt Committee report. The composition of the Commission and its terms of reference would be announced very soon.

He said: "As the House is aware, the Industrial Licensing Policy Inquiry Committee, headed by Mr. S. Dutt, has submitted two reports to the Government last month (July, 1969), one relating to industrial licensing and the other in respect of certain allegations against the Birla group of companies, which had a bearing on licensing and which had been referred to them. Both these reports have been placed before the House.

"While the conclusions and recommendations in the main report of the Industrial Licensing Policy Inquiry Committee regarding industrial licensing policy are under examination of the Government and it will take some time before the Government's decisions in that regard are finalized, the Government has taken note of the fact that the Industrial Licensing Policy Inquiry Committee has pointed out, in its main report on industrial licensing, a certain number of specific instances where lapses and improprieties and acts of omission and commission have allegedly taken place to the advantage of the large industrial groups.

"In its second report submitted to the Government on July 28, 1969, regarding certain specific allegations against the Birla group of companies referred to the Committee, the Committee has reported that it has not been possible for them to conduct a full and detailed inquiry in many of the cases.

"The Government is of the view that the afore-mentioned lapses, improprieties and acts of commission and omission referred to in the Dutt Committee's reports are definite matters of public importance and a full and comprehensive inquiry is necessary in respect of the above cases. It has, therefore, been decided to set up a Commission of Inquiry under the Commissions of Inquiry Act, 1952, to go into all these matters. The composition of the Commission and its detailed terms of reference will be announced shortly."

Q. Press Council's Annual Report: In its third annual report presented to Parliament on August 29, the Press Council expressed the view that a direct loan by the Government to any newspaper was calculated to impair the freedom of the Press and "is in principle not desirable."

It said that the Council's views were sought by the Government on a tentative decision to grant a loan of Rs. 25,00,000 to the Lokasatta and Janasatta group of Gujarati newspapers. "The Council considered the matter in an emergency meeting and was of the opinion that a newspaper receiving Government loan could not but develop subservience to the policies and principles of the ruling party. That, the Council maintained, would be a very unhealthy and retrograde trend."

The Government accepted the Council's opinion and ultimately decided to discard the proposal of sanctioning the loan.

A long-term solution of the problem of failing newspapers, the Council felt, might be to form a Press Finance Corporation with an independent board with power to help such newspapers.

The report showed that during the year, the Council considered 32 complaints, 29 of which were lodged against newspapers for violation offending against public taste. Fourteen such cases were filed by the State Governments and one by a journalists' association; the rest were preferred by the public. Thirteen complaints involved communal writings. Cases of maligning a community, an institution or an individual numbered five and those of misreporting two. The remaining nine related to other journalistic improprieties.

The Council upheld 11 complaints and rejected eight. Ten were dismissed owing to the failure of the complaints to pursue the cases or furnish necessary particulars.

While considering complaints involving "communal writings," the Council recognized the need for distinguishing objectionable material and inflammatory propaganda from legitimate criticism and ventilation of genuine grievances. It drew up tentatively 10-point "guidelines" to indicate what a newspaper should refrain from publishing. The Council decided to finalize them after ascertaining the views of the National Integration Council.

R. Press Registrar's Report: According to the annual report of the Press Registrar presented to Parliament on August 29, despite a numerical gain of 7.6 per cent in newspapers and periodicals in 1968 over the previous year, the total circulation fell from 25.8 million to 23.4 million during the year.

The total number of newspapers and periodicals rose to 10,019 in 1968 from 9,315 in 1967. There were 636 dailies in 1968 against 588 the previous year, 2,892 weeklies in 1968 against 2,697 in 1967. Tri-weeklies and bi-weeklies, however, registered a decline in 1968 to 51 from 58 in 1967.

The circulation of dailies came down to 6.98 million from 7.03 million in 1967 and the weeklies registered a circulation of 6.15 million in 1968 against 7.05 million the previous year.

Delhi had the largest number of newspapers—1,155. Newspapers published in Hindi were the largest in the country—2,381.

The number of English dailies in the country is 68 with a circulation of about 1.87 million against 182 dailies in Hindi with a circulation of just over a million.

During the year under review, 82 newspapers owned by various political parties were published in the country. The largest number (30) was owned by the Congress, followed by different Communist Parties of India—25, Praja-Socialist Party (5) and others (20).

Twenty-four diplomatic missions in India brought out 103 newspapers and periodicals in 1968 with a circulation of 1,271,000. These publications had 5.4 per cent share in the total circulation of the entire Press in the country.

The Soviet Embassy was the leading publisher of such publications, with 46 journals having a circulation of 652,000 in 1968. The US Embassy was the second with 15 periodicals having a circulation of 514,000; the German Democratic Republic came third with six periodical publications with a total circulation of 35,000.

S. Fifth Finance Commission's Report: According to the recommendations of the Fifth Finance Commission presented to Parliament on August 26, an aggregate amount of Rs. 4,266 crores would be transferred to the States during the five-year period beginning April, 1969.

This compared with the aggregate transfer of Rs. 2,886 crores recommended by the Fourth Finance Commission.

The transfer would be through devolution of taxes, duties and grants-in-aid.

The Government had accepted the recommendations of the Commission made in its final report under which a generally higher share of divisible Centre revenues would accrue to the States and the Union Territories. The States would also receive their share in the additional taxation which might be levied by the Centre during the next four years.

According to the Commission's assessment, eight States—Bihar, Gujarat, Haryana, Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra, Mysore, Punjab and UP would have revenue surpluses totalling Rs. 1,270.80 crores. Of these, Haryana, Maharashtra and Punjab would have a revenue surplus even without any devolution of taxes from the Centre.

The Government "noted" the recommendations of the Commission that "it would not be desirable to maintain the existing arrangements in respect of additional excise duties in lieu of State sales tax formerly levied thereon unless the Central Government, after discussing the matter with the State Governments, can arrive at a general agreement for the continuance of the present arrangements with suitable modifications."

The Commission recommended that the question of the levy of the advertisement tax, its rate structure exemption etc. should be examined by the Government. The question would be examined as recommended. As regards this tax, the Commission expressed the view that there was some scope for raising revenue, It, however, held that in respect of other taxes mentioned in Article 269 of the Constitution, there was hardly any scope in the present circumstances for levying them.

The Commission made a number of comments in regard to the effort at resource mobilization in various States and also made several suggestions in respect of scope for raising revenue by the States.

The precise financial implications were not mentioned in the report, but it was expected that States and Union Territories would generally receive more, while backward and strategic border States like Jammu and Kashmir and Nagaland would receive more as grants-in-aid under the Finance Commission's new scheme of allocation of Central revenues.

As regards income-tax, out of the net proceeds of the tax, a sum equal to 2.6 per cent would be deemed to be the portion attributable to Union Territories. The percentage of the net proceeds of taxes on income, except the portion which represents proceeds attributable to Union Territories, to be assigned to the States would be 75.

Agricultural Revenues:

The Commission suggested streamlining of agricultural income-tax and laid down a number of guidelines to strengthen State resources.

It said that there was a prima facie case for the States to get larger revenue from a tax on agricultural income, if for the purpose of determining the rate of assessment on such income, the total income of the assessee, including the non-agricultural income, was taken into account. "Such a procedure will not be open to the objection that the State is levying tax on non-agricultural income."

It felt that the potential yield from a properly devised and enforced agricultural income-tax had been "greatly under-estimated." The present proceeds were hardly an indication of the revenue potential of a proper agricultural income-tax.

Secondly, the Commission referred to States giving exemption to small holdings from payment of land revenue and said that this would cost them (the States) Rs. 78 crores during the Fourth Plan period. "In a country with low national income, trying simultaneously to develop its economy and to provide for better social welfare, it may not be entirely possible to avoid taxation of persons with low income. A part of land revenue may be justified on the ground that the State has to incur considerable expenditure on maintaining up-to-date records of land rights."

States' Share:

Seven States would no longer be entitled to grants-in-aid. These are: Bihar, Gujarat, Haryana, Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra, Punjab and UP. The rest would get Rs 637.85 crores over the next five years in various proportions.

The States' share of income-tax collections would be worked out in accordance with different formulae laid down by the Commission for 1965-67 (advance tax collections)—which would be paid in three equal instalments from 1971-72 to 1973-74 —and the years 1967-69 when no change in the formula laid down in the Constitution (Distribution of Revenues) Order, 1965, had been suggested.

For the remaining five years until 1973-74, the Commission worked out a separate formula which allots income-tax in various percentages varying from 16.01 per cent in the case of UP and 0.08 per cent in the case of Nagaland. It ruled out payment of all the arrears in a single year to avoid possible strains on the Centre.

Similar formulae were suggested for sharing of excise duties and additional excise duties in lieu of States' sales tax.

At present 75 per cent of the net proceeds of the taxes on income other than those attributable to Union Territories (assumed at 2½ per cent of the net proceeds) are distributed among the States, the share of each State being fixed at 80 per cent on the basis of population and 20 per cent on the basis of collection.

The Commission retained the States' share at 75 per cent, but the actual devolution during the five-year period would be much larger as advance tax collections would also be included in the divisible pool of the year of collection. The distribution of the States' share was recommended as 90 per cent on the basis of population and 10 per cent on the basis of figures of assessments. It also refixed the share attributable to Union Territories at 2.6 per cent.

The following table shows the amount accruing to the States under the Fourth and Fifth Finance Commissions (both taxes and grants-in-aid) in crores of rupees:

States	Fourth	Fifth	Taxes	Grants
Andhra Pradesh	234.18	339	274.24	65.01
Assam	144.96	195.21	93.24	101.97
Bihar	197.46	407.38	407.38	Nil
Gujarat	121.55	182.75	182.75	Nil
Haryana	39.19	59.61	59.61	Nil
Jammu and Kashmir	66.10	106.84	33.16	73.68
Kerala	188.61	193.43	143.78	49.65
Madhya Pradesh	162.03	274.02	274.02	Nil
Maharashtra	260.38	383.66	383.66	Nil

West Bengal	197.41	369.26	296.41	72.62
Total	2885.86	4266.01	3628.19	637.85

Note Of Dissent:

In a note of dissent to the Commission's report, Mr. G. Swaminathan said that if any modifications were to be considered regarding the surplus devolutions to certain States, the "only possible way would be to reduce the States' share of divisible proceeds of income-tax to 65 per cent, and distribute the entire amount among the States wholly on a population basis."

Mr. Swaminathan, a member of the Commission, was of the view that "this method of distribution was advocated by the Second Finance Commission, although not applied by them fully in framing their recommendations."

"This scheme, involving a reduction in the percentage of the States' share of divisible taxes, will thus not result in any reduction of the total amount payable by way of devolutions and grants payable to the States in receipts of grants-in-aid.

"On the other hand, it will only reduce the surplus amounts which would otherwise accrue to certain States beyond what they require to cover their non-Plan revenue gap according to the uniform assessment standards applied by us."

He said that although the scheme of devolutions had been framed with reference to the requirements of the States as worked out by the Fifth Finance Commission on a uniform basis, "it is realised that the devolutions and grants can cover only a portion of the huge deficits amounting to over Rs. 7,000 crores according to the States' forecasts. Even this has been rendered possible by the inclusion of advance tax collections under the Income-Tax Act and the increase in the Central Government's revenues derived from taxes on income and Central excise, which rose from an annual average of about Rs. 725 crores in the Third Plan period to a figure of Rs. 1,470 crores during the three years from 1966-67".

Referring to the scheme of devolution and grants, he said that "the Finance Commission has to proceed on the basis that the Plan will as far as possible ensure an equitable development in the field of social services, but the expenditure on such services, to the extent to which they become committed after the completion of a Plan, are taken into account in the assessment of expenditure made by the Finance Commission."

T. Pre-Nationalization Assessment Of Banking: A pre-nationalization assessment of banking has shown that there was a steady shrinkage in the number of banks since 1951 against a five-fold increase in bank deposits.

The number of scheduled and non-scheduled banks came down from 566 in 1951 to a mere 91. Bank deposits rose from Rs. 821.6 crores to about Rs. 4,500 crores.

Bank deposits in 1965 constituted 15 per cent of the national income (at current prices) against nine per cent in 1951. In terms of money, bank deposits grew at an average rate of about 16 per cent—from Rs. 908.47 crores in 1951 to Rs. 3,073.36 crores in 1965.

The largest concentration of offices of both scheduled and non-scheduled banks was in seven States. They were (with the number of branches in brackets): Madras (951), Maharashtra (919), Mysore (632), Uttar Pradesh (615), Gujarat (601), Andhra Pradesh (487) and West Bengal (419).

About 90 per cent of the membership of the boards of banks consisted of industrialists and businessmen.

An analysis of the purpose-wise distribution of advances by scheduled commercial banks between 1951 and 1967 reveals that the private banks preferred to serve the organized and established sectors of the economy.

Agriculture, which contributes 45 per cent of the national income, received only 0.3 per cent of bank advances in 1967 against two per cent in 1951. New entrepreneurs were unable to secure adequate credit because the banks did not want to take risk. Small-scale industry, which accounted for nearly 40 per cent of the country's industrial production, received only six per cent of the total bank advances.

The advances to concerns in which the directors had interest amounted to nearly Rs. 150 crores or 10.1 per cent in December, 1967. The big 500 borrowers had cornered nearly 50 per cent (over Rs. 800 crores) of industrial advances.

The expansion of banks was marked in developed regions. Underdeveloped States like Assam had only 67 bank offices or one office for about 213,000 people, Nagaland two offices or one for 205,000 people, Jammu and Kashmir 18 offices or one for 216,000 people and Orissa 89 or one office for 227,000 people.

Review Of Social Control:

A review recently compiled said that social control of banks for about a year had brought to light a number of loopholes in its functioning since it did not operate as an "effective instrument to prevent misuse of bank credit".

It pointed out that social control was essentially an experiment to find out whether commercial bank credit could effectively be used for national development purposes without touching the question of ownership.

The powers of the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) to correct misuse of bank credit were found to be cumbersome in their application. Directives issued to private commercial banks were "not always observed in the spirit in which they were issued."

Bulk of the bank credit meant for agricultural sector was given as fertilizer credit to the State Governments or other institutions. Farmers were not given credit directly as envisaged by the Credit Council of India.

The review added that the powers of the RBI to remove a director were not absolute. Nor could it appoint more than five or one-third of the directors.

U. Andhra Pradesh Budget For 1969-70: The Andhra Pradesh Finance Minister, Mr. K. Vijaybhaskar Reddy presented to the State Assembly in Hyderabad on August 23 a Rs. 12.5-crore deficit Budget for 1969-70.

Revenue receipts were estimated at Rs. 254.79 crores and revenue expenditure at Rs. 267.36 crores.

Mr. Reddy said that of the total expenditure of Rs. 267.36 crores, the State Plan expenditure was estimated at Rs. 15.97 crores and expenditure on the Centrally-sponsored schemes at Rs. 10.73 crores. The balance of Rs. 240.66 crores represented non-Plan expenditure, which also included Rs. 13.83 crores towards cyclone relief measures.

Of the total Central assistance of Rs. 66.87 crores for Plan schemes inclusive of Rs. 25 crores now assumed, credit for 30 per cent of the total assistance had been taken as grant and the balance as loan. This was the pattern of assistance of the Planning Commission from this financial year.

Revenue receipts took into account the additional grants-in-aid from the Centre as a result of the interim award of the Fifth Finance Commission and also increased receipts under State share of Central excise duty, taxes on vehicles, sales tax and interest.

Gross borrowing was expected to be Rs. 125.58 crores, of which Rs. 90.31 crores was proposed to be utilized for repayment of old loans. The balance of Rs. 35.27 crores would be utilized for financing the capital programmes, which included temporary ways and means advances and their repayment.

Pending finalization of the Fourth Plan, an outlay of Rs. 87.50 crores had been provided for the 1969-70 Annual Plan. Of this, the plan outlay for Telengana was Rs. 39.14 crores.

The Government proposed to seek additional Central assistance for the Pochampad Project in Telengana, for which a provision of Rs. 6 crores had been made in the Budget.

V. Damage By Floods: The Central Minister for Irrigation and Power, Dr. K. L. Rao, stated in Parliament on August 25 that the recent country-wide floods had caused an overall damage of Rs. 15 crores.

He made identical statements in the Lok Sabha and the Rajya Sabha on the flood situation. The States affected by floods included Andhra Pradesh, Assam, Bihar, Gujarat, Jammu and Kashmir, Kerala, Madhya Pradesh, Orissa, Punjab, Rajasthan, Uttar Pradesh and West Bengal and the Union Territories of Delhi and Manipur. This figure did not include damage of about Rs. 100 crores caused by the cyclonic storm in Andhra Pradesh and untimely rains in Jammu and Kashmir.

He said that severe floods had occurred in Assam, Bihar, Kerala and Orissa. The flood season was not yet over. It generally extended up to the end of September. "We have yet to go through another period of five weeks of Monsoon and hope for the continuance of good rainfall throughout the country without severe floods."

He said that after the experience of 1968 floods, central flood forecasting units had been set up at Gauhati, Balasore, Surat, Patna, Jalpaiguri and Varanasi. The forecasts issued from Patna and Surat had been found to be very useful in making timely arrangements for relief and evacuation operations.

About 52,000 hectares was affected by the Ganges floods every year.

Floods had claimed 822 human lives in the country till August 20. The figures included those killed in the cyclonic storm in Andhra Pradesh in May.

In Assam, Bihar and Orissa 1.1 million people were affected.

INDONESIA

A. Opposition To Military Pacts: The Chairman of the Provisional People's Congress, Gen. A. H. Nasution, re-iterated in Djakarta in the last week of July that Indonesia was "always opposed to any military pacts and to the deployment of foreign troops in her territory."

Gen. Nasution, who was answering questions by an Antara correspondent on President Nixon's visit, said the US President would certainly undertake to develop the usual American-Asian policies. His visits to Asian countries would, of course, enable him to make direct contacts with Asian leaders.

About defence and security in South-East Asia, particularly following the planned withdrawal of British troops from South-East Asia by 1971, Gen. Nasution said: "We remain confident in our own forces and have never seen surrender." Asia, particularly Indonesia, was still experiencing changes in politics and strategy and was faced with poverty left by hundreds of years of colonial rule. "If has been our principle that every country needs national defence and security which depend on its own people and not on foreign troops. For this purpose every country should maintain political defence with the Government realizing people's aspirations democratically, public security and order, favourable social and economic conditions and a defence system in which people take active part under the guidance of armed forces. We of course need tight international co-operation but reject any military pacts as spelled out by Congress decision."

Answering a question on Viet-Nam and the Paris peace talks, he said that the problem should be settled by the Viet-Namese themselves without foreign intervention. He added that efforts to solve the problem had been making progress, but the way towards its solution was still far away.

Future Of ASEAN:

Meanwhile, President Suharto voiced his conviction that ASEAN (Association of South-East Asian Nations) would gain strength in the future and yield positive results to the benefit of member-States. "Despite the tender age of the Association, there was perseverance and understanding among its members to overcome difficulties."

Speaking at the installation of the new Indonesian Ambassador to Thailand and Singapore in the last week of July, he said: "It is our principal task to foster the spirit and objective that once imbued the members of the Association to establish ASEAN". ASEAN was a "medium through which co-operation and mutual assistance should be enhanced."

Economic advancement, in his view, was one of the pre-requisites for stability in the region. It was the task of independent nations to preserve security and establish welfare. Complete freedom could be achieved only if there was harmony between the capacity to preserve peace and the power to generate prosperity.

B. Loan Agreement With USA: Indonesia and USA recently signed a $6.300,000 Loan Agreement to increase cement production in East Java.

The aid, made available following the Scheveningen meeting among Indonesia's creditor-nations, will finance the construction of a fourth wet kiln that will increase annual production from 375,000 to 500,000 tons.

The loan has a repayment period of 40 years including a 10-year grace period. It carries an interest rate of 2 per cent during the grace period and 3 per cent during the next 30 years.

The Government will in turn make available the loan to the cement company, PN Semen Gresik, with a repayment period of seven years including a two-year grace period, carrying an annual interest of 12 per cent. PN Semen Gresik has earmarked an approximate capital of 700 million rupiahs for rehabilitation and promotion programmes.

C. Nickel Exploration: The Government and the Indonesian Nickel Development Company (INDC), a consortium of nine Japanese companies, signed on July 24 a contract for exploration and exploitation of low-grade nickel deposits in Halmahera.

INDC which will begin surveys in a 38,800-square-km area in October, is to allocate at least $750,000 for surveys and explorations in the first five to seven years and $ 75 million for mining and plants. The company has been given four years to evaluate results of its surveys and construction work and another 30 years for operations.

Fourteen Japanese geologists and mining experts had been assigned to conduct surveys and explorations. The company needed at least six Indonesian experts to help conduct the surveys and about 100 to 300 local labourers.

The contract set corporate taxes at 37.5 per cent in the first ten years of operations and at 45 per cent in the next years.

The company was obliged to train Indonesian workers in the country or abroad so that after the first five years of operations at least 75 per cent of the company's workers comprises Indonesians.

Production capacity was estimated at 1.5 to 2.5 million tons of 1.5 per cent-grade nickel ore, or about 12,000 to 20,000 tons of pure nickel.

IRAQ

A. Relations With Rumania Frozen: Iraq, which pioneered the recognition of East Germany by the Arab States, on August 18 froze its diplomatic relations with Rumania because of Bucharest's raising of relations with Israel to Ambassadorial level.

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Abdel Karim Sheikhly called in the Rumanian Charge d'Affaires and told him that Rumania's action was a "blatant challenge to the rights of the Palestinian people and the will of the Arab nation."

He added that "Rumania's persistence in ignoring the feelings of the Arab people may make co-operation between Iraq and Rumania very difficult."

An official announcement said that Iraq was withdrawing its Charge d'Affaires from Bucharest and that it had asked that the Rumanian Ambassador to Iraq, who was in Bucharest, should remain there.

ISRAEL

A. Relations With Rumania: Israel and Rumania announced on August 17 that effective immediately the status of their diplomatic missions would be raised from Legations to Embassies.

Rumania is the only Communist country in Europe to have maintained diplomatic relations with Israel after the 1967 war with her neighbouring Arab States.

Under normal circumstances, this agreement to establish mutual Ambassadorial relations would have been a routine decision. But in the context of the rising Arab war of attrition against Israel—an effort fully supported by the Soviet Union—this move by Rumania appeared as the latest gesture of defiance towards Moscow.

In 1967, Rumania was the only European Communist nation to refuse to break relations with Israel. Instead, it moved to sign a new Economic Agreement with her. During last June's conference of World Communist Parties in Moscow, President Nicolae Ceausescu had personally fought against a resolution on West Asia denouncing Israel as an aggressor.

AFGHANISTAN

A. ADB Assistance: The Asian Development Bank (ADB) has approved a request by the Government for technical assistance, on a grant basis, in the preparation of four or five small-scale irrigation projects.

The Bank's technical assistance mission will examine and assess the technical and economic soundness of the small-scale irrigation scheme and prepare a project for consideration by the Bank for possible financing.

The Bank team will consist of an irrigation planning expert and irrigation design engineer, a civil engineer, two surveyors, a soil-crop agronomist and a farm irrigation economist.

CEYLON

A. World Bank Loan For Development Finance Corporation: The World Bank has announced a loan of $8 million to the Development Finance Corporation for promoting industrial development in the private sector.

It is the second such loan from the World Bank. The first loan of $4 million was given to the Corporation in 1967 to help expand its activities. The loans are of particular value to the Corporation as they enable it to extend financial support in foreign exchange to private sector enterprise in Ceylon.

These loans supplement credits given by the Bank to the Government (e.g. the recent loan of $21 million for power development) which have been applied to public sector projects.

[The Government-sponsored Development Finance Corporation of Ceylon was set up in 1956 to act as the principal financial institution serving private industry in the Island. Mr. C. Loganathan, for many years General Manager of the Bank of Ceylon, recently took over as head of the Development Finance Corporation.]

[Prev. ref. 9109:CEY:A]

B. West German Aid: An Agreement was signed in Colombo on August 3 under which Ceylon would receive Rs. 37.25 million as aid from West Germany during the current year.

Of this amount, Rs. 22.37 million will be utilized for financing industrial projects to be mutually agreed upon and the balance will be given as commodity aid for the import of fertilizer, commercial vehicles, machinery and equipment for Government corporations and other essential commodities.

The commodity loan is repayable in 30 years, including a grace period of eight years and will bear interest at 2½ per cent.

West Germany has "softened" the terms of the commodity loan in keeping with its policy of giving easy credit terms to developing countries. It has undertaken within the frame-work of the Food Aid Convention of the International Grain Arrangement of 1967 to supply wheat as aid for developing countries. It will gift 10,800 tons of flour (equivalent to 15,000 tons of "soft" wheat) to Ceylon.

CHINA

A. Sinkiang Border Clash With USSR: According to official accounts, Soviet troops crossed Sinkiang frontier in strength and inflicted heavy casualties on Chinese border units on August 13.

The clash occurred near the remote Dzungarian Gates, the traditional invasion route from Asian Russia into China.

According to Peking, Russian helicopters early in the day flew over the border of the Chinese northwestern province of Sinkiang. This heralded an advance by what the Chinese claimed were "dozens of tanks, armoured units and several hundred armed troops".

The Chinese forces were apparently taken by surprise, because the Russians were well over a mile inside Chinese territory before they ran into Chinese border patrols which were "surrounded".

In a protest Note delivered to the Soviet Embassy in Peking, the Chinese Government claimed that the Russians were the first to open fire, "killing and wounding many (Chinese patrol men) on the spot". It made no mention of any casualties inflicted on the Soviet forces.

The protest Note stated: "The situation is developing"—an indication that the fighting was still going on. It alleged that the Russians were "continuing to amass large numbers of troops and tanks in an attempt to provoke still larger armed conflicts".

The Chinese had accused the Soviet Union of two armed incursions into Sinkiang in June, but the latest incident was the most serious, both in terms of the number of troops involved and the casualties admitted by the Chinese.

In recent weeks, Peking had tightened its political control over the remoter areas of Sinkiang, particularly over the minority peoples whose grazing lands lay on both sides of the frontier.

Soviet Protest:

The Soviet Union protested to China about the fresh fighting, claiming that it was a planned provocation by the Chinese and disclosing that two Chinese officers had been taken prisoner.

A protest Note handed to the Chinese Embassy in Moscow said: "Several groups of Chinese servicemen crossed the border into Soviet territory in the Semipalatinsk region of Kazakhstan. In spite of warnings, the violators not only continued to remain on Soviet territory but opened sub-machine-gun fire on Soviet frontier guards".

Stakes In Sinkiang:

Several factors have contributed to raising the stakes along the Sinkiang border. They include:

(1) Chinese nuclear testing sites and other nuclear installations are reportedly situated there, all within striking distance from Russian territory.

(2) The Sino-Soviet dispute over Sinkiang's borders and other issues dates back at least 100 years. Each side has repeatedly attempted to strengthen its influence in the uranium and oil-rich land which is predominantly peopled by Muslim Turkic groups.

(3) Because of the large minority population in Sinkiang—the Chinese number less than 20 per cent of the entire population of some seven million—Peking's control over this region is considered shaky at best. The immigration of Chinese into the area has reportedly raised new tensions.

(4) From the Russian view, Sinkiang's terrain is basically suited to modern, mechanized warfare with Moscow holding a decided communications and logistical advantage. Conversely, because of its sparse and basically non-Chinese population, Sinkiang is less well suited to Mr. Mao Tse-tung's and Marshal Lin Piao's theories on guerrilla warfare. Furthermore, Sinkiang is flanked on the east by Moscow's ally, Outer Mongolia.

Sinkiang's history has been turbulent and repeatedly marked by Sino-Soviet competition. The area was conquered by the Chinese Ching (Manchu) dynasty between 1755 and 1759 and was the scene of repeated rebellions by the Turkic peoples. Czarist Russian troops moved into Sinkiang's Ili border region as early as 1871, sowing the seeds of future discord with the Chinese. The Turkic population again rebelled against the Chinese in 1933 and proclaimed the East Turkestan Republic, which fell a year later after intervention by both the Soviet Union and China. Subsequently, Moscow gained the upper hand before and after World War II and a period of intensive Sovietization resulted.

However, Chinese hegemony was re-asserted in 1949 when Communist troops entered Sinkiang and abolished the pro-Moscow "Eastern Turkestan Republic" which had been established in 1944. Since that time, Peking has gradually tightened its hold; Sinkiang's status was changed to the "Sinkiang-Uighur Autonomous Region" in 1955—with the Chinese Communist Party and Army in command. Peking's policy of moving Chinese settlers into the area, starting in 1952, led to serious problems. (The Chinese have followed this same policy in Inner Mongolia, Tibet and other frontier regions inhabited by minority peoples.)

In September, 1963, an official Peking report alleged that Soviet Party leaders had "carried out large-scale subversive activity in the Chinese province of Sinkiang, provoking the flight of several thousand Chinese citizens to the Soviet Union...." Unconfirmed reports estimated that some 70,000 Uighurs, Kazakhs and other Moslems had fled Sinkiang before the Chinese sealed off the border with troops.

But, it was the Sino-Soviet fighting along the Ussuri River, 2,000 miles to the east across Mongolia, that apparently touched off a running series of accusations hurled by both sides.

Russian Casualties:

On August 15, Russia disclosed that two of its border guards were killed in the August 13 fighting on the Chinese frontier and confirmed that the Soviet side had used armoured vehicles in the clash.

Trud, the trade union newspaper, said that a Soviet sergeant and a private had been killed by Chinese fire while storming a position on a cliff. Several other Russians were wounded during the battle.

Red Star, the Soviet Defence Ministry newspaper, mentioned that Soviet border guards had used armoured personnel carriers to surround the Chinese and drive them off. There was no mention of tracked vehicles or tanks, as alleged by the Chinese.

Red Star added that Soviet troops had shot a Chinese who was about to fire a granade at them, detonating his grenade and killing him.

Chinese Rejoinder:

Peking Radio reported on August 15 that following the latest clash on the Sinkiang-Kazakhstan border, the Soviet authorities had driven out Soviet inhabitants from areas near the boundary, and created a "no man's land," 20 km in width.

Simultaneously, according to the Radio, the Soviet authorities kept sending heavy re-inforcements to the Sino-Soviet and Sino-Mongolian borders, conducted all kinds of military exercises and were constructing strategic highways and railways in areas adjoining the Chinese borders.

The Radio repeated that war measures were in full force on the Soviet side of the border. Marshal Andrei Grechko, the Soviet Defence Minister, and Marshal Yakubovsky, Commander of the Warsaw Pact forces, were singled out for threatening to unleash a nuclear war on China.

In Sinkiang itself, the threatened autonomous territory in the heart of Central Asia, Mr. Saifuddin, Chairman of the Sinkiang Revolutionary Committee, warned that the PLA troops and local population were keeping a close watch, and would mete out severe punishment to Soviet armed provocations. Mr. Saifuddin had accompanied Mr. Mao Tse-tung on his visit to Moscow in 1949 to sign the Treaty of Friendship and had emerged unscathed from several attacks launched against him by counter-revolutionaries during the Cultural Revolution.

Peking Radio said that demonstrators had vowed that the whole population in Sinkiang (a large majority of whom are Muslims, with only 1,600,000 of Chinese origin) were "determined to defend every inch of the sacred territory of China, and resolutely and thoroughly wipe out any aggressor who dares to invade us."

New Protest Note To USSR:

China sent a new protest Note to Russia on August 19, warning her that she would be held responsible for grave consequences if all intrusions and provocations did not stop immediately.

The Note, delivered to the Soviet Embassy in Peking, and the Chinese Government protested energetically at violations of Chinese territory, territorial waters and air-space by Soviet troops, ships and aircraft in June and July.

The Note said that in spite of protests made by Peking on June 6 and 11 and on July 8, the Soviet side had created 429 incidents along the Sino-Soviet border during June and July. Thousands of bursts had been fired by Soviet machine-guns, three Chinese frontier guards had been wounded and 40 air reconnaissances had been carried out by Soviet planes across the border.

It alleged that Soviet troops had on many occasions penetrated into Chinese territory, built military structures, installed telephone lines, constructed road, dug trenches and erected boundary marks in the Autonomous Sinkiang-Uighur Region.

The Chinese also claimed that during the two-month period, Soviet troops in the Chilichin Island area and the Wupalao Island area on the Amur River had opened fire daily across Chinese territory. They blamed the Russians for "aggravating border tension while talking peace".

The Note accused the Soviet Union of provocations against Chinese ships during recent talks between the two countries on their border rivers. Moscow announced earlier in the month that the two countries had reached agreement on border rivers. (Moscow announced seven weeks of secret talks in the Soviet city of Khabarovsk.)

During the talks, the Note said, the Soviet side had repeatedly sent out its gunboats to carry out "all sorts of provocations against Chinese civilian vessels on normal navigation along the main channels of the Heilung and Wusuli Rivers, seriously manacing the safe navigation of Chinese vessels."

Russian Denial Of Allegations:

Krasnaya Zvezda, the Soviet Defence Ministry newspaper, said on August 19 that Chinese allegations about Soviet plans to invade China were "absurd and completely untruthful."

In an editorial on its front page, the paper also said that Peking's campaign to mobilize its people for possible war with the Soviet Union was a political move and hardly constituted a serious threat to the Soviet people. "It goes without saying that the distance is very great between the loud statements and the real possibilities of the Peking adventurers."

The editorial underscored the Soviet Government's efforts to prevent a war scare developing among the Soviet population in the wake of the border clash with China in Central Asia, which apparently was the sharpest since last March's clashes along the Ussuri River in the Far East.

"Pravda" Charge Over Mongolia:

On August 14, the Soviet newspaper, Pravda, accused China of setting up a reign of terror in Inner Mongolia and of harbouring territorial ambitions with regard to the Mongolian Republic—but made no further comment on the fighting with the Chinese on the Kazakhstan-Sinkiang border.

Pravda called for improvements in civil defence organizations in Kazakhstan, without, however, specifying the danger of a Chinese invasion.

A Pravda correspondent who recently visited the Mongolian Republic quoted a Mongolian senior official as saying that China "is continuing the old anti-Mongol policy of the Manchu-Chinese oppressors and more recently, the Japanese and Kuomintang militarists."

It said that Chinese anti-Soviet propaganda directed at Mongolia had become "still more challenging" this year with the convening of the International Communist Conference in Moscow. (Mongolia was the only Asian country with a ruling Communist Party which was represented at the Conference.)

During 1968 alone, Pravda said, nearly 30,000 Chinese propaganda publications were distributed in the Mongolian Republic—some of them even printed in Esperanto and some smuggled into the country in medicine crates. It accused China of planning to incorporate the Soviet Mongolian Republic into her own territory, as well as the province of Inner Mongolia.

It added that Peking had tried to undermine the authority of the Mongolian Government by hindering the transport of flour supplies sent as aid from Mongolia to North Viet-Nam.

More than 90 per cent of party and administrative officials, writers and other scientific and cultural workers in Inner Mongolia had been removed from their posts during the Cultural Revolution. Valuable books and pictures relating to Mongol history had been burnt.

Khabarovsk Talks Conclude:

An official announcement in Moscow said on August 8 that Sino-Soviet talks on border river navigation had ended in Khabarovsk earlier in the day with the signing of a Protocol and Agreement to hold the next round in China in 1970.

The official news agency Tass also said the two sides had agreed on measures to improve the shipping situation on their troubled frontier rivers.

The talks, the first face-to-face meeting between Soviet and Chinese negotiators in two years, had begun on June 18. They represented the 15th meeting of a Joint Soviet-Chinese Commission set up in 1951—when relations between the two countries were good—to control shipping problems along the Big Amur, Ussuri, Argun and Sungachi border rivers, economically important to both countries (see page 9062).

The signing of the Agreement came exactly a month after the last Sino-Soviet clash in China's far north-east. It occurred when, according to the Chinese, Soviet frontier troops "flagrantly intruded" into a Chinese island on the Amur called Pacha, which the Russians call Goldinsky.

Nothing was immediately said about the contents of the Agreement, except that the two sides had agreed "on measures to improve the shipping situation."

However, according to observers, there was every likelihood that the Agreement was narrowly technical in character, since even when relations between China and Russia were good they were seldom able to achieve anything in common in this region. Thus, Sino-Soviet agreements for construction of flood control works on the Amur signed in 1957 and 1958 remained a dead letter. Nor had the two countries been able to agree to hold the more important talks proposed by Moscow after the serious frontier clashes last March, with a view to ending such incidents and demarcating the border's unsettled sections.

FORMOSA

A. Cabinet Re-shuffle: President Chiang Kai-shek announced on June 25 a re-shuffle of his Cabinet Ministers shortly after approval was obtained at a meeting of the Central Standing Committee of the ruling Kuomintang.

Mr. Chiang Ching-kuo was appointed Vice Prime Minister in the re-shuffled Cabinet.

Other Ministers involved in the re-shuffle were:

Mr. Huang Chieh, Governor of Taiwan, replaced Mr. Chiang Ching-kuo as Defence Minister;

Mr. K. T. Li, Economic Affairs Minister, succeeded Mr. Yu Kuo-hua, who was appointed Governor of the Central Bank, as Finance Minister;

Mr. S. Y. Dao, Secretary-General of the Council for International Economic Co-operation and Development, replaced Mr. K. T. Li as Economics Minister;

Mr. Choong Kow-kwong, Vice-Education Minister, replaced Mr. Chen-hsing, who was named President of the National Tsing Hua University, as Education Minister.

Army Chief Chen Ta-ching was appointed Governor of Taiwan province.

Mr. S. K. Huang, Vice Prime Minister, will serve as Secretary-General of the National Security Council.

B. Economic Growth: According to an official estimate, Formosa's economic growth rate in 1969 will reach nine per cent.

The minimum annual economic growth rate in the 1969-72 period of the Fifth Four-Year Economic Development Plan has been set at seven per cent.

The estimated nine per cent growth in 1969 is based on the industrial output and economic progress achieved in the first half of the year.

Statistics show that demands from home and abroad for industrial products increased greatly in that period. The demand for transportation equipment, electrical appliances, housing and clothing increased in the domestic market. The main products exported included textile, electronic parts and components, machinery and plywood.

Industrial production scored a growth rate of 20 per cent. Except for a very few items, all industrial output registered increases.

All State-operated enterprises registered gains in net profit. The Chinese Petroleum Corp. netted $30 million—an increase of 31 per cent over the first half of last year.

The economic growth rate in the last four years was 10.5 per cent, second only to Japan. The rate was 3.5 per cent higher than that set in the Fourth Four-Year Economic Development Plan, 1965-68.

New Fertilizer Plant:

The Taiwan Fertilizer Corporation is planning to establish a liquid ammonia plant to boost chemical fertilizer production for domestic and international markets.

Mr. Chen Tseung-jen, President of the Corporation, said on August 8 that the project was a joint venture of the Chinese Petroleum Corporation and the Kaohsing Sulphate Corp. It will reduce the cost of fertilizer for domestic farmers and sharpen the competitive edge in international markets.

The price of fertilizers has been dropping since 1963 as a result of the long-term policy of the Fertilizer Corporation, while the production of fertilizer has been increasing owing to modernization of equipment and plant expansion. Production in 1968 totalled 590,000 metric tons, an increase of 35 times compared with 20 years ago.

The target for 1969 has been set at 795,000 metric tons. This will consist of 180,000 metric tons of calcium phosphate, 110,000 metric tons of compound fertilizer, 25,000 metric tons of ammonia phosphate, 170,000 metric tons of urea, 240,000 metric tons of ammonia sulphate and 70,000 metric tons of calcium nitrate.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Indo-Nepalese Talks; Supreme Court Order On Bank Nationalization; Rupee Debt; Telengana Leaders Released; Tea Workers' Strike.

A. Indo-Nepalese Talks: Official talks between India and Nepal were held in New Delhi on September 2, 3 and 4. The Nepalese delegation was led by the Foreign Minister, Mr. Yadunath Khanal.

Among the topics discussed was a Nepalese demand, made earlier on June 24 by her Prime Minister, Mr. K. Bisht, for the pull-out of the Indian Military Liaison Group and wireless operators stationed on Nepal's northern border check-posts (see page 9062). The Military Liaison Group consists of 23 Indians, 17 Nepalese, about 30 clerks, orderlies, batmen and ancillary personnel. The total member of Indian wireless operators attached to the check-posts is about 75, ranging from two to five men at each of the 17 posts. No decision, however, was taken and the officials on both sides merely drew up recommendations to be submitted to their respective Governments for consideration.

A Joint Statement issued on September 4 emphasized the identity of interests between the two Governments and peoples.

The talks, originally planned to end on September 3, were deadlocked over the new measures the two Governments should take to satisfy mutual defence and security interests. India wanted the pulling out of its wireless operators from Nepal's northern border and the Military Liaison Group from Khatmandu to be followed by appropriate Nepalese steps aimed at eliminating possible security risks for India.

The two sides agreed that "the very close and extensive co-operation between the two Governments was of benefit to both countries and that it should be further strengthened in their common interest."

The Joint Statement broadly indicated that the officials had made "joint and several" recommendations to their respective Governments for their consideration and approval.

The Statement said: "The two delegations held detailed discussions in an atmosphere of complete understanding, mutual trust and friendship. The discussions covered a wide range of subjects of common interest to both countries in the fields of economic relations, trade and transit, irrigation and power location of boundary, defence and security. Joint and several recommendations were made by both delegations on all these subjects to their respective Governments for consideration and approval. It was noted that some speculative Press reports had appeared which were unauthorized and incorrect.

"The two delegations agreed on the identity of interests between the two Governments and peoples in various fields, based on mutual respect for each other's territorial integrity and sovereignty and mutual understanding, trust and confidence. They agreed that the very close and extensive co-operation between the two Governments was of benefit to both countries and that it should be further strengthened in their common interest. The close historical, geographical, cultural, economic and political relations existing between India and Nepal through the ages have been further strengthened in recent years and both delegations expressed their confidence that these would be still further strengthened in the years to come.

"It was agreed that meetings at various levels should be held periodically between the two sides to resolve any difficulties that may arise between the two countries in the implementation of their policies and programmes. The two delegations expressed their satisfaction at the conclusion of the talks and the friendly atmosphere in which they were conducted. The Nepalese delegation thanked the Indian side for their warm hospitality, understanding and close co-operation."

B. Diplomatic Appointments: Mr. Ashok B. Bhadkamkar, Joint Secretary in the Ministry of External Affairs, has been appointed High Commissioner in Canada in succession to Gen. J. N. Chaudhuri, who will be retiring shortly.

Mr. Prem Shanker, Counsellor to the Indian Embassy at Algiers, has been appointed as Ambassador to Guinea in succession to Mr. Rajkumar Raghunath Sinha.

C. Banks' Nationalization—Supreme Court Order: A Bench comprising all the 12 Judges of the Supreme Court directed the Union of India on September 9 not to remove the Chairmen who were Custodians of the 14 nationalized banks, pending disposal of the writ petitions filed in the matter.

The Court further directed the Government of India not to give any directions to the banks contrary to Section 35(a) of the Banking Regulation Act.

It also recorded an assurance by the Attorney-General, Mr. Niren De on behalf of the Union of India that the powers conferred by Section 13 (3) (b) of the Banking Companies (Acquisition and Transfer of Undertaking) Act, 1969, which empowers the Central Government, after consultation with the Reserve Bank of India to make a scheme for the reconstitution of a nationalized bank into two or more corporations or amalgamation of a bank with any other new bank or any other banking institution, would not be enforced.

The above order was passed by the Court on an application for stay moved by Mr. N. A. Palkhivala on behalf of Mr. R. C. Cooper, a depositor, shareholder and director of the Central Bank of India.

The Court issued a rule nisi on the Union of India to show cause why the Act nationalizing the 14 banks should not be declared invalid.

Banking Department Created:

It was officially announced in New Delhi on September 3 that a Department of Banking had been created in the Finance Ministry by a Presidential order amending the allocation of Governmental business.

This marked an important follow-up to the nationalization of major commercial banks. Carved out of the Department of Economic Affairs, the new Department will exclusively deal with the banking system.

The Department of Banking will be in charge of all Indian banks, including the non-nationalized ones, foreign banks, the Reserve Bank of India, co-operative banks, financial institutions and chit funds.

Mr. A. Bakshi, Deputy Governor of the Reserve Bank, was appointed Secretary of the Department of Banking. He took charge on September 8.

The Finance Ministry will have three other departments—Economic Affairs, Expenditure, Revenue and Insurance.

D. Debts Of Central Government: According to official figures, the Central Government's debts including market loans and foreign borrowings totalled Rs. 10,241.03 crores as on March 31 this year.

The market loans were to the tune of Rs. 3,922.86 crores and treasury bills Rs. 2,244.34 crores. PL 480 deposits amounted to Rs. 581.40 crores and income annuity deposits to Rs. 135.74 crores.

Foreign loans taken by India totalling Rs. 6,167.07 crores are classified into: (1) loans repayable directly in foreign currency, (2) those repayable through exports of goods and (3) those repayable in rupees.

Loans repayable directly in foreign currency totalled Rs. 3,984.06 crores, USA topping the list with Rs. 1,683.25 crores, followed by West Germany (Rs. 419.8 crores) and International Development Association (Rs. 669.24 crores).

In the second category of loans repayable through export of goods, India's debts totalled Rs. 485.47 crores. The country-wise break-up is: Czechoslavakia Rs. 50.54 crores, Poland Rs. 16.92 crores, Soviet Union Rs. 395.59 crores and Yugoslavia Rs. 22.42 crores.

Loans repayable in rupees amounting to Rs. 1,697.54 crores were to the following countries: Denmark Rs. 0.86 crores, United States Rs. 300.24 crores, US PL 480 loans Rs. 1,396.44 crores.

The State Government's debts totalled Rs. 1,060 crores (market loans), Rs. 5,509.84 crores (loans from the Central Government), Rs. 216.82 crores (loans and advances from the Reserve Bank of India) and Rs. 162.39 crores (other debts).

E. Rupee Debt: According to a Reserve Bank bulletin on September 3, outstanding marketable rupee debt of the Central and State Governments as on March 31, 1968 stood at Rs. 4,408.2 crores, showing an increase of Rs. 32.6 crores over the year compared with the increase of Rs. 222.4 crores during 1966-67.

Of the increase of Rs. 232.6 crores during 1967-68, Rs. 169 crores was in Central Government securities and Rs. 63.6 crores in State securities. Total outstanding marketable rupee debt constituted 16 per cent of the national income in 1967-68 as against 18 per cent in 1966-67 and 19 per cent in 1965-66.

The total marketable rupee debt of the Centre and the States formed 39 per cent of the total rupee debt of the Central and State Governments as on March 31,1968 (excluding inter-Government debt). This proportion had declined earlier from 45 per cent at the end of March,1961 to 40 per cent at the end of March, 1967. This downtrend was a sequel to a smaller increase in marketable debt from Rs. 2,784 crores in March, 1961 to Rs. 4,408 crores at the end of March, 1968 than in total rupee debt (excluding inter-Government debt) from Rs. 6,215 crores in March, 1968.

F. Unaccounted Money Recovered: According to official figures released in New Delhi on September 5, the Central Government recovered Rs. 411.17 crores in its efforts to unearth hoarded wealth or black money from 1947-48 to 1967-68.

Although no reliable data of the extent of concealed income was available, both in agricultural and non-agricultural sectors, the history of the cases detected and unaccounted income recovered clearly indicated that substantial evasion of tax takes place in the country.

The Income-tax Investigation Commission, which was appointed in 1947, investigated over 1,000 cases and detected unaccounted income of Rs. 48 crores under the voluntary disclosure scheme of 1951. About Rs. 70 crores of unaccounted income was disclosed in 20,912 cases.

G. Telengana Leaders Released —Andhra Pradesh High Court Order: Dr. M. Chenna Reddy, Mr. Konda Lakshman Bapuji and 15 other Telengana leaders were released in New Delhi on August 25 following the Andhra Pradesh High Court's ruling that their detention was illegal.

They were among the 38 Telengana leaders whose habeas corpus petitions were allowed by a Division Bench of the High Court, saying that the grounds of detention were vague.

The High Court's orders for release of the detenus, given in Hyderabad, were conveyed by the Andhra Pradesh Government to the Superintendent of the Tihar Central Jail, New Delhi. Seventeen of the detenus had been brought to the Capital earlier to be present when the Supreme Court heard the State Government's appeals against an earlier High Court order directing that they be produced before it when their habeas corpus petitions were heard.

The State Government had on August 24 ordered the release of 23 Telengana detenus. With the release of these detenus, about 100 Telengana Praja Samithi leaders held under the Preventive Detention Act had been freed.

The Andhra Pradesh High Court dismissed the State Government's petition for obtaining leave to appeal to the Supreme Court against the High Court's order to release the detenus. The Court also rejected applications for a stay of the judgment releasing the detenus.

Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy's Statement:

The Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, announced in the State Legislative Assembly on September 5 that the State Government had ordered the release of all persons held under the Preventive Detention Act in connexion with the Telengana agitation.

He also announced the withdrawal of arrest warrants under the Act against all persons in connexion with the agitation.

He said that 14 persons held under the Preventive Detention Act had so far been released on the orders of the State High Court. The Government, on its own, had released 35 people. Seventy-four persons still being held under the Act were being released. Arrest warrants pending against 15 people were withdrawn.

The decision to release the remaining detenus, he said, was taken in response to a resolution passed by the Telengana Regional Committee recently.

Supreme Court's Verdict:

Also on August 25, the Supreme Court dismissed as "infructuous" a batch of 17 appeals by the Commissioner of Police, Hyderabad, against the Andhra Pradesh High Court order for production in court of Dr. M. Chenna Reddy and other Telengana leaders.

The Andhra High Court had passed the impugned orders on the habeas corpus petitions by the Telengana leaders against their detention under the Preventive Detention Act after rejecting the State Government's plea that such production would create a law and order problem in Hyderabad.

The Supreme Court had admitted the Hyderabad Police Commissioner's appeals and granted stay of operation of the High Court orders and directed early hearing of the appeals.

When the appeals came up before the Supreme Court, counsel for the appellant informed the Court that the Andhra High Court had passed orders earlier in the day allowing the habeas corpus petitions of the 17 detenus who were respondents before the Court and directed their release. The Court then passed an order saying that "in these circumstances it is obvious that the appeals have become infructuous and they are therefore dismissed."

Jurists' Committee's Report:

The Jurists' Committee set up by the Government of India in April, 1969 to go into the feasibility of continuing the safeguards for the Telengana people in the Services of the Andhra Pradesh Government said in its report that there was no obvious legal or constitutional way of doing so.

The Committee conceded the theoretical possibility of an amendment to Article 16 of the Constitution to protect the safeguards.

But, it observed that in view of the Supreme Court's judgment in the Golaknath's case, i.e. that Parliament had no right to amend the Fundamental Rights, even such a course was ruled out.

The Committee re-affirmed the Supreme Court's view on the untenability of these safeguards for people of "part of a State or Union Territory." Such reservation could be made only for the people of a whole State or Union Territory.

It added: "In view of the interpretation placed by the Supreme Court on Article 16(3), it is no longer possible to make a law or rule prescribing residential qualification in a part of a State for public appointments within that part. Any law or rule so made would be bad and would be liable to be struck down as ultra vires the Constitution."

Headed by Mr. K. N. Wanchoo, a former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, the Committee comprised Mr. M. C. Setalwad, former Attorney-General and Mr. Niren De, the present Attorney-General.

Two Meetings:

A serious split in the ranks of the legislators who believe in an integrated Andhra Pradesh came to light when they held two parallel meetings in Hyderabad on September 6.

One was an All-Party Convention of Telengana Legislators and Members of Parliament convened by Mr. V. B. Raju, who resigned from the State Ministry recently, Mr. J. Chokka Rao, Chairman of the Telengana Regional Committee, and other Telengana leaders.

The second meeting was convened by Mr. Purgi Rami Reddy, MLA and Chief Whip.

Mr. Akbar Ali Khan, MP, presided over the Convention, and the former Minister, Mr. B. V. Gurmurthy, over the other meeting.

The Convention was open to the public, but the other meeting was only for like-minded Telengana MLAs.

The Press reported the proceedings of the Convention, but those of the meeting came to be known only through a Press release late at night. Forty-nine MLAs, 12 MLCs and 10 MPs attended the Convention. According to the Press release, 52 MLAs and five MLCs—all Congressmen—of Telengana attended the meeting.

The discussions at the Convention were inconclusive and were continued on September 7. But the other meeting, "having carefully considered the present situation in the region," recommended immediate solutions to outstanding issues. Generally speaking, the issues were about Telengana surpluses, services and recruitment opportunities.

H. West Bengal Cabinet Portfolios Re-allocated: Re-allocation of portfolios in the West Bengal Cabinet was announced in Calcutta on August 21 following the resignation of three Ministers.

The Food portfolio held by Mr. Sudhin Kumar went to Mr. Prakash Roy (CPI—M), Minister for Fisheries, while Co-operation, which was held by Mrs. Renu Chakravarty (CPI), was transferred to Mr. Biswanath Mukherjee.

Tourism, which was under the Minister of State, Mr. Barada Mukutmani (Bolshevik Party), was taken over by the Chief Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee.

The three Ministers who resigned were non-legislators and they would have completed six months in office on August 24.

It was also announced that the CPI(M), which at present holds nine portfolios, would give up one to be combined with Tourism and entrusted to another Minister.

There would be no expansion of the Cabinet, whose strength fell to 28.

I. Tea Workers' Strike In West Bengal: A tripartite agreement was signed in Calcutta on September 2 to end a 17-day-old strike in West Bengal's tea industry.

According to the terms of the agreement, the tea gardens will not further reduce the number of workers from the January 1 level, and will replace the permanent staff who will either die or retire and add to the present complement by 20 to 35 workers, depending on the size of the estate (estimated in trade union circles at about 7,000).

Secondly, workers will get an immediate interim wage rise of 20 paise a day, of which six paise represent dearness allowance, an ad hoc grant of Rs. 10 each and another interim rise next year, should a suitable machinery proposed to be set up by the Government to decide the wage issue fail to complete its job by 1970.

A few other points agreed upon related to supply of food rations at concessional rates to resident temporary workers and payment of cash compensation to such other workers living outside the estate and to certain grievances of the clerical staff in respect of increment and pay packet.

The strike, that had affected 138 gardens in Darjeeling and 188 in Jalpaiguri district, and about 200,000 workers, involved at least one fundamental economic issue typical of a traditional agro-industry operating in a developing economy and having to face growing external competition. This was the one relating to the land-labour ratio of employment in the tea gardens, one of its peculiar features being a rough system of employment and payment of wages, taking the family as the unit.

The strike cost the country's exchequer Rs. 250,00,000 in foreign exchange.

The loss in production amounted to 70,00,000 kg. of tea worth about Rs. 420,00,000.

The workers' lost Rs. 70,00,000 in wages.

J. Floods In UP: The UP Revenue Minister, Mr. Chaturbhuj Sharma, stated in the Vidhan Sabha in Lucknow on August 29 that floods in 30 districts of the State had caused a loss of about Rs. 72 crores and claimed 32 lives.

Seven Congress members referred to the flood havoc in their regions and demanded that the victims should be exempted from land revenue. Complaints about malpractices by officials in distributing taccavi were also made.

The Chief Minister, Mr. C. B. Gupta, and the Revenue Minister, who made an aerial survey of some of the flood-hit eastern districts, emphasized that members should also seek assistance of non-official agencies. They, however, assured the House that all possible efforts would be made to provide relief to the flood-hit victims.

K. Increase In Pensions: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi announced in the Rajya Sabha on August 26 an ad hoc increase in pensions by Rs 10 for pensioners getting up to Rs. 200 a month.

The increase took effect from September 1.

She said there would be necessary marginal adjustments for those drawing slightly above Rs. 200 a month.

L. Cigarette Consumption During 1967: According to official estimates, Indians puffed away 54,372 million cigarettes in 1967.

This was 8,579 million more compared to 1964, when 45,793 million cigarettes were consumed in the country.

Rajasthanis, who are credited with loving the traditional "hukah", consumed the least number of cigarettes with 761 million or 1.4 per cent of the total consumption in the country. Kerala, where bidi is more popular, smoked only 3,154 million or 5.8 per cent.

The highly industrialized West Bengal topped the list in cigarette consumption with 6,689 million or 12.3 per cent, closely followed by Tamil Nadu with 6,525 million (12 per cent).

Consumption of cigarettes (in million for other States, with percentage of the total in brackets) was: Andhra Pradesh 2,828 (5.2); Assam 1,903 (3.5); Bihar 2,556 (4.7); Gujarat 1,631 (3); Jammu and Kashmir 1,468 (2.7); Madhya Pradesh 2,284 (4.2); Maharashtra 6,254 (11.5); Mysore 2,828 (5.2); Orissa 971 (1.8); Composite Punjab 5,275 (9.7); Uttar Pradesh 5,710 (10.5); Union Territories 3,535 (6.5).

IRAQ

A. Spies Executed: Fifteen persons convicted of being Israeli spies were executed in Baghdad on August 25.

Five soldiers and a police officer were shot by a firing squad while the other nine were hanged inside the central prison.

They had been convicted by the Revolutionary Court of spying for Israel and the US Central Intelligence Agency.

Two of those executed were Jews, four were Christians and the rest Muslims.

The executions brought to 51 the number of the people hanged and shot in Iraq this year as Israeli spies.

B. Iraqi Nationals Recalled From Lebanon: The Iraqi Embassy in Beirut ordered on August 30 an estimated 15,000 Iraqis in Lebanon to return home within 24 hours.

A statement by the Embassy threatened legal action against any one disobeying the order.

The Embassy spokesman said that the continuance of Press attacks by some Lebanese papers on Iraq was one reason for the Iraqi Government's decision to recall its nationals.

ISRAEL

A. West Asia Fighting: There was more frequent fighting between Israeli forces on the one hand and her Arab neighbours on the other during the period from August 15 to September 2. Commando units of El Fatah were also active.

Egypt and Israel exchanged sporadic small arms and artillery fire across the Suez Canal on August 15.

Israeli security forces arrested 90 persons and seized nine arms caches in the second week of August in Israeli-occupied Arab towns, including east Jerusalem. The police said the arms belonged to El Fatah and the Palestine Liberation Organization. The 90 arrests were connected with the seizures, following information received.

Syrian and Israeli forces clashed for 45 minutes in the southern sector of their front on August 15.

An Israeli soldier was killed during a ten-minute clash between Jordanian and Israeli forces in the southern Jordan valley on August 15.

An Israeli mobile patrol was ambushed at Beityussif settlement in the Northern Valley on August 15.

Both on August 15 and 16, Israeli and UAR guns fired across the Suez Canal in a series of exchanges. Small arms and mortars were used in clashes which went on for seven hours during the night along a 50-mile stretch of the Canal.

These were followed by several artillery exchanges, the latest in an area north of the Great Bitter Lake on August 16.

Seven Arab guerrillas were killed in two clashes with Israeli troops in the Jordan Valley and the Arab desert on August 16. Two commandos were believed to have been wounded in the clash.

An Assifa sniper of El Fatah killed an Israeli soldier at West Jinaida in the northern Jordan Valley.

On August 17, Israeli planes made a dusk attack on Egyptian artillery positions in the Deversoir region of the Suez Canal. Israeli planes attacked Egyptian positions and silenced Egyptian guns before returning safely to base.

The air raid was directed against Egyptian gun emplacements which had shelled Israeli posts north of the Bitter Lake the previous afternoon.

An Egyptian military spokesman in Cairo said that Israeli planes were intercepted by Egyptian anti-aircraft guns which forced them to flee. Egyptian gunners silenced enemy gun posts which tried to shell Egyptian troops in the Deversoir area, at the entrance to the Bitter Lake, and "the enemy suffered heavy losses in personnel and equipment." There were no casualties among Egyptian troops.

An eight-hour sporadic exchange by artillery and tanks between Egyptian and Israeli troops in both the southern and central sectors of the Suez Canal ended early on August 17.

An Israeli war-plane was shot down over the Suez Canal on August 19 in an air strike and the pilot parachuted to safety.

The Israelis said that the air strike lasted 20 minutes and did not say immediately whether their aircraft was shot down by a UAR fighter or anti-aircraft fire.

Arab gunners in Jordan launched a rocket attack on two Sea of Galilee settlements on August 23.

Correspondents on the spot reported that the rockets had slightly damaged several buildings at the Beit Zera settlement, four km south of the Sea of Galilee. The Degania settlement, one km to the north, also came under fire, but there was no damage.

Israeli and Egyptian heavy artillery positions exchanged fire over the southern sector of the Suez Canal early on August 23.

Israeli and Jordanian troops fought a 70-minute duel across Jordan valley on August 23.

Israeli jets blasted Arab guerrilla bases in Jordan on August 26 after Jerusalem had suffererd its first rocket attack since the six-day war in June, 1967. The planes took off at dusk to strike at bases in the Safi region about three km south of the Dead Sea. An Israeli military spokesman said that they met slight anti-aircraft fire during a 20-minute attack, but all returned safely to base.

The Katamon and Talpioth residential quarters of Jerusalem were hit by two Soviet-built Katyusha rockets on August 26. There were no casualties. Within hours, an Israeli military helicopter searching for the point of attack discovered a nest of 16 Katyusha launcher pads on a rocky hillside four km south-east of Jerusalem. Thirteen of the rocket launchers were still armed. Three explosions had been heard in the city.

Israeli commandos struck at an Egyptian military camp in the Nile valley on August 27 in what was believed to be the deepest raid yet into Egypt.

An official Army announcement issued in Tel Aviv said that the raiding party mortared the camp near the town of Mankabad, some eight km west of Asyut. All raiding units returned safely.

The announcement said that the raid followed "continuous violations of the cease-fire by Egyptian forces."

An Israeli civil aircraft was hit by small arms fire from Lebanese territory while spraying crops near Metulla in northern Israel on August 27.

An Arab commando organization said on August 31 that its units had blown up an Israeli military installation in the Gulf of Suez in a midnight raid.

A spokesman for the Arab organization of Sinai said that Israeli tanks and artillery trying to interfere in the operation were bombarded with heavy rockets and the Israelis sustained heavy losses in men and equipment. The raid left installations burning and all attacking units returned safely to the base.

The raid was believed to be in retaliation for the previous Israeli raid near Assyutin, Upper Egypt.

Syrian gunners shelled Israeli targets along the cease-fire lines during the night of August 31-September 1 for the first time since the June, 1967 war more than two years ago. The Syrians used 22-mm guns to fire on targets to the east of Kuneitra, but without causing casualties or damage.

Military experts in Tel Aviv said that although there had been repeated incidents along the Israeli-Syrian cease-fire lines since the June, 1967 war, this was the first time Syrian artillery had intervened.

Seven Israelis dead were counted in one of the biggest Palestinian commando raids across the cease-fire line, an Egyptian missile attack on the Suez front and in a mining incident on September 1 and 2.

A band of 20 commandos infiltrated on August 31 into Israeli-occupied Golan Heights and ambushed an army patrol near Hisfin. Three teenaged soldiers were killed and four wounded for the loss of only one Arab attacker.

Far away to the south-west, along the Suez Canal cease-fire line, four Israeli soldiers died—three when their tank received a direct hit from across the waterway on the east by an Egyptian ground-to-ground missile and the fourth in a mining incident.

Two Israeli war-planes hit the Jordanian area of Al-Adassiyah, three miles south of the Sea of Galilee, with napalm bombs and machine-gun fire on September 3. Jordanian anti-aircraft batteries fired on the raiding Israeli planes.

Israeli planes also staged two raids on several villages in southern Lebanon on September 3. The Israeli planes were intercepted by Lebanese ground fire during the two raids.

UN Security Council Condemns Israeli Attack On Lebanese Villages:

The UN Security Council unanimously condemned on August 26 Israel's air attack on southern Lebanese villages on August 11 from which the Israelis charged that Arab guerrillas were operating.

In the resolution, the Security Council deplored all violent incidents in violation of the cease-fire—an implied reproach to the Arab guerrillas—and deplored the extension of the area of fighting. [Hitherto, the Lebanon-Israel front had been relatively calm.]

The resolution also declared that "such actions of military reprisal and other grave violations of the cease-fire cannot be tolerated and the Security Council would have to consider further and more effective steps as envisaged in the UN Charter to ensure against repetition of such acts."

It was the 15th time since the six-day war of June, 1967 that the Council had condemned Israel.

The Israeli Ambassador, Mr. Yosef Tekoah, denounced the action as "a diplomatic event, which, like similar ones which have preceded it, is of little value in efforts to resolve the West Asia conflict."

In Tel Aviv, the Israeli Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Menahem Begin rejected the Security Council condemnation of Israel for its air raid on Lebanon and vowed that UN would not deter Israel "from defending itself."

He told a political rally: "We will hit the saboteurs wherever they may be found at whatever time it will seem to us convenient. The time has gone forever when Jewish blood can be easily spilled.

"We were clearly and definitely condemned for a pure act of self-defence (by UN Council)."

"No Pre-Conditions On Talks"—Mr. A. Eban:

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, said in Tel Aviv on August 24 that Israel would impose no pre-conditions on any peace talks with the Arab nations.

He said: "We have a certain conception of what our security map should look like, but if the Arab Governments were to come next week to talk peace, we would not ask any pre-conditions.

"It is not the case that Israel has made any territorial pre-conditions to negotiations.

"Despite breaches of the agreements as a result of UAR's deliberate policy of harassment, a generalized war is not inevitable.

"Israel is not interested in any escalation. We would welcome a restoration of the cease-fire. UAR has not the ability to change the existing situation by war. They would be repulsed."

B. Fire In El Aqsa Mosque: The El Aqsa Mosque, one of the most revered Muslim shrines in the old city of Jerusalem blazed for three hours on August 21 in a fire which many suspected to be deliberate, setting off demonstrations by angry Arabs.

Part of the Mosque roof collapsed in flames and religious relics were also burned.

Arab workmen were carrying out repairs inside the building when the flames were spotted.

Israeli police and soldiers cordoning off the Mosque had to fire shots in the air to disperse young Arab protestors who charged in waves.

The Israeli Government clamped a curfew on the area and set up an Inquiry Commission.

Another Commission of architects and engineers would study the damage to the Mosque and report to the Cabinet.

The El Aqsa Mosque was built in the 7th century and parts of the present building date from 1218.

Next day (August 22), Muslim authorities took over security responsibility in the old Arab sector of Jerusalem around El Aqsa Mosque as mid-day—the traditional time for Friday service—approached.

Israeli security men were standing by, well clear of the Mosque area, and stopping all non-Arabs from entering the sector.

One Muslim was named in the five-man Committee of Inquiry ordered by the Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, to investigate the blaze which brought bitter protests throughout the Arab world.

The Shah of Iran offered to share the costs of repair to the El Aqsa Mosque.

The Israeli Government expressed disgust with the attempts by official quarters of certain Arab countries to blame Israel for the blaze in El Aqsa Mosque.

In a communique, issued after a second special session of the Cabinet, the Israeli Government pointed out that fire had broken out several times in the past at holy sites, among them the El Aqsa Mosque, in 1963.

King Hussein of Jordan in a broadcast urged Heads of Arab and Muslim States to take quick common action to face what he described as the "challenge of Israel."

Mr. Michael Rohen Charged:

On August 24, Mr. Michael Rohen, an Australian, was charged with setting fire to the El Aqsa Mosque.

He was reported to have confessed the crime to the police.

He was said to have told the police that he entered the Mosque—after paying the normal entrance fee—and poured petrol on one of the walls. He had with him a package of inflammable material which helped to spread the fire.

He was also said to have admitted that he had tried to set fire to the Mosque two weeks earlier.

A report from Jerusalem said that Mr. Rohen was detained after a Muslim guard gave the police a detailed description of the man he thought was acting suspiciously just before the outbreak.

Moussa Shehabi (60), employed as a guard by the Muslim religious authorities, told the police that on August 21 he saw the man whom he described as young and tall near St. Stephen's Gate shortly before he noticed smoke curling from the roof. The man started to run away when he called out to him to stop. In his flight, the man lost a blue coat which Shehabi picked up.

Two other Muslim guards also supplied descriptions of the man they said they saw loitering in the Mosque area.

The Religious Council, which governs the Mosque, also said that Rohen was seen at the shrine a number of times during the three days before the fire.

Tel Aviv Radio broadcast on August 23 a series of interviews and statements by people who claimed to have known Mr. Michael Rohen.

These statements pictured Mr. Rohen as some sort of an "illuminate" who might have fired the Mosque in the belief that its destruction would make it possible to rebuild the ancient Temple of Solomon—on the site of which the El Aqsa was erected in the 7th century AD—and hasten the return of Christ to Earth.

They said that he belonged to a sect called the "Church of God" which claims 1,500,000 followers and has one of its centres in Cyprus.

They said that pamphlets distributed by Mr. Rohen preached world peace but affirmed that this could only be achieved when Solomon's Temple had been re-built and Messiah had returned to Earth.

Mr. A. Eban Accuses Arabs Of "Religious Warfare":

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, accused Arab leaders at a news conference in Tel Aviv on August 24 of reviving medieval incitement to inter-faith religious warfare over the El Aqsa Mosque fire.

He charged Arab countries with a crime on an international scale. He said they were trying to extract political advantage from the fire.

He said: "More than one crime has been committed. There is the crime by an individual that is before the courts.

"But there is another crime on an international scale, by Arab Governments and spokesmen, who instead of joining humanity in shock and grief....are attempting to extract political advantage by a campaign with very few parallels in the history of our age."

Referring to Arab accusations that the Mosque blaze was a deliberate act by the Israeli Government, he said: "I would not have believed (such charges were made), if I had not heard it with my own ears on Jordanian television last night (August 23)."

He singled out the reaction of President Nasser that the only answer was force. He said that President Nasser's message to the Egyptian Army was far from enlightened. "The answer of President Nasser is not peace, not understanding, not a common love of the human heritage, not reconciliation—the answer is force, bloodshed and bombardment."

Arab Protests:

There were protests all over the Arab world, including United Nations.

Arab workers in West Asia went on strike on August 28 in protest against the fire at Aqsa Mosque. The strike was called by the International Confederation of Arab Trade Unions.

In Syria strikers marched through the streets of Damascus carrying placards calling for the liberation of Jerusalem and all occupied Arab territories.

In Lebanon, lawyers did not attend the courts and there were similar stoppages in Iraq.

In Karachi, Pakistani demonstrators smashed windows of the office of Pan American Airways. In Rawalpindi, a group of women demonstrated outside the US Information Centre calling for a holy war.

Traffic in Amman (Jordanian capital) came to a standstill for an hour as lawyers, labourers and other workers went on strike.

C. Islamic "Summit" Talks Proposed: Fourteen Arab Foreign Ministers who met in Cairo on August 26, in a communique agreed that force was the only way to liberate Arab lands and supported a call for holding an Islamic "Summit" conference.

They also decided to call a joint Arab Defence Council meeting in Cairo in November, 1969 to frame the necessary plans for mobilizing Arab military potential against Israeli aggression.

The communique, issued after a two-day conference, said that Saudi Arabia and Morocco would be asked to carry out necessary consultations with Muslim countries to prepare for the meeting which was proposed by King Feisal of Saudi Arabia.

It said: "After the horrible crime by Israel of burning the El Aqsa Mosque, the proof given by Israel of the plans against Muslim and Christain holy places in the occupied lands, the Ministers see that force, organization and preparation are the only means for liberating the occupied lands."

It re-iterated the necessity of strengthening Palestinian guerrilla capabilities and supporting the Arabs in the occupied territories.

It also endorsed a unified stand to be taken by the Arab delegations at the September session of the UN General Assembly.

"Summit" Shelved:

However, it was stated, the Arab League had shelved Jordan's proposal for an early Islamic Summit Conference.

King Hussein's call for an immediate "Summit" supported by President G.A. Nasser was put off once again at an emergency meeting of Arab Foreign Ministers in Cairo on August 26.

Four-Power Defence Talks:

But, the Cairo newspaper Al Ahram said on August 29 that UAR, Syria, Jordan and Iraq would hold a "Summit" meeting in Cairo "shortly" to discuss military matters.

The newspaper said that the meeting between the Heads of States of the four countries would discuss "highly important military issues" and future confrontation plans against Israel.

The decision came a couple of days after the Foreign Ministers of 14 Arab States had decided to shelve for three months a call by King Hussein for a full Islamic "Summit" on the West Asia issue.

At the same time, the Foreign Ministers of the four Powers—UAR, Jordan, Syria and Iraq—met to discuss the political aspects.

Delegates at the military meeting included Ministers and Army and Air Force officers. Among those taking part in the discussions were the UAR War Minister, Mr. Mohammed Fawzy, the Commander-in-Chief of the Jordanian armed forces, Gen. Nasser Ben Jamil, the Syrian Defence Minister Lt.-Gen. Hafez Assad, and the Iraqi Defence Minister, Air-Marshal Hardan Takriti.

The strengthening of the eastern front comprising troops from Jordan, Syria and Iraq was understood to be one of the major subjects under discussion.

Leaders of the guerrilla groups including the biggest El Fatah also met in Cairo simultaneously, with the basic aim of streamlining their activities.

Joint Communique:

The Conference concluded on September 3 after calling on all Arab States to mobilize their resources for a coming battle with Israel.

In a joint communique, the leaders of UAR, Jordan, Syria, Iraq and Sudan declared that they "studied all the dimensions of the situation and took appropriate decisions in this connexion." They did not say, however, what these decisions were.

The Arab "mini-Summit," called for by UAR's President, Col. G.A. Nasser a week earlier (see above) following the failure of Arab Foreign Ministers to agree on convening an all-Arab meet of Heads of States, had the primary aim of co-ordinating the military strategies of Arab countries bordering on Israel.

The participants were President G. A. Nasser, King Hussein of Jordan, the Syrian Head of State, Mr. Nureddin Atassi, and the Iraqi Deputy Premier, Mr. Saleh Ammash, representing President Ahmed Hassen el Bakr.

Gen. Jaafar Nimeiry, head of Sudan's Revolutionary Council joined the Conference on September 3.

[Neither Sudan nor Iraq borders on Israel, but Iraq has troops stationed in Jordan, and Sudan has offered troops for the Sinai front.]

"The most striking result of the meeting," a joint communique said "was that all participants agreed on the fact that the mobilization of the efforts of all the Arab countries in the battle constitutes a means enabling them to consolidate their position in the face of the enemy and represents a target set up by the need to win victory.

"The resources of the Arab nations have not yet been exploited to the extent that the situation required. The situation demands that all countries should redouble their efforts in order to put all these resources and possibilities at the service of the battle."

D. French Arms Supplies Resumed: It was learnt in Paris on August 27 that France had resumed shipments of arms and spare parts to Israel, but that she was not yet ready to release 50 war planes the Israelis consider essential to their security.

It was stated that the arms deals with Israel were started again "earlier this month" (August, 1969) ending a seven-month-long total embargo on war material ordered by the former President, Gen. Charles de Gaulle.

E. Labour Party Convention: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, vowed on August 5 at a Convention of the ruling Labour Party in Tel Aviv that "when the time for peace will come, nobody will give up one inch of territory needed to assure Israel of secure borders."

She said: "Despite differences over the future map (of Israel's borders after peace with the Arabs) we will measure every single inch of land to determine the border which will truly assure a life of peace."

In the final stages of the Convention, a clear-cut dove-versus-hawk confrontation broke out between the Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, and Mr. Shimon Peres., Deputy Secretary-General of the Party and an ardent supporter of the Defence Minister, Gen. Moshe Dayan.

The two quarrelled over the wording of the Labour Party's published platform, a controversial document pledging continued Israeli defiance of the Arab world and UN rulings on the West Asian conflict.

[The platform attempts to compromise between Mr. Eban's moderate view—to await peace talks before mapping borders and Gen. Dayan's tough outlook: to establish "strategic security borders." Gen. Dayan supports retaining the Gaza Strip of Egypt, the Golan Heights of Syria and a territorial link with the strategic Tiran Strait on the Red Sea. He also wants a clause to prevent foreign armies crossing west of the Jordan River.

The issue of what Israel would do with Arab land won in the 1967 war echoed throughout the Convention. The platform tried to satisfy both Gen. Dayan and Mr. Eban by promising "strategic borders," and, at the same time, "secure, recognized and agreed boundaries" to be reached after face-to-face talks.

Mr. Eban told Mr. Peres that the written platform purposely used generalized terms and did not detail the strategic security borders. But Mr. Peres, speaking for Gen. Dayan, contended that the Committee that formulated the programme had agreed to accept Gen. Dayan's plan.

Differences Patched Up:

The threat of a split in the Labour Party was, however, averted on August 17 when the faction led by Gen. Dayan approved the Party's platform.

Gen. Dayan told a caucus of his key supporters that he felt confidence in the leadership of the Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir and opposed the idea of any breakaway party to be headed by himself in the elections on October 28.

He said that the political and military dangers facing Israel dictated a Government of national unity such as that which had led the country over the last two years. He announced that he would refuse to head a separate list should the faction decide to run one. He warned that he would not run for office at all if that happened.

The faction leaders backed his stand when they approved the Labour Party's agreed platform by 39 votes in favour, six against and six abstentions.

F. Request To USA For Jet Aircraft: The New York Times reported on August 7 that Israel had approached USA with a request for more than $150 million worth of jet aircraft, including supersonic Phantom F-4 jets, to maintain long-term air superiority over the Arab States.

The newspaper, quoting reliable informants, reported that the Israeli Ambassador in Washington, Mr. Yitzak Rabin, had asked USA to sell Israel about 80 more Skyhawk A-4 fighter-bombers and about 25 more Phantom jets.

Under previous deals, the United States was already selling Israel both types of aircraft. The Phantom jets are estimated to cost $3 million to $4million, with the Skyhawks about $1 million, with the exact cost depending on the type of equipment included on both planes.

The informants said the request was made in July, shortly before the renewal of the air war between Egypt and Israel along the Suez Canal. It was also about this time that French President Pompidou had indicated publicly that France would maintain its long-standing embargo on delivering the supersonic Mirage jets previously bought by Israel.

The Nixon Administration was reported to have given no response to the Israeli request but to have it under consideration.

Israeli officials were reported to have renewed their earlier indication that they would like to have the Phantoms equipped with racks suitable for carrying atomic weapons. Previously, the United States had rejected such pleas and insisted that Israel agree not to use American-supplied jets to carry such weapons.

Israel's position is that it is not "an atomic Power" and will not "be the first to introduce" atomic weapons into West Asia. But most Western specialists estimate that Israel can produce such weapons within three to six months.

During the Johnson Administration, the United States had become the principal supplier of the Israeli Air Force since the June, 1967 war.

Under a deal signed in 1966 and expanded in January, 1968, the United States had delivered more than half of 80 promised Skyhawk A-4 jets. Israeli officials acknowledge that some of these planes had been used recently in the fighting along the Suez Canal.

A. University Bill Passed: The ruling Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) hurried its controversial University Normalization Bill through the House of Councillors on August 3.

The President of the House, Mr. Yuzo Shigamune, earlier declared he would invoke Article 88 of the Upper House rules and put the University Bill at the top of the agenda.

The Article empowers the Upper House President to change the order of floor proceedings if he deemed necessary. It was the first time an Upper House President had ever declared such a change on the strength of the Article. He immediately put the Bill to a standing vote. The LDP majority jumped up in support, while Opposition members of the House shouted their rage.

The Bill was, however, declared passed. Confusion lasted for a considerable time at the plenary session chamber of the Upper House.

The LDP Secretary-General, Mr. Kakuei Tanaka, told newsmen after the forced vote that there was no other way to clear the Bill since Opposition parties intended to block its passage by force. LDP had avoided calling policemen onto the floor so as not to mar the prestige of the Legislature, the highest organ of State power.

The Bill called for special measures of five years duration aimed at "helping universities settle campus disputes." It gave the presidents of universities where campus troubles occur the right to set up special management consultative bodies and close their schools for six months. University presidents can extend the suspension of classes for three more months if disputes are not resolved at the end of the six-month period. If the disturbances do not end within the nine months, the law enables the Education Minister, after hearing the opinions of the presidents and the Provisional University Council, to stop educational and research activities at the schools for three months. In that case, faculty members would be suspended from work and receive 70 per cent of their regular salaries. The closure period would not be regarded as within the period of students' study at the institutions. If a campus dispute is not solved even after a one-year period, the law makes it possible for the Education Minister to abolish the university in question.

According to the Education Ministry, 14 universities were likely to become immediate targets of the normalization law. All of them will be recognized as the institutions involved in campus disputes for no less than five months.

Among the 14 universities were the Tokyo University of Foreign Studies, Tokyo University of Education, Yokohama National University, Kyoto University, Osaka University, Kobe University and Osaka City University.

The Bill was sanctioned by the Cabinet on May 24. It was presented to the Diet for deliberations on the same day.

The House of Representatives passed the Bill on June 30 and sent it to the Upper House.

Mr. Ichiro Kato, President of Tokyo University, told a news conference at the University on August 3 that he had protested "with strong anger" the forced vote on the University Bill.

He called the LDP move "an outrageous act tantamount to the denial of minimum rules of parliamentary democracy and nullification of the raison d'etre of the Upper House."

He said the questionable way the Bill was processed into law and many controversial provisions in the law itself "entail the danger of making the solution of campus disputes more difficult."

Commentators said that the tough action taken by Government leaders to win Diet approval of the controversial Bill was undoubtedly motivated by their eagerness to prepare successfully for overcoming the crucial period next year when the Japan-US Security Treaty comes up for review. They had the Bill rammed through the House of Councillors plenary with an amazing blitz vote-taking even at the sacrifice of their coming under bitter public fire.

The present 10-year period of the Japan-US Security Pact expires on June 23, 1970 when it becomes optional for either signatory to keep or scrap the pact beyond that date. Anti-Government forces, led by Leftist groups, are planning to mount a nation-wide campaign to overthrow the ruling conservative power by staging a scrap-the-pact drive next year and thereafter.

Because of this anti-security pact offensive, many observers speculated that there would be political disorder with the possible effect of dividing the nation widely. In view of this, the Government and ruling Liberal Democratic Party leaders were contemplating avoiding such measures as would irritate the anti-Government camp in the Diet and elsewhere next year.

KOREA (North)

A. US Helicopter Shot Down:

It was officially stated in Pyongyang that a US helicopter which intruded deep into North Korean air-space had been shot down on August 17.

Pyongyang Radio said the helicopter intruded into North Korean air-space from Kanghwa-Do island. The Radio did not say what had happened to the crew of the helicopter. It said the helicopter was immediately shot down by the Korean People's Army's self-defence measures.

A spokesman of the American-led United Nations Command in Seoul said that an unarmed OH-23 helicopter was reported missing at about 11 a.m. and "may have gone down in North Korean territory."

Munhwa Radio, a commercial station in Seoul, meanwhile, said that provincial police headquarters in Inchon had received a report that five villagers at Cholsan-Ni on Kanghwa-Do island saw a helicopter being shot down on the northern side of Han River Estuary. It had no other details.

The UN spokesman, Col. Walter Moore of the US Army, said the small helicopter with three persons aboard was on "a training flight" when it disappeared. "The pilot may have become disoriented and inadvertently flown near or over North Korean territory."

The spokesman added that the senior member of the UN Command Military Armistice Commission, Maj-Gen. Arthur H. Adams of the US Marine Corps, had immediately reported the missing aircraft to his North Korean counterpart through the truce village of Panmunjom and requested his assistance in returning the helicopter and personnel "if in fact it is down in North Korean territory."

It was the second American helicopter downed by North Koreans along the Demilitarized Zone since the Korean War ended in armistice in 1953. The first incident occurred in May, 1963 near Panmunjom. Two American pilots were released by the North Koreans a year later.

In the 1963 case, as in the Pueblo case last year, North Korea had charged espionage activity and freed the captives only after the top US military commander had apologized for their alleged guilt and had guaranteed to prevent recurrence of a similar incident.

US Reaction:

In Washington, sources at both the State Department and the Pentagon said they did not expect a major international incident to result from the incident.

There was no immediate Government comment, however.

"This situation is certainly not of the magnitude of the Pueblo or the EC-121," one source said. He noted that the intelligence ship captured by the North Koreans in 1968 and the navy reconnaissance plane shot down by the North Koreans last April were on intelligence missions, while the light helicopter was on a training flight. In addition, the helicopter appeared from reports to have strayed into North Korean air-space. (North Korea claims air and sea limits of 12 miles.)

The source noted, however, that if any of the three men aboard the helicopter survived, the episode might have serious implications.

INDIA

A. Volunteer Forces: According to a survey by the Central Home Ministry on the nature and size of the volunteer forces controlled by various political parties, the RSS has the biggest volunteer force spread practically all over the country with larger concentration in the Northern States and Maharashtra. But the second biggest single unit is commanded by the All-Party Hill Leaders' Conference. The Communists have a sizable following in selected pockets, especially in Kerala.

The survey, based on information received from the States, is incomplete in certain material respects. For instance, the report on West Bengal gives only the size of the RSS force and is silent on other organizations. Similarly, Tamil Nadu does not give the size of the various forces—the State has five volunteer organizations, two sponsored by the Congress, one each by the two Communist Parties and one by all parties excluding the Congress.

The A-PHLC force comprises more than 66,000 members in Assam which has a 10,000-strong unit of the outlawed Mizo National Front, and a Mizo Union force of 5,000. The Jana Sangh is the only other organization in the State with its band of volunteers.

B. Publications Of Political Parties: According to the annual report of the Registrar of Newspapers, released in New Delhi on September 4, although the Congress runs 35 newspapers, their combined circulation is less than a third of the total circulation of those run by the three Communist Parties.

The circulation of the Communist papers is 75,000 against 24,000 of Congress-owned ones.

The Congress publishes five dailies, 16 weeklies, three fortnightlies and six monthlies. Besides, there are two multilinguals, one bilingual and two "other" newspapers published by the party.

Ten of its papers are in Hindi, four in English, three in Gujarati, two each in Bengali and Urdu and one each in Assamese, Telugu, Marathi and Kannada.

The Communist Parties publish two dailies, 18 weeklies, one fortnightly and five monthlies. There are four papers each in Hindi and Bengali, three each in English, Marathi and Punjabi, two each in Telugu and Malayalam, and one each in Assamese, Urdu, Kannada, Oriya and Manipuri.

The New Age, an English weekly published by the Communist Party of India from Delhi, commands the largest circulation (11,058) among the newspapers owned by political parties.

The Janashakti, a Hindi weekly of Patna, and People's Democracy, an English weekly of Calcutta, both published by the Communist Parties, have a circulation of 10.624 and 9,450. The highest circulation commanded by a Congress Party Paper is 7,314 by the Andhra Janatha, a Telugu daily from Hyderabad.

The total number of newspapers run by various parties in the country is 87 with a combined circulation of 119,000.

C. Lead Deposits In Orissa: An extensive lead-carrying belt has been found in the Sundergarh district of Orissa.

Geophysical investigation in 1966 near Sargipali in the district had yielded encouraging results. In November, 1967, Galeno—an ore of lead—was struck during exploratory drilling.

Detailed investigations have proved the existence of the "metal" in a zone extending over 1,000 metres.

INDONESIA

A. Independence Day: Indonesia celebrated its 24th Independence anniversary on August 17 with a ceremony featuring the reading of the proclamation of Independence and raising of the National Flag in the grounds of the Presidential Palace.

President Suharto presided over the ceremony, attended by Cabinet Ministers, military commanders and members of the diplomatic corps.

There were no parades, no long speeches or mass rallies or huge crowds which had marked Independence Days when Dr. Sukarno was in power. President Suharto had decreed that all ceremonies be kept simple.

President Suharto in a broadcast said that although his country was now receiving most of its aid from Western countries, "it should not be interpreted that we have closed the door to aid from the Eastern bloc."

He said: "In receiving foreign aid and economic co-operation, we frankly state that no aid will be accepted if political strings are attached. This principle is equally applied to the Western as well as the Eastern blocs."

[About $500 million has been promised by Western nations for this financial year. Since the abortive Communist coup in October, 1965, there has been no direct aid from Communist countries. But a Soviet economic mission is due to visit Indonesia to discuss abandoned Soviet projects.]

President Suharto said that for the moment development projects with credits from Communist countries were still continuing "and their co-operation is still needed."

Referring to the internal situation, he said that the greatest danger which might threaten Indonesia at this time would be the failure of the Five-Year Economic Development Plan begun in April. "Failure of this would not only mean loss of faith in the Government, but would also mean the destruction of the achievements so far. Deterioration of the economy would surely cause the come back of the Communists."

But he pointed to some of the outstanding economic achievements of his administration in the last ten years: "We have achieved stabilization and rehabilitation of the economy, or, in plain language, healed the deep economic wounds which for years had wrecked the body of the nation."

He said that in the first seven months of this year, the prices of nine basic commodities had dropped, while the galloping inflation of previous years had been held to just 1.7 per cent monthly this year.

He indicated some possible additional taxation, when he said that the development effort was in need of more extensive financing. "The Government is exploring new additional sources of income, which on the one side should not disturb the monetary stability, while on the other side should still be within the limit of social capacity and consciousness of the society and the house, whenever the Government decides on this matter."

B. President R. Nixon's Visit: President R. Nixon of USA arrived in Djakarta on July 27 on a 22-hour visit in the course of his Asian tour.

Mr. Nixon was making the first visit by a US President to Indonesia, although he came in 1953 as President Eisenhower's Vice-President when Dr. Sukarno was in power.

He was received by President Suharto and other leaders.

Along the route to the palace from the airport were strung large banners proclaiming: "Long live US-Indonesian friendship", "Long live Mr. Nixon, long live Pat Nixon" and "Congratulations for the success of your Moon expedition."

In his airport speech, President Nixon assured President Suharto that he wanted Indonesia to be a pillar of political and economic stability in Asia but did not intend to entangle it in any defence links it did not want. "It is on the basis of common values and ideals and not on the basis of alliance or alignment that my country seeks to co-operate with the Indonesian Republic."

"We respect you as a proud and independent nation and we believe that a proud, independent and dynamic Indonesia can have a great influence for good in our world."

Later, at a banquet, President Suharto mentioned pointedly that Mr. Nixon's visit coincided with the beginning of Indonesia's Five-Year Economic Plan.

His pursuit of this economic theme received a firm response from Mr. Nixon who said: "We want to be with you. We want to assist you in any way that you think is appropriate—we go along with other nations who have the capacity to do so."

He also praised Indonesia's stabilization of its economy. "I noted that three years ago, Indonesia had one of the fastest rates of inflation in the whole world. Today it is one of the most stable."

Discussions:

The Foreign Minister, Dr. Adam Malik told newsmen on July 28 that President Nixon and President Suharto had held "very thorough discussions on various world problems including Viet-Nam and China,"

Mr. Malik said that the Russian-proposed collective security system in Asia was not discussed. He added: "The United States seems to have no interest in it."

Asked if Indonesia and USA had a common view on Viet-Nam, he said: "Indonesia wants immediate peace in Viet-Nam". He did not go into details.

Asked about British withdrawal from the Indian Ocean, he said the withdrawal would bring about a normal situation in the area and not a vacuum and USA preferred that countries in the region would be able to look after their own security.

According to a White House spokesman, the talks centred chiefly on matters directly relating to Indonesia.

Speaking at the airport shortly before departure, Mr. Nixon told President Suharto: "You choose your own way. You choose your open policies. We will be happy and proud to work with you. I leave here with the conviction that the future of this country is in good hands."

Replying, President Suharto said USA and Indonesia should strive for closer co-operation which would be good for a new South-East Asia, to world peace and to the prosperity of mankind.

IRAN

A. Shah's Message On Constitution Day: In a message to the people on the occasion of the 63rd anniversary of the Constitution on August 12, the Shah urged his people to work for the creation of a "truly democratic atmosphere" which was the precondition for the nation's intellectual growth and maturity.

He also called for a "deep and complete participation" of all individuals in ensuring the nation's progress.

He said every nation desirous of keeping in line with the progress of human society should not only achieve scientific and technological progress but should also become powerful spiritually and morally.

Failing this, a nation would not only fall behind in the struggle of life, but would also risk the loss of its very existence in a world which was moving ahead at a phenomenal speed.

He said that the intellectual growth and maturity could be achieved above all through a truly democratic atmosphere and such a democracy required the deep and complete participation of all individuals of a nation in playing an important role. "True democracy could not be established by merely enacting progressive laws."

He added that in Iran most progressive laws were in operation, capable of meeting the challenge of the modern age, and the field was being prepared for the creation of a truly democratic order.

IRAQ

A. Collaboration With Soviet Oil Firm: Under an Agreement published in Baghdad on June 23, a Soviet firm will provide the Iraq National Oil Company (INOC) equipment and technical aid worth about $72 million.

The firm, Machino-Export, will assist in the installation of 10 derricks. Besides, it will equip five geophysical and geological teams and supply machinery for drilling, storing and pumping of oil, maintenance and gas production. Soviet aid will help direct exploitation of the Halfaya area, in south Iraq, where the presence of oil has been established.

Under the Agreement, Iraqi experts will go to the Soviet Union for training.

The Agreement said that both sides estimated the overall value of the contracts involved at about $72 million, to be paid in accordance with terms of a Commercial Agreement concluded by the two countries in 1958.

According to Western observers, what USSR stands to gain from the deal is access to a new source of crude oil and a closer political relationship with Ba'athist leaders who are showing signs of readiness for an accommodation with local nationalists.

The Iraqis will gain expert help and finance to develop oilfields which have been unexploited since they were expropriated from the Iraq Petroleum Company (IPC) eight years ago and a Soviet market for their own output.

The oil to be produced with Soviet help by the Iraq National Oil Company (INOC), which has no output at present, will not therefore be competing in world markets with the products of IPC which is owned by a consortium of Western oil giants—Shell, British Petroleum, Compagnie Francaise des Petroles, Standard Oil (New Jersey), and Mobil.

The real setback for IPC is that the deal is for the exploitation of the North Rumaila near Basra, which was originally an IPC concession but was expropriated by the Iraqis under the law. IPC had earlier test-drilled North Rumaila. Three of the six test wells were producers though these are now closed. North Rumaila is geologically a continuation of the rich Kuwait and south Rumaila fields and IPC experts have no doubt that they contain large reserves.

JAPAN

A. Control On Exchange Remittances Lifted: Effective from September 1, most of the remaining exchange controls on remittances by foreigners were removed.

The steps for removal of controls promulgated by the Finance Ministry were taken on August 27.

Finance Ministry officials explained that as a result of the new measures, Japan's exchange controls would have reached the levels of West European countries barring USA and West Germany. The only remaining restrictions in ordinary invisible trade transactions would be on technology imports and insurance.

Under the new liberalization measures, Japanese branches of foreign enterprises, which were established before July 1, 1963 on the condition that they would not remit their profits and principals, would be free to make such remittances in foreign currency through the Bank of Japan. So far, such remittances had required approval of the Finance Minister and certain kind of remittances of accumulated profits had been prohibited.

Foreign investors in Japanese corporate stocks acquired without guarantee of remittance before July 1, 1963 would now be free to remit dividends through the Bank of Japan. Foreign residents in this country would also be free to remit home through the Bank of Japan their ordinary incomes such as salaries, remunerations and wages. Till now, such remittances were permitted only when they were to be made to relations within the second degree for living expenses.

Foreign residents in Japan would also be allowed to take with them their assets worth up to $50,000 when they change their places of residence from Japan. The present limit is $10,000.

B. Rocket Launched: Japan launched on August 17 a large rocket, the 44-ton MU, in a test intended to improve its directional control.

The launching was at Uchinoura near Kagoshima in south-western Japan. The rocket rose to about 80 miles, performing with success.

So far, Japan had tested only much smaller rockets of the Lamba type. It was the first time that a large Japanese rocket, rather similar to the United States Minuteman, had been launched.

The present rocket programme, controlled by Tokyo University scientists, was intended to prepare the way for an Earth satellite next year, but the test also served as a reminder that Japan could without great difficulty, in the opinion of some experts, develop effective ballistic missiles of the Minuteman type, with a range sufficient to cover China, at least.

Bodyguards successfully thwarted the attempt by knocking the 17.7-cm-long painter's knife out of the hands of the attacker. The youth, who was apprehended immediately, was identified as Shigetsugu Hamaoka, a resident in Oki Island, north of Shimane Prefecture in the Sea of Japan.

The new Government has 18 members, nine of them from the Israeli-occupied west bank of the Jordan. Among them are seven Ministers from the outgoing Government.

This was the fifth Cabinet to be formed by Mr. Talhouni (65), who is known to be on good terms with the United Arab Republic and Palestinian commando organizations.

A. Flood Havoc: The National Police said in Seoul on August 2 that floods and landslides, after two days of torrential rain, had left 104 persons dead.

More than 12,000 people became homeless as their houses were washed away or flooded, mostly in Hwachon county. Many villages were isolated with communications cut off and roads washed away. Army helicopters dropped supplies to them.

A police spokesman said that increased casualties were feared as rescue workers were still digging through piles of earth in the worst-hit area, Hwachon county, about 80 km north-east of Seoul. In this area alone, 92 people were crushed to death in landslides or drowned in streams swollen by the downpour.

LAOS

A. Prince Souvanna Phouma's Charge Against North Viet-Nam: The Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, during a visit to France, told a news conference in Paris on July 25 that 60,000 North Viet-Namese troops were waging war in his country.

He said that his recent appeals to Moscow, Hanoi and the Pathet Lao insurgents had been of little avail.

[His visit to Paris, as well as a previous stopover in London, was part of an effort to exert presure on Hanoi to withdraw its troops from Laos. He conferred with President Georges Pompidou, and also had a meeting with Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge, the head of the American delegation to the peace talks in Paris.]

He charged North Viet-Nam with stepping up its "interference" in Laos in recent months. This reflected a "desire for colonialism" with the aim of making "Laos a satellite of North Viet-Nam."

He disclosed that he had corresponded in January with Prince Souvanouvong, the leader of the Pathet Lao and his half-brother, to propose talks to end the civil war. The Soviet Ambassador in Vientiane served as the intermediary. But the Pathet Lao leader had demanded a halt in the American bombing of Laotian territory as a prior condition to talks.

The Prince said that the North Viet-Namese envoy to Laos had also made a similar demand in a private interview. He said that he would be willing to cut back the bombing progressively in exchange for troop withdrawals, but had received "no response."

He said that he had authorized the American bombing raids, aimed at North Viet-Namese base camps and supply routes along the South Viet-Namese border, as a measure of legitimate self-defence. The bombing, whether by the Royal Lao Air Force or by the United States, only came after the interference by North Viet-Nam. "I cannot decently take the responsibility of leaving my soldiers and my people to the mercy of North Viet-Namese troops."

He, however, flatly denied a Hanoi charge that 12,000 American troops were stationed in Laos. He said that this was "completely false" and that "there are no American combat troops in Laos."

He said that the Soviet Union, which served as co-Chairman of the 1962 Geneva Conference on the "neutralization" of Laos, had indicated no interest in making new efforts to damp down the fighting. "Their answer is always the same—wait for a settlement of the Viet-Nam problem and then we will arrive at a solution for Laos."

Hanoi Denial:

On July 27, North Viet-Nam denied that it was trying to colonise Laos and turn it into a satellite.

The daily Nhan Dan called such allegations made by Prince Souvanna Phouma as nothing but slanders. It said: "Phouma's news conference obviously aimed at enlarging the campaign of slanders now being whipped up by the US and its henchmen to distort the war situation in Laos.

"The patriotic and progressive forces and the entire people of Laos have long been condemning Phouma for his betrayal of Laos' policy of peace, independence and neutrality. His shameful attitude at the July 25 news conference only proved more clearly his collusion with the US imperialists."

MALAYSIA

A. Tengku A. Rehman Suggests New Security Arrangements: In an interview published by the Bangkok Post on August 11, the Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman said that he was prepared to hold a conference with leaders of other South-East Asian nations to discuss his concept of a new Asian security arrangement based on mutual co-operation and self-help.

He said that the conference could be held "soon"—in Kuala Lumpur or anywhere else in the region—but he could not discuss its timing at this stage.

Meanwhile, he said, his Government would pursue a bilateral approach with other South-East Asian countries to assess their thinking on the subject and prepare the ground for the conference. "As you see, the preparation will take time."

He indicated that Thailand, Singapore and Indonesia were almost certain to be approached to join the conference, but he seemed to rule out both India and Pakistan. No reference was made to Japan or any of the Western Powers.

Although he declined to discuss how the proposed security arrangement would work, he indicated that in his view the existing border security arrangements between Malaysia and Thailand—as well as between Malaysia and Indonesia—could be "extended" to strengthen the defence of this region "against aggression from within and without."

Replying to a question, he admitted that he was obliged to think in terms of a new security arrangement partly because the recent five-Power defence talks in Canberra had not produced the results Malaysia expected. "The talks in Canberra did not give me a sense of confidence that we have been looking for."

However, in contrast to his earlier statement that the results of the Canberra talks were "useless", he said: "Australia is within her right to come to our help or not" and added that it was no good pretending as if the Canberra talks had not taken place.

He thus suggested what had been explained earlier by official sources that he was now prepared to take a cautious line in criticising the results of the Canberra talks or Australia's thinking about the defence of Malaysia.

A. US Aid For 14 Projects: The US Government on August 29 pledged Rs. 66.62 million to Nepal for utilization in 14 specific projects during the current fiscal year.

The amount did not include expenditure on provision of technical and commodity assistance.

All rupee support would be funneled out of the US PL 480 fund in India.

The Agreement provided for financial aid in the fields of agriculture, transport and communication, family planning, education and health programmes.

Construction of the Dhangadhi-Dandelhura road would be one of the projects which would be financed by US AID this year.

B. Nepalese In Foreign Armies: The Foreign Minister, Mr. G. B. Rajbhandari, stated in the National Panchayat on August 26 that there were only 14,000 Nepalese in the Indian armed forces and 10,000 in the British Army.

In the British Army, the number of Nepalese had been reduced from 15,000 to 10,000 this year and by 1971 it would be cut to 6,000.

The policy of his Government, he said, was to reduce recruitment of Nepalese in foreign armies as much as possible.

He told the House that Nepalese personnel in foreign armies returning home would be rehabilitated and their experience would be used in the task of national development.

The mention that there were only 14,000 Nepalese in the Indian Army meant that other Gorkhas who numbered much more were Indian citizens. Even for this small number, the Indian Government had made elaborate arrangements for payment of pension by opening pension camps in remote hill areas.

C. Relations With India—Mr. Y. Khanal's Views: In an interview in New Delhi on September 4, the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Yadunath Khanal, said that his country needed more, and not less, contact with its neighbours, including China. But, there need be no misgivings in India on this account in view of the traditionally close relations with Nepal.

He said: "There is a mutuality of interest between India and Nepal. So long as both countries want it, this mutuality can extend to any area."

Asked if the India-Nepal border could remain open if the policies of the two sovereign countries became sharply divergent, he replied: "There is no intention to make the policies of Nepal sharply divergent from those of India. Both India and Nepal believe in a policy of non-alignment. These policies are dictated by the needs of development in both the countries. Therefore, the impression in India that the policies of the two countries are sharply different is incorrect. There should be an attempt to accommodate the objective economic and political interests of the two countries rather than to describe them as divergent."

Referring to the Indian military presence on Nepal's northern borders, he said: "Whatever arrangement exists between India and Nepal must be on the basis of mutual agreement. The Indian Military Liaison Group came at Nepal's request to re-organize the Royal Nepalese Army. There has been military co-operation between our two countries in matters of training, equipment etc. We have deeply appreciated the readiness with which India has extended co-operation. This kind of co-operation is expected in future also when Nepal requests for it and when India is willing to respond. But the present position, as I see it, is that the Indian Military Liaison Group, having completed its work of re-organization, can be withdrawn without weakening the traditional ties between us."

On the Susta dispute between the two countries, he said: "It is true that the Susta problem has caused some feeling in Nepal. The border between India and Nepal is generally well-demarcated. This problem should be solved as early as possible. When the problems here and in a couple of other places are solved, permanent boundary pillars can be erected and the local officials should be instructed to inspect the pillars and keep them intact."

PAKISTAN

SUMMARY: N-W Frontier Rebellion; Crisis In "Occupied" Kashmir; Indian Passenger Plane strays; Revival Of Pakistan National Congress; Agricultural Growth.

A. N-W Frontier Rebellion: It was disclosed on August 30 that troops had been rushed to the hilly Swat State on the North-West Frontier to quell a popular rising against the Central Government.

Karachi's mass circulation daily, Jung, and Lahore's Nawa-e-Waqt carried reports that Punjabi soldiers had been detailed to re-inforce the Army units in the frontier State and that they were meeting with stiff resistance from the people. Mobs had been taking out processions, shouting anti-Pakistan slogans and burning National Flags and President Yahya Khan's portrait and committing arson and looting in a mounting wave of fury against the Central Government.

The rising followed President Yahya Khan's decree, announced on July 28, merging the State, autonomous during the British regime and still held under the titular rule of the Wali of Swat, with West Pakistan. Two other frontier States, Dir and Chitral, were similiarly merged with Pakistan under the decree.

Significance was attached to the revolt in Swat in view of the fact that the former President F-M. Ayub Khan, had been living in Swat since he stepped down from power. His two daughters were married to the Wali's sons, one of whom was the heir-apparent. F-M. Ayub had also declared his intention to re-enter politics. In this move he was sure to get the support of his friend and ally, the ruler of Swat.

The Wali of Swat had held sway in his home State as an absolute monarch, and while he commanded the wealth and resources open to a feudal chief, he had also been able to stall, if not quell, a recent "Swati liberation movement." He had given the State schools, hospitals and roads and also built up a 6,000-man militia to back up his authoritarian rule.

Pakistan has claimed that the merging of the three frontier States was "a natural, historical process" and a decision long overdue was supported by the local population. And as though to prove the existence of a popular movement against the ruler of Swat and in support of merger, an attempt on the life of the Wali was made three days after the merger decree was announced, but the ruler escaped with minor injuries. The unidentified assailants escaped to West Pakistan and had not yet been apprehended.

The immediate result of this assassination attempt was mob retaliation against West Pakistanis, of whom many resided in Swat as traders. They were now being compelled to leave the State.

Clash With Pakhtoons:

According to the Bakhtiar news agency of the Afghan Government, Pakistani troops detailed to quell the revolt on the North-West Frontier had suffered casualties in clashes in the Bannu, Kohat and Khyber Pass areas.

The engagement with the Waziri tribesmen near Bannu was serious, according to the news agency, which did not mention the dates of the clashes or other details.

The Frontier people's freedom demand had now gained urgency, because the Government of Pakistan was, according to Nawa-e-Waqt, planning to take over the entire tribal areas lying between its borders and those of Afghanistan. The plan was to place the entire area, including the States of Chitral, Swat and Dir, under a commissioner who would be assisted by the Pakistani military authorities in the administration of the strategic region.

While a few West Pakistani politicians, including Khan Abdul Qayyum Khan, had supported the merger of the frontier States, the tribal chieftains themselves had expressed uncompromising opposition to it. Particularly unacceptable to the fierce, freedom-loving Pathans was the prospect of abolition of the tribal jirgas or assemblies, which had been functioning from time immemorial as their parliament, judiciary and Government.

Kabul Radio said in a recent broadcast that tribal chieftains in the Frontier region had expressed their firm determination to resist Pakistan's attempts to establish its sway over them.

The Government of Afghanistan had already lodged a strong protest to Pakistan against the decree merging the tribal States of Chitral, Swat and Dir into its West Wing. Afghanistan had also stated that it would not accept the legality of any steps taken by the administration of the former North-West Frontier area, which it referred to as "occupied" Pakhtoonistan.

B. Political Crisis In "Azad Kashmir": The Government of "Azad Kashmir" has been plunged into acute political crisis following the resignation of its so-called head, Mr. Abdul Hamid, on August 26.

Mr. Hamid, who was nominated as the head of the Government in September, 1968, resigned without giving any reasons. His resignation was taken as an indication of the desire of Gen. Yahya Khan to effect far-reaching changes in the working of the Government in occupied Kashmir. This became evident when Sardar Abdul Rashid, the newly-appointed Minister of Kashmir and Home Affairs, told newsmen in Karachi recently that the existing regulations regarding the "Azad Kashmir" Government were being thoroughly re-examined to synchronise them with administration in other parts of Pakistan.

The statement also indicated that the Governnment would try to exercise a more direct hold over political activity in "Azad Kashmir" where the demand for complete restoration of democratic rights had been gaining momentum.

The danger of a firmer grip by Pakistan authorities on their affairs had been apprehended by leaders of the Pak-held area. Three former Presidents of "Azad Kashmir," Sardar Ibrahim, Sardar Abdul Qayyum and Major Sher Ali, had demanded that "Azad Kashmir" should immediately be provided with a democratic set-up.

In a joint statement published in the mass circulation daily Nawa-e-Waqt on August 22, the three leaders said: "Azad Kashmir is the base camp for the liberation of the whole of the State of Jammu and Kashmir. It is, therefore, imperative that this area should have a completely democratic system of Government. With the present state of affairs where an irresponsible and ruthless bureaucracy has been ruling the area for the last 20 years, it becomes extremely difficult to convince the people at home or the world outside about the legitimacy of the Pakistani demand for the right of self-determination for the people of Kashmir."

C. Chinese Trade Caravan Arrives Through "Silk Route": A Chinese trade caravan was given a rousing welcome on August 24 when it arrived in Northern Pakistan to mark the re-opening of the historic "Silk Route" linking China with Central Asia and Europe.

The first party was made up of 50 pack camels and 16 Chinese traders on horseback. Villagers at the Pakistani border town of Misgar, high in the Karakoram mountains 127 miles north-east of Hunza State, cheered the Chinese on arrival.

The Chinese traders crossed the border at Mintaka on August 22. It took three days to travel the 24 miles to Misgar, described as one of the world's most difficult terrains. Pakistani officials and six Pakistani journalists flown in from Rawalpindi were among those who greeted them.

The old "Silk Route," which Marco Polo followed to ancient Cathay, had remained closed since 1940. In October, 1967, Pakistan and China had agreed to re-open the route.

D. China To Set Up Guerrilla Training School In East Pakistan: According to a despatch on September 3, China had agreed to set up a guerrilla training school in East Pakistan to train officers and men of the Armed Forces.

Agreement to raise such a school was arrived at during the recent visit of Air Marshal Nur Khan, Chief of the Air Force, to Peking.

Under the Agreement, China will organize two courses a year—one for officers and another for other ranks of the armed forces.

In New Delhi, fears were expressed that the guerrillas trained by the Chinese would be used in Kashmir and Mizo Hills.

This report assumed greater significance in the context of reports that the Chinese had not only cut motorable roads through Pakistan-occupied Kashmir but had also sent troops, camouflaged as workers.

India had already protested to Pakistan about China being allowed to cut roads within legally Indian territory.

F. Indian Passenger Plane Strays: An Air Force jet accidentally fired as it flew to intercept an intruding Indian passenger plane on August 12.

One person on the ground was killed and three wounded in a village near Sialkot. Press reports at first attributed the casualties to an Indian bombing raid, but the Air Force statement made it clear the Indian plane involved was an unarmed Fokker Friendship airliner.

The statement said one of two jets sent up to investigate accidentally discharged its guns. It was likely that shrapnel had caused the casualties on the ground.

The airliner was allowed to return to Indian air-space, but Pakistan had lodged a protest against the intrusion.

G. Defence Of Pakistan Day: In a message on Defence of Pakistan Day on September 6, marking the India-Pakistan conflict in 1965, President Yahya Khan said: "Pakistan has no aggressive desires against any country—least of all against its immediate neighbours.

"Pakistan is a peace-loving country. It needs peace for its progress and to help its people achieve a decent standard of living."

He, however, added that his statement was "not to be misconstrued as a sence of complacency. Pakistan is conscious of all threats to its security and is ever watchful and ready to meet them with all the force at its command."

I. Revival Of Pakistan National Congress: It was disclosed in Lahore on August 28 that the Pakistan National Congress had been revived after ten years of eclipse.

The General Secretary of the Pakistan National Congress, Mr. Manoranjan Dhar, who was once a Minister in East Pakistan said in Dacca that it had been decided to take all steps immediately to re-organize the party. The decision was taken at a meeting of its erstwhile members and supporters in Dacca on August 17. An organizing committee with Mr B. C. Nandy as convenor was formed with a view to holding a convention in the next 40 days.

So long committed to the joint electorate, Mr. Dhar said: "A grave doubt has arisen in the minds of a very large section of the minority community as to the efficiency and expediency of retaining the principle of the joint electorate."

[The Pakistan National Congress, along with other political parties, was banned in 1958 when F-M Ayub Khan took over as President. Though later other political parties were revived, the Congress leaders did not make any effort to resume the activities of the party.]

K. Two More Ships Being Built: It was officially stated in Karachi that six more ships would be added to the fleet of the National Shipping Corporation by 1972, raising the strength of the fleet to 32.

The two ships are under construction at the Karachi Shipyard. One of them would be delivered next year (1970) and the other in 1971. The ships will have a combined capacity of over 25,000 tons and will cost $7.61 million.

Two Yugoslav-built cargo vessels would be delivered to the National Shipping Corporation in 1971.

The Corporation has also ordered two tankers from Yugoslavia. Each has a capacity of 35,000 tons.

L. Chalna Port Construction: Construction of Chalna Port in East Pakistan, with a capacity of five million tons of cargo per year, will be completed at a cost of $52.52 million by March, 1972.

This was stated by Mr. Momirov, Project-Incharge of the two Yugoslav enterprises, Messrs Ivan Milutinovic and Brodo Impeks, which had won the contract for the construction of this gigantic project in July, 1967.

He said that out of the total cost of the project, $23.15 million was in foreign exchange which was being provided by the Government of Yugoslavia under a Credit Agreement with the Pakistan Government.

The project, covering 700 acres, is divided into three phases. The first phase of designing the whole project had already been done by the Yugoslav firms. The second and third phases of the work were the filling of the area and construction of buildings and structures of the port.

More than 1,500 vessels will be able to discharge and load at Chalna port every year after its expansion is completed.

M. Sugarcane Production: According to estimates released by the Agriculture Ministry, the production of sugarcane (stripped cane) during 1968-69 was placed at 28,921,000 tons as against 25,954,000 tons last year (1967-68) and showed an increase of 11.4 per cent.

In East Pakistan, the production was estimated at 7,297,000 tons in 1968-69 as against 7,589,000 tons in 1967-68, registering a decrease of 3.9 per cent. This was due to decrease in area and unfavourable weather conditions like floods.

In West Pakistan, the production was estimated at 21,624,000 tons as compared to 18,365,000 tons estimated in 1967-68, indicating an increase of 17.7 per cent. This increase, observed in all the divisions of the Province, was due to the increased acreage and better cultural practices ensuring greater application of various production inputs and effective plant protection coverage.

N. Agricultural Growth In West Wing: The growth in agriculture in West Pakistan during the last three years has been described as "unprecedented" in a budgetary document published by the Board of Planning and Development.

According to the document, in 1967-68 alone, an all-time high of 11.7 per cent growth was achieved. In 1968-69 the growth was 6.2 per cent.

The average growth rate for the first four years of the Plan was six per cent per annum against 3.8 per cent in the Second Plan period and 1.4 per cent during the First Plan.

The document ascribed the growth in the agriculture sector to the successful implementation of the food self-sufficiency programme launched in early 1967.

Making a brief reference to rice and wheat crops during the period under review, the document added that the acreage under improved varieties like Irri-rice increased from 20,000 acres in 1967-68 to 0.75 million acres in 1968-69. The rice production during the same period increased from 1.46 million tons to 2.09 million tons, showing an increase of almost 50 per cent.

The production of 1968-69 exceeded the original Plan target by 0.37 million tons, one year ahead of schedule. The increase in 1968-69 over the previous year was described to be more than 100 per cent.

The production estimate for 1968-69 crop placed wheat production at 6.8 million tons against a target of 6.5 million tons for the period and an actual production of 6.3 million tons in 1967-68. The other crops also registered progress in varying degrees.

O. Independence Day Message By President Yahya Khan: In a message to the people on the occasion of the 22nd anniversary of Independence on August 14, President Yahya Khan called for developing workable political institutions.

He said: "Our struggle for independence did not end with the transfer of sovereignty and power from the British to our people. Real and meaningful independence has many more dimensions. The people must have full right to exercise their sovereign power. They must ensure for themselves freedom from hunger and disease.

"We have to discard and unlearn our pre-occupation with selfish pursuits for material gains at the cost of the community and in the larger interests of the nation....We have to remember not to forget the idealism which fired the imagination and guided the activities of fighters for freedom and allow some chastening forces to determine the course of our life and activities.

"Let us pray so that we may get back our bearing and correct and reset our course, rekindle the road so that we may reach our destination, where the people could exercise their sovereign rights and where social justice prevails and where the welfare of the individual is part and parcel of the welfare of the community."

The day was a closed holiday and the National Flag flew atop principal buildings. The day was heralded by a 31-gun salute in Rawalpindi and a 21-gun salute each in Lahore and Dacca.

President Yahya Khan conferred 634 awards to civilians, personnel of armed forces, police, scientists, artistes, literateurs, teachers, students and sportsmen in recognition of their services.

PHILIPPINES

A. President R. Nixon's Visit: President Richard Nixon of USA arrived in Manila on July 26 on the first lap of his Asian tour that took him to Indonesia, Thailand, South Viet-Nam, India and Pakistan.

At Manila airport, he was received by President Ferdinand Marcos and other Filipino leaders. Crowds cheered as the two leaders drove to Malacanang Palace from the airport.

Manila newspapers also welcomed President Nixon warmly, but hinted that the brevity of his stay meant he would achieve nothing more than the opening of the way for future dialogue.

President Nixon let it be known he was ready to give his hosts any details they wanted on the progress of his Viet-Nam peace plan, the next stage of which was still secret.

He declared soon after arrival: "I will also offer our view that peace and progress in Asia must be shaped and protected primarily by Asian hands and that the contribution which my country can make to that process should come as a supplement to Asian energies and in response to Asian leadership."

He also pledged to seek the counsel of Asian leaders on important problems in all parts of the world.

Talks:

A Manila report said on July 26 that at high-level talks, the Philippines and USA agreed, in principle, that American bases in this country should be retained.

They also agreed on the need for early negotiations on a new agreement to replace the existing Laurel-Langley instrument which governs the trade between the two countries. These were the major specific problems of a bilateral nature covered during discussions between President Nixon and President Marcos.

A statement issued after the meeting said that there was a "wide range of discussions of issues of common interest to the two countries". It added: "Particular attention was focussed on economic and trade matters, defence and developments in Viet-Nam".

Discussions were of a very general nature, and started off with Viet-Nam. Informed sources said that there was no discussion at all on the question of a possible withdrawal of the Philippine non-combatant contingent (Phicag) in South Viet-Nam.

However, several problems or "irritations" remained to be ironed out, particularly the question of civil jurisdiction over the bases which the Philippines wanted to be transferred to it.

Before his departure for Djakarta on July 27, Mr. Nixon said both he and President Marcos understood that the people of Asia must seek Asian solutions to Asian problems, and it was in that frame-work that USA could best contribute to the region's peaceful development.

Describing their talks as "most frank and sincere", Mr Marcos said: "All of us have come to realize that in the ultimate analysis we have none to run to because those to whom we used to run are themselves presently occupied with the problems of power and of complex anxieties, and currently face the prospect of having to make far-reaching re-appraisals of their roles in a pluralistic universe."

SIKKIM

A. Influx Of Tibetan Refugees: Over a dozen Tibetan refugees crossed into Sikkim from the north during August. All of them were stated to belong to the higher strata of Tibetan society.

They crossed into Sikkim in two batches with baggage. One of the refugees even managed to bring his horse with him. The refugees were believed to have met with no opposition from the Chinese while escaping to Sikkim. The Chinese had continually harassed them when they persisted in giving wrong interpretation of Mr. Mao's thoughts to the illiterate Tibetans.

SYRIA

A. Trade And Payments Agreement With Pakistan: Syria and Pakistan concluded in Damascus on August 11 a Trade and Payments Agreement.

It replaced the Agreement concluded by the two countries in 1960. It would be valid for one year.

Under the Agreement, Syria will import raw wool, carpets, tyres and pharmaceuticals from Pakistan and export to that country cereals, cotton, dry vegetables and other agricultural products, yarn, nylon and industrial products.

B. TWA Airliner Hijacked By Arab Commandos: A Trans-World Airlines Boeing-707 was hijacked by two Arab commandos to Damascus on August 29 and was rocked by an explosion in its cockpit minutes after it landed in Damascus.

The two commandos threatened the crew with a primed hand-grenade. The airliner's pilot, Capt. Dean Canter, said: "They had pulled the pins from the hand-grenade and they had pistols. We did not argue."

Four of the 116 people aboard were reported to have been injured in a scramble to get out of the aircraft after the pilot warned that a time bomb was about to go off.

Four hours after the plane touched down, all the passengers except the Israelis were taken in buses to closely guarded hotels in Damascus where they spent the night as guests of the airport authorities. The Israelis remained at the airport.

In Rome, airport sources said that two Arabs were aboard the plane. According to UAR sources, a message read by a woman's voice was monitored by the control tower at Cairo airport shortly before the hijacked plane landed at Damascus.

It said: "We are members of the Che Guevara group of the Front. We have seized aircraft 840 of the TWA which was flying to Lod (Israel). Long live Free Palestine. Long live the Palestinian people."

The four Israeli women passengers aboard the TWA Boeing were repatriated to Rome later.

In Amman, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine claimed full responsibility for the hijacking. The Front, quoted by Cairo Radio, said that its aim was to capture a senior Israeli official responsible for the death and hardship of many Palestinian men, women and children.

THAILAND

A. ECAFE Programme Of Petro-chemical Ventures: Senior officials of Asian countries at a meeting held in Bangkok under the auspices of the Asian Industrial Development Council of ECAFE from July 21 to 25 proposed establishment of new petro-chemical plants in Asia as joint ventures, each involving two, three or four participating countries.

The meeting brought together representatives of Formosa, India, Indonesia, Iran, South Korea, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. The participating countries indicated willingness to consider participation in the projects, subject to examination of detailed reports to be prepared as the next step.

The projects identified as desirable were:

(1) South-East Asia Petrochemical Complex, to be situated in the Philippines or Singapore, with the participation of Indonesia, the Philippines and Singapore;

(2) A caprolactam plant, to produce the raw material for nylon, to be located in Indonesia with the participation of Indonesia and the Philippines;

(3) A plant for production of styrene monomer (the raw material for polystyrene plastics, a comparatively inexpensive type) to be situated in Formosa with purchases planned by South Korea and the Philippines;

(4) A melamine plant to produce a durable plastic used, for example, in dinner-ware, to be situated in India, with joint participation by India, Iran, the Philippines and possibly Indonesia;

(5) A project for production of tetra-ethyl lead (which is added to gasoline for higher octane ratings and for aircraft use), foreseen for India as a joint venture of India and Iran;

(6) A plant to produce ethylene glycol, a raw material for synthetic polyester fibres, to be located in South Korea with purchases planned by Formosa;

(7) A project for production of petroleum coke, needed for the aluminium industry, for example, to be located in Formosa with purchases planned by South Korea.

A report adopted by the meeting of senior officials in the petro-chemical industry outlined specific proposals for each project, including plant sizes, and suggested dates for the completion of detailed feasibility studies.

Regarding the South-East Asia petro-chemical complex proposed for either the Philippines or Singapore, the officials agreed that the Asian Industrial Development Council (AIDC) would be requested to help in obtaining services for the feasibility report from such sources as France, West Germany, Japan or India or through the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). It was proposed that some of the feasibility studies should be completed before the end of 1969.

The group agreed that the AIDC should invite the participation of other countries which had indicated interest in the joint development of petro-chemical projects but could not attend the session. These countries included Brunei, Malaysia, Pakistan and South Viet-Nam.

In addition, the group agreed to consider at later meetings the possibility of further joint ventures.

Although discussion centred on products based directly on petro-chemicals, "the meeting also considered that the joint venture production of pesticides would be of interest to the region." The group proposed that AIDC prepare a pre-feasibility study on pesticides, for consideration by interested member-countries.

The meeting noted with appreciation, an offer of the Government of India inviting representatives of the participating countries, and other countries of the region, to visit petro-chemical plants established in India and to discuss with the Indian authorities the problems faced by that country in the development of its petro-chemical industry.

B. Secret Defence Pact With USA: The Washington Post reported on August 17 that the secret 1965 American-Thai "military contingency plan" (see page 9126) would send US troops into action under Thailand's command if it ever came into force.

If Thailand was threatened by the advance of North Viet-Namese and Pathet Lao forces across Laos, US troops could be committed to Thailand under the plan—provided that both nations ordered it into effect.

In that event, the newspaper quoting informed sources said, Thailand's Prime Minister, Field-Marshal Thanom Kittikachorn, would be the top allied commander under the contingency programme. The plan provides for the ground commander to be the US military assistance commander who, in 1965, was Lt-Gen. Richard Stilwell. He signed the plan on behalf of the United States.

A US State Department spokesman, while refusing to discuss the contents of the plan on the grounds that that was up to the Defence Deparment, emphasized that it was in no way self-executing. The plan was the centre of a running dispute with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The State Department Press Officer, Mr. Robert J. McCloskey, said: "We made clear at the time we acknowledged its existence that the plan specifically states it cannot be carried into effect without the specific agreement of both the Thai and the US Governments. This contingency military planning has not expanded our defence commitment to Thailand beyond that already contained in the S-EATO Treaty."

Furthermore, he said, the plan "involves no commitment by the United States to any specific military action and that is made clear in the planning document itself."

He described the plan as "a bilateral US-Thai military contingency plan which involves the defence of Thailand against an external threat."

Earlier, on August 9 in Washington, Senator J. William Fulbright, Chairman of the US Senate Foreign Relations Committee, charged that the Defence Department had been contemptuous of him in refusing to disclose documents on US commitments to Thailand and South Korea.

He said he was concerned that the plan between the United States and Thailand went beyond commitments in the S-EATO Treaty.

He told the Senate he had "some reason to believe that the Department of State itself is not allowed to have a copy of the Thailand contingency plan despite the fact that the plan could very well involve us in another Viet-Nam-type war."

He said he had learnt that the plan "provides, in certain circumstances, for the commitment of substantial number of American troops to Thailand. He said he could not discuss these provisions in more detail at this time because of its top secret classification.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Return Of Three American POWs: A month after the announcement of their release on the occasion of American Independence Day—July 4—three US prisoners of war were handed over on August 4 by North Viet-Nam to a delegation of US pacifists.

They were named as Capt. Wesley Lewis Rumble, US Air Force, who was shot down over Ouang Binh in April, 1969; Lt. Robert Frenchot Frishman, US Navy, who was shot down over Hanoi in October, 1967; and Apprentice Seaman Douglas Brent Hegdahl, of the cruiser Canberra, who was captured in April, 1967.

At the handing over ceremony, Mrs. Bui Thican, a representative of "The Viet-Namese Committee for Solidarity with the American People" repeated the policy regarding pilots "caught redhanded committing a crime against Viet-Nam." They were guilty of breaking North Viet-Namese law, she said, and could not claim protection under the Geneva Convention of 1949.

The pilots, she said, had been treated "in a manner conforming with the Government's humanitarian policy". They were given medical treatment if wounded or ill. In detention camps they were given food, clothing and other things necessary to life and were usually allowed to write to their families.

One of the US delegation, in reply to Mrs. Bui, condemned the Nixon Administration and advocated a "total and unconditional immediate withdrawal" of United States troops from South Viet-Nam and the closing of American bases in South Viet-Nam territory.

B. Agricultural Co-operatives: The National Assembly Standing Committee has ratified legislation on the statutes of "first degree agricultural co-operatives."

The Press hailed it on August 17 as an essential contribution to the building of a socialist State.

First degree co-operatives are those in which the land, the means of production and labour are totally collectivised. They represent 77 per cent of the country's 23,000 old co-operatives.

The legislation not only sets rules for their management but also for the gradual shifting to first degree co-operatives of second-degree farms where members are paid in proportion to their contribution in land and means of production.

Under the statutes, land will become the property of the collective except for five per cent that will be privately owned by members of the co-operatives. All means of production will belong to the co-operative and work will be done by teams under the supervision of an elected brigade-leader.

An elected managing committee will look after administrative and budgetary problems.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. National Social Democratic Front Urges Removal Of Premier: President Nguyen Van Thieu's political alliance—the National Social Democratic Front—asked him on August 8 to remove the Premier, Mr. Tran Van Huong from office.

The call for Mr. Huong's removal came at a time when Mr. Thieu was known to be contemplating a re-shuffling of his Cabinet.

The consensus among observers in Saigon was that the public demand for Mr. Huong's ouster would not have been issued without Mr. Thieu's approval.

The call was contained in a petition signed by the six leaders of the political parties that make up Mr. Thieu's recently formed Alliance. They urged that a new Premier be appointed in an effort to improve national prestige.

The petition said in part: "We propose that President Thieu appoint a new Premier who has the prestige and the ability to carry out any measure introduced by the President. Premier Tran Van Huong should be replaced soon, and the projected re-organization of the Cabinet should be completed to deal with the current situation in the country."

The petition was signed by the principal figures in the Front, which Mr. Thieu unveiled last May. He described the organization as a first step in unifying the nationalist forces in the South in preparation for "the coming political struggle with the Communists."

Ever since the formation of the Front, observers have been expecting a Cabinet change that would bring most of the Front's leaders into the Government. On June 19, sources at the Presidential Palace leaked the news that Mr. Thieu was contemplating such a re-shuffling and was discussing the matter with Mr. Huong. The sources reported that Mr. Thieu would like Mr. Huong to resign, but that the President was unwilling to exercise his constitutional right to dismiss him. The latest petition was seen as a manoeuvre designed to apply pressure on Mr. Huong to resign.

B. Mr. Tran Van Huong Resigns Premiership: Mr. Tran Van Huong resigned as Prime Minister on August 22 after a five-week impasse over efforts to re-shuffle the Cabinet.

A joint statement issued after a meeting between Mr. Huong and President Thieu at the Presidential Palace said that the decision was dictated "by the needs and supreme interests of the country, and by no other motives".

It added that Mr. Huong, who had been Prime Minister for 15 months, had promised to co-operate with President Thieu if required for any mission at any time, but gave no other details.

Mr Huong, a coolie's son who has twice been Prime Minister had come under increasing criticism for unpopular economic moves. In July, 92 Deputies—more than two-thirds of the Lower House—had called for his removal as Prime Minister. The demand was repeated by President Thieu's own political supporters, the National Social Democratic Front. In March, Mr. Huong had narrowly escaped assassination when two gunmen fired a volley of shots at his car in a Saigon street. Ringleaders of the plot were sentenced to hard labour for life.

Mr. Huong (65) is a strong advocate of a united Viet-Nam, and commands considerable support among southern peasants and urban workers with whom he has always identified himself.

Gen. Tran Thien Khiem Appointed:

On August 23, President Thieu chose Gen. Tran Thien Khiem, a close and powerful friend, to be the new Premier.

The appointment was the strongest indication that President Thieu was not yet ready to move toward the political Left, where true popular support and a greater possibility of some accomodation with the Viet-Cong lay.

Mr. Thieu's six-week struggle to oust Mr. Huong, who was charged with inefficiency, left much bitterness. Political sources reported that prospective Ministers were inclined to let some of the dust settle before accepting or rejecting the appointment.

Gen. Khiem (43) has four stars and is technically the highest-ranking military man in South Viet-Nam. He is strongly Rightist.

C. Army Command Shake-up: The Saigon Government announced on August 8 a major shake-up of Generals in the Army, including the transfer of two widely criticised Divisional Commanders.

The two Divisional Commanders who were transferred had led the 5 and 18 Divisions, rated by US officials as the least efficient units in the South Viet-Namese Army.

The 18 Division was taken over by Brig-Gen Lam Quang Tho, who formerly commanded the Thu Duc Infantry School just outside Saigon.

The 5 Division was taken over by Maj-Gen Nguyen Van Hieu, who formerly was a Division Commander in the central highlands.

Both the 5th and the 18th Divisions are stationed near Saigon and in the past have frequently been little more than garrison troops.

Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, the US Commander in Viet-Nam, was known to have told Washington that these two Divisions would have to be improved if the South Viet-Namese Army was to have any chance of holding its own when the Americans pulled out.

D. President R. Nixon's Visit: President Richard Nixon of USA on July 30 paid a whirlwind visit to Saigon.

He paid a call on troops of the Ist Infantry Division at Di An, a relatively secure base located 12 miles north of Saigon. He spent about 5½ hours in Viet-Nam and then returned to Bangkok.

He also managed to squeeze in two hours of talks with President Nguyen Van Thieu and, on the plane that carried him from Bangkok to Saigon, an hour with Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, commander of US troops in South Viet-Nam.

In the course of these sessions, Mr. Nixon was said to have discussed with Mr. Thieu the rate and magnitude of future troop withdrawals, expressed interest in the possible meanings of the current lull in the fighting despite the obvious efforts of his military commanders to dismiss it as having little or no diplomatic significance, and reviewed with Gen. Abrams possible changes in military tactics to diminish casualties, shore up his public support at home, and strengthen his hands in the Paris peace negotiations.

President Nixon suggested over and over that the situation of the allies was such that the North Viet-Namese should not expect further concessions. "I believe the record is clear", he said following his meeting with Mr. Thieu at the Presidential Palace in Saigon, "as to which side has gone the extra mile in behalf of peace. We have withdrawn 25,000 American troops. They have been replaced by South Viet-Namese. We have made and you (President Thieu) have made a peace offer which is as generous as any ever made in the history of warfare."

He added: "We have gone as far now as we can or should go in opening the door to peace, and now it is time for the other side to respond."

PRG Criticism:

Representatives of the Provisional Revolutionary Government (PRG) in Paris denounced President Nixon's Saigon trip as an attempt to boost the morale of American troops and prop up the Thieu regime.

A PRG spokesman, in a formal statement, ignored Mr. Nixon's appeal to North Viet-Nam and the Viet-Cong to open "serious" talks in Paris backed by a warning that the allies had gone as far as possible in their concessions.

He said: "We believe that Mr. Nixon's trip to Saigon was made in order to try to boost the morale of the American troops and of the Thieu - Ky - Huong administration, which is in full disarray and which is struggling with sharp contradictions arising from the defeats inflicted upon it.

"Nixon's trip shows the South Viet-Namese population more clearly than ever the obstinacy of the Nixon Government to pursue its war of aggression in South Viet-Nam and to maintain in power the administration of Thieu-Ky-Huong—a warlike, corrupt and dictatorial administration."

YEMEN

A. President A. R. Iryani Takes Over As Army Chief: News agency reports, quoting informed sources in Beirut, said on August 6 that President Kadi Abdel Rahman al Iryani had taken over command of his country's Armed Forces.

The Yemen, for years torn by a civil war between Royalists and Republicans, was plunged into a new crisis in July after the Prime Minister, Gen. Hassan al Amri—upto then Supreme Military Commander—had stepped down and had quit his military post. Since his resignation, he had been in Cairo, which during the civil war had given strong military support to the Republicans.

Observers pointed out that the main reason why Gen. Amri had stepped down was that his plans to reduce the size and influence of the country's Army—and so help the country out of its difficult financial situation—had run into heavy criticism from other members of the Government, and from military leaders themselves.

Brig. Abdel Latif Difalla—previously Chief of Staff and now Deputy Commander of the Army—had lived in Lebanon for a spell in exile. Following the step-down by Gen. Amri, the Brigadier was appointed temporary military Commander-in-Chief. The fact that his appointment was not turned into a permanent position was seen by observers as proof that President Iryani himself wanted to keep the reins of army command tightly in his own hands.

B. Chinese Aid For Road Project: Chinese engineers have resumed work on a 142-mile road from Sanaa, the capital, to the town of Sada, near the Saudi Arabian border.

The road, which is being financed by a £10 million loan from Peking under an Agreement signed in 1964, should have been completed earlier, but work was held up by the war with the royalists.

Since December, 1968 there had been no fighting in the country, and the authorities now expected the road to be ready in three years.

C. New Cabinet: According to Sana'a Radio, a young engineer, Mr. Abdulla Alkurshumi, formed a new Cabinet on September 2.

The Government included four Deputy Prime Ministers and 13 Ministers.

It replaced the former Cabinet headed by Gen. Hassan Al Amri, who resigned two months earlier.

Most of the members of the new Cabinet are moderates who served in previous Governments.

SPORT

A. Rod Laver's "Grand Slam": Rod Laver (31) wrote an epic page in tennis history on September 8 when he won the money-laden United States Open Championship and achieved the "grand slam" for the second time.

Laver beat fellow Australian left-hander Tony Roche 7-9, 6-1, 6-2, 6-2 in the men's singles final to win the first prize of $16,000 (about Rs. 1,20,000)—the largest in the history of sport.

Laver had already won the Australian, French and Wimbledon crowns and completed the first "grand slam" of the four major tournaments in one season since the game was thrown open to both amateurs and professionals.

Laver became only the second player to achieve the "grand slam" in 1962 when he was still an amateur. The only other player to win all four top trophies in the same season was Donald Budge (USA).

BURMA

A. U Nu Forms New Political Party: U Nu, who was removed as Prime Minister by Gen. Ne Win in the 1962 coup, announced at a news conference in London on August 29 the formation of a Parliamentary Democracy Party with himself as leader.

He hoped that the response within Burma would enable him to displace Gen. Ne Win peacefully; but, failing that, insurrection of some kind would be the only answer.

He admitted that violence was against his Buddhist faith: nevertheless, when occasion demanded it there might be no choice.

For the present, he would be conducting a campaign outside Burma, visiting America shortly and then returning via Japan and Kong Kong to his base in Bangkok. Whether Bangkok could remain his base, now that he had announced his plan for opposition, would depend on permission from the Thai Government. He had chosen London as the place from which to start because it was the city with the best record as a place of refuge for those fleeing from tyrannical regimes.

Together with many other political leaders who had been kept in detention by Gen. Ne Win, U Nu had been released in 1967. The following year, he said, had been an even more retrograde one in Burma than the earlier years of Gen. Ne Win's military rule, notably in the power of insurgent minorities, including the White Flag Communists now openly backed by China. Gen. Ne Win had then appointed a committee of 33 former leaders seeking advice on national unity. They recommended a return to constitutional government, the majority being in favour of parliamentary democracy. In addition, U Nu himself had suggested to Gen Ne Win that he should resume the role of Prime Minister at the head of a national government and that the General could then serve as constitutional Head of State.

U Nu said that the recommendations submitted by the committee at the end of May had not yet drawn any response from Gen. Ne Win, but he had recently rejected the proposal for the formation of a national government with U Nu as Prime Minister.

U Nu had been able to leave Burma on the plea of a Buddhist pilgrimage to India, but he had come to London from Bangkok where several other expatriate leaders were living, all of them sharing his opposition to Gen. Ne Win's rule.

He denied that the General had been justified in taking power in 1962 with the plea that the Union of Burma was breaking up because of concessions about to be made by the U Nu Government at that time. On the contrary, the Shans, for example, did not want to secede, they only wanted more autonomy.

Fund-Raising Campaign Launched In USA:

Later, on September 11, talking to newsmen in New York, he said he was launching a fund-raising campaign in USA to support a movement to overthrow—by force, if necessary—the present regime in his country.

He said: "I am no flaming revolutionary. I believe in peace and universal friendship. I have deep and abiding faith in democracy and representative government. I have been advised not to mention the word force. But this I cannot do when freedom is trampled upon, when words and protests fail."

He labelled the Government of Gen. Ne Win as an "outright dictatorship". "There is no proper government in Burma—only a secret society. Laws are promulgated as surprise announcements to take immediate effect."

Asked if he believed his movement to overthrow Gen. Ne Win could be successful, he said: "Yes, because the people are with us. After we have occupied several areas, we will organize a regular army. But we do not want to end it as quickly as possible."

He said his objective was to raise $4 million in USA. "If unforeseen circumstances arise, we may need more, but it is also possible we may need less."

CEYLON

A. Asian Coconut Community Inaugurated: The Asian Coconut Community, the first association of Asian producers organized on a commodity basis to promote, coordinate and harmonize activities of the coconut industry with a view to achieving maximum economic development, was formally inaugurated on September 2 in Colombo.

A flag ceremony on September 2 was followed by a declaration of entry into force of the Agreement and the installation of the representative of Ceylon as the first Chairman of the Community, in accordance with the constitution of the Community.

The Agreement establishing the Asian Coconut Community, concluded in 1968 in Bangkok among the major Asian coconut-producing countries, was opened for signature on December 12, 1968 at ECAFE headquarters. So far, four countries—Ceylon, India, Indonesia and the Philippines—had ratified the Agreement. Two other countries—Malaysia and Thailand—had signed the Agreement but had not yet ratified it.

CHINA

A. Soviet Warning Of Nuclear War: An article in the Russian newspaper Pravda on August 28 warned China that if war broke out "with the existing weapons, lethal armaments and modern means of delivery, it would not spare a single continent."

The article said that even some Western leaders had a more sober view of the dangers of war than China, whose policies were "fraught with the threat to the preservation of general peace."

The article, entitled "Peking's Adventurist Course" and unsigned, said that the Chinese people were undergoing "mass brain-washing in the spirit of hostility to the Soviet Union, which allegedly threatens China with war." This campaign was being intensified since the armed clash on the Sinkiang-Kazakhstan border. The border incidents were aimed at "transfusing fresh blood" into the quarrel, and distracting attention from the domestic difficulties of the Chinese people. Mr. Mao Tse-tung's aim was to establish Chinese domination over the "third world" and give China the status of a super-Power. The Chinese had demonstrated their hostility to socialism by attacking Russia for its policies in Czechoslovakia.

The article echoed Mr. L. Brezhnev's statement on China to the World Communist Conference this year (see page 9153) by saying: "There is a great distance between the schemes of the Maoists, their noisy threats addressed to the Soviet Union and the actual possibilities of realizing them."

But, it added: "Not only in countries which are neighbours of China but also in other countries, anxiety is being expressed over Peking's expansionist ambitions. The military arsenals of the Maoists are being filled with ever new weapons. Yet a war, should it break out in present-day conditions with the exis*ting weaponry*, lethal armaments, and modern means of delivery, would not spare a single continent."

It re-iterated Soviet suggestions for talks between Russian and Chinese leaders to solve the differences between their two countries.

Mobilization Plans:

Meanwhile, according to reports reaching Hong Kong in the last week of August, China was mobilizing its population, dispersing factories against possible air attack, stockpiling food supplies, and sending large troop re-inforcements to the border regions apparently because of fears of a war with the Soviet Union.

Thousands of troops with artillery had been concentrated in public parks in Canton before being sent northwards to the frontier provinces of Sinkiang and Heilungkiang. There had been reports of heavy military traffic on the railways in south China as trains loaded with troops and equipment headed north towards the border provinces.

Veterans of the People's Liberation Army (PLA) had been sent to communes in Kwangtung province near Hong Kong to train the peasants in elementary tactics, the use of weapons, and in some cases "horseback riding." Many communes had formed combat teams of 200 men with a stiffening of militia and PLA men. These local levies were given two hours' military training every day after working hours.

One report said that militia in Sinkiang province had been re-equipped with sub-machine guns, grenades, and automatic rifles. Several towns in Sinkiang province had been partially evacuated by the civilian population.

There had been innumerable reports of meetings in the communes of Kwangtung province to prepare the population for a war with Russia. All traffic in Canton was brought to a halt several times in August by anti-Soviet demonstrations.

A directive from the Communist Party Central Committee in Peking relayed by loudspeakers to the population on August 23 gave warning that war could break out between the Soviet Union and China at any time.

The directive assured the people that China had enough food to last for 20 years. (A food shortage reported from some parts of China was attributed to the disruption of food supplies caused by the heavy military traffic on the railways.)

The big southern port of Canton had had two practice air raid alerts recently during which aircraft flew over the city, searchlights were operated, and aircraft batteries manned, and the population sent to air raid shelters.

B. Rise In Industrial Output: According to an official Japanese analysis, China's industrial production increased considerably during the first half of 1969 compared with the first half of 1968, but was still below the level prevailing before the Cultural Revolution started in May, 1966.

Japanese officials also believed that China laid emphasis on a gradual and flexible reform of the economy.

The analysis showed that China's industrial output had turned upward from the latter half of 1968. China had a comparatively good Summer crop this year, but Government purchases and storage of crops had created problems.

In foreign trade, China's exports in the first six months of 1969 increased by 15 per cent, and imports by 5 per cent over the same period in 1968. But both exports and imports were not as brisk as in the corresponding period of 1967, and the total amounts of contracts concluded at this year's Spring Commodity Fair in Canton fell below those of 1968.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Mr. Dinesh Singh's Visits To Moscow And Yugoslavia; TV Transmission Agreement With USA; Crude Oil Purchase By Spain; Paper Famine Forecast; Split In RSP.

A. Mr. Dinesh Singh's Visit To Moscow: In a Joint Statement issued in Moscow on September 17 at the end of the Foreign Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh's visit, India and USSR declared that political and economic development of the countries of Asia and co-operation among them formed the best basis for the preservation and consolidation of peace, stability and security in this part of the world.

It defined equality, mutual benefit, respect for territorial integrity and sovereignty and non-interference in each other's internal affairs as the principles that should govern co-operation among Asian nations.

The Statement revealed that during the talks between Mr. Dinesh Singh and the Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Andrei Gromyko, the Indian side emphasized the importance it attached to the Tashkent Declaration and recounted the steps India had taken in implementing this Declaration and in improving Indo-Pakistan relations in the spirit of this Declaration.

It added: "The two sides considered in all its aspects the friendly co-operation existing between India and the Soviet Union and noted with satisfaction that in the political, economic, cultural, scientific and other fields the co-operation has progressed impressively and holds great opportunities for further expansion."

The two sides, the Statement said, were convinced that great opportunities existed for further expansion of Indo-Soviet economic co-operation in various fields.

They took note of the "continuing tense situation in South-East Asia and West Asia and the continuation of colonial and racial domination in Africa" and expressed the belief that all peace-loving countries should direct their efforts towards an early peaceful solution of these topical international problems in accordance with the aspirations of the peoples of the world.

On Viet-Nam, the two Foreign Ministers re-affirmed that it was essential to recognize the Viet-Namese people's right to decide their own destiny without foreign interference and on the basis of the 1954 Geneva Agreement.

They felt that Israel's refusal to implement the UN Security Council's resolution of November 22, 1967, and her repeated acts of provocation were responsible for the serious aggravation of the West Asia situation.

B. Mr. Dinesh Singh's Visit To Yugoslavia: On September 18, the Minister of External Affairs, Mr. Dinesh Singh ended an official visit to Yugoslavia, during which he held talks with the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Mirko Tepavac and other officials.

Later, in a joint communique, Mr. Tepavac and Mr. Dinesh Singh expressed confidence that non-alignment would play an important role in the changed world situation.

They exchanged views on questions of mutual interest. On basic questions there was close identity of views.

They noted with satisfaction that during the last several years co-operation between the two countries had further intensified and there were great possibilities for its expansion.

They agreed that non-alignment constituted not only a lasting link between India and Yugoslavia but offered a major contribution to understanding and world peace. They were confident that in the changed world situation, non-alignment would play an important role in the promotion of co-operation and peace in the world.

They voiced concern over the Viet-Nam situation and re-affirmed that a settlement should be arrived at on the basis of the Geneva Agreement and of recognition of the right of the Viet-Namese people to decide their own fate. It was possible to step up progress towards such a settlement through peaceful negotiations.

On West Asia, they said the situation was grave because of the continued occupation of Arab territories by Israel and the growing tension. Urgent steps were necessary for the implementation of the Security Council resolution (calling for Israeli withdrawal from occupied territory). India and Yugoslavia would co-operate both mutually and with other peace-loving nations for securing its implementation.

C. Mr. A. Kosygin On S-E Asian Security: During a stop-over at Calcutta airport on September 10 on his way back from Hanoi after attending the funeral of the North Viet-Namese President, Dr. Ho Chi-minh, the Soviet Premier, Mr. Alexei Kosygin said that the main idea behind the projected Asian security plan was to unite the peace-loving forces in South-East Asia not for war but for preservation of peace in this region.

Such unity of peace-loving forces, he said, would be a real danger for the aggressors, who might try to disturb peace.

He said that a controversy over arms supply to Pakistan by the Soviet Union was being artificially created by those who did not relish the friendly ties that existed between India and his country. "We would never exchange our friendship with India for anything else. We will keep this friendship, as we value it above everything else."

D. TV Transmission Agreement With USA: The Department of Atomic Energy and the US National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) signed in Washington on September 18 an Agreement that would enable India to take advantage of a satellite that NASA would put in synchronous equatorial orbit for making television available in every part of the country.

Under current plans, the three television transmitters to be set up in Ahmedabad, Bombay and Delhi would be of use only in the cities and their immediate environs. But when NASA put up its first experimental Application Technology Satellite (ATS) in 1972, Indian TV transmitters would able to use it in such a manner that not only these three cities but any spot in India could pick up the transmission clearly.

Dr. Vikram Sarabhai, who signed the Agreement on behalf of the Department of Atomic Energy, said it was proposed to make the maximum use of ATS for fulfilling family planning objectives, improving agricultural practices and forging national integration. ATS, however, would be available to India for one year (1972-73). He hoped that by that time India itself would be able to place its own satellite in orbit to continue the work begun under ATS auspices.

While NASA would foot the bill for putting up ATS, India would spend about Rs. 3 crores for designing and manufacturing TV equipment for the ground segment.

E. First Super-Power Transmitter Commissioned: All-India Radio's first super-power medium wave transmitter was commissioned by the Information, Broadcasting and Communications Minister, Mr. Satya Narayan Sinha at Mogra, 60 km from Calcutta on September 22.

Inaugurating the 1,000-kw transmitter, Mr. Sinha said it was a red-letter day for his Ministry as well as the country because the transmitter was 10 times more powerful than the second biggest in the country.

The Rs. 3-crore transmitter was described as "a new landmark" in the history of A-IR's external service broadcasting.

The super transmitter is particularly meant to cover China and South-East Asia and will enable reception in those countries even by a single-band set.

The transmitter will have a range of 300 km during the day and about 2,000 km at night.

G. News Exchange Agreement With UAR: India and UAR agreed in Cairo on September 12 to strengthen co-operation between their national news agencies and radio net-works to ensure authentic information about each other.

It was agreed that the radio net-works in the two countries, besides broadening their co-operation in the exchange of information and background material should also maintain correspondents in each other's countries.

The Agreement was reached following talks in Cairo between India's Minister of State for Information and Broadcasting, Mr. I. K. Gujral, and the UAR's Minister for National Guidance, Mr. Mohammed Fayek.

I. Survey On Indian Scientists In USA: According to a study conducted in America on behalf of the Institute of Applied Manpower Research, more than half the number of Indian scientific and technical personnel who were practically settled in USA were engaged in research and development—mostly in basic research.

Out of 1,316 Indians in "major fields of greatest scientific competence," 1,137 were in the field of physical and life sciences, 122 in social sciences and 57 in other fields. Among them, chemists formed the largest single group (402). A classification of the others showed that there were 318 in the field of physics, 158 in biological sciences, 130 in mathematics, 53 in statistics, 39 in earth sciences, 25 in meteorology and 12 in agricultural sciences.

Among the scientists, 784 (78 per cent) held doctorates, 454 (54 per cent) possessed Master's degrees and 50 were Bachelors of Science. Of these, 522 were engaged in basic research, 156 in applied research and 54 in development.

The report did not refer to the entire stock of Indian scientific and technical personnel in employment in USA. It covered only those who volunteered for registration in the US National Register.

An analysis of the registrants by their citizenship or visa status indicated that while 48.3 per cent (635) of them had acquired status which had paved or could pave the way for their stay in that country on a permanent footing, 51.7 per cent (681) held non-immigrant or temporary resident visas. In the first group, 450 held permanent resident visas and the rest reported themselves as naturalized US citizens. All those naturalized US citizens could be considered to constitute the hard core of the "brain drain" of such persons from India to that country.

According to the report, unless an Indian employed in the United States had taken over American citizenship or had applied for the same, the possibility of his return to India could not be completely ruled out. It was the group of permanent residents and non-immigrants which, according to the report, should be given priority consideration while formulating incentives designed to promote the repatriation of Indian scientific and technical personnel in USA.

J. Crude Oil Purchase By Spain: It was announced in New Delhi on September 15 that India had secured a substantial order for supply of crude oil to Spain.

The successful negotiations conducted by the Oil and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC) had not only found a place for India in the highly competitive oil business in Europe, but also helped in disposing of crude oil from its share in the off-shore concession area in Iran.

The ONGC, which is a major partner in the joint exploration in Iran, recently found itself in a predicament when it was asked to lift its quota of crude within a specific period. It could not lift its share of 100,000 tonnes of crude oil, nor could it find a market elsewhere.

A private oil refinery in Spain had agreed to take initially 70,000 tonnes of crude oil from India's share in the Iranian field. The Agreement provided for larger supply when the yield was fully developed.

L. Extension Of Central Labour Rules To Jammu And Kashmir—Pakistani Protest Rejected: On September 18, India rejected Pakistan's protest Note against extension of some Central labour regulations to Jammu and Kashmir.

The Indian Note, presented to the Pakistan High Commission in New Delhi, considered the Pakistani protest as another attempt by the Government of Pakistan at unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of India in furtherance of Pakistan's ambitions on Indian territory.

It expressed the hope that the Government of Pakistan would desist from such interference in future.

M. Paper Famine Forecast: A paper famine in the country has been predicted by the Economic and Scientific Research Foundation if steps are not taken immediately to improve the "resources outlook" in the industry.

These steps include rational pricing of forest products, intensive plantation programmes, investments in infrastructure, a multi-product approach to resource utilization and development of the industry on the lines of "mother pulp and baby mills."

The genesis of the crisis, the Foundation says, could be traced simply to the exhaustion of the obvious supplies of cheap and easily accessible resources. In its initial over-enthusiasm the industry obviously had "skimmed the cream" of the existing resources and it would now have to procure more supplies from less accessible and low quality sources.

It makes the point that a paper famine is round the corner and that there is likelihood of a serious shortage of pulpable resources in the mid-seventies. If nothing is done to check the brewing crisis, the pulp and paper industry will be greatly hampered within the next five years.

The situation is not an outcome of any major acceleration of demand. Indeed, the annual rate of growth of demand has been a steady 8 per cent. The estimated levels of demand in 1975—1,00,000 tonnes of writing and printing paper and 544,000 tonnes of industrial paper—reflected moderate rates of growth. In contrast, though, the demand for newsprint had been quite striking. The estimated demand by 1975 would be 313,000 tonnes.

N. Split In RSP: A section of the Revolutionary Socialist Party (RSP), a constituent of the United Front Governments of Kerala and West Bengal, broke away from the parent organization under the leadership of Mr. Keshab Sharma on September 12 to form a new party—the Revolutionary Socialist Party of India (Marxist-Leninist-ML)—at a conference held recently in Bihar.

The RSP, in its election manifesto of December 14, 1966, had said that it stood for "changing the Constitution to ensure effective political power" to the elected representatives and demanded "regional autonomy" for tribal areas, nationalization of basic and key industries, overhauling of the planning organization and annulment of rural indebtedness. The Party worked through the Constitution and joined the UF Government of Kerala with its six members in the Legislative Assembly of 133 members and the West Bengal UF Government with its 12 members in the 280-member Assembly or the 218 constituent members.

The RSPI (ML) is opposed to participation in parliamentary politics which, it believes, leads to revisionism and petit bourgeois deviations. It aims to "immediately engage itself in developing an armed struggle". Mr. Sharma is trying to create a united front of all revolutionary groups on the basis of an agreed common programme. He recently met at Calcutta Mr. Barry Shepherd, a leader of the Fourth International with headquarters at Brussels, as also the Trotskyists in Bengal. He has already contacted Mr. Nagi Reddy of Andhra, who is known to have evolved a revolutionary strategy which aims, in the first instance, to capture lands of big landlords in forested mountains, and then expand similiar activities to plains and towns to overthrow "big bourgeois landlord rule" with the help of volunteer corps armed with locally available weapons including spears, arrows, axes etc.

The new party maintains a neutral position in regard to USSR and China. While it concedes that the Soviet Union has deviated from the Marxist practice and developed State capitalism, it does not subscribe to the Chinese or the Naxalite accusation that it is practising "social imperialism."

O. Increase In Agricultural Income-tax In West Bengal: The West Bengal Cabinet decided on September 11 to increase the rates of agricultural income-tax and reduce to Rs. 1,500 from Rs. 3,000 the level of agricultural income exempted from the purview of taxation, with a view to raising additional resources.

An official spokesman said that for this purpose the Bengal Agricultural Income-Tax Act, 1944 would be amended. The measures would yield an additional revenue of Rs. 32,00,000 per year. The revenue from agricultural income-tax in 1968-69 had amounted to Rs. 1.72 crores.

Under the proposed amendment, 60 per cent of the gross agricultural income would be taken as cost of production and the taxes would be levied on the balance at rates varying from five paise to 70 paise per rupee.

The spokesman added that all persons owning more than 10 acres of agricultural land would be required to furnish all details of their income from agriculture to income-tax officers within specified dates.

P. Medium In Private Schools—Punjab Orders Status Quo: The Punjab Chief Minister, Mr. Gurnam Singh, announced in Chandigarh on September 15 that the status quo regarding the medium of instruction in Government-aided private schools in the State would continue.

The Jana Sangh had threatened that if the language controversy was not resolved by September 15, its alliance with the Akali Dal would break up and its two Ministers, Mr. Balramjidas Tandon and Mr. Krishan Lal, would quit the Cabinet. A meeting of the Working Committee of the Akali Dal, to consider the issue, had been indefinitely postponed to the annoyance of the Jana Sangh Ministers.

At present, parents have the option to choose the medium of instruction of their children in private schools. The main demand of the Jana Sangh was that the status quo should be maintained.

According to Mr. Gurnam Singh, the Jana Sangh had conceded that Punjab was a unilingual State and there was no linguistic minority. It was decided that Punjabi would be the medium of instruction from the primary class in Government schools. Parents would have no option to choose the medium in these schools.

Q. Cost Of Mid-term Elections: The last mid-term elections in Bihar, Punjab, UP and West Bengal cost the exchequer Rs. 3.20 crores.

The largest amount of Rs. 1.40 crores, was spent in UP. Bihar came next with Rs. 1.08 crores. The West Bengal poll cost Rs. 56,54,000 while in Punjab, the amount was only Rs. 14,64,000.

A small part of the total expenditure was recovered (Rs. 9,55,000) by way of forfeiture of security deposits from 3,821 candidates. The largest number of candidates, mostly Independents, who paid the penalty for failing to secure the qualifying number of votes came from UP (1,791).

R. Cases Pending In High Courts: In a survey published in New Delhi on September 14, UP was the most litigant State, judging from the number of outstanding cases in the Allahabad High Court.

The total number of first and second appeals, writ petitions and other pending cases in all High Courts in India at the beginning of the current financial year was 3,67,185. Of these, the Allahabad High Court had 75,235. The next in order was the Calcutta High Court with 61,932 cases. Kerala stood third with 42,356 cases. Next came Bombay with 30,918.

The other High Courts with pending cases, in descending order, were: Madras (26,382); Punjab and Haryana (21,504); Delhi (20,573); Gujarat (17,002); Andhra (16,007); Mysore (13,331); Madhya Pradesh (11,953); Rajasthan (9,005); Orissa (8,401), Patna (8,213); Assam (3,243) and Jammu and Kashmir (1,080).

The total number of writ petitions in all the High Courts was 70,591, of which Kerala had the largest number (7,605).

S. Cost Of Natural Calamities: Between 1957-58 and 1967-68, natural calamities cost the nation about Rs. 289.3 crores—far more than the cost of the Bhakra Dam.

In 1967-68, expenditure touched a new high with Rs. 82.72 crores—Rs. 5.87 crores more than that for 1966-67. Expenditure on relief from various natural calamities showed a steady rise from Rs. 8.66 crores in the beginning to Rs. 82.7 crores in 1967-68. In 1966-67 it was Rs. 76.85 crores.

West Bengal was persistently dogged by natural calamities. Its expenditure rose from Rs. 2.9 crores to Rs. 8 crores during the period. It topped the list with a total expenditure of Rs. 61.82 crores, followed closely by Bihar with Rs. 1.80 crores to Rs. 25.62 crores. The total expenditure in Bihar during the period was Rs. 46.79 crores.

The Fifth Finance Commission recently recommended Rs. 14.47 crores annually for the States for relief from natural calamities. It considered the expenditure for 1966-67 and 1967-68 as "clearly abnormal" as large parts of the country were drought-hit during these two years.

The scheme will apply to families of freedom-fighters who are no longer alive.

The amount of the pension sanctioned to a freedom-fighter will not be less than Rs. 200 a month and in the case of families, it would vary from Rs. 100 to Rs. 200 per month. Only one member of the family will be eligible for the pension.

U. Bus Accident: Huge boulders suddenly hurtled down and hit a passing bus near Joshimath in the Himalayas on September 17, killing 25 of the 27 persons aboard. They belonged to Chandigarh and Amritsar.

Under the impact of the shattering rockfall, the bus plunged 400 feet down a misty precipice.

The vehicle formed part of a 12-bus convoy carrying over 400 Sikh pilgrims to Hem Kund in the border district of Chamoli. It belonged to a private company. Hem Kund is considered sacred by Sikhs as Guru Gobind Singh spent some time in meditation in that Himalayan retreat.

This was the second major accident of the season. The victims of the previous accident, in which a pilgrim bus fell into a ravine near Dara Kuchi on the Joshimath road in the first week of August, numbered 37.

V. "Dragon" Rocket Launched: The two-stage Dragon rocket fired from the Thumba Equatorial Rocket Launching Station on September 21 to study atmospheric conditions in the range of 100-350 km failed to yield the required data.

Mr. H. G. S. Murthy, Director of the Station, said the performance of the rocket was normal but the telemetry signals could be obtained only for 25 seconds. The radar also could track the rocket only for 90 seconds. The causes of the failure were under study.

The rocket had been supplied by France and the radio frequency spectrometer payload by the Soviet Union. The experiment was under a collaboration programme between India and the Soviet Union.

IRAQ

A. Abu Dhabi Ruler's Visit: Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan al-Nahyan of Abu Dhabi paid an official visit to Iraq from July 24 to 28 when he held discussions with President Ahmed Hassan al-Bakr and other leaders.

The Sheikh and his party also visited centres of interest.

A Joint Statement issued on July 28 at the conclusion of the talks between the delegation led by the Sheikh and Iraqi leaders said in part:

"The two sides emphasized that the present Arab circumstances dictate the necessity of galvanizing endeavours and massing up Arab possibilities for confronting the Zionist-Israeli aggression on our Arab territories and for backing up the struggle mounted by our Palestinian brothers for attainment to their legitimate rights in their homeland, Palestine.

"The two sides also emphasized the importance of the role played by their highnesses the rulers of the Arab principalities in the Arab Gulf for ensuring the creation of the Federation of the Arab Principalities. This Federation is considered a pressing nationalist demand, a constructive step up the road of Arab unity and a straightforward path for ensuring the security and stability of this dear region."

KOREA (North)

A. Foreign Relations: A French news agency correspondent who recently visited Pyongyang, in a despatch published by several Western newspapers in the second week of August, reported that North Korea's diplomatic relations with the outside world were those of a communist nation paying a hard price for its independence by unequalled isolation.

Its relations with China were poor, with the Soviet Union somewhat ambiguous and with the Western world non-existent.

The official history of the Korean War, which ended with the Armistice signed at Panmunjom in 1953, did not mention the role played by Chinese "volunteers" who fought at the side of the North Korean Army.

Pyongyang's discreet policy of keeping its distance from the two communist giants, the Soviet Union and China, was deeply rooted.

North Korea was organized and disciplined to be kept in constant alert for any "imperialist aggression". It had deliberately ignored the Cultural Revolution in China, and Chinese Red Guard attacks on the Prime Minister, Marshal Kim Il Sung for his attitude towards the movement, made clear how they felt about it. Marshal Kim Il Sung gave his reply in October, 1968 by accusing China of failing to follow an "objective" policy as an enemy of the United States.

North Korea reasoned—and this was the crux of the disagreement with Peking—that China was "in error" and had harmed North Korea by hurling abuse both at the Soviet Union and the United States. "The enemy must be crushed, but an erring friend must be first criticized and then put back on the right path", the Marshal told the ruling Korean Workers' Party.

The relationship with the Soviet Union was not cloudless, but the difficulties had more subtle causes. Pyongyang felt that Moscow had strayed in carrying out "de-Stalinization", but saw in the Soviet Union less of an obstacle to the forming of a "common front" with North Viet-Nam against "American imperialism". Pyongyang was worried about certain steps taken by Moscow towards an understanding with USA and was even somewhat agitated over some of them. It was unlikely, for instance, that North Korea appreciated the readiness with which the Soviet Nnion had helped the United States to search for the American reconnaissance aircraft shot down last April by the North Koreans.

There were no non-communist diplomatic missions in Pyongyang. Switzerland alone in the Western world had solved the difficulty of extending diplomatic recognition to North Korea by naming Mr. Oscar Rossetti, the Swiss Ambassador in Peking, as the "personal representative" of Berne's political department to the Foreign Ministers of Hanoi and Pyongyang.

The fact was that the real test of North Korea's relations with the outside world was its fight against "American imperialism". This anti-imperialist struggle, purified of worries about "revisionism" and "contestation", inspired a kind of "third force" within the communist world, uniting in a single crusade North Viet-Nam, Cuba and the Japanese Communist Party.

The North Korean Government was one of the first to suggest sending men to North Viet-Nam on October 5, 1966. Marshal Kim Il Sung had urged communist countries to send international volunteers to North Viet-Nam and added that his country was ready to send a contingent. On February 10, 1968, Pyongyang Radio, quoting a Foreign Ministry statement, re-iterated North Korea's readiness to fight on the side of North Viet-Nam if Hanoi wanted it, but President Ho Chi-minh never took up this offer.

NEPAL

A. Achievements Of Rashtriya Panchayat Session: The Budget session of the Rashtriya Panchayat (National Council), which commenced on June 18, adopted a number of legislative measures for strengthening the party-less set-up in the country.

One law raised the salaries of the Prime Minister, his Cabinet colleagues and the members of the Panchayat. Another defined the Commander-in-Chief's authority and powers. Facilities given to the Judges of the Supreme Court were extended and the emoluments of the members of the Public Service and Election Commissions increased.

The Class and Professional Organizations Bill laid down that elections to the local panchayats could be contested by only such persons as were members of the six class organizations mentioned in the Constitution, thus disqualifying several contestants.

The most important measure adopted at the session was the (Political) Organizations and Associations (Control) Bill, replacing the existing law found defective by the Supreme Court. The Bill imposed a blanket ban on political speeches, propaganda, demonstrations and meetings. To the critics of the Bill, who said it curtailed freedom of speech and violated the constitutional provision guaranteeing the right to establish associations and organizations, the Home and Panchayat Minister, Mr. Khadga Bahadur Singh, who piloted the Bill, replied: "Partisan feelings or party politics cannot be encouraged or permitted, as party-lessness is the very heart-beat of the panchayat system."

[A former Premier and leader of the Nepali Congress, Mr. B. P. Koirala, had been released a year ago and on June 19, 1968, King Mahendra had pardoned 29 political workers, in response to the Nepali Congress leaders' gesture, when on May 15, 1968 they affirmed from Calcutta "fullest and loyal co-operation in his endeavours to build a strong, united and prosperous Nepal." Another batch of 175 self-exiled Nepali Congress workers was granted pardon on January 10, 1969. The released leaders, however, soon extended their influence in the country-side and the Government felt they had adopted an "uncompromising attitude" favouring a gradual evolution of parliamentary institutions in the country against the present party-less panchayat system.]

Political activities and parties had been banned in the country on the dismissal of the first elected Government and the dissolution of Parliament by the King on December 15, 1960. The Home Office Order of December 16, 1960 had banned public meetings and political activities "to check mischief perpetrated in the name of democracy, to safeguard the true spirit of democracy and advance the happiness and welfare of the people." The blue-print of the panchayat democracy (also called "natural democracy" in the Royal Proclamation of September 12, 1962) was presented to the people on July 16, 1961 "as an alternative to both communism and parliamentary democracy". On December 16, 1962 the new Constitution providing for a Government based on the panchayat system was promulgated.

On September 22, 1967 the King had told the Rashtriya Panchayat, "The current party-less Panchayat democracy has successfully crossed several hurdles on its way and made substantial achievements." Five days later, on September 27, the Council unanimously decided that the partyless panchayat system was "the best medium for ensuring Nepal's progress and prosperity" and that "there was no alternative to it." The King again told the National Council on June 28, 1968: "The present partyless panchayat system which resolved to fulfil national aspirations is today making unimpeded progress" and ruled out in emphatic terms, on February 18, 1969, while celebrating Democracy Day, any revival of political parties since the panchayat system assured the people "full democratic freedom."

The amended Bill thus sought to safeguard the party-less panchayat set-up against inroads from the parliamentary democratic front.

PAKISTAN

A. PDM Dissolved: The Pakistan Democratic Movement (PDM), a component of five political parties, was formally dissolved on August 12.

The decision to dissolve PDM was taken unanimously at a meeting of the leaders of the component parties held in Lahore under the chairmanship of Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan.

The leaders who attended the meeting included Mr. Nurul Amin, Mian Mumtaz Mohammad Khan Daultana, Sardar Shaukat Hayat Khan, Khan Ghulam Mohammad Khan Lundkhawr, Mr Mahmud Ali, Maulana Abul Aala Maudoodi, Maulana Tufail Mohammad, Mr. Nasim Hassan, Mr. Zakiuddin Pal and Mr. Sabir Jafri.

Formed in May, 1967 the PDM had consisted of five political parties, namely, Nizam-i-Islam, Awami League (Nawabzada Nasrullah Group), NDF, Council of Muslim League and the Jamaat-i-Islami. Three of the parties, namely, Nizam-i-Islam, NDF and the Awami League had already been merged into the Pakistan Democratic Movement.

Although all the constituent parties of the PDM agreed on the restoration of the 1956 Constitution, they did not find any need for an alliance in the form of PDM. The eight-point programme of PDM had related to lifting of Emergency, release of political prisoners, federal parliamentary form of Government and direct elections to the Assemblies.

Nawabzada Nasrullah Khan said that the dissolution of the PDM had become necessary due to some technical difficulties following the merger of three parties into a single party. He was glad that the component parties still stood committed to the eight-point programme of PDM and said they would continue to work separately and jointly to achieve all its objectives.

Khan Ghulam Mohammad Khan Lundkhawr voiced his disapproval over the merger of Awami League in the new party and said there were several Awami League leaders and workers who still wanted to have a separate entity for the party.

B. Accord On Regional Transport Survey: Representatives of the Philippines, Indonesia, Laos, Malaysia, Singapore and South Viet-Nam signed on August 20 a participation agreement with the Asian Development Bank (ADB) on a regional transport survey.

A representative of the Government of Thailand signed the Agreement on August 26.

Under the Agreement signed at ADB's temporary headquarters in Makati (Rizal) in the Philippines, the countries participating in the Survey would provide the necessary facilities to ADB's consultants to ensure that the Survey was carried out promptly and efficiently.

ADB's decision to undertake the Survey had been made upon request by Malaysia on behalf of eight South-East Asian countries which participated in the Kuala Lumpur Conference on Transport and Communications in September, 1967.

The Conference had recommended that the Survey should have as its specific objective recommendations for an investment programme for regional transport projects in the medium and long terms.

The underlying motivation for the Survey as envisaged by the Conference was the "development of transport in the region along lines which will maximize the possibilities for progressive economic integration of the countries in the areas."

The participating Governments had made a request to the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) for financial assistance to the Survey. It was expected that the UNDP would participate in the Survey in its second stage when substantive work is done.

The US Government had made a specific offer of a grant of up to $1 million to the Technical Assistance Special Fund of ADB which, together with the contributions of the Bank and others, would make it possible to carry out the Survey.

SINGAPORE

A. National Day Celebrations: The fourth National Day of the Republic and 150th anniversary of the establishment of the Island town of Singapore were celebrated on August 8.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Lee Kuan Yew, warned of "momentous changes" in South-East Asia as the American and British military forces withdrew gradually from the region.

He predicted a trend towards closer co-operation among countries in East and South-East Asia and Oceania and said that the British withdrawal would make it necessary for continued defence co-operation between Singapore and Malaysia.

Mr. Lee was speaking at a banquet where Princess Alexandra, Mr. Angus Ogilvy and a number of Commonwealth Ministers were guests of honour.

Mr. S. Rajaratnam, the Foreign Minister, said that a new "post-Western phase" was beginning, bringing new dangers, most of them more likely to spring from "weakness within the region rather than from external threats".

The Queen, in a goodwill message read by Princess Alexandra, said: "It is my fervent hope and belief that, building on foundations so surely laid, you will go on to still greater achievement in the future and continue to progress in security and harmony."

British Navy Equipment Transferred:

On August 1, Britain severed another link with Singapore when the Royal Navy formally transferred its weapons and radio repair section at the naval base to the Singapore Government, which had formed a new electronic and engineering company to service a wide range of sophisticated equipment from anti-aircraft guns and missile launchers to teleprinters.

The equipment handed over was valued at $3.8 million (Singapore) (about £500,000). The local company would continue to service the Royal Navy until 1971, besides Navies of friendly nations.

Vice-Admiral Sir William O'Brien, commander of the Far East fleet, who represented the British Government, said the smoothness of the transfer testified to the greatest possible goodwill and effort on all sides. This was the second Royal Navy property to be handed over to Singapore. Last December the naval dockyard—Britain's biggest east of Suez—passed into local hands for commercial use.

The same morning, the Defence Minister, Mr. Lin Kim San, inaugurated a flying school at the Royal Air Force Tengah airfield, which would become the training ground for jet fighter pilots of the year-old Singapore Air Force. He said the Singapore Government was greatly indebted to RAF for so generously sharing its facilities at the Tengah and Seletar airfields, and also for its valuable advice. RAF was providing instructors to give primary training to the young pilots who would eventually fly the 20 Hunter jet fighters which Singapore would buy from Britain.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. New Cabinet: The new Prime Minister, Gen. Tran Thiem Khiem, presented to President Thieu on September 1 an enlarged Cabinet which included many new faces, mostly known supporters of the President.

Only nine members of the old Cabinet remained, eight of them keeping their old jobs and one changing posts.

Gen. Khiem remained Minister of the Interior as well as head of the Government.

He enlarged the Cabinet from 23 members, including the President and Vice-President, to 33. Most of the new appointees were politicians rather than technicians, a move advocated by most of the critics of the former Government.

Observers saw Gen. Khiem's retention of the Interior Ministry as a sign of consolidation of power in the pro-Thieu block. They believed that the President will now take a greater share in direction of the Government and continue a hard line in the struggle against the Viet-Cong.

Among the most important changes was an overhaul and expansion of the Economic and Finance Ministries, which had come under severe attack in the National Assembly following a sharp increase in inflation during the past two months.

Mr. Pham Kim Ngoc became Economy Minister, and Mr. Nguyen Bich Hue, Finance Minister. Both were the only technicians among the new appointees.

Senator Tran Van Lam, a former Ambassador to Australia and New Zealand, became Foreign Minister.

Gen. Khiem's former post of Deputy Prime Minister was filled by Dr. Nguyen Luu Vien, who had held the post three times in the past five years.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

SUMMARY: USA Favours Resumption Of Dialogue With China; Soviet Control Of Indian Ocean; ANZUS On Viet-Nam; ECOSOC Annual Session; Age Of Moon Rocks.

A. USA Favours Resumption Of Dialogue With China: Addressing a Press Club luncheon in Canberra on August 8, the American Secretary of State, Mr. William Rogers, said that USA would "soon make another approach to see if a dialogue with Peking can be resumed."

He said: "The United States looks forward to a time when we can enter into a useful dialogue with Peking. We would welcome new talks with China." China "obviously has long been too isolated from world affairs. This is one reason why we have been seeking to open channels of communications."

As to possible reactions to these efforts in Moscow, he said: "We intend to disregard Peking's denunciations of United States efforts to negotiate with the Soviet Union. We intend to disregard Soviet nervousness at steps we take to re-establish contacts between USA and the Chinese Communists."

B. Soviet Control Of Indian Ocean: According to a recent study published by the Royal Institute of International Affairs in London on September 9, the Soviet Union was pushing for control of the Indian Ocean as the most immediate Kremlin objective following on Soviet penetration of the Mediterranean.

When the Suez Canal was reopened, USSR would be the nearest naval Power to the Indian Ocean and evidently ready to move in.

The study, published in the current issue of the Institute's monthly magazine, The World Today, said that Russia had extended more than $1 billion worth of arms and economic aid to Asian nations in the area. One of Russia's most immediate objectives in Asia was the creation of a block against the extension of either Chinese or American political influence into the subcontinent.

Russian ambitions in South Asia dated back to Peter the Great and more recently to Stalin's negotiations with Hitler and the Tashkent accord between India and Pakistan sponsored by Mr. A. Kosygin. "As further evidence of this interest, Moscow has extended more than $1 billion in economic and military aid to these countries, undoubtedly hoping to reap in part the rewards that $6 billion of investment produced in the Middle East. These expectations seem reasonable since the sub-continent now appears more penetrable than at any time in the last 200 years."

The stakes were high. The major part of the Middle East oil must cross the Indan Ocean as did extensive supplies of raw materials for nascent Asian industries.

The study added that in four years Russia had established a powerful permanent military presence in the Mediterranean which had forced general recognition of her stature as a major regional Power and proved that it was relatively cheap to exploit a power vacuum and open a new theatre of military operations and sphere of influence. Moscow might attempt to repeat this experiment in the Indian Ocean by following up political and economic enticements with the establishment of a permanent naval presence there.

British View:

Sir Peter Hill-Norton, British Forces Far East Commander-in-Chief, said in Brisbane (Australia) on September 21 that increasing Soviet presence in the Indian Ocean should be taken seriously by all the countries in the area.

He said that whoever controlled the Indian Ocean controlled three of the world's main focal points—the Suez Canal, the Straits of Malacca and the Cape of Good Hope.

He said the Soviet presence in the Indian Ocean coincided with the British withdrawal from Aden, the coming withdrawal of forces from South-East Asia and the emergence of independent nations in Africa. Five years ago, he added, there were no Soviet warships in the Indian Ocean, but in the past 2½ years there had always been at least one Soviet vessel, and usually several operating in the region.

C. Russian Parity With USA In Land-based Intercontinental Missiles: The authoritative Institute for Strategic Studies said in its report, "The Military Balance 1969-70", published in London on September 5, that Russia had reached parity with the United States in land-based intercontinental missiles.

The report emphasized that USA was keeping its superiority in the field of submarine-mounted missiles and in the production capacity for multiple nuclear warheads.

The missiles still used liquid fuel, but the Soviet Union was testing multiple warhead re-entry vehicles (MRV) and had the capability of developing multiple independently targeted re-entry vehicles (MIRV).

The Soviet Union had deployed some 200 SS-9 rockets with nuclear warheads of a 25-megaton yield, which constituted a potential menace for American rocket-launching bases. But the new nuclear warheads now being tested for the American MIRV could give USA enormously increased "striking force".

Moreover, the Soviet Union owned only 160 submarine-mounted ballistic missiles against 656 operational on the American side. Britain had 48 of these missiles.

D. ANZUS On Viet-Nam: The ANZUS Council, comprising Australia, New Zealand and the United States, in a communique issued in Canberra on August 8 made it clear that forces of the other allied countries could be withdrawn from Viet-Nam at the same time as the South Viet-Namese took over from the Americans.

The Australian External Affairs Minister, Mr. Gordon Freeth, who presided over the one-day meeting, told a news conference later that there would be consultations between the allies about withdrawal. No consultations were scheduled yet. "There must come a time—we don't see this having arrived—when there will have been replacement of the Americans by the Viet-Namese to such a point that it would be only reasonable to expect US also to be able to withdraw part or whole of our forces. But, he added, "that point has not been reached and may be some time off."

E. ECOSOC Annual Session: The 47th session of the UN Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) was held in Geneva from July 14 to August 8.

Resolutions on several subjects of interest to developing countries were adopted. These included:

(1) Implementation of Decolonization Declaration: The Council called for "concrete assistance" by appropriate organizations of the UN family to "liberation movements." It also recommended that these organizations and other international institutions increase the scope of their aid to refugees from colonial territories, particularly those in Africa. Such assistance, it suggested, should include help to Governments in preparing and carrying out projects beneficial to refugees.

(2) Science and Technology: It extended the term of office of the Advisory Committee on the Application of Science and Technology to Development for two years, to the end of 1971, and enlarged its membership from 18 to 24. It decided that, at a later stage, after it had obtained the views of Governments and UN organizations, it would consider the question of establishing new machinery in this field.

(3) Private Foreign Investment: The Council invited the Secretary-General to organize panels at the regional and global levels for the purpose of considering specific measures to increase the flow of foreign investment to developing countries.

(4) Tourism: It agreed to defer the question of the possible establishment of an inter-governmental tourism organization to its resumed 47th session (later this year). It directed that the conclusions reached at that time should be submitted to the forthcoming General Assembly session. Meanwhile, the Secretary-General was asked to report on the constitutional, organizational and financial implications of setting up such machinery.

(5) Export Promotion: The Council requested the Secretary-General, in co-operation with the International Monetary Fund, to study ways and means of enabling developing countries to ease the balance of payments strains arising from short-term financing of export credits granted by their exporters.

F. World Bank's Financial Statement: The World Bank published in the third week of August its financial statement for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1969, according to which gross income for the year was $410 million, compared with $356 million in 1968.

Expenses, which included $197 million for interest on Bank borrowing, bond issuance and other financial expenses totalled $239 million, compared with $187 million in 1968.

The Executive Directors of the Bank recommended to the Board of Governors, for action at its forthcoming meeting in Washington on September 29 that $100 million of the 1969 net income be transferred as a grant to the Bank's affiliate, the International Development Association. The remaining portion of the year's earnings, $71.4 million, would be transferred to the Bank's Supplemental Reserve, increasing this Reserve to $1,034.3 million. Total reserves, including the Special Reserve, would amount to $1,326 million.

During the fiscal year, the Bank made 84 loans in 44 countries totaling $1,399 million, compared with a total of $847 million in the previous year.

The loans were made to Argentina (2), Brazil (3), Cameroun (2), Ceylon, Chile and China (2), Colombia (6), Cyprus, Ecuador, El Salvador, and Ethiopia (2), Finland, Gabon, Ghana, Guatemala, Guinea and Guyana (2), India (2), Iran (2), Ireland and Ivory Coast (3), Jamaica and South Korea (2), Liberia and Malagasy (2), Malaysia (4), Mexico, Morocco and Nigeria (2), Pakistan (6), Paraguay, Philippines, Senegal, Sierra Leone and Singapore (2), Sudan, Tanzania, Thailand, Trinidad and Tobago (2), Tunisia (4), Turkey (4), Venezuela (2), Yugoslavia (2) and Zambia (4).

This brought the total number of loans to 636 (including $100 million to the International Finance Corporation) in 86 countries and territories and raised the gross total of commitments to $12,917 million. By June 30, as a result of cancellations, exchange adjustments, repayments and sales of loans, the proportion of loans signed still retained by the Bank had been reduced to $8,621 million.

Disbursements on loans were $762 million, compared witih $772 million in the preceding year. Cumulative disbursements amounted to $9,583 million on June 30, 1969.

During the year the Bank sold or agreed to sell $35 million principal amounts of loans, compared with sales of $107 million last year. On June 30, the total of such sales was $2,177 million, of which all except $69 million had been made without the Bank's guarantee.

On June 30, the outstanding funded debt of the Bank was $4,081 million, reflecting a net increase of $791.66 million in the past year.

During the year Botswana, Lesotho and Mauritius became members of the Bank, and the following five countries increased their subscriptions to the Bank's capital: Trinidad and Tobago, Cyprus, Tunisia, Ghana and Burma. Thus on June 30, 1969, there were 110 member-countries and the subscribed capital of the Bank amounted to $23,036.4 million.

G. World Bank Lending Rate Raised: The World Bank announced in August an increase in its lending rate from 6.5 per cent to 7 per cent.

A Bank spokesman said it had been forced to raise its interest rate because of increases in the cost of borrowing funds in world markets.

The increase became effective with the announcement of a $34 million loan to the Philippines for the construction of irrigation facilities.

The last World Bank rate increase was a year ago when it rose from 6.25 per cent to 6.5 per cent (see page 8533).

The Bank last year lent about $1,300 million for projects in developing countries.

H. Increase In Freight Rates To USA: It was announced in New York on September 2 that ocean freight rates to USA from India and Pakistan would increase by about 10 per cent from December 1.

The increase was announced by the West Coast of India and Pakistan-USA Conference, a group of foreign and American steamship firms that establish rates for the commodities trade.

A spokesman for the Conference said that the increase would vary according to commodity. The rates for jute, a key product of the trade route, were still being negotiated.

I. British Parliament's Homage To Mahatma Gandhi: In a resolution passed in August, the British Parliament placed on record its acknowledgment of Mahatma Gandhi's great work for the people of India and the world and his friendship for the people of Britain.

The resolution was moved by Mr. Lewis Carter-Jones, Mr. John Hunt, Mr. David Steel, Mr. Julius Silverman, Dame Jean Vickers, Mr. Laurence Pavitt and Mr. Ben Ford.

It said: "That this House, on the occasion of the centenary year of Mahatma Gandhi, desires to place on record its acknowledgement of his great work for the people of this country, his life of simplicity and understanding which he demonstrated to the world, the importance of the brotherhood of man, the rejection of violence and the achievement of peace; and urges that strong support be given to the United Kingdom Committee responsible for celebrating the Gandhi Centenary in this country."

J. Age Of Moon Rocks: The chief scientist at America's Houston manned spacecraft centre, Dr. Willmot Hess said on August 24 that the Moon rocks brought back by the Apollo-XI astronauts were at least 3,500 million years old.

He said that the estimate was made by four scientists at the lunar receiving laboratory by measuring gases from the rocks with a spectrometre. The findings indicated that the rock was "formed in the very early history of our solar system."

The Earth is generally estimated to be 4,500 million years old.

The four scientists announced that rare bases in the lunar rocks indicated that the material was as old as the oldest rocks from the Earth's crust. The gases also indicated that some of these rocks had been exposed to cosmic rays on the surface of the Moon for hundreds of millions of years.

Most of the material brought from the Moon contained relatively large amounts of "solar wind gases, boiled off from the Sun and caught in the crystal structure of the lunar material." The Earth's magnetic field sweeps the relative low energy solar particles away from the Earth. But the Moon, without a magnetic field, allows them to be captured.

However, several crystalline rocks from the Moon contained considerably fewer solar wind particles than most of the materials studied so far. In the absence of such particles, the decay products from natural radioactive elements, as well as cosmic ray-produced nuclei were clearly identifiable. Thus, investigators were able to estimate certain ages.

These rocks—free of solar wind—had lain within a yard of the Moon's surface for an unexpectedly long time. They said the pick had been on or near the surface, indicating that the lunar surface underwent changes very slowly.

K. Possibilities Of Life On Mars —"Mariner" Space-craft's Findings:

A preliminary examination of data sent by Mariner-6 and 7 has shown that if life were to exist on Mars, it would be greatly different from that on Earth.

US Space Agency scientists said on September 11 that evidence sent to Earth by the spacecraft when they flew past the planet on July 30 and August 4 showed the Martian atmosphere "generally hostile to any Earth-style life forms." Mars appeared to be heavily cratered, bleak, cold, dry and almost air-less.

The scientists said that ultra-violet measurements showed atomic hydrogen and atomic oxygen in Mars' upper atmosphere. Carbon dioxide and carbon monoxide also were present as expected. But the initial study had failed to reveal any evidence of nitrogen. "If additional intensive analysis substantiates this conclusion, a very key chemical compound is missing from the Martian environment."

Measurements with an infra-red spectrometre aboard Mariner-6 showed temperature variations of as much as 75 degrees within a 96-by-96 km area. The data also showed that there was local reflectivity of solar light and the darker spots on Mars were warmer than the light areas.

Temperature measurements showed Martian temperatures at noon as high as 60 degrees, falling at night to 100 degrees below zero.

L. "Zond-7" Returns To Earth:

The Soviet Moonprobe Zond-7 returned to the Earth on August 14, after orbiting the Moon.

Zond-7 had been launched on August 8. Radio Moscow said the automatic spacecraft had completed its programme in the vicinity of the Moon. Zond-7 circled the Moon and "carried out a great amount of scientific research and experiments," before making a guided descent through the Earth's atmosphere and a soft landing in a pre-set area south of Kunstanai in Kazakhstan.

The flight around the Moon followed a trajectory correction manoeuvre.

M. Ban On Nuclear Arms From Sea Bed— US-Soviet Draft Treaty:

The United States and the Soviet Union on October 7 presented to the UN Disarmament Conference in Geneva a joint draft Treaty to ban nuclear arms and other weapons of mass destruction from the sea bed.

The Treaty would come into force after ratification by at least 22 nations, including USA and the Soviet Union.

The agreement between the two super Powers, following seven months of hard bargaining, represented a compromise between the Soviet draft Treaty submitted on March 18 and a US version proposed on May 22.

The original Soviet draft of March had called for a ban on all types of weapons and military installations from the sea bed. The USA had refused to accept this concept on the ground that it would rule out strictly defensive devices such as submarine tracking stations.

Under the joint draft, States party to the Treaty will have the right to verify the activities of other participating countries on the ocean floor, beyond the 12-mile limit, but "without interfering with such activities or otherwise infringing rights recognized under international law including the freedom of the high seas."

The draft stressed that "nothing in this Treaty shall be interpreted as supporting or prejudicing the position of any State party with respects to rights or claims which such State party may assert.... related to waters off its coasts, or to the sea bed and ocean floor."

N. Australian Interest In Indian Ocean:

The Australian Prime Minister, Mr. John Gorton, said in Canberra on October 8 that his country would take an increasing interest in the Indian Ocean and would start preliminary work on a naval base at Cockburn Sound in Western Australia.

Outlining his policy for the October 25 General Election in a nation-wide television and radio broadcast, he said the first step for the naval base would be construction of a causeway linking Garden Island in Cockburn Sound, 25 miles south of Freemantle, with the mainland. Work on the project would start in the second half of 1970. "Thereafter naval facilities will be progressively installed over a period."

He said the Government had already announced that Learmonth airfield in Western Australia would be upgraded to be an operational base on the Indian Ocean.

"We believe that the broad considerations of Australia's geopolitical position and national development point to the conclusion that naval support facilities in Western Australia will also be required in the future.

"Our fleet numbers will increase and we will have to take an increasing interest in the Indian Ocean as the British withdraw."

Mr. Gorton's announcement followed weeks of controversy in Australia about Russian influence in the Indian Ocean. The controversy had been touched off by the External Affairs Minister, Mr. Gordon Freeth's statement that Australia was prepared to look with close interest at any Russian proposals for regional security arrangements. His speech came after other Government supporters—including the retiring Defence Minister, Mr. Allen Fairhall—and the Democratic Labour Party had warned of increasing Russian activity and influence in the Indian Ocean.

A. Guidelines To Industrial Investors: The Ministry of Industries has published lists of industries where investment is welcome and fields in which adequate manufacturing capacity has been installed and authorized.

In approving proposals for setting up new industries, a Government Press Note said that the Ministry would give special consideration to:

(1) Industries which are likely to promote and stimulate the development of agriculture, animal husbandry, fisheries, or the traditional plantation crops—tea, rubber, coconut and cocoa;

(2) Industries based primarily on indigenous raw materials;

(3) Industries with export potential;

(4) Building and construction materials;

(5) Light engineering industries (including electrical and transport equipment);

(6) Processing of raw materials and manufacture of components (imported for use in assembly); and

(7) Essential consumer goods (import substituting).

B. White Paper On Indo-Ceylon Economic Co-operation: A White Paper on Indo-Ceylon economic co-operation was presented to Parliament recently by the Government.

The White Paper stated that the idea of economic co-operation between Ceylon and India "stems from the larger background of a growing need for multi-national co-operation between developing countries", and that it originated in the discussions in Colombo between the Prime Ministers of India and Ceylon when the Indian Premier, Mrs. Indira Gandhi visited Ceylon in September, 1967. At this meeting, the two Governments had "expressed their resolve to promote greater co-operation in economic, commercial and technical fields as well as in the fields of education, tourism, science and culture."

The White Paper referred to the subsequent discussions held at ministerial level in New Delhi in May-June, 1968, the talks between the two Prime Ministers when the Ceylonese Prime Minister, Mr. D. Senanayake visited India in December, 1968, and the first meeting of the Indo-Ceylon Economic Co-operation Committee in Colombo in January, 1969.

The document contained the text of the communiques issued after these discussions, the statements made by the leaders of the two delegations at the first meeting of the Committee in Colombo in January this year, and the texts of relevant resolutions on regional economic co-operation adopted at the Second UNCTAD in New Delhi and the Third ECAFE Ministerial Conference in Bangkok in December, 1968.

SUMMARY: Gujarat Riots; Northern Zonal Council; Rebel Nagas Surrender; IDA Credit For Railways; Manipur Ministry Falls; Car Prices Fixed; Madras Refinery Inaugurated; Narmada Waters Tribunal Set Up.

A. Communal Riots In Gujarat: Communal riots, the worst since Independence, were sparked off in Ahmedabad (Gujarat) on September 18 when the Jagannath temple was attacked and Hindu ascetics who were driving about 200 head of cattle were manhandled by a Muslim procession heading for a religious function.

About a month earlier, a copy of the Quran had fallen down from a push-cart by collision with a police jeep. A fortnight later, disrespect was shown to the Ramayana.

There were group clashes on September 19 and curfew was clamped on four of the affected areas. There were 400 incidents on September 20 which included arson, shop-breaking, stabbing and firing. Riots broke out in Baroda on September 21. The districts of Mehsana and Nadiad were also affected. The police opened fire several times and bombs and other explosives were recovered from a shrine. Mr. Jethalal Vaidya died intervening in a clash between two groups. The city of Ahmedabad was then handed over to the military authorities. The fury of the riots reached its climax on September 22, when an attempt was made to attack the Sabarmati Ashram, which Mahatma Gandhi had established. The death toll had by then reached 350, with 2,200 persons arrested and 800 injured.

About 40 persons were killed on September 23, and arson and stabbing occurred in Gondol, 40 km from Rajkot. The Army, Border Security Force, State Police, CRP and SRP continued their round-the-clock vigil and arrested a few of the Jana Sangh and Mahasabha leaders on September 24. The search of a mosque yielded quantities of acid and explosives. The police resorted to firing at Anand to quell a violent mob. On September 25, the 21 UP Janta Express and the Ahmedabad-Karanja local train were attacked at wayside stations, and 17 persons were killed and several injured. There was, however, general improvement in the next few days. Curfew was relaxed on September 26 and Ahmedabad passed a peaceful night for the first time. The textile mills recommenced operation on all the three shifts from September 29 and buses plied in the normal way.

The Kutbi Mohalla of Ahmedabad, predominently a Muslim locality, remained a memorable example of peace and amity where, under the guidance and initiative of Mr. Nomanbhai Miyanbhai, a retired Chief Justice of the Gujarat High Court, full protection was given to the Hindus by the Muslims and life continued to be normal throughout.

It was estimated that the death toll during the eight days of rioting were between 1,000 to 1,500, with about 1,000 injured. Damage to property and business was great.

A deputation of three Members of Parliament—Mr. Asad Madni, Mr. Charanjit Yadav and Mr. Ranbir Singh— at the instance of the Prime Minister, visited Ahmedabad on September 23 and discussed the situation with the leaders of the Congress Party and the Opposition. They expressed general satisfaction with the performance of the Army and its efforts to control the situation. They also met Mr. Morarji Desai, who felt that there was "a mysterious hand "behind the riots. The deputationists, other Congress MPs and Mr. D. Sanjivayya, former Congress President, on September 25 demanded a judicial probe into the riots to determine whether any foreign element had a hand in the disturbances.

Mr. Y. B. Chavan, the Central Home Minister, toured the affected areas on September 24.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, undertook an extensive tour of the riot-affected areas on September 25. She announced a donation of Rs. 1,00,000 from the Prime Minister's Relief Fund. Later at Delhi, she discussed the situation arising from the riots at a meeting of the Chief Ministers of States and urged upon them to strengthen the intelligence apparatus in their respective States, lay emphasis on preventive measures, set up inter-communal bodies for communal harmony and put down such disturbances ruthlessly. The meeting decided that there should be closer liaison between the Central and State intelligence set-ups, special cells should be established exclusively for communal activities and district administration should be strengthened.

Mr. Jaya Prakash Narayan, who visited Ahmedabad on September 29, described the riots as "a clash between pro-Pakistani elements and pro-Hindu elements."

The Government of Gujarat announced on September 30 the appointment of a Judicial Commission consisting of three Judges of the High Court to make a thorough probe into the causes and other aspects of the riots.

Earlier, on September 25, the Pakistan High Commissioner sought permission of the External Affairs Ministry to send a high-ranking official of the Embassy to Ahmedabad to study the situation, at the same time accusing the Government of India of failure to protect minorities in the country. The request, which the External Affairs Ministry characterized as "an attempt to exploit communal disturbances for propaganda purposes," was turned down.

The President, Mr. V. V. Giri expressed on September 26 his "anguish and sorrow" at the Ahmedabad happenings which were all the more painful as they had occurred "in the city hallowed by Mahatma Gandhi's close association."

Fasts Of Atonement:

Mr. Indulal Yagnik, MP, and leader of Mahagujarat Janta Parishad, who had commenced an indefinite fast in a riot-affected area on September 21 to restore communal harmony, broke it on September 29, while Mr. Morarji Desai, former Deputy Prime Minister, who had started a similar fast on September 23, "to clear his conscience" and revive whatever feelings he could, broke it on October 2, after having lost 11 lbs in weight.

Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, the Pakhtoon leader, who was currently in India to participate in the Gandhi Birth Centenary celebrations, announced at a mammoth public meeting in New Delhi on October 2 that he would undertake a fast for three days from October 3 as a protest against the prevailing violence, mutual hatred and communal feeling among the people of India.

Relief Measures:

The Gujarat Revenue Minister, Mr. P. Thakki, giving details of relief measures, disclosed that the Government had given shelter to 35,000 persons during the first four days of the riots and that about 19 relief camps were being run by the Government and voluntary agencies.

He announced relief payment of Rs. 1,000 each to families who had lost their earning member and Rs. 500 each to those permanently disabled. Victims of the railway incidents would also be paid compensation.

Mr. Y. B. Chavan's Criticism:

Addressing the Consultative Committee of Parliament on Home Affairs in New Delhi on October 8, the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan virtually censured the Gujarat Government for its failure to check in time the savage communal riots in Ahmedabad.

Answering members' criticism that the Government had failed to prevent communal riots in Gujarat and other parts of the country, he said, the Government of India had drawn the attention of the Gujarat Government to the deteriorating communal situation in the State as early as April, 1969. The Central Home Secretary had written to the Chief Secretary of the Gujarat Government on this issue. Later, the recommendations of the Standing Committee of the National Integration Council suggesting setting up of State-level committees for maintenance of communal harmony were forwarded to all State Governments. But even as late as September, 1969, the Gujarat Government wrote to the Centre that the State was "traditionally free from communal problems."

Rejecting the argument that the Gujarat Government did not have enough police force to deal with the situation, he said the State had 40,000 policemen, of whom 19,000 were armed. Many more could be armed at short notice as 33,000 firearms were available.

He also informed the Committee that instructions had been given to the States to recruit Muslims to the police force for the past two years. In regard to the forces under the jurisdiction of the Centre, this was already being done so that the minority community could have enough confidence in the administration.

B. Congress Ban On Defectors Relaxed: On October 7 in New Delhi, the Congress Parliamentary Board relaxed the ban on defectors. In future, they will be disqualified for Cabinet posts in the Governments run by it only for one year and not till the next General Elections. This means considerable dilution of the Haryana formula, adopted in 1968.

The Board decided on relaxation of the demand of Mr. G. N. Singh's group in Madhya Pradesh. Mr. Morarji Desai opposed any move to make things easier for defectors, but he was out-voted.

To provide justification to the change in the Haryana formula, the Board relied on the report of the Committee on Defections, which had recommended a one-year ban. The Committee's report had yet to be adopted by the party: at the Faridabad A-ICC, a general approbatory reference was made to it in the omnibus political resolution.

The immediate impact of the decision will be felt in Madhya Pradesh where Mr. G.N. Singh has been trying to ensure "an honourable place" for his associates who returned to the Congress fold after a two-year spell in office as part of the SVD Government with the Jana Sangh and the Rajmata group.

Mr. Singh and 18 others will qualify for office after another six months, but five of his friends who had deserted him earlier to start the rot in the SVD might press their claims right now.

The concession will not affect the ban on nomination of defectors as Congress candidates in possible mid-term polls.

C. Northern Zonal Council Meeting: The Chief Ministers of four Northern States and the Chief Executive Councillor of Delhi Administration, who met in Srinagar on October 4 for the 11th Northern Zonal Council, decided to have detailed studies made of the communal problem and matters relating to integration in the region and give the item high priority at their next meeting.

In his opening address to the Council, the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, highlighted the communal problem and called for "an all-out war" against the communal menace.

The Council approved a suggestion made by the Rajasthan Chief Minister to set up an association of public sector undertakings in the region to discuss problems of common interest and overcome difficulties through exchange of views.

It also accepted two other suggestions from Rajasthan for exchange of technical personnel working in similar public sector undertakings in neighbouring States for promoting exchange of technical know-how and for consultations between neighbouring States before setting up similar industries along their borders. The instance of sugar was specifically mentioned.

The Council was informed that in the absence of co-ordination and agreement between the States, such a move could create difficulties in obtaining raw materials and skilled labour.

D. Rebel Nagas Surrender: According to an official report received in Kohima on September 18, twenty-two rebel Nagas had surrendered with their arms to the local administration in Siyochung in Tuensang district bordering Burma.

Siyochung is in Sangtam area in Tuensang and this was the first large-scale surrender from the district.

With this, the total number of hostiles who had surrendered in the last six months in various parts of Nagaland came to over 2,220.

All the surrendered hostiles were being rehabilitated by the State Government through its collection centres organized at three places.

Hostile Nagas' Attack:

It was reported from Imphal that a large gang of "Federal Naga Army" armed with light machine-guns and other automatic weapons had made a surprise attack on a Manipur Rifles post at a place in Ukhrul sub-division of Manipur on September 23.

The attack was repulsed by the Manipur Rifles and in a gun battle lasting over an hour, a jawan sustained bullet injury. No casualty on the hostiles' side was known.

In two Naga ambushes on September 24, four persons were killed and four wounded.

Three jawans and an Assistant Commander of Manipur Rifles were killed when they were ambushed by a large gang of China-trained Naga hostiles near Litan, on the Ukhrul road, Official reports said that the gang was armed with automatic weapons.

Cease-fire Extended:

The Assam and Nagaland Governor, Mr. B. K. Nehru, announced on September 30 the extension of the Agreement suspending hostilities by another month ending October 31.

The extremist federal underground faction also announced on September 30 the extension of the cease-fire for another two months ending November 30. The announcement did not contain the specific suggestion that it would be a "complete cease-fire".

E. Pro-China Meeting On "Indian Revolution": A meeting sponsored by the Chinese Revolution Anniversary Celebration Committee, held in Calcutta on October 3 under the presidentship of Mr. Asit Sen, called upon the Indian people to follow the Chinese path of "armed revolution against counter-revolution" and "develop mass economic and political struggle".

Describing the path of the Indian revolution as ""tortuous and protracted", a resolution stated that the Indian people would have to "master all forms of organizations and struggles with the sole object of hastening and co-ordinating them with the highest form of class struggle — the armed struggle" The people would have to effectively combat the influence of varieties of "revisionism" and "Left" efforts.

Maintaining that the Indian revolution could not advance without China and without Mao's Thought it appealed to the Indian people to resolutely defend "Socialist China against the counter-revolutionary moves of imperialism and social-imperialism"

F. Acharya Vinoba Bhave Fears Attack In North-East: In an article in Samyayog, a weekly published from Wardha on October 8, Acharya Vinoba Bhave said that he feared an external aggression on the north-eastern border of the country. He also indicated the area where the attack would come.

He said that the 'bottleneck' on the north-eastern border made Chinese and Pakistan invasions easy. If there were subversive activities in Bengal, Assam would be isolated from the rest of the country. If such an attack were to materialize, the upper portion of the Brahmaputra River might go to China and the lower region to Pakistan. Only the gramdan movement could avoid this danger.

Explaining why he was in a hurry to complete his gramdan mission, he said that the independence of the country could be maintained only through effective gramdan movement.

Naxalite activities, he said, were also gaining ground because of lack of cordial relations between the employers and employees and the general discontent among the people.

G. IDA Credit For Railways: It was disclosed in Washington on September 25 that the International Development Association (IDA), an affiliate of the World Bank, had approved a credit of $55 million (Rs. 41.25 crores) to India.

The credit will cover part of the foreign exchange cost of the investment programme of the Railways for 1969-71. It will be for a term of 50 years, including a 10-year grace period. It will be interest-free but will carry a service charge of 0.75 per cent per annum which will cover IDA's administrative costs.

The largest single category to be financed by the IDA credit (69 per cent) will be the import of components and materials for rolling stock. Other important items will be imported electrical, signalling and tele-communications equipment. With the exception of certain components which will be purchased under licensing agreements and equipment where the Railways use sole source procurement for the sake of standardization, the goods to be financed by the credit will be procured under international competitive bidding.

H. World Bank Loan For Seed Farm In UP: The Deputy Governor of the Reserve Bank and Chairman of the Agricultural Refinance Corporation, Mr. P. N. Damry, disclosed in Bombay on September 29 that documents concerning a new World Bank loan of Rs. 6.9 crores for the Terai seed farm in Uttar Pradesh had been signed recently.

He said that the World Bank had sent out teams to investigate prospects of its assistance in the agricultural fields. He expected assistance to flow into tube-wells, minor and major irrigation schemes, long-term land development projects, tractorization and mechanization of farms and setting up of seed farms.

The Rs. 12.5-crore Terai seed farm is a project receiving assistance from the State Bank of India, through re-finance offered by the Corporation. The State Bank will provide Rs. 9.5 crores, of which the World Bank has assured assistance of Rs. 6.9 crores to meet the foreign exchange cost of the project.

J. Manipur Ministry Falls: The eight-month-old Congress Ministry in Manipur headed by Mr. M. Koireng Singh was voted out of office in the State Assembly in Imphal on September 24.

A motion of no-confidence moved in the 32-member State Legislative Assembly was carried by 19 votes to 11. Nine members of the ruling Congress joined hands with the Opposition. One member was absent.

The no-confidence motion was moved by Mr. Ibohal Singh (CPI) of the United Front Legislature Party.

The Congress has a strength of 20 in the 32-member House.

Mr. Salam Gumbhir Singh, Secretary of the Congress Legislature Party asked the Speaker for "conscience" vote on the motion of no-confidence.

Mr. Koireng Singh submitted his resignation to the Chief Commissioner, Mr. Baleswar Prasad, immediately after the adverse vote in the Assembly. He was asked to continue in office as a care-taker Chief Minister until alternative arrangements were made.

The Ministry's defeat came within hours of the departure of the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, after a day's visit to Imphal.

Mr. Singh told newsmen that he had taken a serious view of the floor-crossing by some Congress members. It was a clear case of indiscipline. The crossing of floor had led to the fall of the Ministry.

K. Car Prices Fixed: The Government of India issued a Gazette notification on September 21 imposing statutory control on the prices of the Ambassador, Fiat and Standard Herald cars.

The action was taken under the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act of 1951 which empowers the Government to control supply, distribution and prices of certain articles.

The notification, which came into effect immediately, fixed the ex-factory price of the Ambassador car at Rs. 15,316, of Fiat at Rs. 14,325 and of Standard Herald (4-door) at Rs. 14,003.

The revised prices provided for an increase of Rs. 424 for the Ambassador and Rs. 774 for the Fiat. There was no price revision in the case of the Standard Herald as the Government was awaiting the recommendations of the Tariff Commission regarding the four-door model. The price of the Standard Herald was pegged at the existing level.

According to the new rates, the prices of the three cars on the road in Delhi would be about Rs. 21,900 for the Ambassador, Rs. 19,700 for Fiat and Rs. 19,800 for the Standard Herald.

There had been no statutory price control on cars hitherto. The industry and the Government had, however, followed the practice of informal price control under which car prices were fixed by mutual consultation.

A Press Note issued by the Ministry of Industrial Development, Internal Trade and Company Affairs said that the Government had taken the action in view of the unilateral price rise of Rs. 2,313 for the Fiat and Rs. 1,267 for the Standard Herald by the manufacturers a few days earlier. The Ambassador manufacturers retained their prevailing selling price.

The Gazette Notification amended the Motor Car Distribution and Sales Order of 1959, issued under Section 18-G of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act. Two new clauses were added to the Order prohibiting the manufacturers from withholding the supplies and the dealers from sales to the consumers at the notified prices.

The prices announced, it was said, had been fixed on the basis of the Tariff Commission's investigation into the cost structure of the car industry. The Commission had been asked in December, 1967 to fix a fair selling price for these cars, taking into consideration the increased labour and other manufacturing costs. Its report was submitted in May, 1969.

In April, 1969, the three manufacturers represented to the Government that they should be allowed to increase the prices of their cars immediately on the ground that they were incurring considerable losses by selling their cars at the approved prices. The increases sought were Rs. 1,750 for the Ambassador, Rs. 1,600 for Fiat and Rs. 1,200 for Standard Herald. In the case of the Ambassador and Fiat, the price increases were sought as a first step.

The manufacturers re-iterated their demand in July, 1969 and sought higher increases (Rs.. 2,541 for Ambassador, Rs. 2,797 for Fiat and Rs. 2,785.71 for Standard Herald). It was represented that the Government should take into account the recent increases in the prices of bought-out components, the increase in the price of steel, the statutory minimum bonus payable under Section 10 of the Bonus Act and additional cost of warranty claims and resultant increase in dealers' margin.

Referring to the manufacturers' demand, official sources maintained that in the Government's view the price rise demanded by the manufacturers was based on an arithmetical calculation without taking into consideration operational efficiency of their plants and the scope for cost reduction. These sources held that in fixing prices, the Government had taken note of its responsibility to ensure efficiency in the industry as well as to make sure that it was just to both the manufacturers and the consumers.

No increase was afforded to the dealers in the revised prices as it was felt that the dealers did not have to put in any special effort for sales promotion in the present market conditions.

Another factor that weighed with the Government was the unsatisfactory nature of after-sales services by the dealers.

The original prices of cars had been fixed after a Tariff Commission inquiry in 1956. Since then, the increases had totalled Rs. 3,702 for the Ambassador, Rs. 3,811 for Fiat and Rs. 4,555 for Standard Herald.

Explaining the Government's decision, a spokesman of the Ministry of Industrial Development said that a paradoxical situation obtained in the automobile industry in which higher production had been accompanied by higher prices.

According to him, the production had nearly doubled in the last few years and yet the manufacturers had not been able to bring down the cost of production. There was no attempt to reduce costs or improve the quality of the vehicles manufactured. The Government had issued certain directives on the basis of the Pande Committee report on the quality of motor cars, but these too had not been carried out faithfully.

He said that in future the Government might ask the Tariff Commission to fix prices of cars on the basis of the production costs of the most efficient unit.

He indicated that in order to force the units in the private sector to reduce costs, the Government might soon take a decision to set up a small car project in the public sector and provide efficient competition to the private sector manufacturers.

The three manufacturers in the private sector together manufacture about 40,000 cars a year. Their production has gone up steadily from 15,711 in 1963 to 37,308 in 1968. The production from January to July, 1969 was 20,137 cars.

Of the three, Hindustan Motors had an installed capacity of 24,000 cars and its production in 1968 was 22,687 cars. Fiat had a capacity of 12,000 and production was 12,276 cars and Herald had a capacity of 3,000 and its production was just 2,345 cars.

The production was not equal to the demand. The Planning Commission had estimated that the demand for cars by 1973-74 would be 75,000 a year. The Government had under consideration the question of allowing expansion of the existing units.

Tariff Commission To Re-Cost "Fiat" Car:

It was stated in New Delhi on October 6 that the Government had not accepted the Tariff Commission's recommendation on the net dealer price of Fiat car and had decided to request the Tariff Commission to re-cost it.

The Tariff Commission's recommendations on automobile prices and the Government decisions were published in a Government resolution on October 6. While accepting the Commission's supplementary report fixing the net dealer price of Ambassador car at Rs. 14,006, the Government did not agree with the method adopted in fixing the Fiat car price at Rs. 13,300.

Writ Petitions Admitted:

The Supreme Court admitted on September 26 the writ petitions filed by Premier Automobiles Ltd., the Standard Motor Products of India and the Hindustan Motors Ltd., challenging the validity of the Motor Cars (Distribution and Sale) Control (Amendment) Order, 1969 fixing the retail sale prices of cars, but refused to grant stay of the operation of the Order.

The hearing of the petitions was, however, expedited and the Court directed the petitions to be listed within a fortnight.

The petitioners, who are manufacturers of the Fiat, Standard Herald and the Ambassador makes of cars respectively, had challenged the constitutional validity of the Order.

It was pleaded that under the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act, the Government was empowered to fix a "fair price" for the sales of commodities. The prices fixed by the Government were based on arbitrary considerations and not on sound economic principles. If the manufacturers were compelled to sell the cars at the prices fixed by the Government, they would run into heavy losses.

It was also pleaded that if Section 18-G of the Act was taken to mean that the Government had unfettered power to fix the price of any commodity, the Section itself was discriminatory and unconstitutional. It was submitted that the prices fixed were unfair and had overlooked obvious costs of manufacture such as depreciation interest on loans and other factors.

L. Madras Refinery Inaugurated: India's most modern petroleum refinery, built with American, Iranian and Italian co-operation at Manali (near Madras), was formally inaugurated by the President, Mr. V. V. Giri, on September 27.

Mr. Giri said that the inauguration of the Madras Refineries Ltd. marked a "qualitative change" in this region in that Tamil Nadu had entered "in a big way the petro-chemical field."

The American Ambassador, Mr. Kenneth B. Keating, said that the occasion was a rare one. "We see representatives of four nations—India, Iran, Italy and USA—whose finest creative and technical talents have blended together to build an industrial plant that ranks with the most modern anywhere on the globe today."

The Iranian envoy, Mr. Mohammad Raza Amir Teymour, and the Italian Ambassador, Dr. Maurizio de Strobel di Fratta e Campocigno, hoped collaboration between Indian organizations and those of their countries would expand in future.

The Rs. 44-crore refinery is designed to process 2,500,000 tonnes of high sulphur darius crude annually. It went on stream in June, 1969. With all the 13 processing units compactly installed on some 80 acres, the Manali refinery offers the widest range of products obtained, though the processing of high sulphur, crude oil—elemental sulphur, naphtha, treated liquefied petroleum gas for cooking, petrol, aviation turbine fuel for jets, kerosene, diesel oil, 11 grades of lube base stocks, industrial fuel and asphalt. With the addition of this refinery, the total available refinery capacity In the country would rise to 20,00,000 million tonnes annually

No member of the Tamil Nadu Government was present at the inauguration. The Chief Minister, Mr. M. Karunanidhi, told newsmen that the Tamil Nadu Government was not consulted about the function. The Industries Minister, Mr. S. Madhavan, who was billed among the speakers, did not turn up at the refinery.

M. Narmada Waters Tribunal Set Up: The Government of India announced the appointment of a three-member Tribunal to go into the inter-State dispute over Narmada waters on October 6.

The Tribunal will consist of Mr. Justice V. Ramaswamy, Judge of the Supreme Court as Chairman, Mr. Justice V.P. Gopalan Nambiar, Judge of the Kerala High Court and Mr. Justice G.C. Mathur of the Allahabad High Court.

The dispute concerns Gujarat on the one side and Madhya Pradesh and Maharashtra on the other. Rajasthan has been called as the pro-forma respondent.

The Central Government referred to the Tribunal a letter dated July 6, 1968 concerning the dispute, received from the Government of Gujarat. The letter, among other things, raised the question of Gujarat's rights to build the Navagam Dam to its optimum height commensurate with the interests of the State and to distribute any surplus power generated. Gujarat also raised an objection to the construction of the Jalsindhi Dam.

The Tribunal will be asked to decide on the procedure it should adopt and the period by which it should give its verdict. The appointment of the Tribunal was made under the Inter-State Water Disputes Act.

Even though four States—Gujarat, Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra and Rajasthan—are concerned in the six-year-old dispute, it is only the first two that have vital stakes on the way the question is settled.

The two State Governments have made conflicting claims in regard to their share of the Narmada waters and efforts of the Central Minister for Irrigation and Power, Dr. K. L. Rao, to bring about an amicable settlement through negotiations have failed.

On May 12, 1969, Dr. Rao announced in Parliament the Government's proposal to refer the dispute to a Tribunal in the same way as the Krishna waters dispute had been referred.

Madhya Pradesh had taken strong objection to the proposal of Gujarat to construct a Dam at Navagam and wanted the bulk of the waters of the river for its own use on the ground that most of the Narmada water runs through the State. Gujarat wanted the Dam to be 500 feet high, but the Madhya Pradesh Government contended that this would lead to submersion of vast areas in that State.

The Narmada Water Resources Development Committee headed by Dr. A. N. Khosla had estimated the irrigation potential of the river at 11,000,000 acres and power potential at nearly 2000 mw. The Committee had prepared a master plan for Narmada valley development, giving irrigation benefits of 6,500,000 acres to Madhya Pradesh, 10,000 acres to Maharashtra, 4,581,000 acres to Gujarat and 100,000 acres to Rajasthan.

In July, 1969, Madhya Pradesh had sought a stay order against the Central Government's decision to appoint a Tribunal to go into the dispute, but it was rejected by the Court.

O. Possibility Of Petro-Chemical Complex In Assam: The Minister of Petroleum and Chemicals, Dr. Triguna Sen, said at a news conference in New Delhi on September 29 that "oil is not there" to start another refinery in Assam, but a petro-chemical complex, which would create more employment opportunities than a refinery, could be started in the State soon.

Dr. Sen said that both the existing refineries in Assam—at Digboi and Gauhati—could be expanded. Such expansion could eventually lead to the establishment of a petro-chemical complex.

While talking of expansion of the existing refineries, he obviously had in mind the potential already created by the Oil and Natural Gas Commission (ONGC) from proven wells. The ONGC could now produce about 1,000,000 tonnes of crude from these wells. But this quantity was hardly adequate to meet the needs of another refinery in the State.

Q. Joint IAS Cadre For Union Territories – Delhi High Court Quashes Central Government Order: The Delhi High Court on September 25 quashed the Central Government's order forming a joint Indian Administrative Service (IAS) cadre exclusively for the Union Territories by merging the Indian Frontier Administrative Service into the Delhi-Himachal Pradesh IAS Cadre.

Admitting writ petitions by Mr. Prem Kumar and 10 other IAS officers challenging the constitutional validity and legality of the new Cadre, the Court also held that the formation of the Delhi-Himachal Cadre of the IAS was ultra vires of the Constitution.

The Court ruled that since the Union Territories were successors of Part "C" States, they were also expressly excluded from the definition of "States". It, however, said that its order shall not be enforceable for a period of two months during which the Government might re-organize the IAS.

The Court ordered that the petitioners be placed in an appropriate State cadre or cadres and the number of officers going to the Central Government from the State cadres be increased. This was to ensure that they would man not only higher posts of the Central Secretariat, but such posts in the Union Territories also. Alternatively, the Central Government could obtain a stay order from the Supreme Court.

The Court also granted the Government leave to appeal to the Supreme Court.

S. Kerala University Act Provisions Held Void: A Full Bench of the Kerala High Court, by a unanimous judgment in Cochin on September 19, struck down several far-reaching and controversial provisions of the Kerala University Act, 1969 as being bad in law and offending Article 19(1)F of the Constitution.

The Court dismissed the batch of 37 writ petitions filed by private college managements belonging to the Christian minority as well as the Nair Service Society (NSS) and SNDP Yogam challenging the Act, except for striking down certain Sections.

The Full Bench also dismissed petitions filed by the NSS and the management of the Sree Sankara College, Kalady, insofar as they related to the running of their institutions, on the ground that they were companies and hence could not claim the rights of a citizen.

The Bench consisted of the Chief Justice, Mr. P. T. Raman Nair, Mr. Justice Govindan Nair and Mr. Justice V. P. Gopalan Nambiar.

The High Court struck down Clauses 2 and 4 of Sections 48 and 49 respectively (dealing with the constitution of the governing body and managing councils in private colleges), Clauses 1, 2 and 3 and 9 of Section 53 (appointment of teachers by the governing body for private colleges, appointment of principals and appeal to the Syndicate), Clauses 2 and 4 of Section 56 (conditions of service of teachers and provision for obtaining the previous sanction of the Vice-Chancellor and appeal to the Syndicate) and Section 58 of the University Act (dealing with teachers elected to State Legislatures and the Lok Sabha except to the extent that it relates to local authorities not involving absence from teaching duties at colleges) as being bad and offending Article 19 (1) F of the Constitution so far as the citizens' petitions' were concerned and also for offending Article 30 (1) of the Constitution so far as minority institutions were concerned.

The Court observed: "Accordingly in all petitions (excepting the petitions filed by Sri Sankara College, Kalady and Nair Service Society registered under the Indian Companies Act and Travancore Companies Act respectively), we grant a declaration that these provisions of the Act are void and unsustainable and no further relief than such declaration seems necessary against parties like the Government and the University."

It also quashed Section 63 of the University Act and said that it was not saved by Article 31 (A) (1) (B). It also offended Articles 39 (1) and 31 (1) and 2.

Stating that the scope and content of Article 30(1) were not a charter for maladministration, the Court observed they were regulatory in character so that the right to administer (educational institutions) may be better exercised for the benefit of the institution.

Referring to Articles 19(1)F and 31 (1) of the Constitution, it said it was an essential and important instance of holding property and where it stemmed from legal or beneficial interest in property, any restriction on the exercise of that right was a restriction on the right to hold property guaranteed under Article 19(1)F and could only be justified as reasonable restrictions in the interests of the general public.

T. Mr. V. Saklecha's Election Set Aside: The election of Mr. Virendra Saklecha, former Deputy Chief Minister of Madhya Pradesh and leader of the Jana Sangh group in the State Assembly, was set aside by the Indore Bench of the Madhya Pradesh High Court on September 30.

Mr. Justice H. R. Krishnan found Mr. Saklecha guilty of several corrupt practices including "exploita- of religion" under Section 123 of the Representation of Peoples Act.

He was held guilty of corrupt practices on an election petition by Mr. Jagjiwan Joshi, the defeated Congress candidate.

Delivering the 309-page judgment, Mr Justice Krishnan dismissed a recrimination petition filed by Mr. Saklecha as a sequel to Mr. Joshi's plea that he be declared elected in the event of Mr. Saklecha's election being declared void.

On a subsequent application by counsel for Mr. Saklecha for a stay of the Court order to enable him to appeal to the Supreme Court against the judgment, Mr. Justice Krishnan granted interim stay of the order for one month.

Under the provisions of Section 8-A of the Representation of Peoples Act, 1951, Mr. Saklecha stands disqualified for a period of six years for contesting election to any legislature.

V. Compulsory Retirement Age Of Government Employees—Allahabad High Court's Ruling: A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court by a majority judgment on September 29 held that the age of compulsory retirement of a State Government servant was 58 years. The power vested in the appointing authority to retire a Government servant after 55 was unconstitutional.

This ruling was given by the Full Bench while replying to two questions referred to it by a Division Bench. The matter had come before the Division Bench on appeal. The appellants had made an appeal to the Division Bench after their writ petition had been dismissed by the High Court.

The questions referred were: (1) whether under Fundamental Rule 6, the age of compulsory retirement is 52 or 58 years; (2) whether proviso to Clause (A) of the Fundamental Rule 56 violates Articles 14 and 16 of the Constitution.

The Bench was of the view that under Clause (A) of the Fundamental Rule 56, the age of compulsory retirement was 58 and that Para (1) of the proviso to Clause (A) of Fundamental Rule 56 violated Articles 14 and 16 of the Constitution.

ISRAEL

A. Air Battles In West Asia—More Fighting: In the biggest attack by Israel on any Arab Power since the June, 1967 war, Israel struck at the United Arab Republic across the Gulf of Suez at dawn on September 9 and pulled back ten hours later after killing 100 Egyptians and destroying army bases, military vehicles, radar installations and buildings.

The Israelis claimed they had withdrawn according to plan, but UAR asserted it had repelled the Israeli attempt to land troops on the western shore of the Gulf along a 50-km. frontline. Israeli troops were supported by tanks and air and naval units.

According to Cairo Radio, the Israelis "suffered a large number of losses in both men and equipment before being forced to turn tail." Three Israelis planes were shot down and two torpedo boats sunk.

Israel, on the other hand, said that only one Israeli soldier was slightly wounded and all men and equipment returned safely to base. It, however, conceded that it lost one plane in anti-aircraft fire. The pilot of the plane parachuted into water. Israeli helicopters flew over the area searching for him, but without success.

The UAR, it was reported, did not put up air or sea resistance. Israeli planes bombed and strafed artillery batteries and units of the Soviet-built surface-to-air (SAM) missiles. The Israelis used naval vessels to take their armour across the 25-mile-wide Gulf of Suez.

An Israeli announcement described the operation as a "raid." The action, it said, followed continued UAR acts of aggression in the Suez Canal region.

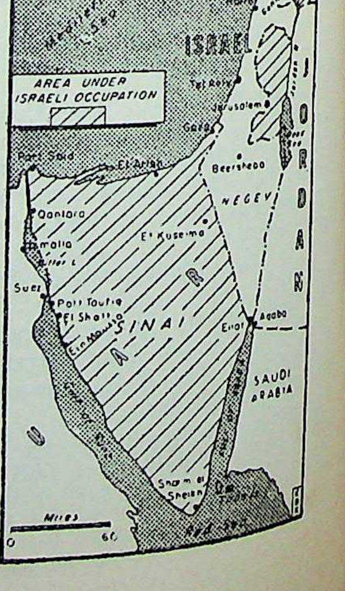
Israeli planes carried out intermittent attacks on Egyptian observation posts along the Suez Canal throughout the morning. Egyptian anti-aircraft fire intercepted the Israeli fighters.

Israeli mortars and rockets unleashed a heavy barrage against Suez and other towns at the southern end of the Suez Canal. Shells also struck Ganasat El-Shatt and east of Ein Moussa. UAR gunners replied with artillery fire.

The "raid" by Israel was the biggest since the one inside Jordan in March, 1968 when Israeli forces hit an Arab commando base at Karameh. The day-long action, also supported by tanks and planes, had then killed more than 120 guerrillas.

On September 8, UAR torpedo boats sank an Israeli torpedo craft in a clash close to Suez town. The Israeli vessel exploded and sank, killing all its crew. One UAR torpedo boat was damaged and one crewman hurt in the incident.

Israeli forces said they destroyed two Egyptian torpedo boats at a Red Sea base.



On September 9, Israeli and Jordanian forces also fought a 25-minute battle with machine-guns and mortars six miles off the Dead Sea.

On September 10, Israeli planes again screamed across the Gulf of Suez and pounded concentrations of military vehicles at Zaafarana and Bu Darag, two guard posts along the Egyptian coast. One Israeli plane was shot down by Egyptian anti-aircraft fire. It was seen crashing into the Gulf near the Ein Al-Sukhna winter resort.

According to an Israeli spokesman, the planes, which pounded the same region devastated in a ten-hour raid by armoured units on September 9, were ordered into the air following further Egyptian cease-fire violations in the Suez Canal area.

Israeli troops also fired with mortars and howitzers on Jordanian forces on September 10 three miles north of the Dead Sea. The Jordanians returned the fire. There were no Jordanian casualties.

In reprisal, UAR air attacks were intensified on September 11 when, it was said in Tel Aviv, 11 UAR war-planes were shot down by the Israelis in the fiercest day of aerial combat since the 1967 West Asia war.

The Egyptian attacks, which Cairo said were in reprisal for repeated Israeli attacks against Egyptian posts, came 48 hours after Israeli forces landed on Egypt's Gulf of Suez coast in the biggest raid since the June, 1967 war.

A Cairo spokesman said that Israeli planes attempted to attack border points in Zaafarana and Ras Shukair in the Gulf of Suez but were intercepted by Egyptian fighters and ground fire and forced flee.

A Tel Aviv spokesman said that two Egyptian planes were downed in an abortive raid against Israeli targets in north-western Sinai. This was followed by a second raid when another five Egyptian planes were shot down.

Egyptian sources said that its fighter-bombers, accompanied by MIG fighters pounded Israeli positions in the central and northern sectors of Sinai, and three Israeli jets were downed in an aerial clash over the Suez Canal.

Dozens of Egyptian war-planes penetrated deeply into Sinai, bombing Israeli positions in heavy reprisal raids less than 36 hours after Israel's hit-and-run operation on the west bank of the Gulf of Suez. They also bombed an Israeli naval base on the east side of the Suez Canal. An Egyptian Army spokesman said the raiders brought down three Israeli planes in three different raids. Two of the Israeli planes, including a Mirage jet fighter were downed in dog fights. The third was shot out of the sky over Lake Bardaouli, in the north of the Sinai Peninsula, after Israeli planes attempted to attack Egyptian coast-guard posts in the Ras Zaafarana and Ras Shukeir areas on the Gulf of Suez.

Israeli aircraft raided Jordanian positions with napalm on September 11. The raid was preceded by a five-minute ground clash when the Israelis opened fire with machine-guns on Jordanian forces at Karkar water-crossing just south of the Sheikh Hussein Bridge in the northern Jordan valley.

On September 12, Israeli planes crossed the Gulf of Suez again and attacked UAR military targets on UAR's eastern coast.

It was the fourth straight day of aerial activity on the UAR-Israeli cease-fire line and came 24 hours after the fierce air battle with UAR aircraft in which Israel claimed shooting down 11 Soviet-made planes.

On September 16, Israeli jets bombed two Arab guerrilla bases east of the Jordan River. All the Israeli aircraft returned safely to their bases after the 20-minute raid. But a Jordanian spokesman claimed in Amman that Jordanian anti-aircraft gunners shot down an Israeli plane during the raid.

According to Cairo Radio, UAR and Israeli heavy artillery went into action again on September 21 in a 60-mile stretch across the Suez Canal. The exchange lasted for about 3½ hours in the Bitter Lake and Ferdam areas.

UAR artillery also poured heavy fire on Israeli targets east of Ismailia.

A number of Israeli aircraft meanwhile attempted to raid Zaafarana, but were intercepted by UAR anti-aircraft fire and fled eastwards.

Tel Aviv sources said that Israeli planes bombed Egyptian targets in the Suez Canal and Gulf of Suez areas on September 21. All planes returned safely. It was said that the Israeli attack followed a cease-fire violation by Egyptian forces.

This was the first time for several days that an Israeli spokesman had announced an air attack against Egypt.

Asked about Egyptian reports on Israeli air attacks in the past week, he said: "No comment."

Israeli military authorities in the Gaza Strip blew up nine houses on September 26 after their occupants had been arrested on suspicion of guerrilla activities or membership of Arab guerrilla organizations. Two of the houses were in Gaza town and the others in Beit Leihitya to the north.

It was stated in Amman that four Israeli fighter-planes had raided the Al-Mundassah area, in the southern Jordan valley, using rockets and machine-guns.

On September 27, UAR artillery pounded Israeli positions in the southern sector of the Suez Canal in an hour-long exchange of fire. The firing was in the areas of Kabrit, Shat and the southern shores of the Bitter Lake.

Early on September 28, a Cairo spokesman said, air-borne special units of the UAR raided Israeli concentrations and command centres in northern Sinai. He said that the raid was in retaliation for "continuous Israeli aggressions and violations along the Suez Canal front."

This was the first time since the six-day war of June, 1967 that UAR commandos had been lifted by air to take part in such operations.

An Israeli spokesman dismissed as "sheer fantasy" Cairo reports that UAR air-borne troops had attacked Israeli army concentrations in northern Sinai, inflicting heavy casualties.

On September 29, according to Israeli sources, the Israeli Air Force again bombed UAR positions in the Gulf of Suez area. The Israeli planes, which had been carrying but practically daily raids against these positions since the commando raid inside UAR territory earlier in September, returned safely to base. This air action, coming on the heels of two raids on September 28, was motivated by UAR's "ceaseless aggression."

The positions bombed were situated south of the Suez Canal and on the western bank of the Gulf of Suez.

Earlier, on September 4, shortly after a formal complaint to United Nations in New York, Israeli troops made their first border raid into Lebanon and reported killing six guerrillas in a village being used as a forward base.

A Lebanese spokesman claimed that ground fire had destroyed an Israeli plane.

Israeli planes raked Jordanian positions three times on September 4.

On September 5, Israeli jets struck at Arab guerrilla bases in the foothills of Mount Hermon (Lebanon), an area raided earlier in the day by an Israeli commando unit.

Mount Hermon is a snow-capped peak straddling the borders of Israel, Lebanon and Syria.

Five Israeli soldiers were killed in two separate incidents on September 5. Two died in artillery duels on the Suez Canal front and three others in a land-mine blast south of the Dead Sea.

A report from Beirut quoting a military spokesman said that an Israeli plane was hit by Lebanese ground fire and exploded in midair during a one-hour raid on southern Lebanon on September 5.

An Israeli military spokesman denied the Lebanese claim. "All the Israeli planes returned to their base."

On September 6, Israeli Army patrols killed four Arab commandos in two separate clashes.

A Jordanian military spokesman said that Jordanian and Israeli forces exchanged intermittent mortar and machine-gun fire across the River Jordan on September 7.

Two Israeli soldiers were wounded by Egyptian mortar fire at the Suez Canal. They were hit near the Firdan Bridge area north of Lake Timsah.

UN Security Council Condemns Israel For Altering Status Of Jerusalem:

The UN Security Council condemned on September 15 Israel's failure to refrain from taking measures aimed at altering the status of Jerusalem.

But, four Council members abstained on the Arab-inspired resolution, shattering past Security Council unanimity on the Jerusalem issue. The United States, Finland, Paraguay and Colombia refused to back the resolution introduced by Pakistan despite a last-minute amendment.

France asked for a separate vote on the fourth operative paragraph of the resolution, which, in its amended form, called upon Israel scrupulously to observe the provisions of the Geneva Convention and international law governing military occupation and to refrain from causing any hindrance to the discharge of the established functions of the Supreme Muslim Council of Jerusalem, including the co-operation that the Council may desire from countries with predominant population, and from Muslim communities, in relation to its plans for the maintenance and repair of the Islamic holy places in Jerusalem."

The paragraph was adopted.

The Security Council has always been unanimous in its decisions on Jerusalem in the past and had adopted only in July, 1969 a resolution barring Israel from taking steps to alter the status of the holy city.

Rejecting the resolution, the Israeli delegate, Mr. Yosef Tekoah, declared that the future of Jerusalem could not and would not be decided by a Security Council vote.

He also attacked the Soviet Union for its "systematic hostility" towards Israel which, he claimed, made it pointless for Moscow to join in peace-seeking moves.

The Soviet Ambassador, Mr. Jacob A. Malik, denounced the atmosphere of "repression, terror and arbitrariness" in the territories occupied by Israel.

The US Ambassador, Mr. Charles Yost told the Council on the fifth day of the El Aqsa debate that USA saw "no shred of evidence to support the allegations that the act of suspected arson....was other than an individual act, as demented as it was dastardly."

El Aqsa Fire Commission's Findings:

The Commission appointed by the Israeli Government to inquire into the El Aqsa Mosque blaze has found fault with the Muslim authorities who were responsible for the safety of the Mosque and the supervision of visitors to the holy site.

[An Australian tourist, Mr. Michael Denis William Rohen, was arrested earlier in connexion with the blaze. As the case is still sub judice, the Commission did not say who committed the crime or the motives for it].

The Chairman of the Commission, Mr. Joel Sussman, a Supreme Court judge, told newsmen that the Commission's findings would not prejudice the accused in any way. "We came to conclusions about what could have been done to avoid the fire."

The Israeli Premier, Mrs. Golda Meir, to whom the Commission's report was presented, hoped that the findings and the open trial of the suspect would "convince Muslims that the incident had been exploited for the purposes of incitement."

The five-member Commission, which included two Israeli Arabs, examined 24 witnesses and 70 exhibits and visited the site of the fire.

No Direct UAR-Israeli Talks:

A UAR Government spokesman denied in Cairo on September 25 that UAR was prepared to sit with Israel for direct talks on the West Asian situation.

The spokesman was referring to reports which, he said, were carried by a US television newscast and one US news agency (names were not given) quoting the UAR Foreign Minister, Mr. Mahmoud Riad, in New York as saying: "Egypt is prepared to sit for direct talks with Israel."

[Mr. Riad had told newsmen in New York on September 24 that he believed in a package settlement of the West Asia problem with Israel's withdrawal from occupied Arab territory as part of the settlement and not a pre-condition. Mr. Riad was asked if he believed in the package settlement plan for West Asia currently being mooted in talks between the Soviet Union and the United States in New York if all the elements were implemented at the same time. He replied: "Yes."]

Mrs. G. Meir On Status Of Jerusalem:

The Israeli Premier, Mrs. Golda Meir, ruled out in New York on September 21 any formula that would make Jerusalem an international city.

She said in a recorded television interview that Israel had accepted the idea of an international city in 1947, but Jordan took the old city by force. "You do not turn the clock back", she declared. "Now the city is re-united, it is open to all religions. We have not sent any Arab out of the old city. We only cleaned it up. It's not a crime."

She added: "We have no desires for territorial expansion. We want peace, we want to build."

She said that there could be no peaceful West Asian settlement as long as the Arab nations refused to accept the existence of Israel. "There cannot be a real peace until they are prepared to see us as part of the area."

She said she was certain that peace would one day come to the Middle East, adding: "I don't know when, but I am convinced that tens of millions of Arabs must have peace."

Mr. A. Eban's Peace Proposals:

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, outlined a seven-point West Asian peace plan to the UN General Assembly in New York on September 19 and proposed that October 24, the annual UN Day, be declared "universal cease-fire day."

It would apply, he said, to Viet-Nam, Nigeria and the Sino-Soviet border, as well as to West Asia.

He accused the Arab States of exploiting the fire at the El Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem to "whip up a religious hatred worthy of the darkest years of the Middle Ages."

The points in Mr. Eban's proposal included:

(1) Urgent establishment of a cease-fire, without which no diplomatic peace effort could succeed;

(2) Military chiefs of both sides should meet to agree on ways of enforcing it;

(3) All West Asian States should declare themselves in favour of a permanent peace, the ending of their quarrels and the negotiations of detailed agreements on their disputes, including those listed in the November, 1967 Security Council resolution;

(4) Israel was ready to start unconditional negotiations on all proposals;

(5) An international conference on refugees should be held to work out a five-year plan to deal with the refugee problem.

Maj.-Gen. M. Dayan On Talks With Arabs:

The Defence Minister, Maj.-Gen. Moshe Dayan, said in a Press interview on September 12 that Israel was willing for wide-ranging discussions without prior conditions —if the Arabs agreed to direct talks.

He added: "We would discuss with the Arabs any issues they may wish to include in the agenda."

Asked if the map he proposed for the strategic boundaries for Israel did not contradict the idea of negotiations without prior conditions, he said the Arabs could include the question of Jerusalem in talks. Israel-Arab views on the holy city might be diametrically opposed, but "nonetheless we may find a way towards an understanding."

But, he warned that Israel could not sit idly pending an Arab agreement to negotiate.

He rejected the idea of self-determination for the Arab population in Israeli-occupied territories because of the avowed Arab intention to liquidate the State of Israel.

Mr. Y. Allon On Situation:

The Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Yigal Allon, told another newspaper that if King Hussein's regime in Jordan collapsed, Israel would not remain passive and could push the cease-fire lines further east, according to its strategic needs.

He said he would oppose any foreign pressure to get Israel to sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, until conditions permitted it.

He added: "Arab leaders are irresponsible and irrational, and are quite capable of dropping atom bombs on Israel, should they possess them, in a moment of passion like after the fire at the El Aqsa Mosque.

"I don't think that the Red Army wants to intervene directly in the Israeli-Arab conflict. But it would be dangerous to be over-optimistic. Soviet presence, whose weight is increasingly felt in our region, forces us to plan in consequence."

Maj.-Gen. M. Dayan On Israeli Casualties:

The Defence Minister, Maj.-Gen. Moshe Dayan, told an election rally on September 25 that Israel's war casualties along the cease-fire lines with Arab States were steadily rising. The toll was 157 during July and August, 1969.

The year following the 1967 West Asia war showed a monthly casualty rate of 50, one-third of them fatal. In the second year, the rate rose to 80 per month. About 80 per cent of the losses were sustained on the borders, and only 20 per cent inside the country. "Half of the casualties now are on the Israel-UAR front."

B. Ex-Rafi Members To Remain In Labour Party: Ex-Rafi members of the Labour Party's Central Committee, in a secret ballot on August 23, approved the agreement reached earlier between their leaders and the heads of the Alignment.

This meant that the supporters of the Defence Minister, Maj-Gen. Moshe Dayan, and Mr. Shimon Peres voted to remain in the Labour Party. The agreement itself concerned the summing-up of policy in the territories and full representation for former Rafi members within the Labour Party.

Gen. Dayan told his ex-Rafi colleagues that "our main struggle concerns the fashioning of a new map of Israel. Either we shall do it, or it will not come about. He was explaining why he believed that this could best be accomplished within the Labour Party. "The next four years will be decisive."

Later, he said that should the Labour Party yield to Mapam pressure against permanent settlement in the territories, "which I do not think will happen," he would not run on the Labour Party list. "But there is a distinction between that and forming a new party. I could not head a party in which I do not believe."

He spoke warmly of the Premier, Mrs. Golda Meir, saying: "A new Government with Golda as Prime Minister and myself as Defence Minister and other colleagues will be able to carry out this programme."

He added that during the time he had served in Mrs. Meir's Cabinet—"and I am not talking of the party level—not only have I no complaints, but I think she is a very good Prime Minister."

JAPAN

A. Bank Rate Raised: The Bank of Japan raised on August 30 the Bank Rate to 6.25 per cent effective on September 1.

The Bank also announced that commercial banks' reserve ratio would be increased to 1.5 per cent from one per cent for their non-fixed deposits effective from September 3.

The Central Bank switched to a tighter money policy in spite of continuing balance of payments surpluses. It was the first time in the post-War period that the Bank had applied monetary restraint for reasons other than balance of payments considerations.

The discount rate on export bills was raised from the present 4.015 per cent to 4.25 per cent a year. The rate for loans advanced on the security of export bills and that for foreign exchange loans went up to 4.50 per cent (formerly 4.38 per cent) and 4 per cent (formerly 3.65 per cent), respectively.

The margin of rate increase for export financing was limited so that the competitiveness of Japanese industries would not be impaired.

Explaining the measures at a news conference in Tokyo on August 30, the Governor of the Bank of Japan, Mr. Makoto Usami, said the Bank Rate increase was designed to prevent the overheating of the economy and to sustain the current prosperity.

He said that the actual growth rate of the economy was expanding at a faster pace than earlier predicted by the Government and the commodity prices were following a similar course. If unchecked, bank lendings and the Bank of Japan note issue would further increase.

He said that the overseas economic situation was showing signs of a slowdown because of anti-inflationary measures being taken by various countries, although Japan's balance of payments remained basically favourable. The overseas developments would affect Japanese trade in the future.

He said he did not believe that the monetary squeeze would trigger a recession and expressed hope that industrial circles would continue their efforts to increase exports.

Asked about the effect of the Bank Rate increase on restraining commodity prices, he said he did not expect the latest action to bring about a rapid decline in prices and foresaw that considerable time would be required before results were noticeable. He expressed confidence, however, that the new step would have some effect in holding down the price rise within several months.

B. Student Leader Arrested: Mr. Yoshitaka Yamamoto, a leader of student activists, sought by police for months for masterminding campus disturbances, was arrested in the first week of September when he turned up in a Tokyo park to attend a student meeting.

For months, the 27-year-old student leader, Mr. Yamamoto, had successfully eluded police and made surprise appearances at a number of student meetings.

His arrest came 228 days after he was placed on the wanted list for taking a leading role in the January 18-19 "Todai incident" and a few other major violent campus disputes. In the two-day January incident he had allegedly instructed some 700 students to entrench themselves in the University's Yasuda Auditorium and a wild battle with police ensued. The students had kept the police at bay with Molotov cocktails, rocks and other weapons.

C. Commerce And Navigation Treaty With Rumania: Japan and Rumania signed in the first week of September a Treaty of Commerce and Navigation which accorded each other preferential treatment with regard to entry and departure procedures, protection assets, tariffs and shipping.

The Treaty was signed by the Foreign Minister, Mr. Kichi Aichi and the visiting Rumanian Foreign Trade Minister, Mr. Cornel Burtica in a brief ceremony at the Foreign Ministry.

Prior to the signing, Mr. Aichi told Mr. Burtica that pending ratification of the pact Romanian products would be subject to lower Japanese tariff rates. The Government would seek Diet approval of the Treaty at its regular session scheduled to open in late December.

The pact was the fifth Commerce and Navigation Treaty signed with an East European nation. Japan had so far concluded similar Treaties with the Soviet Union, Poland, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia.

D. Loans To Thailand And Uganda: The Export-Import Bank and 13 foreign exchange banks recently signed contracts offering yen loans to Uganda and Thailand.

The contract with the Government of Uganda provided for a loan of 222 million yen to be advanced. It was based on official Notes exchanged between the Governments of Japan and Uganda in July, 1966 by which the Japanese side promised economic assistance totalling 1,008 million yen to Uganda.

Yen loans had already been offered to two other East African countries—Tanzania and Kenya.

Another contract, signed between Mr. Tadashi Ishida, President of the Japan Export-Import Bank, and Mr. Obeboon Vanikkul, Thai Ambassador to Japan, provided for a loan of 982 million yen to be used for improvement of coastal waterways in Thailand. This loan was part of the yen loan aggregating 10,800 million yen which Japan had agreed to extend to help carry out its second economic and social development plan in January, 1968.

E. Asian Statistical Institute: An Agreement for the establishment of an Asian Statistical Institute was signed in Tokyo on September 9 by representatives of the Government and the UN Development Programme (UNDP).

This new regional Institute, to be located in Tokyo, is the result of joint efforts of countries in Asia and UNDP. Principal financial contributors to the project are Japan and UNDP.

During its first phase, the Institute will operate on the basis of a 5½-year programme financed jointly by the member-countries of ECAFE and UNDP. The project will be carried out by United Nations in association with the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) and the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO), as well as other Specialized Agencies.

Financing of the Institute, which was approved by the UNDP Governing Council last January, is put at $3,815,600 for the envisaged 5½-year period. Toward this, the UNDP will contribute $2,198,600, while counterpart contributions from Japan and other Governments amount to $1,617,000. By the end of the project period, the Institute is expected to operate without further support from international organizations.

Contributions from other Governments, made in cash or kind, are estimated at some $400,000.

The Institute will:

(a) Offer to an annual enrolment of 30 persons a 10-month course to train statisticians for the Government statistical services;

(b) Organize advanced seminars in Tokyo of six to eight weeks for senior grades of statisticians in the statistical services of the Governments;

(c) Prepare teaching manuals and other material on statistical procedures;

(d) Conduct and organize applied research; and

(e) Assist in establishing and improving statistical training facilities in the countries of the region.

BAHRAIN

A Sheikh Isa On Dispute With Iran: Sheikh Isa, the Ruler, in an interview published in The Times, London on September 21, spoke of ways of settling his country's dispute with Iran.

For the first time, the Sheikh went on record as declaring that his Government would accept the idea of a United Nations Commission to ascertain the wishes of the people of Bahrain about their future—in particular whether or not they wished to be united with Iran when Britain withdraws from the Gulf in 1971.

[The Shah of Iran had said in New Delhi on January 4 (see page 8764) that if the people of Bahrain did not want to join Iran, it was against Iranian principles to use force to re-annex Bahrain to Iran. (Bahrain was Iranian before the British occupied it 70 years ago.) The Shah also said that Iran would accept any expression of the will of the people which was recognized internationally as such. Since then he had spoken of a plebiscite, which would not be acceptable to Bahrain because, among other reasons, of the communal strife between Arabs and the Iranian minorities in Bahrain which a plebiscite would be likely to create.]

Sheikh Isa made it clear that he would accept any reasonable membership for a United Nations Commission—for instance, a commission selected by the Secretary-General, U Thant, to include a representative of the Arab League and of Iran. For his part he would gladly take part in a regional conference on security arrangements in the Gulf after 1971.

If the Iranian Government really intended, therefore, to establish an area of peace and stability in the Gulf in friendly co-operation with its Arab neighbours, the way would seem wide open, but Bahrain and other disputed islands in the Gulf have been so long a bone of contention between Iranians and Arabs, that it could not be assumed yet that progress, if any, would be swift and easy.

On Union Of Arab Emirates:

Sheikh Isa spoke also of his strong desire for agreement with Bahrain's partners in the establishment of a strong and really united Union of Arab Emirates at the next meeting of the Rulers.

Although Bahrain had strong claims to become the capital of the Union, he said he thought that the Union should not be held up by disagreement about the capital, and that the Rulers should now agree upon a temporary capital.

He would not stand out for Bahrain's claims for that. He was, however, strongly opposed to the suggestion, supported at the last meeting by Dubai and Abu Dhabi, that an entirely new capital should be built on the border between them.

CAMBODIA

A. Alleged Intrusions By Thailand And USA: The New China News Agency reported on September 30 that the Foreign Ministry in Pnom Penh had lodged protests with USA and Thailand against alleged intrusions into Cambodian territory.

The Foreign Ministry, in a protest Note to the US Embassy in Pnom Penh on September 26, alleged that a patrol vessel of the US-South Viet-Nam Navy had intruded into waters nine km south of Kep on August 27. It said three Cambodian fishermen of Lork village, in Kampot province, had been kidnapped.

In two separate Notes to the Thai authorities, the Ministry said that four Cambodians had been killed and another wounded on August 27 by mines laid in Oddar Meanchey province by soldiers coming from Thailand.

The Notes also accused Thai fishing boats of violating Cambodian territorial waters on two occasions.

CEYLON

A. Workers' Strikes—Emergency Declared: The Government proclaimed on September 13 a State of Emergency when State electrical workers struck in protest against a decision to convert the Department of Government Electrical Undertakings into a corporation.

The conversion of the Department into a corporation had been recommended by the World Bank.

The employees claimed that the Government had failed to compensate them for the loss of security and other privileges as a result of the conversion.

On September 13, the House of Representatives abruptly ended its session at 3-35 p.m. when power supply was cut off.

The strike was, however, called off after the Government decided to discuss their complaints and delay the change for a month until November 1.

However, the Emergency continued as petroleum workers also went on strike. Troops were called out to man oil installations and various distribution points.

Along with the declaration of Emergency on September 13, all Army, Navy, Air Force and Police leave were cancelled and volunteer units in the Services were mobilized to deal with the situation.

Minutes after petroleum workers struck work, motorists in the city lined up in front of petrol stations to fill up their tanks. Men, women and children queued up in front of shops to buy kerosene for their daily use. But after the panic of the previous day, consumers of kerosene for domestic purposes felt reassured with armed forces personnel in charge of supplies.

Other strikes in the Fisheries Corporation, the Tyre Corporation and the Petroleum Corporation were still on, and spread to other areas.

CHINA

A. Mr. A. Kosygin Meets Mr. Chou En-lai: The Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai and his Soviet counterpart, Mr. Alexei Kosygin, held a surprise meeting in Peking on September 11 in an apparent attempt to improve Sino-Soviet relations.

An announcement in Moscow said that Mr. Kosygin had flown to Peking on his way back from President Ho Chi-minh's funeral in Hanoi.

The announcement described the talks, the first top-level Sino-Soviet meeting in 4½ years, as "useful for both sides." It had been arranged "by mutual consent." Mr. Kosygin returned to Moscow the same night.

Observers said the Peking talks were almost certainly agreed on in Hanoi

According to the Japanese communist leader, Mr. Sanzo Nosaka, who went to Hanoi for Dr. Ho Chi-minh's funeral, the Kosygin-Chou En-lai meeting took place at the suggestion of the Soviet Premier.

Mr. Nosaka disclosed at a news conference in Tokyo on September 13 that Mr. Kosygin had left Hanoi without hearing till his departure any word from Peking to his suggestion that his plane be allowed to pass through Peking and a meeting with Mr. Chou En-lai be arranged. Mr. Kosygin's suggestion had been transmitted to Peking through the good offices of the North Viet-Namese Communist Party.

Mr. Nosaka added: "But when he (Mr. Kosygin) arrived in Calcutta (on his way back to Moscow) he received word of approval from Peking and left immediately for the Chinese capital. At the time of his departure from Calcutta, nobody apparently knew about his immediate destination."

At UN the news of the meeting took the diplomats completely by surprise. Soviet diplomats were so taken aback by the report of the meeting that they appeared more anxious to know what the reactions of others were to the meeting than to explain this sudden development.

In Paris, French officials described the Kosygin-Chou meeting as a "major event" in international affairs.

Officials at the North Viet-Namese delegation to the Paris peace talks said they could only rejoice at the meeting.

Chinese Accusation:

Barely a day after the meeting in Peking between Mr. Kosygin and Mr Chou En-lai, China on September 12 accused the Soviet Union of stepping up collusion with the "Japanese reactionaries to hatch criminal plots against China, against communism and against the people."

An article, carried by the official New China News Agency, said that the "Soviet revisionst renegade clique, which was at the end of its tether, recently invited Mr. Kichi Aichi, Foreign Minister of the reactionary Sato Government of Japan, to Moscow, and held a series of secret talks with him to hatch the plots." During Mr. Aichi's stay in Moscow, he had held "secret talks" with Mr. Kosygin, "chieftain of Soviet revisionism" and the Foreign Minister, Mr. Andrei Gromyko, on the "questions of China and Asian security."

The Agency referred to the acceptance of an invitation to visit Japan next year by President Podgorny and said the Soviet leaders' intensified collusion with their Japanese counterparts "stems from their anti-China, anti-Communist, anti-popular and counter-revolutionary needs."

Normalization Of Relations—Three-Point Programme:

The New York Times on September 26 quoted a despatch from its Asia expert, Mr. Harrison Salisbury, who quoted the American Communist leader, Mr. Gus Hall, as saying that Moscow had offered Peking a three-point programme for relaxing tensions, based on immediate talks to resolve border conflicts, resumption of relations at the Ambassadorial level and trade negotiations.

According to Mr. Hall, the offer was made on September 11 at the meeting between Mr. Kosygin and Mr. Chou En-lai.

Mr. Hall, who is General Secretary of the party, met Mr. Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Soviet party leader, in Moscow on September 16. Mr. Hall was on his way back from Hanoi where he had attended the funeral of President Ho Chi-minh.

The American party chief in his interview said that the Chinese now had the Soviet proposals under consideration. He expressed the opinion, which he said was shared by other leaders of Communist parties, including the Soviet, that the Kosygin-Chou meeting would prove a turning point in the increasingly embittered Soviet-Chinese relationship, leading eventually to its improvement.

Many Communist parties were concerned at signs that unless the Chinese-Soviet quarrel was put on the road toward resolution, it would lead to war. Such a war would be no mere border clash, but a major world conflict.

He said that the specific Soviet proposals were the following:

(1) That critical border issues, specifically those relating to river boundaries where clashes had occurred and ill-defined regions where territorial violations were charged, be placed immediately in the hands of negotiators at the deputy ministerial level.

(2) That the two countries immediately restore their Ambassadors to their respective Embassies in Moscow and Peking.

(3) That the two countries meet to discuss a general resumption of trade and economic relations.

The objective of the Soviet proposals, Mr. Hall said, was to move governmental relations back to normal. The question of party and ideological differences would not be touched and would be left for later resolution.

He said that none of the Communist leaders was under illusions that the quarrel would quickly be ended, but he offered the view that external and internal pressures were moving the Chinese towards a resolution.

The view of the Asian Communists was said to be that China was severely affected by internal difficulties—economic problems, difficulties with the industrial system, actual outbreaks of fighting in some areas and widespread apathy on the part of the general public. Outside pressures, particularly from the Communist world, were also said to be having an effect.

Thus, in their view, conditions were said to be moving China towards negotiation. Both the Kosygin-Chou meeting and the World Conference of Communist Parties held in Moscow in June were said to be factors in moving China in this direction.

B. Mr. Mao Tse-tung At National Day Parade: The Communist Party Chairman, Mr. Mao Tse-tung and the Defence Minister, Marshal Lin Piao, appeared on the rostrum of the Tien An Men (gate of heavenly peace) in Peking to preside over the ceremonies to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the People's Republic on October 1

Their presence scotched persistent reports that they were either dead or dying, speculation touched off by their absence from public functions since May.

Following Mr. Mao Tse-tung and Marshal Lin on to the balcony of the reviewing area were the Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai, and Politburo members, Mr. Chen Po-ta and Mr. Kang Sheng.

Mr. Mao Tse-tung, "in excellent health and high spirits", waved towards the crowds on the Square. He announced the ceremony open and invited Marshal Lin Piao to make the National Day speech.

In a nine-minute speech, Marshal Lin Piao urged the Chinese people to further strengthen their unity and continue to accept Mr. Mao's instructions to help "struggle to the very end against American imperialism and social-imperialism."

He did not mention two nuclear tests which the US Atomic Energy Commission said the Chinese had detonated in the week before. China's news broadcasts had also not mentioned the blasts.

Claiming that the Cultural Revolution had led to the transformation of the minds of millions thanks to the thoughts of Mr. Mao Tse-tung, he found it necessary to state: "We must rally even more closely around the Party's Central Committee... and strengthen the party's centralized and unified leadership." This remark was viewed by China watchers in Hong Kong as an indirect acknowledgement that the Chinese leadership had still not rebuilt the administrative machinery shattered in the Cultural Revolution.

Marshal Lin Piao also emphasized the need to "remain modest and prudent and guard against arrogance and rashness."

His speech was a rather uninspired performance and he seemed to have been overshadowed by Mr. Chou En-lai who had delivered an impressive oration at the National Day reception on September 3.

While covering much the same ground as Marshal Lin Piao, Mr. Chou En-lai's speech was much more vigorous. The Radio Peking relay of his performance showed him to be in excellent health if his clarity of diction and strength of voice were anything to go by. Significantly, it was left to him to refer to China's nuclear capability—to which Marshal Lin Piao made no reference in spite of the recent atomic tests in China. Mr. Chou En-lai stated: "We have nuclear weapons solely for defence...and our ultimate aim is to eliminate nuclear weapons."

Marshal Lin Piao's speech was followed by a parade of several hundred thousand perfectly disciplined soldiers, militiamen, Red Guards, workers and peasants. As in previous years, there was no military parade, the only weapons on display being the rifles carried by certain military and militia units. Civilian groups in the 90-minute march carried huge floats representing China's industrial achievements, including the Peking underground railway, the big bridge over the Yangtze River, and constructions of the naval, steel and petro-chemical industries.

The parade was one gigantic splash of colour. Thousands of red flags waved in the breeze and each detachment was clothed in a different colour—blue, green, red and white. At the end of the parade, thousands of red balloons were released and floated slowly into the blue sky. At that moment, more than 500,000 people who had watched the parade ran forward in an immense human wave towards the stand to hail, for more than half-an-hour, Mr. Mao Tse-tung. Their cries and chanted slogans mingled with those of the members of the Government and Communist Party Central Committee standing beside Mr. Mao Tse-tung, who watched silently from the platform.

Nuclear Policy:

In a statement attributed to Ussuri River guards, but considered by Western observers as Government stand, the Chinese authorities on September 18 said that aggression against China from either USA or USSR or both would not only be wiped out but met with world-wide revolutionary war that would "overthrow US imperialism, Soviet revisionism and reactionaries of all countries."

"'We are not afraid," Hsinhua said in referring to the possibility of an atomic attack on China.

Incorporated in a report of nation-wide acclaim for the 29 slogans Peking announced for the 20th anniversary celebration of Communist rule on October 1, the statement was viewed by observers as a response to speculation that Russia was mounting a possibly nuclear attack against atomic and other key installations on China.

These observers were specific that the recent meeting of the Soviet Premier, Mr. Alexei Kosygin and the Chinese Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai, had achieved much in diminishing the basic hostility between the two Communist giants over ideological, border and Power rivalries.

Daily articles by Hsinhua had attacked the Soviet Union over its domination of Czechoslovakia, domestic economic failures and other matters.

The 29 slogans issued for the 20th anniversary gave prominence to war preparedness and defence. The Soviet Union was not singled out for denunciation and was bracketed, when mentioned, with "US imperialism." However, Peking frequently charged that Russia was in collusion with the United States against China.

The despatch on the enthusiastic reception of the anniversary slogans said that the populace took the slogans as battle orders aimed at defending the country, promoting production and effecting the proletarian revolution.

Hsinhua said the people regarded slogan No. 22, which alluded to the threat of a new war being launched by "imperialism or social-imperialism (the phrase used to designate Russia), especially one in which atom bombs are used as weapons," as "a great mobilization order of far-reaching strategic significance."

It quoted the Ussuri frontier guards and other military groups as declaring their determination, along with the people of the world, "to break the backbone of the aggressors, bury imperialism and revisionism" and build a new world "free of exploitation and oppression."

Accusations Against USA:

China, on September 29, launched a new attack on the United States, accusing it of "painstakingly trying to rig up a ring of military encirclement against China."

American policies towards the communist regime, the official Hsinhua news agency said, had suffered "a series of dismal defeats over the past 20 years, proving that those who oppose China will come to no good end."

While the long list of complaints against the United States was couched in violent language, Western observers saw in it an attempt to set out in plain terms Chinese grievances against the Americans and by implication what Washington must rectify in order to find a rapprochement with the China of Mr. Mao Tse-tung.

China insisted that US intervention in Formosa, Korea and Viet-Nam was "an attempt to menace China militarily and to invade her from these fronts."

The American embargo on trade with China was ridiculed and Peking claimed that "it has only led to a speedier settling of accounts with the forces of economic aggression in China."

Peking appeared to suggest that without the US economic sanctions the Chinese might have adopted less extreme economic policies—as some leading communists had advocated before the Cultural Revolution.

The news agency asserted that American efforts to prevent other nations from recognizing China had failed. American policies of "isolation" and "containment" had served only to increase China's standing with world opinion.

According to observers, two factors lent special significance to the report by the news agency: first, Peking was just beginning to re-define its diplomatic policy after the chaos caused by Red Guards in the Foreign Ministry and the Chinese were showing signs of a new pragmatism in dealing with the outside world.

Secondly, references to alleged US-Soviet collusion against China were completely absent, indicating that China would like the official news agency's message to be taken more seriously than just another propaganda tirade.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Gandhi Birth Centenary; Mrs. I. Gandhi's Visit To Laccadives; PL 480 Agreement With USA; Central Zonal Council Meeting; Indian Airlines Fares Raised.

A. Gandhi Birth Centenary Celebrations: The year-long celebrations of Mahatma Gandhi's Birth Centenary, which were initiated on October 2, 1968 (see page 8589), concluded on October 2, 1969.

The concluding phase of the celebrations included schemes in pursuance of ideals dear to Mahatma Gandhi, launching of projects for rural welfare, release of commemoration stamps and coins. People in mass rallies took solidarity pledges and prisoners were released.

The celebrations in New Delhi began with the arrival of the Pakhtoon leader, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan on October 1, when he was given a very warm welcome. He said on arrival that he had come to India to remind people about Mahatma Gandhi and his teachings of love and affection.

Broadcasting to the nation on the eve of the Centenary (October 1, 1969), the President, Mr. V. V. Giri said that they were paying homage to him "who more than any single individual in human history was responsible for liberating us from centuries-old bondage." He regretted that "in spite of knowing that the future salvation of mankind lies only in following the principles of Gandhi, we have failed to heed the voice of reason and see light."

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, in her broadcast the same evening (October 1, 1969) expressed sorrow at the recent Ahmedabad riots which "have made a mockery" of the Centenary celebrations and emphasized that Gandhi had taught that freedom could have no meaning unless it guaranteed security to every individual regardless of race and creed.

A torch-light procession of young men with 100 flaming torches to mark the hundred years of Gandhi marched from Azad Park to his Samadhi at Rajghat where they took a pledge "to work for peace, non-violence and communal harmony." The Gandhi Darshan—an exhibition on the life and teachings of Gandhi was earlier in the day (October 1) declared open by Mrs. Indira Gandhi.

Mr. V. V. Giri inaugurated the Gandhi Darshan mobile exhibition train at Amritsar. The train would visit cities in Punjab and then move on to other parts of the country. The National Book Trust released two publications—"Gandhi the Writer" by Bhabani Bhattacharya and sponsored by the Ford Foundation and "'Gandhi—Warrior of Non-Violence" by P. D. Tandon and Ronald E. Wolseley. The Andhra Pradesh Legislative Council's homage to Gandhi, inauguration of the Bustee Safai Abhijan (cleaning of slums movement) by the West Bengal Governor, Mr. S. S. Dhawan in Calcutta, opening of the Gandhi Museum by the Tamil Nadu Chief Minister, Mr. M. Karunanidhi at Madras were some of the highlights of celebrations in States.

Celebrations on October 2 in New Delhi began with a prayer meeting at Rajghat in which Mr. V. V. Giri, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan and others participated. The prayer also marked the end of mass spinning by 1,000 volunteers started four days earlier. Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan released a set of five books on Gandhi and watered a banyan tree to be planted at the Samadhi. The armed forces then gave a salute to the Father of the Nation. Later, Mr. Giri inaugurated the 20th TB seals sale campaign and released a set of coins and notes to perpetuate the memory of Mahatma Gandhi. He also released commemoration stamps issued by the Postal Department. Commemoration stamps were issued at Thimpu also by the King of Bhutan. Tributes were paid to Gandhiji at a public meeting at the Ramlila Grounds when Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan announced a three-day fast "to protest against prevailing violence, mutual hatred and communal feelings among the people of India."

The Sabarmati Ashram in Ahmedabad, founded by the Mahatma, celebrated the occasion with a prayer meeting at which a documentary film on Gandhi's message—unity of all communities, eradication of untouchability, self-reliance in the matter of clothes and foodgrains and national education to serve people—entitled "Lord of Humanity" was presented to the Chief Minister, Mr. Hitendra Desai.

At Porbandar, in the house where Gandhi was born, 79 lamps were lit signifying the age at which Gandhi passed away.

At Calcutta, Mr. Jaya Prakash Narayan inaugurated a documentary and a photographic exhibition of Gandhi's association with Tagore, Subhas Bose and other leaders at the Netaji Bhawan. In Madhya Pradesh, the Chief Minister, Mr. Shyama Charan Shukla, unveiled an imposing bronze statue of the Mahatma in Bhopal, while the Governor of UP, Dr. Gopala Reddy, unveiled his life-size portrait at the Council House in Lucknow. The Kerala Legislative Assembly paid homage in a two-hour special session. A portion of Gandhi's ashes received from Delhi were consecrated at "Nnaivu Thottam (Memorial Gardens) in Trivandrum.

Mrs. Indira Gandhi was presented with a Gandhi gold medallion by a delegation of Indians from South Africa. About 25,000 such medallions would be distributed all over the world at a cost of about Rs. 600 each.

Celebrations were also held in various towns in all the States, at Sadaquat Ashram in Bihar, Bhuvaneshwar in Orissa, at Jaipur, Srinagar, Jammu, Panjani, etc, while Bombay celebrated with 1,000 meetings in various parts of the city.

Celebrations Abroad:

The BBC and ITV, the commercial television channels in England, with the famous actor Sir Alec Guinness as narrator at the BBC and Mr. James Cameron, journalist at the ITV, broadcast hour-long programmes on the various aspects of Gandhi's life. The Centenary Committee under Lord Mountbatten organized exhibitions, seminars and memorial services. His statue at Tavistock Square was profusely garlanded. "The world is richer for the life of Gandhi" said Mr. Harold Wilson, Prime Minister of Great Britain, in a message to Mrs. Indira Gandhi.

Moscow and many other provincial capitals in Russia celebrated the occasion, culminating at a meeting held in the Hall of Columns associated with Lenin's memory. The third edition of Gandhiji's autobiography was also released.

The UN Secretary-General, U Thant, in a message said that Gandhi's principles had "universal application and abiding validity." Miss Angie Brooks, President of the UN General Assembly, paid glowing tributes at a session of the Assembly.

Members of the Gandhi Peace League in Japan participated in a memorial service held in Tokyo. Mrs. Vijaylaxmi Pandit participated in the functions at Colombo.

Celebrations were also held in USA, Nepal, Burma, Trinidad and Tobago, Canada, West Germany and several countries in Africa and Latin America.

Most of the radio stations agreed to a proposal of UNESCO to arrange special programmes in homage to Mahatma Gandhi. Pakistan, however, maintained complete silence over these celebrations.

Gandhian Principles:

The principles and the ideals which Mahatma Gandhi preached and practised were brought out at various functions and through visual publicity.

The Mahatma had said: "I have nothing new to teach. Truth and non-violence are as old as the hills." But truth and non-violence were the two principles by which Gandhi lived and laid the foundation for the life of human society. Albert Einstein once said that Gandhi's great contribution lay in his determination to moralize politics. With non-violence in thought, word and deed one should resist evil from any authority. "Resist evil, as you must," he said. He stood resolutely against all wars, and for the solution of conflicts through non-violent means. He called it "non-violent resistance," "civil disobedience" or "passive resistance"—an expression of what he termed "the soul-force" which could conquer physical force—the sword-force. To him, freedom meant the freedom of consciousness, from the burden and care of daily struggle for existence, from which resulted his fight against poverty, untouchability and ignorance. It was this human approach which made him an uncompromising crusader against racialism and colonialism. Service was the keynote of his public life. "Man earned rights," he said, "as he fulfilled his duty to the community." He laid special emphasis on the purity of the means for the achievement of noble ends. To him civilization consisted "not in the multiplication but in the deliberate and voluntary restriction of wants." "An economics that inculcates Mammon worship and enables the strong to amass wealth at the expense of the weak is a false and dismal science," he said. He firmly believed in the democratic way of life, but as he said, "the spirit of democracy cannot be imposed from without; it has to come from within." He laid emphasis on rural life and on the primary producers of food and clothing. His re-construction and revitalization of Hinduism was another of his unique contributions.

Gandhi was an internationalist and a universal man. To quote his classical expression: "I do not want my house to be walled in on all sides and my windows to be stuffed; I want the cultures of all lands to be blown about my house as freely as possible, but I refuse to be blown off my feet by any."

B. Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Visit To Laccadives: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi on October 9 paid a three-day visit to some of the coral islands of the Union Territory of Laccadive Islands (Laccadive, Minicoy and Amindive group).

The group, which consists of 20 coral islands, lying off the west coast of Kerala, was constituted into a Union Territory in 1956 under an Administrator with headquarters at Karavatti island. The islands she visited were Karavatti (four square miles in area, having a population of 3,000), Amini island (2½ square miles with 5,000 inhabitants), Kalpeni and Androth islands and Minicoy.

[People in these islands speak Malayalam and belong to the Muslim faith. Coconut cultivation is the main industry of the territory. No food crops are grown and the mainland supplies all their food requirements. A large majority of the working population is engaged in coir-spinning, copra making and processing of dry fish. The husk yarn is exchanged for rice at Government godowns. There are 38 educational institutions with about 7,000 students on the rolls. There are no colleges, but scholarships are provided for higher studies on the mainland. There were 92 such students at the universities and 36 for post-matric studies during 1968-69.]

Mrs. Gandhi was the first Prime Minister to visit the islands. The first Central Minister to visit Laccadives was Mr. M. Chandrashekhar, Deputy Minister for Home Affairs, in January, 1964. Later in 1964, Dr. Zakir Husain also paid a visit as Vice-President of India.

Mrs. Gandhi was given an enthusiastic welcome at Karavatti island on October 10. She visited the local secondary school, addressed a public meeting and inspected the fisheries and boat-building establishments. The Government staff presented her with a purse of Rs. 501 for the National Relief Fund. She also visited the offices of the rival Congress factions—one led by Mr. B. M. Syed, MP and the other by Mr. Nala Koya, a former MP.

She visited Amini island the same afternoon when almost all of the 5,000 residents came out to greet her. Local Congressmen gave her a purse of Rs. 201 for the Relief Fund. The inmates of the leprosy colony in the nearby island of Kadamat conveyed thanks to her for sweets and clothes she had sent a day earlier.

She visited Kalpeni and Androth islands on October 12. At Kalpeni she was welcomed by Mrs. Hajaronmotri, a local woman leader. The plea of the people at both the places was that rice should be exchanged with coir at equal weight, kilo for kilo, as in the recent past. Government servants pleaded for liberal advance payment of salaries from May to October, 1969 when the islands were cut off by the Monsoon. Mrs. Gandhi assured them of full Government aid and envisaged development of the island as a tourist centre within the next few years.

Earlier, on October 11, she witnessed an air display from Deepak, the oil tanker of the aircraft carrier, INS Vikrant which had hosted Mrs. Gandhi and escorted her on this tour. She returned to New Delhi on October 12.

C. Mr. H. Desai On Ahmedabad Riots: Addressing a news conference in Ahmedabad on October 10, the Gujarat Chief Minister, Mr. Hitendra Desai, said that 431 persons were killed in the recent riots in the city according to official figures based mainly on hospital records.

This figure, he added, also included 26 people killed in police firing. Though the toll figures from other parts of the State had not yet been confirmed, the number of victims would not be more than 30. The police had fired 292 rounds on 65 occasions during the first three days from September 19. So far, 867 known anti-social elements had been rounded up and 1,514 persons, including some known goondas, arrested for substantive offences. About 925 people had been arrested for serious offences during the first three days of the riots.

He charged the representatives of various parties with "trying to demoralize the Government and the police" in their efforts to deal with the situation.

The State Government, he said, had taken precautions in regard to the communal situation even before the Central Government had written about it in April, 1969.

Asked whether the Central Government had written about the general communal situation or the communal situation specifically in Gujarat, he said he did not want to enter into any controversy.

D. PL 480 Agreement With USA: Three million tonnes of wheat, 100,000 bales of cotton and 95,000 tonnes of vegetable oil will be supplied to India under a new PL 480 Agreement signed with USA in New Delhi on October 13.

The wheat supply is intended to help India reach the target of a buffer stock of five million tonnes of foodgrains. The creation of a reserve of this size is one of the measures planned by the Government to assure price stability and ensure a regular supply of food to all parts of the country despite fluctuations in domestic production.

The Agreement covers commodities worth Rs. 143.63 crores. Shipments of wheat covered by the Agreement are expected to begin arriving in India by the end of this year.

Because of irregular rains in the main oilseed-growing areas in India last year, there was a fall in production. This was reflected in the unusually high prices of edible oils prevailing at present. Shipments of vegetable oil totalling 46,000 tonnes from USA had already been authorized. The cost of this oil will be brought under the terms of the next PL 480 Agreement and India reimbursed for the dollars spent on this transaction. The Agreement made funds available for such reimbursement and for an additional 49,000 tonnes of imports.

Similarly, cotton production was adversely affected by weather conditions and there had been a sizable gap between availability and demand of this important raw material. The cotton to be imported from USA will go some way in meeting this deficit.

India will pay in rupees for two-fifths of the value of the commodities. Eighty-six per cent of these rupees will be loaned by USA to the Government of India to finance development projects. A further 5 per cent will be given as loans to Indian firms with US collaboration. The remaining 9 per cent is reserved for use by the US Government.

Payment for the remaining commodities amounting to three-fifths of the value of the Agreement will be covered by a long-term credit. The US Government has the option to call for repayment of principal and interest on this credit in dollars or other convertible currency. This credit repayable over 40 years will have a 10-year grace period during which no repayment of principal will be required and interest will be 2 per cent per annum. Interest during the remaining 30 years will be 3 per cent.

E. Trade Protocol With Bulgaria: India and Bulgaria signed in New Delhi on October 13 a Protocol to double the trade between them to Rs. 44 crores in 1970.

The Protocol also provided for both export from India and import from Bulgaria of new items.

The trade turnover last year was worth Rs. 11 crores and the anticipated turnover this year is Rs. 22 crores.

The principal items of imports from Bulgaria will be urea tractors, drugs and pharmaceuticals, special steels and rolled steel products, caprolactum and other industrial raw material, non-ferrous metals and miscellaneous items of machinery.

The major items of India's exports to Bulgaria will be rolled steel products, wire ropes, finished and semi-finished leather, forgings and castings, knitting machines, tipper trucks and other engineering goods, drugs and pharmaceuticals and aluminium foils in addition to traditional commodities.

F. Avoidance Of Double Taxation Agreement With UAR: The Instruments of Ratification relating to the Convention between the Governments of India and the United Arab Republic for the avoidance of double taxation on income were exchanged in New Delhi on September 30.

With the completion of this formality, the Convention signed in February came into force in both the countries.

In India, the Convention will be effective from the assessment year 1970-71, but in regard to aircraft profits it applies retrospectively to profits arising from 1961.

The Convention provides that the country in which the income arises will be primarily entitled to tax it, and the country of residence of the recipient of income will exempt it from its tax.

G. Central Zonal Council Meeting: The Central Zonal Council consisting of Madhya Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh met in Naini Tal on October 11 and agreed to abide by a decision of the Sachdeva Committee over sharing the water and power of the Rihand and Matatila Dams.

In the discussions, Madhya Pradesh advanced her claim for additional power from the Obra hydel station on Rihand river. The Council noted that Madhya Pradesh had not shared the cost of the project and there was already an agreement under which they did not share power from the project.

On the question of extending irrigation from Rangwa Dam and Ken Canal, it was decided that water might be shared between Madhya Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh respectively in the ratio of 19 to 36 even during drought.

On the question of fishery rights in the Matatila and Rihand Dams, it was agreed to continue the present arrangements.

The Council decided that the revenue authorities of the two States should jointly prepare a scheme to rationalize the status of enclaves.

It was also agreed that domiciliary restrictions in admission to technical and professional institutions might be removed on the lines laid down by the National Integration Council.

The Council meeting was held after a lapse of five years.

H. Indian Airlines Fares Raised: Domestic air travel became costlier from November 1, 1969 as a result of the general tariff revision announced by Indian Airlines on October 9.

The fares were increased by eight per cent on the trunk routes and seven per cent on all other routes excepting routes in the eastern sector where the fare were raised by five per cent only.

The trunk routes are Delhi-Bombay, Delhi-Calcutta, Delhi-Madras, Delhi-Bangalore, Bombay-Calcutta and Madras-Calcutta. The eastern sector covers all routes east of Calcutta.

Justifying the decision, Mr. S Mohan Kumaramangalam, Chairman of Indian Airlines, said that even after this increase, IA fares would continue to be among the lowest in the world.

He explained that the decision to enhance fares was inescapable in view of the increase in excise duty on aviation fuel and oil announced in the Budget for 1969-70 and other rising costs like aircraft insurance rates, rental to the Civil Aviation Department, acquisition of equipment and labour.

The additional revenue raised as a result of this measure would help cover the increased payment of excise duty and meet increases in other costs, making it possible for Indian Airlines to maintain its profitability at about the same level as was achieved in 1968-69 and thereby enabling it to provide an improved service to air passengers on all routes and generate enough resources to finance the airlines' expansion and development plans.

Foreign tourists who buy domestic air tickets, he added, would continue to pay at old rates. The proposed increase was likely to fetch Rs. 1-1/2 crores of additional revenue in five months.

I Working Of Bharat Heavy Electricals: Bharat Heavy Electricals (BHEL) registered a gross manufacturing profit of Rs. 6.54 crores for the year 1968-69 as against last year's deficit of Rs. 15,70,000.

After providing for heavy capital charges such as interest on loans, however, the enterprise incurred a loss of Rs. 3.37 crores as against Rs. 5.57 crores last year.

The authorized capital of BHEL was Rs. 65 crores, while investment which stood at Rs. 137.20 crores at the end of March, 1968 increased to Rs. 153 crores this year. The total value of production in its three units was Rs. 35.25 crores this year as against Rs. 20.16 crores in 1967-68.

Commenting on its performance at a news conference in New Delhi on October 4, the BHEL Chairman, Mr O. S. Murthy expressed hope that, with the diversification programmes on hand, the units would maintain the trend of decreasing losses in the future. He pointed out that a sophisticated capital heavy industry like that of the BHEL required a fairly long gestation period partly because of large capital charges. Bearing this in mind, he urged a review of the undertaking capital structure if accumulation of losses was to be avoided in the coming years.

According to Mr. Murthy, the BHEL units at Hardwar, Hyderabad and Tiruchy had adequate orders till 1971-72. As a safeguard beyond this period, the plants had begun to diversify their production. The Hyderabad plan was being geared for manufacture of turbines for industries like chemicals and paper plants. The unit would also be undertaking centrifugal heavy duty compressors for fertilizer plants. The BHEL was now negotiating foreign firms specializing in this area for collaboration.

Likewise, the Tiruchy plant, which was set up primarily for the manufacture of boilers for thermal electric units, had begun to manufacture boilers for other industrial units like chemical, sugar mills and paper.

At Hardwar the BHEL unit, still under construction, would be undertaking the manufacture of electric traction generators and motors for the Railway Board.

Mr. Murthy also disclosed that he had recently visited Russia and Czechoslovakia who had collaborated in the setting up of these plants to negotiate the accelerated transfer of design technology so that India could be free of foreign assistance in this area.

J. Working Of Shipping Corporation: The total earnings of the State-owned Shipping Corporation of India in 1968-69 amounted to Rs. 42.25 crores as against Rs. 35.59 crores in the previous year.

The corresponding figures of profit before depreciation, interest and taxes were Rs. 10.79 crores and Rs. 10.03 crores, respectively. After accounting for depreciation, interest and taxes, the profits in 1968-69 stood at Rs. 4.89 crores as compared with Rs. 5.424 crores in the previous year.

A dividend of Rs. 5 per share declared for the year under review was the same as in 1967-68. The Corporation also appropriated a sum of Rs. 50,00,000 to dividend equalization reserve from this year's profits.

Speaking to newsmen in Bombay, Mr. C. P. Srivastava, Chairman and Managing Director of the Corporation, said that 1768-69 was a fruitful and eventful year for the company. Thirty-five ships of an aggregate tonnage of about 800,000 were under order in Indian and foreign shipyards. The Corporation's present tonnage was over 85,000 and it was expected to reach the million mark in another two or three months. Negotiations were also in progress for the purchase of giant tankers for feeding crude oil to Haldia refinery.

K. Sugar Exports: It was stated in New Delhi on October 14 that sugar exports during 1969 would total 95,000 tonnes—25,400 tonnes to UK and 69,600 tonnes to USA.

From the exports to Britain, exchange worth Rs. 2.18 crores would be earned and from USA Rs. 7.80 crores.

In 1968, export to UK was 25,400 tonnes (Rs. 2.19 crores of exchange) and to USA 73,328 tonnes (Rs. 7.79 crores in exchange). The loss on these exports was borne entirely by the sugar industry. This, according to the Government, was possible because under the new sugar policy of partial decontrol, 40 per cent of the production was released for free sale.

L. Textile Workers' Strike In West Bengal: An indefinite strike by 50,000 textile workers shut down all 30 textile mills in West Bengal on September 10. It ended on October 8.

The strike sponsored by A-ITUC, INTUC, UTUC and HMS, began when about 20,000 first-shift workers walked out of their factories.

The main demands of the strikers were wage revision, re-opening of closed mills, neutralization of increased cost of living and payment of gratuity and night shift allowance.

Of the 30 mills, 19 were major units and the rest small ones employing fewer than 500 workers. Their total annual production was 216 million yards.

On October 8, an understanding was reached between the Millowners' Association, Bombay, and the Rashtriya Mill Mazdoor Sangh, whereby the former agreed to implement the majority recommendations of the second Wage Board with effect from January 1, 1969.

As a result of this agreement, which was claimed to be production-oriented, the minimum wages of a worker would go up by Rs. 1.50 per month, or Rs. 18 per year. About 2,00,000 workers were expected to be benefitted by it.

The workers would be put on the new wage structure with effect from January, 1970 and will be paid arrears from January 1, 1969. The additional financial commitment of the mills would be Rs. 75,00,000 per year and it will go up to Rs. 8.75 crores over a period of five years, beginning from 1969

M. Prohibition Lifted In Andhra: Prohibition in the Andhra area of the State was lifted from November 1, according to a Government Gazette notification.

The scrapping of prohibition was expected to fetch about Rs. 15 to Rs. 20 crores to the State exchequer.

Prohibition was enforced in Andhra area when it was part of the composite Madras State in 1946.

It was lifted by extending the Excise Act now in force in Telengana to the rest of Andhra Pradesh.

N. Planning And Development Board For Rayalaseema: The Andhra Government on October 6 constituted a Planning and Development Board for Rayalaseema region.

Announcing this at a news conference in Hyderabad, the Chief Minister, Mr. Brahmananda Reddy said that the Assembly Speaker, Mr. B. V. Subba Reddy would be the chairman with Ministers, MPs, MLAs, chairmen of zilla parishads and Collectors of the concerned region as members.

The Board's purpose would be to prepare a long-term plan to eradicate famine from the region, to consider and advise the Government in regard to schemes pertaining to development of Rayalaseema as might be included in the Fourth Plan, to recommend further measures necessary to accelerate the pace of development and to review the region's progress. The Board would meet at least twice a year.

Those who conquered the virgin peak were Miss Lakshi Paul, Miss Shila Ghosh, Miss Swapna Mitra and Miss G. Baralaxmi. They were accompanied by two porters—Ring Ting and Khein Naxel.

The climbers established their fourth and final camp at a height of 19,200 feet and started the final assault on the morning of October 5. They planted on the peak the National Flag and also the club flag which had been presented to them by the Chief Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee and the former Chief Minister, Mr. P. C. Sen respectively.

JAPAN

A. Japan-South Korea Ministerial Conference: Japan and South Korea agreed in the last week of August in Tokyo to conclude a Tax Treaty to put an end to the long-standing controversy over the problem of Korea's unilaterally-decided tax imposition on Japanese business firm offices in Korea.

The agreement came during individual talks between the Japanese Finance Minister, Mr. Takeo Fukuda and his Korean counterpart, Mr. Yul Hwang Chong at a Ministerial conference.

The agreement was reached along the basic lines laid down by an understanding reached and confirmed in a joint communique during the last conference of the series held in Seoul in 1968.

According to Japanese delegation sources, the agreement featured a sort of Japanese concession in that Japan retracted its persistent demand for an "attribution" principle. Japan was said to have given way to Korea's demand for an "over-all" principle applicable to taxation of Japanese business office incomes in Korea.

The Japanese-proposed principle, such as commonly seen with tax treaties between advanced and developing nations as well as the Japan-US Tax Treaty, is to permit such Korean taxation on Japanese business office earnings in Korea only when such earnings are deemed to have derived from transaction attributable to positive actions of such offices.

The Korean-sought over-all principle, like the permit applied to tax treaties among advanced nations, calls for taxation on all earnings of such Japanese business offices in Korea by considering all transactions done through them as definitely attributable to their activities.

Joint Communique:

The two sides ended their Ministerial Conference with the adoption of a joint communique pledging closer economic co-operation between them as well as further efforts to ease tension in the Asian and Pacific area.

The Foreign Minister, Mr. Kichi Aichi, in a closing address referred to agreements on a Korean steel mill project and conclusion of the Tax Treaty as two major achievements.

On the South Korean plan to build a State-run steel mill in Pohang, the biggest issue at the conference, Japan basically agreed to help Korea financially and technologically.

The joint communique said that Japan had promised to send an investigation team to Korea as a first step towards co-operation in the materialization of the project.

The question of a trade imbalance in favour of Japan, which was another major question taken up at the meeting, was overshadowed by the steel mill issue. It was agreed, however, that Japan would reduce tariffs on three import items, including clams.

In the course of political discussions, a difference of views on the international tension in Asia came to the fore between the two countries. The Korean Foreign Minister, Mr. Kyu Ha Choi told the meeting that his country was deeply concerned over the Okinawan question as the security of his own country would be affected by the outcome of the current Japan-US negotiations on the question.

KOREA (South)

A. US Help For Rifle Plant: A joint communique issued in Seoul on June 4 announced that South Korea and the United States planned to set up a plant to produce the M-16 rifle, the standard weapon used by USA and her allies in the Viet-Nam war.

The communique was issued by the US Under-Secretary of Defence, Mr. David Packard, and the South Korean Defence Minister, Mr. Chung-Sik Im, after two days of talks on strengthening South Korean's defence against increasing infiltrations from North Korea.

[South Korea wants to arm its troops, guarding most of the 150-mile Demilitarized Zone, with M-16 rifles. At present about 10,000 of them are equipped with M-16s. Most South Korean troops are equipped with old, heavier M-1 rifles.]

B. Opposition Party To Be Dissolved: The major opposition New Democratic Party decided on September 5 to dissolve itself in order to expel from Parliament three renegade members supporting a proposed third term for President Park Chung Hee.

The unusual decision to hold an emergency national convention to dissolve the party came at a meeting of top party officials and won consent at a party caucus.

A party spokesman said that before dissolving itself, the party would expel all its lawmakers, except the three renegades.

[Under the Constitution, members of the National Assembly automatically lose their seats if their parties are disbanded, but those expelled from their parties may remain as Independents.]

The three Assembly men in question—Mr. Sung Nak-Hyun, Mr. Cho Heung-Man and Mr. Yun Choo-Hum—had issued statements in August supporting a Government party-sponsored constitutional amendment Bill that would allow President Park to run for a third term in 1971.

LAOS

A. US Military Involvement—Senator's Report: The US Senate majority leader, Mr. Mike Mansfield, said in Washington on September 21 that American involvement in Laos had grown to such an extent that it could lead to another Viet-Nam war.

The Senator, who recently returned from a tour of Asia as President R. Nixon's personal representative, said: "This course is already costing some American lives and hundreds of millions of dollars, with all the signs pointing to an accretion rather than a diminution."

He added that present tendencies in Laos were running directly counter to what should be expected from the President's new Asian doctrine. This was a reference to the Guam declaration at the beginning of Mr. Nixon's recent Asian tour. It had said, in effect, that Asian countries must fight their own battles and could only expect material assistance from the United States (see also page 9115).

Turning to this larger issue, Mr. Mansfield said in a report to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the new doctrine clearly called for a contraction of the American presence in South-East Asia. As a first step, the number of Americans in the area, military and civilian, should be frozen immediately.

There was also room for less bilateral American aid, and a rigid and immediate curb on military aid, before treaty commitments and their organizations, especially the South-East Asia Treaty Organization (S-EATO), were re-examined. There must be no deepening of direct military involvement with any Asian Government.

He calculated that there were nearly 800,000 American troops in Viet-Nam, Thailand, Japan, Okinawa, Formosa, the Philippines and Guam, compared with 315,000 in Europe. He said Asian leaders had agreed that the American role in their affairs should be reduced. He found no fear of a Chinese invasion, but there was some uneasiness about American intention. He declared that was understandable because, in spite of the President's declaration, official Americans in the area still expected to play a large military role after Viet-Nam. The Administration must ensure that the new doctrine was properly understood.

Comment:

Meanwhile, the real extent of US military operations in Laos is again being questioned by observers in Vientiane after reports of American participation in recent operations in the Plain of Jars and against the Ho Chi-Minh Trail.

These observers believed that US operations, in part officially admitted and in part conducted secretly, are not being reduced. The bombing of the "Liberated Zone", which had been carried out by American aircraft since 1964, has been widely extended since former President Johnson ordered an end to the bombing of North Viet-Nam.

The United States officially admits supplying the Royal Laotian Army with logistic support, the bulk of which is provided by two "private" airlines—Air America and Air Continental—which make dozens of flights each day. The transport aircraft and helicopters of both companies carry troops, arms, ammunition and food supplies to all theatres of operations.

According to experienced observers, these air operations have a first-rank importance in the conduct of operations in Laos, ferrying assault troops and evacuating casualties and carrying in weapons and ammunition stockpiled in Thailand.

The most closely guarded secret relating to US involvement in Laos is the role of the Special Forces, organized and paid by the Americans and composed of Montagnard tribesmen of Laotian ethnic minorities. These Special Forces are the leaders of operations in the communist zone. Their strength is about 15,000 and reports indicate that they have American and Thai advisers.

Neutral observers estimate that about 1,000 US advisers are in Laos, though official American spokesmen vigorously deny any suggestion that they take part in operations.

Meanwhile, China has closed its Economic and Cultural Mission in Kang Khai and removed the staff just before the town, until now controlled by the Pathet Lao administration, was captured by pro-Government Special Forces. The capture of the town was one of the most recent "successes" of the Special Forces.

The neutralist Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, categorically denied on September 23 that there were any American troops fighting in Laos. "Nor are there any Thai troops in Laotian uniform," he stated. He added that his statement could easily be confirmed. "The International Control Commission simply has to open an inquiry."

He added that the aircraft of Air America and Air Continental were staffed entirely by civilians. He admitted that "a few American troops" supervised the operations, but without taking any part in the fighting.

North Viet-Namese Accusation Against Thailand:

North Viet-Nam on September 21 denounced the Thai Government for acting as "United States lackeys" in a "large-scale nibbling attack" on Laos.

According to a commentary in the People's Army Daily in Hanoi, the Thais had helped the Americans in a policy of "kill all, burn all, and destroy all", resulting in the death of hundreds of Laotian civilians.

The article cited Reuters as its authority for claiming that USA had increased bombing raids on Laos from airfields in Thailand, and quoted The New York Times as saying that Thai troops had been moved across the frontier wearing Laotian uniforms.

MALAYSIA

A. Restrictions On Employment Of Aliens: About 2,000 citizens of Singapore were turned back at the causeway entrance into Malaysia on October 1 on their way to work in factories in Johore Bahru. Immigration officers told them that their visit passes had expired.

Another 3,000 passes would expire at the end of October.

These measures arose from the Malaysian Government's decision to create work for an estimated 200,000 unemployed. A parallel exercise covering the whole country involved 140,000 non-citizens being issued with work permits for three months, six months, one year or two years according to occupation.

As virtually all the 100,000 passes issued so far were stamped "not renewable", their effect was to give workers notice. When their permits expired they would be unemployed and unemployable by law. Tens of thousands of people have been left in a hopeless plight. The great majority, although of Indian and Chinese descent, were born in Malaysia and would prove to be Stateless, as a result of the measure.

A Government spokesman said that they could become self-employed but there was no indication so far how the great number of people involved would be able to achieve this. One estimate was that more than half-a-million people, counting wives and children, would be rendered more or less permanently destitute starting from the end of December when the first permits expire.

Bill Passed:

The Employment (Restriction) Bill became law on September 18.

The Bill, requiring non-citizens in 12 categories of employment to obtain work permits, was passed by Parliament and signed by the Yang Di-Pertuan Agong.

All non-citizens—except those in the diplomatic corps, visiting armed forces, under 21, permanently residing in West Malaysia before Merdeka Day or in East Malaysia before Malaysia Day and having red identity cards—were required to register with the Commissioner of Employment.

Under the Bill, a Commissioner of Employment would be appointed to handle the registration and the issue of work permits.

The biggest single group of non-citizens comprised about 160,000 Indians, who held Indian passports. In addition, there were an estimated 30,000 people of Indian origin, described as Stateless. (Most of them had renounced their Indian citizenship in the hope of getting Malaysian citizenship, but had not yet been able to acquire local citizenship).

According to Malaysian official sources, the measure was not intended against Indian, Ceylonese or Pakistani citizens. The Government was assuming powers to deal with any future discrimination against Malaysian citizens in the Republic of Singapore. The source, however, admitted that a few thousand Indians might be affected by the new measure.

Immigration Regulations Tightened:

On July 10, this year Malaysia had tightened its immigration regulations and had called on all non-citizens above 12 years of age to call at the Immigration Office before September 15 to furnish fresh particulars about themselves.

The more rigid immigration regulations were part of the Emergency declared in the country when racial riots broke out on May 13.

The regulations, known as Essential (Modifications of Immigration Laws) Regulations 1969, would remain in force for the duration of the Emergency.

The new Regulation required travellers to leave Malaysia only at authorised points. Under the present Regulations, travellers are only required to enter the country at such points but could leave from any spot.

The new Regulations gave sweeping powers to the Controller of Immigration who could now detain in custody for 30 days any one whom he wanted to deport.

Previously, detention could only be for the period necessary for making travel arrangements and not more than 14 days in any case.

The Regulation also empowered the Controller of Immigration to require non-citizens to keep him informed of their whereabouts in the country or furnish "any information which he deems to be necessary." Failure to supply the required information might mean jail for six months or fine of $1,000 (Malaysian).

As the registration of non-citizens in Malaysia for employment permits closed on August 14, after a fortnight's extension, the Minister for Home Affairs, Dr. Ismail assured that non-citizens would be allowed to hold on to their jobs so long as they did not deprive Malaysian citizens of jobs.

"We are going to be fair to those who have been helping us in the past," he said. Even in giving priority to citizens for jobs, he said that the Government would also recruit non-citizens in industries and in business, when there was shortage of citizens willing or fit to take the jobs.

Meanwhile, the Minister for Commerce and Industry, Mr. Khir Johari, also asked the commercial firms to give jobs on the proportional strength of the communities, which was around 5 Malays, 4 Chinese and 1 Indian for every 10 of the multi-racial Malaysian population.

Under the special privileges for Malays, in the Constitution, Government jobs are restricted to one non-citizen for every four Malays. This was one of the criticisms of the Government by the Chinese and Indians. But after the May 13 riots the Government had come out firmly to warn non-Malays not to question the special rights for the Malays and at the same time had warned the extremists among the Malays not to upset racial harmony by demanding too much for the Malays.

B. West German Gift: West Germany has gifted equipment for a new marine laboratory and research vessel to Malaysia.

The handing-over was made by the West German Ambassador, Dr. Horst Boehling at a function organized at the Fisheries Research Institute in Penang on September 6.

Speaking on the occasion, the Minister of Agriculture and Co-operatives, Mr. Ghazali Jawi, said that the German gifts were most timely and welcome, as these would enable the Government to undertake effective research.

Since 1965, he said, West Malaysian fisheries had shown remarkable progress. Marine fish landings at the end of 1968 reached an all-time record of 338,508 tons—an increase of 70 per cent over 1965 landings. The increasing adoption of trawlers by fishermen and the extensive use of bigger and powerful boats largely accounted for this spectacular increase in the landings.

He added: "The Malaysian Government is presently planning the establishment of a Fishermen's Training Institute in Penang with the aid of the United Nations Development Programme (Special Fund) and it is hoped that this will be operational some time in 1970." The aim of the Institute was to train fishermen in modern techniques of fishing, use of modern gear and training in navigation to enable them to fish in waters outside their present fishing grounds.

C. ADB Assistance: The Asian Development Bank (ADB) agreed on September 23 to a Malaysian request for technical assistance in conducting a marketing study of oil palm products.

Palm oil and kernel exports earned for Malaysia in 1968 a total of M$140 million, ranking fourth after rubber, tin and timber.

The study, to be made by a consulting firm, will review the oil palm products marketing arrangements of the Federal Land Development Authority (FLDA), a Government statutory body engaged in land development and settlement as well as in agricultural diversification programmes. It will specifically examine the suitability of present marketing arrangements of the FLDA in meeting future needs. This will involve projection of short and long-term output and exports of palm oil and kernels for Malaysia as well as for FLDA. It will make proposals and prepare detailed plans, including operational procedures, for improving FLDA marketing organization. It will also make recommendations on storage and shipping of oil palm products.

Earlier this year, FLDA received through the Government a $2.8 million loan from ADB for constructing two palm oil mills to process its own products.

FLDA is planning its own bulk handlink and storage facilities, scheduled to be completed by 1971. This will enable the organization to become a shipping party in its own right with representation on the Joint Selling Committee. At present, FLDA palm oil is exported through two shipping parties within the frame-work of the Malayan Palm Oil Pool.

FLDA initiated its first oil palm scheme in 1961. Since then it has fostered 22 oil palm schemes, involving 93,850 acres or one-fourth of the total acreage under the crop. It plans to expand its palm oil production so that by 1975, it will produce 343,000 tons or about 26 per cent of the country's total production estimated at 1.3 million tons. Successful execution of its expansion plans will make the Government agency the largest oil products exporter in Malaysia.

Oil palm cultivation forms a vital part of the Government's programme of crop diversification. In the First Plan (1966-70), oil palm emerged as one of the most promising crops, rating high in the country's development strategy. Production of palm oil and kernels has grown at an average annual rate of 17 per cent and 15 per cent respectively, in the last eight years. Total exports of palm oil and kernels have increased by an average annual rate of 12 per cent since 1966, reaching 281,000 tons and 34,000 tons respectively in 1968.

PAKISTAN

A. World Jurists' Criticism Of Military Regime: In its periodic review of human rights in the world, released in London on October 11, the International Commission of Jurists deplored the turn of events in Pakistan.

Notwithstanding the assertions of Gen. Yahya Khan that he and his military advisers would go back to the barracks as soon as conditions returned to normal, the Commission said: "This year's events both in East and West Pakistan make it clear that the goal of parliamentary democracy now appears much further off than it did at the beginning of 1968."

The review recalled how Gen. Ayub Khan in a bloodless coup in October, 1958 toppled Pakistan's weak and unstable parliamentary Government and set himself up as a stern and purposeful ruler. With the introduction of the 1962 Constitution, he lifted Martial Law. Nevertheless, other less ostensible but equally effective weapons were used to curb several fundamental rights and freedoms of the people. The President was also able, through the support of the Army and the powers he enjoyed under the new Constitution, to keep politicians in a state of suspense.

[The Commission has its headquarters in Geneva and the editor of the review is Mr. Sean MacBride, former Foreign Minister of Ireland.]

[Prev. ref. 4533:PAK:A]

B. Controversy Over Elections: According to newspaper reports, a fresh political controversy is evident in the country over Gen. Yahya Khan's indication that the military regime would remain in power at least till the middle of 1971.

Mr. Abdul Sattar, the newly-appointed Election Commissioner, said recently that elections on the basis of adult franchise could not be expected before the Spring of 1971.

Indirectly commenting upon the official pronouncements, Air Marshal Asghar Khan said that no one "should remain under any illusion about the determination of the people to come out again on the streets if a popular government was not installed within a year or so."

In an interview to an influential Urdu weekly, Akhbar-e-Jahan, he complained that the schedule outlined by the Election Commissioner would delay the elections unnecessarily. He also brushed aside the argument of Gen. Yahya Khan that no real progress could be made towards a democratic order unless politicians came to a unanimous decision about the type of Constitution they want. This seemed to him "an untenable argument." Instead of complaining about the differences of opinion among politicians, Gen. Yahya Khan should himself come forward with a democratic solution.

Mr. Z. A. Bhutto also warned the Government that unless immediate and tangible steps were taken for promulgation of a democratic Constitution, the people were likely to lose faith in their promises of the new regime.

Addressing students in Hyderabad (Sind), Mr. Bhutto said that if circumstances compelled us "we could again take to the methods of agitation and revolution which had toppled a powerful dictator like F.-M. Ayub Khan."

Mian Mumtaz Daultana, leader of the Council Muslim League, directly criticized the Government's decision to delay the elections.

In an interview to Nawa-e-Waqt, an Urdu daily of Lahore, Mr. Daultana said he was sure that elections could be held within six to seven months. A delay of nearly two years was not only unnecessary but it could create a feeling of frustration among the people. "Moreover, there was a danger that fissiparous tendencies would in the meanwhile raise their heads and would pose a menace and threat to the very unity and existence of Pakistan."

C. World Bank Team On Inter-Wing Disparities: A World Bank team, which visited Pakistan for six weeks recently studying the extent of industrialization and the feasibility of the draft Fourth Plan, has gone back with the "provisional impression" that even the Government of Pakistan "is very sharply divided" over the issue of economic disparities between the East and West Wings.

The team, headed by Mr. Dragoslav Amramovic and comprising six members, had also in its terms of reference "the validity of the current exchange rate of the Pakistani rupee". It was understood to be of the view that the exchange rate could not be maintained at the present level for long.

The members of the team, in a talk with economists in the country, said that the disparity between the two Wings was causing "a great deal of bitterness and recrimination" even involving the Government. They said that the economic backwardness of East Pakistan "is over*whelming*" and "a great deal of Central initiative is required to pull East Pakistan out of the morass".

The team, which made a minute study of Pakistan's economy, was different from the Commission headed by Mr. Lester Pearson, which a few months earlier visited all the aid-giving and aid-receiving countries to study the impact of the present aid policies and suggest any changes.

The Pearson Commission had also stated that looking at internal problems, the growing disparity between the two Provinces "would continue to be a source of political friction and instability".

The team was also said to have come to the conclusion that Pakistan was at the cross-roads and drastic measures were required to put the economy right before it was too late. One of the shortcomings was the "lack of any solid infra-structure of basic industries."

[Prev. ref. 8142:PAK:D, 8149:PAK:E, 8485:PAK:B]

D. Sheikh M. Rehman On Economic Disparities: Addressing a public meeting in Chittagong recently, the President of the Pakistan Awami League, Sheikh Mujibur Rehman, criticised President Yahya Khan's administration for continuing F-M Ayub Khan's policy of discrimination against East Pakistan and said that his six-point plan and demand for representation for the East Wing on population basis were the inevitable reactions to "neglect and hatred" shown towards this Province over the past 22 years.

He pointed out that the per capita income in both the Wings was almost the same in 1947, but instead of advancing equally thereafter, "East Pakistan now trails far behind West Pakistan."

Quoting figures, he said that since Independence, a total amount of Rs. 3,200 crores was spent from the Central exchequer, of which East Pakistan's share was a paltry amount of Rs. 303 crores. Whereas in terms of foreign exchange earnings, East Pakistan earned Rs. 2,200 crores during the past 22 years, the expenditure of foreign exchange on this Province was Rs. 1,600 crores.

As against this, he said, West Pakistan earned Rs. 1,700 crores of foreign exchange and spent Rs. 3,700 crores. Furthermore, aid and loans received from abroad were disproportionately utilized to the benefit of West Pakistan. Now that the time for repayment of loans had come, a big chunk of East Pakistan's foreign exchange would be diverted towards repayment for the development made in the other Wing.

He said that capital shyness in East Pakistan was the result of such diversion of funds. Eighty per cent of the country's economy was in the hands of 22 families. All of them were from West Pakistan, but had enormous business undertakings in East Pakistan. While they earned in East Pakistan, they spent their earnings in West Pakistan.

These charges were confirmed by a special World Bank report which also added: "Efforts of the Pakistan Government to increase resources going to East Pakistan have been frustrated by a shortage of skills and the absence of a coherent frame-work in the Provinces to use the resources."

PAKISTAN

A. Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan On Pakhtoonistan: Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan told a news conference in New Delhi on October 7 that his conception of Pakhtoonistan was that of an autonomous unit of Pushto-speaking people within the frame-work of Pakistan.

He said that at no stage had the Pakhtoons wanted to opt out of Pakistan and form an independent State for themselves. "Our demand for an autonomous State within Pakistan is near realization." The Martial Law in Pakistan had caused delay in the creation of Pakhtoonistan. The former President, F-M Ayub Khan had promised to concede the demand. President Yahya Khan had also assured him that he would honour the commitment given by his predecessor.

He disclosed that President Yahya Khan had promised to hold early elections in Pakistan and to restore parliamentary democracy.

. He said that the Pakhtoon people objected to the name North-West Frontier Province, as it indicated as if they were a tribal people. He wanted the name of his State to indicate that it was the home of Pathans.

He, however, made it clear that his demand for Pakhtoonistan included the establishment of parliamentary democracy in Pakistan based on the British model. The Centre should have minimum powers and the constituent units should enjoy maximum autonomy. There should be no interference by the Centre in the functioning of the autonomous States.

He repeatedly made it clear that he had not come to India to seek support for the setting up of Pakhtoonistan. "We have solved our problems through our own sacrifices."

B. Revival Of 1956 Constitution –East Wing Controversy: It was reported from Krishnagar on September 21 that a controversy was said to be raging in East Pakistan over a recent suggestion by influential West Pakistan leaders for the revival of the 1956 Constitution.

Recent reports in popular East Pakistan dailies — Dainik Pakistan, Morning News and Paigam—show that a majority of East Pakistan leaders had condemned the discarded Constitution as undemocratic, denying East Pakistan its right to autonomy. The proposal found support from a few leaders known to be attempting to ingratiate themselves with the present military rulers.

The National Awami Party Requisition Group chief, Mr. Muzaffar Ahmed, is opposed to the Constitution which he has described as thoroughly undemocratic because of its rejection of the universally accepted democratic principle of one man, one vote.

Echoing this view, Maulana A. H. Bhashani, President of the pro-Peking faction of the National Awami Party, declared: "We shall not accept any hoax about the Constitution. We are dead against the restoration of the 1956 Constitution as it does not provide for regional autonomy and dissolution of the One-Unit set-up. It provides no solution for the problems of workers and cultivators in the country."

Supporting Mr. Bhashani, Mr. Bashir Ahmed Khan Baktiar, Vice-President of the Pakistan Labour Confederation, denounced the 1956 Constitution as the "bastion of the capitalists."

Hafiz Habibur Rahman, a former Vice-President of the East Pakistan Awami League, suggested revival of the 1956 Constitution after "vital amendments."

Mr. S. M. Murshed, former Chief Justice of East Pakistan, called for a truce in the verbal warfare. "All parties," he said, "are more or less unanimously in favour of holding elections in the country on the basis of adult franchise." This could be possible under the 1956 Constitution if Article 216 was amended.

Prof Golam Azam, leader of the East Pakistan unit of Jamaat-e-Islam, however, extended unreserved support to the restoration of the 1956 Constitution.

C. Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's Warning On Future Set-up: The former Foreign Minister and Chairman of the Leftist People's Party of Pakistan, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, warned at a public meeting in Hyderabad (Sind) on September 21 that "if the present regime of Martial Law wants to see itself in power indefinitely we will give them a fight."

He added: "If trouble arises this time, God knows how it will end and where it will end."

Mr. Bhutto, however, said he did not doubt the intentions of President Yahya Khan's regime to restore democracy in Pakistan and hold elections at an early date, but "we are watching the situation and making a patient appraisal of the conditions as we do not want chaos for the sake of chaos. The situation might get completely out of hand and maybe some outside Powers would exploit such a situation."

He urged the nation to have a Constitution and offered "to co-operate in framing a Constitution which should be acceptable to the people of Pakistan."

D. Peasants' Conference: A Left-wing-organized Peasants' Conference ended abruptly in Dacca on October 5, about 24 hours ahead of schedule, when organizers ran out of food for the 15,000 participants.

The Conference, originally set for two days, was also marked by confusion and a near clash between the moderate and extremist factions of Krishak peasants' movement.

Maulana A. H. Bhashani, leader of pro-Peking National Awami Party who opened the meeting in Shahpur, 90 miles north of Dacca, called on the peasant participants to establish socialism free from all kinds of exploitation.

He told the Conference that Pakistan was passing through "a most critical economic crisis" and only true socialism could solve the nation's ills.

He called for the creation of a people's militia patterned after that of China and offered to send volunteers against "Zionist forces" in West Asia.

E. West German Credit: Under an Agreement signed in Rawalpindi on October 4, West Germany will give Pakistan a credit of DM 140 million (about Rs. 25.2 crores) and 30,000 tons of wheat.

The loan will be repayable in 30 years, with an eight-year period of grace. Interest will be at the rate of 2½ per cent.

F. Remittance Of Incomes From Abroad: The Government ordered on October 6 the remittance to Pakistan of incomes from investments abroad.

The new Martial Law regulation prohibited the sale of Pakistani assets in foreign countries without prior approval of the State Bank of Pakistan and ordered the repatriation to the country of proceeds of such sale through normal banking channels.

Another Government order provided that no pensioner of Pakistan domicile returning after September 18 and acquiring the citizenship of another country would be paid pension in foreign currency.

G. New Minister: President Yahya Khan on October 8 appointed Prof. G. W. Chaudhury from East Pakistan as the tenth member of his Council of Ministers.

He was sworn-in as Communications Minister.

With this addition, there are an equal number of Ministers from East and West Pakistan in the Council.

A. Budget For 1969-70: The Government on September 12 announced a 5,966-million-riyal (about $1,400 million) Budget for the fiscal year 1969-70—an increase of the equivalent of about $250 million over last year's Budget.

An announcement over Jeddah Radio said that oil remained the major source of income, accounting for about two-thirds of the national revenue.

Thirty per cent of the Budget, or $410 million, was earmarked for the Aviation and Defence Ministry—an increase of $85 million over last year's defence budget.

The Radio said that $150 million had been allotted in the new fiscal year for financial aid to UAR and Jordan to help them face "Israeli aggression."

SOUTH YEMEN

A. Cabinet Personnel: Following the bloodless transfer of power of June 14 (see page 9081), the powers of the President were vested in a Presidential Council. This was viewed by observers as an attempt at asserting collective leadership.

Mr. Mohammed Aly Haithem became Prime Minister and Mr. Salem Aly Rabyee Chairman of the new five-man Presidential Council.

The following is a list of the Cabinet members with their portfolios:

Prime Minister—Mr. Mohammed Aly Haithem;

Foreign Affairs—Mr. Aly Saleh El Beidh (the post was formerly held by ex-Premier Feisal Abdul Latif);

Defence—Mr. Mohamed Saleh Aulaqy;

Interior—Mr. Mohamed Saleh Yaffie;

Finance and Acting Minister for Labour and Social Welfare—Mr. Mahmud Ushaish.

Culture and Guidance, and Acting Minister of Education—Mr. Abdulbary Kassim;

Economy, Commerce and Planning—Mr. Aly Mubarak Manwara;

Works and Communications—Mr. Ayder Abu Bakr Attas;

Local Government and Acting Minister of Agriculture and Agrarian Reform—Mr. Aly Nasser Hassany;

Justice—Mr. Abdul Khalifa; and Health—Dr. Abdul Aziz Daly.

Mr. El Beidh and Mr. Khalifa had served as Ministers of Defence and Justice in the first Cabinet formed immediately after Independence, but both were dismissed by ex-President Shaabi in May, 1968. While Defence Minister, Mr. El Beidh had dismissed 28 British military experts from the Air Force.

Mr. Rabyee, the new Chairman of the Presidential Council, is one of South Yemen's liberation heroes. During the freedom struggle he used the code-name "Salesmeen". He has been regarded as the centre of opposition to the policies of former President Shaabi. A former teacher, he was also among the first to join the Popular Guards which took part in the defence of the North Yemeni Republican regime in late 1962. Recently he returned from self-exile in the mountains of Dhala where he had gone after a dispute with the former President in May, 1968.

B. East German Aid: The Prime Minister, Mr. Mohammed Aly Haithem, said in Aden on July 17 that East Germany would provide extensive aid to South Yemen.

He said it would be mainly for agricultural development plus industrial and economic projects. But, he declined to state the value of the aid promised.

He said he would visit the United Arab Republic, Algeria and Russia to seek economic assistance. The country has a deficit of nearly £10 million ($24 million) amounting to practically half the entire Budget.

He said financial talks with Britain had ceased in May, 1968 because Britain had refused to advance further aid. "But South Yemen will insist that Britain honour payments to former civil servants and other persons numbering a total of 11,000 who have been left without prospects or pensions since Independence."

A. Trade Pact With India: Syria and India signed in Damascus on October 9 a Trade Agreement expected to double the trade between them.

Mr. Abdel-Halim Khaddam, Syrian Minister for Economy and Foreign Trade, and Mr. Bali Ram Bhagat, Indian Minister for Foreign Trade, signed the Agreement—the first trade accord between the two countries.

Under it, Syria will import tea, jute and iron from India and export cotton, canned food and industrialized products to India.

THAILAND

A. Accord On Withdrawal Of American Troops: The White House in Washington announced on September 30 that USA would withdraw 6,000 of its 48,000 troops from Thailand in the next nine months.

The announcement said that the two Governments had agreed that "approximately 6,000 US military personnel from the Air Force and the Army are to be withdrawn."

The units "will be withdrawn as expeditiously as possible consistent with operational requirements related to the Viet-Nam conflict." The re-deployment would begin in a few weeks and is to be completed by July 1, 1970.

Most of the Americans in Thailand were airmen engaged in support operations for the Viet-Nam war. With the halt last Autumn of bombing raids against North Viet-Nam, it had become apparent that the number of men could be reduced.

The announcement came as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee began hearings on overseas commitments. An important element in the hearings was the so-called "secret agreement" of 1965 which was reported to have promised US support to the Thai Government in any case of internal or external attack (see page 9190).

President R. Nixon's Visit:

Earlier, on July 28, President R. Nixon flew into Bangkok in the course of his Asian tour and discussed security problems with Thai leaders.

A few hours before the President's arrival, guerrillas attacked an American air base, setting fire to oil explosions which caused some damage and wounded an American guard.

He arrived with a message for the Thai leaders: "The United States will honour its present commitments in South-East Asia, but it will undertake no new obligations, and the present ones will be interpreted in minimal terms."

As he said: "...If domination by the aggressor can destroy the freedom of a nation, too much dependence on a protector can eventually erode its dignity." In short, the new American policy for the area is self-help.

The message followed exactly the line he had been taking throughout his Asian tour, thinly disguised in a learned reference to Thai legend. President Nixon quoted the 13th century Thai King Rama Kamheng: "In the water there are fish; in the fields there is rice... whoever wants to trade in elephants, so trades. Whoever wants to trade in horses, so trades; whoever wants to trade in silver and gold, so trades."

He added: "I believe that the greatest problem before us is not the war in Viet-Nam, but the bringing about of a dynamic set of international relationships which guarantee peace and progress. This cannot be done by the United States alone, it must be a co-operative effort."

Later, a State Department spokesman said in Washington on August 20 that it was agreed during the visit of Mr. Nixon that a reduction of the level of American forces would be discussed at the appropriate time.

A Joint Statement issued by Thai and American officials in Bangkok on August 26 said that USA and Thailand had agreed on a gradual withdrawal of the 48,000 American troops stationed in the country.

The statement said that the talks to arrange for the evacuation of troops would begin in Bangkok on or about September 1. However, the plan for withdrawal of the troops would be considered on the assumption that there would be no significant change in the security situation in South-East Asia.

B. ADB Technical Assistance: The Asian Development Bank (ADB) on September 23 approved a Thai request for technical assistance in planning and implementing a development programme in the north-east and north of the country.

Under the assistance, to be channelled through the Government's Accelerated Rural Development (ARD), ADB will provide a mission of five experts to work as part of a 17-man team in high potential nucleus districts selected for economic development.

The ADB mission will comprise experts in area development planning, soil crop study, water management, marketing and organization of farmers' groups. Besides these five members, the team will include five local counterparts and Thai experts in crop agronomy, irrigation, engineering soil, livestock, rural credit and agricultural economy.

The team is scheduled to begin operations by January, 1970.

Project Details:

The Government formed in 1961 a Committee on development of the north-east to help those living in that area. The accelerated rural development programme was launched in 1964 under the direction of the Committee and the ARD was set up in January, 1966 to take over the expanded scope of work.

Beginning with six provinces in the north-east in 1964, the ARD by 1969 had expanded to a total of 24 of the 71 provinces. Of these 24 provinces, 16 were in the north-east, seven in the north and one in the south. The 24 provinces under ARD have a total population of about 15 million, or about half the population of Thailand.

The ARD programme for the less developed rural areas includes road construction, small irrigation schemes and mobile medical units. Almost 80 per cent of its expenditure in 1968 was for construction work. In that year, ARD expenditure was 225 million baht ($11.2 million), supplemented by US aid in the form of equipment valued at about $9 million.

ARD also implements an agri-business plan aimed at increasing the production and income of farmers by assisting them to form organizations for common benefit. These district-level farmers' organizations serve as centres for supplying credit and production commodities and also for marketing and other facilities.

C. S-EATO View Of Soviet Proposal For Collective Security: The South-East Asia Treaty Organization (S-EATO) in Bangkok made it known on September 8 that Asian Governments "may well see certain benefits" in the Soviet proposal for a new system of collective security in Asia (see page 9153).

A warning was given, however, that the long-term implications of the Soviet plan should be appraised with the utmost circumspection and rationality.

The statements appeared in the annual report of Lt.-Gen. Jesus Vargas, the Secretary-General of S-EATO.

The report said that the Soviet Union had been taking cautious but far-sighted steps to establish its influence in South-East Asia, particularly in Malaysia and Singapore. Tentative overtures had also been made to the Philippines and Thailand.

Since the Soviet concept of collective security was first mentioned by Mr. L. Brezhnev, the Communist Party leader, in June, Russian actions in Asia had been characterized by the utmost correctness. Great care had been taken to limit these actions to legitimate spheres that brought mutual benefits.

Although the idea had yet to be developed in detail, any proposal that held out the prospect of containing China was likely to appear attractive to countries threatened by "Chinese aggression". The Soviet concept was well timed in the light of the British withdrawal from the area and recent modifications of American policies.

The report said: "The regional Governments may well see in the Soviet concept certain benefits to their interests, especially in the short term, and the Soviet Union may be expected to exploit this by making advantageous offers of economic aid and trading partnerships, as it has successfully done in Malaysia and Singapore, and by encouraging regional economic co-operation."

These apparent adventages, however, had to be seen against Russia's long-term goals, which were, like those of China, the erosion of Western influence and the installation of communist regimes. The Soviet plan posed "the very real danger that in time the regional countries may find themselves subjected to rigid external political domination which denies them the right to determine even their own domestic policies."

Increased Soviet influence in South Asia would prompt the Chinese to intensify attempts at subversion, and there was always the possibility that the two communist giants would reconcile their differences after the death of Mr. Mao Tse-tung.

On Chinese Threat:

The report re-iterated S-EATO's conviction that China would continue to threaten the peace in South-East Asia regardless of the outcome of the Viet-Nam war. If a Viet-Nam settlement favoured the United States, the Chinese would throw the blame on Soviet-inspired revisionism, thereby vindicating Mr. Mao's theory that armed struggle, no matter how prolonged, was the only sure road to victory.

If a settlement favourable to the Communists emerged—the report did not discount this possibility—the Chinese would use it as justification for their policy of liberation wars.

The report said that if a Viet-Nam settlement excluded an understanding on Laos, Russia could be expected to work for a political settlement of the Laos conflict while China would continue to advocate armed resistance. The communists appeared to control almost half of Laos and political activity on both sides had been characterized by preparations for the post-Viet-Nam period.

The Neo Lao Haksat—which is to the Pathet Lao what the National Liberation Front is to the Viet-Cong —was attempting to build "patriotic neutralist forces" as a political grouping entitled to a share of seats in any new coalition government. In spite of attempts by Britain, as co-Chairman of the Geneva Conference, to secure the withdrawal of North Viet-Namese troops aiding Pathet Lao forces, the Soviet Union, the other co-Chairman, had not responded. "There seems little prospect that Moscow will heed the appeal, at least until a settlement of the Viet-Nam war is in sight."

In Thailand the communists were expected to combine their guerrilla actions with attempts to subvert members of the new Parliament, particularly Independents.

The situation in Malaysia needed constant attention. The Communist Party was strongly rooted towards Peking and there was no evidence for the suggestion that the Soviet Union had exploited its capability to influence Leftist elements. However, if the Malaysian guerrillas continued to be frustrated in the jungle, they might deem it worth while to give greater emphasis to the parliamentary struggle.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Dr. Ho Chi-minh Dead: The President, Dr. Ho Chi-minh, a legend in his life-time and one of the greatest Communist leaders in Asia, died of a heart attack on September 4 in Hanoi.

The body of President Ho lay in state in Hanoi's Ba Dinh Hall.

A communique issued in the name of the Central Committee of the Viet-Nam Workers' (Communist) Party, the Standing Committee of the National Assembly and the Council of Ministers said: "(We) feel boundless grief in informing the entire party and the entire Viet-Namese people that Comrade Ho Chi-minh, President of the Central Committee of the Viet-Nam Workers' Party and President of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam passed away at 9.47 a.m., September 3, 1969, after a very sudden serious heart attack at the age of 79.

"Everybody has done his best, determined to cure the President at all costs. But due to his advanced age and serious illness, President Ho Chi-minh has departed from us."

Death came to the frail, wispy bearded leader just one day after the 24th anniversary of his country's independence from France. North Viet-Nam immediately went into seven days of official mourning.

A broadcast named a special 26-man Committee to take charge of the funeral, headed by Mr. Le Duan.

The Vice-President, Mr. Ton Duc Thang, was named interim Chief of State.

World leaders mourned the passing of the leader who played a great role in shaping Asian history.

Cease-fire Proposed By Viet-Cong:

The Viet-Cong proposed a three-day cease-fire in South Viet-Nam as a mark of respect to Dr. Ho Chi-minh's memory. But South Viet-Nam on September 7 rejected the cease-fire. As the decision was announced in a Government statement, military spokesmen in Saigon reported a new series of at least 27 rocket and mortar attacks by the Viet-Cong across the country.

The Saigon announcement, which came only 12 hours before the cease-fire was due to begin, dashed hopes that the truce might lead to a broader respite and an easing of the deadlock at the Paris peace talks. An American military spokesman noted that in the past the United States had followed Saigon's lead in observing truces and he had no information to suggest that the attitude would be different this time.

However, on September 8, in what appeared to be a change of course, the United States and South Viet-Namese military commands announced that the level of allied military activity during the three-day Viet-Cong cease-fire would be governed by the level of enemy activity.

The announcement seemed to move well away from Saigon's earlier outright rejection of the enemy proposal for a cease-fire.

Several violations of the truce were reported, including the mining of a train between Da Nang and Hue, the mining of a bus south of Da Nang, and scattered ambushes. The train explosion damaged the locomotive, derailed two cars and wounded a militiaman. It was also hit with small-arms fire.

American field commanders reported they were under orders to avoid contact and to refrain from supporting South Viet-Namese units seeking action. Further, American Air Force Officers said no B-52 strikes had been launched after the enemy cease-fire began.

Unity Appeal:

In announcing the death of President Ho Chi-minh, the Government appealed to the nation to close ranks.

It called on the Communist Party, the armed forces and the people to translate sorrow into revolutionary acts, strengthen solidarity and channel all our will and forces into the great cause of fighting and defeating the United States aggressors, liberating the south of our country and successfully building socialism in the north".

In this way, the statement went on, "the lofty aspiration cherished by President Ho Chi-minh" will be achieved.

Chinese Reaction:

The Chinese Prime Minister, Mr. Chou En-lai flew to Hanoi on September 4 as the head of China's delegation for the funeral.

Peking described Dr. Ho as "an outstanding proletarian revolutionary.... (who) dedicated his whole life to the national liberation struggle of Viet-Nam and the cause of communism".

It emphasized the role Dr. Ho played in "fighting the most ferocious United States imperialism.... and confronting it with imminent destruction".

The Chinese communique went on to state: "President Ho Chi-minh unfortunately passed away at the crucial moment when the Viet-Namese people's war... is about to win a final victory."

It described Dr. Ho's death as "a great loss for the cause of the anti-United States struggle of the Chinese people and all peoples of the world."

It also referred to the need for the Viet-Namese to persevere "in maintaining independence and keeping the initiative in their own hands and persevering in self-reliance".

However, Mr. Chou En-lai did not wait for the funeral. He returned on September 4 itself. On September 8 the Chinese news agency announced that the Vice-Premier, Mr. Li Hsien-nien would attend the funeral of Dr. Ho Chi-minh. With him went Mr. Li Teh-sheng an alternate member of the Politburo. Joining them in Hanoi as a member of the Chinese delegation was Mr. Wang Yu-ping, Peking's Ambassador to North Viet-Nam.

To emphasize respect for Dr. Ho, Hsinhua reported that the Government in Peking had ordered Chinese flags to be flown at half-mast at all Government institutions, factories, mines, people's communes, educational institutions, vessels and ports, by units of the armed forces and numerous other establishments.

Besides, Mr. Li, foreign dignitaries who attended the funeral included Prince Norodom Sihanouk of Cambodia, the Indian Foreign Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh, Deputy Premiers of Czechoslovakia, Poland, Hungary and Bulgaria and numerous other foreign Communist Party representatives.

President Ho's Will:

President Ho Chi-minh's final message to his people, read at his funeral on September 9, was a call to the party to heal the rift in the world communist movement and a firm assurance that North and South Viet-Nam would be re-united after the defeat of USA.

President Ho said in his Will that he had suffered from the "dissensions" in the world communist movement, but he added: "I firmly believe that the brother countries and parties will unite again."

Mr. Le Duan, the party's First Secretary, read out President Ho's Will at a simple, brief ceremony in Hanoi attended by 250,000 mourners ranging from world leaders to ordinary Viet-Namese. The former included the Soviet Prime Minister, Mr. Kosygin and Mr. Li Hsien-nien, a Chinese Deputy Prime Minister.

The ceremony reached its climax with a mass oath-taking pledging the North Viet-Namese to complete the mission undertaken by their dead leader.

Mr. Le Duan, in his funeral oration, echoed the themes of national independence, determination to defeat the "American aggressors", unification of party unity, proletarian internationalism and the need for international communist unity on the basis of Marxism-Leninism.

The throng of mourners then swore the following five oaths:

"(1) To brandish, without weakening, the flag of national independence, be determined to fight and defeat the American aggressors, liberate the south, defend the north and re-unify the country to realize the hopes it has cherished.

"(2) To continue with all force the struggle to accomplish the noble ideals of socialism and communism that the President followed in the struggle of the workers and people to build the country and the happiness of compatriots.

"(3) To maintain party unity.

"(4) To maintain the international orientation of the party, contribute to the unity of socialist peoples and support all revolutionary forces of other peoples struggling for independence, peace, democracy and socialism.

'"(5) To follow President Ho's examples in work and revolutionary quality, without fearing difficulties or sacrifices."

The following are excerpts from his Will:

"In anticipation of the day when I have to join Karl Marx, V. I. Lenin and the venerable past, I leave this Will so that the compatriots throughout the country, the comrades in the Party and friends abroad can have no surprise.

"First, I will speak about the Party. Thanks to the unity and dedication to the party, the people and the Fatherland, since the coming into existence of our Party, we have united, organized and led the people in an ardent struggle from victory to victory.

"Since unity is the most valuable tradition of our Party and our people and is the first essential, this must be preserved as the first consideration. All comrades at all levels have to guard the unity and unanimity of the Party as we guard the apples of our own eyes. Within the Party, there must be broad democracy. Serious criticism and self-criticism regularly should be the best way to consolidate and develop the unity in the Party. There must be comradely love in the Party.

"Our Party is in power and must remain united solidly. Every Party member and cadre has to impregnate the revolutionary virtues i.e., true industry, thrift, honesty and integrity, public-mindedness and selflessness. We have to protect the purity of our Party and be worthy of the leaders and loyal servants of the people.

'"Our youths are very active. They are ready to fulfil the duties and to march forward fearless of difficulties and hardships. The Party must care for them and inculcate in them the revolutionary virtues and to train them into the worthy heirs of the coming society. They must be prepared for vanguard tasks. The ceaseless education of the revolutionary generation for the time to come is very important and necessary.

"Our labouring people in the mountainous areas as well as in the delta suffered hardships. They experienced colonial and feudal exploitation and suppression and many years of war. But our people are very heroic, industrious, vigorous and active. Since the coming into existence of the Party, our people have always followed the Party and have been loyal to the Party. The Party should endeavour by economic and educational development to improve ceaselessly the living standard of the people.

"The resistance against US aggression may be prolonged. Our people still have to make sacrifices. In any case we must be determined to defeat the US aggression to win the final victory. Our country, our mountains, and our men will ever remain.

"After defeating the US aggression, we will rebuild our country ten times stronger than now. Despite the hardships lying ahead, our people will certainly win complete victory. The US imperialists will have to pull out. Our Fatherland will be unified and our compatriots in the North and South will be re-united.

"Our country will have the great honour that even though it is a small Power it has vigorously defeated the strong imperialists—the French and the Americans—and made worthy contribution to the national liberation movement the world over.

"About the international communist movement: Having dedicated my whole life to the cause of revolution, I'm very proud of the strength and growth of the international communist and working class movement, but I'm aggrieved to see the differences that are dividing the fraternal socialist parties. I wish that our Party will actively contribute to the restoration of unity among the fraternal socialist parties, on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism. I am sure that fraternal countries and parties will be united again."

Life Sketch:

President Ho Chi-minh was born on May 19, 1890 in Kim-Lien village, in a poor peasant scholar's family. His name in childhood was Nguyen Tat Thauh. In 1911, with the aspiration of studying revolutionary ideals, he went abroad and worked as a labourer, actively participated in the revolutionary movements of the people in many countries and at the same time ceaselessly carried on the struggle for independence and freedom of his own people.

He was the first Viet-Namese who supported the Great October Russian Revolution and accepted Marxism-Leninism as the path for liberating the working class. In 1920, he participated in the founding of the French Communist Party at the Toures Congress and from a genuine patriot he became an outstanding communist fighter. He said that for saving and liberating the nation there was no way but the way of proletarian revolution. To link up the resistance movement of the Viet-Namese people with the international working class movement and the liberation movement all over the world, he participated in the founding of the League of Peoples of the French Colonies in 1921 and started publishing a journal, Le Paria in Paris in 1922.

In 1923 he was elected to the Central Committee of the International Association of Peasants. In 1924, he attended the Fifth Congress of the Communist International and was appointed a standing member of the Eastern Department and was put in direct charge of the Southern Department. In 1925, he participated in the founding of the League of Oppressed Asian Peoples and published two books entitled French Colonialism on Trial in 1925 and The Road of the Revolution in 1927.

Preparatory to the founding of the Viet-Namese Communist Party, he set up the "Viet-Nam Revolutionary Youth League" in Canton (China) in 1925 and organized Communist groups which comprised the active members of the League. He trained communist cadres to lead the League and step up the dissemination of Marxist-Leninist ideology in the country. The first communist organizations came into existence in Viet-Nam in 1929.

On February 3, 1930, at the behest of the Central Committee of the Communist International, he convened a Unification Conference to merge the communist organizations of Viet-Nam into a single Party called the Viet-Nam Communist Party, which was later changed into Indo-Chinese Communist Party and now it is called the Viet-Nam Workers' Party. At the Unification Conference he pointed out clearly that the revolutionary line in Viet-Nam must be first to carry out the national and democratic revolution and then the socialist revolution.

From 1930 to 1940, he ceaselessly worked for the liberation of the Viet-Namese people. He came back to Viet-Nam in 1941 and convened the eighth conference of the Central Committee of the Indo-Chinese Communist Party, at which the "line of national salvation" was adopted and decisions for setting up the League for the Independence of Viet-Nam, i.e. the Viet-Minh Front, organizing the Liberation Armed Forces, strengthening of the revolutionary rear base, leading the people in the uprising and preparing for the general uprising to regain power throughout the country were made.

After the successful carrying out of the August, 1945 Revolution, he declared the foundation of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam on September 2, 1945. The first National Assembly elected him President in 1946. But after the August Revolution, the French returned to Viet-Nam. He appealed to the people to carry out a resistance war which culminated in the great Dien-Bien-Phu victory and withdrawal of the French from Viet-Nam. He had been the President of the country since then.

B. French Offer Of Assistance: President Georges Pompidou of France in a cable to the Vice-President, Mr. Ton Duc Thang, has offered to help re-build Viet-Nam "at a convenient time and within the means at its disposal."

The contents of the cable were released in Hanoi on September 13.

President Pompidou pointed out that the North Viet-Namese Delegate-General in Paris had assured the French Government that the death of Dr. Ho Chi-minh "would in no way change the relations between the two countries." "I want to take this opportunity to assure you of continuity in French policy towards North Viet-Nam. It is in this spirit that the French Delegate-General at Hanoi has told the North Viet-Namese Government of France's wish to participate at a convenient time and within the means at its disposal in rebuilding the country."

He said France "would spare no effort to use its influence to seek peace and so put an end to the cruel suffering of the Viet-Namese people."

He pointed out that France believed a Viet-Nam peace formula could be worked out on the lines suggested by Gen. de Gaulle at Pnom Penh, Cambodia.

[On September 1, 1966 Gen. de Gaulle had called for a Treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of States formed from the former French territory of Indo-China so that each country was sovereign and completely free to govern its own affairs.]

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. Further US Troop Withdrawal: President Richard Nixon of USA announced in Washington on September 16 that his country would withdraw an additional 35,000 troops from South Viet-Nam.

The new withdrawal would be made before December 15, reducing American troop strength in South Viet-Nam to 484,000. With this, USA would have withdrawn a total 65,000 troops.

Mr. Nixon coupled his announcement with a review of what he termed the Administration's "major efforts to bring an end to the war." Repeating his past proposals for a peaceful settlement, he added: "The time for meaningful negotiations has, therefore, arrived. I realise that it is difficult to communicate across the gulf of five years of war. But the time has come to end this war."

The US decision came after weeks of debate within the Administration, some of it conducted in public to the embarrassment of Mr. Nixon, over whether or not USA should continue to withdraw troops unilaterally. The confusion had reached a peak during the previous three weeks when widely differing interpretations were put on Mr. Nixon's decision, first to postpone further withdrawals and second, to halt heavy bomber raids on Viet-Cong positions in South Viet-Nam for 36 hours and then resuming them again, without quite explaining what the gesture was intended to achieve.

The troop withdrawal announcement did not succeed in removing all these doubts and confusion. For instance, it was not explained what criteria the Government had employed to determine that the time was ripe for another troop cut announcement. USA had all along said that the pace of US withdrawals would be conditioned by three factors. They were: progress at the Paris peace talks, a drop in enemy military activity and, thirdly, South Viet-Nam's ability to take over the war. Evidently, the first two things had not happened and it was seriously doubted that Saigon's military capability had significantly improved.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A UN General Assembly Begins 24th Session: The UN General Assembly began its 24th regular session on September 16 when it elected Miss Angie E. Brooks of Liberia as its President.

In her inaugural address as President, Miss Brooks spoke of the "heartrending turbulence" in the world since the Assembly last met, and added that, like everyone else, she had noticed "the gradual decline of United Nations in the eyes of public opinion." Nevertheless, "the need for the world body is ever on the increase," and it had "all the potential to become the only saving device that the world can invent."

Yet all too often, delegations viewed world affairs "somewhat parochially." Some delegations did not exert enough pressure on their Governments to evince from them a sense of internationalism. She argued against a weighted vote in United Nations, stating that "there is no alternative to the principle that each State must have an independent vote". She said it was the duty of the small countries to establish a counter-balance against the improper use of the veto power.

She added that youth had in many cases not been sufficiently articulate or positive in its demands and at times was unnecessarily and thoughtlessly violent, asking for "what it did not want."

After electing its other officers, the Assembly heard an address by the President of the United States, Mr Richard Nixon, and began its general debate. The General Committee recommended a total of 120 items for inclusion in the agenda for the three-month session, and proposed December 16 as the target date for its close.

President R. Nixon's Address:

President Richard Nixon of the United States, addressing the General Assembly on September 18, urged all member-States "to use your best diplomatic efforts to persuade Hanoi to move seriously into negotiations which could end" the war in Viet-Nam.

With regard to West Asia, he said that peace could not be achieved through substantial alterations in the map of the region; it must rest on "a binding, irrevocable commitment by the parties to live together in peace." Failing a settlement, an agreement limiting the shipment of arms to West Asia might help to stabilize the situation.

He defined American policy on various issues thus:

Viet-Nam: "The lack of progress at the Paris peace talks stems largely from the lack of willingness of the other side to talk on any terms other than those that would predetermine the result and deny the right of self-determination to the people of South Viet-Nam." "In the name of peace, I urge all of you here—representing 126 nations—to use your best diplomatic efforts to persuade Hanoi to move seriously into the negotiations which could end this war."

West Asia: "We seek a settlement based on respect for the sovereign right of each nation to exist within secure and recognized boundaries. We are convinced that peace cannot be achieved on the basis of substantial alterations in the map of the Middle East. We are equally convinced that peace cannot be achieved on the basis of anything less than a binding, irrevocable commitment by the parties to live together in peace."

East-West Talks: "The date we proposed for the opening of (Strategic Arms Limitation) talks has passed for lack of response (from Moscow). We remain ready to enter negotiations. "Though the issues are complex, we are prepared to deal with them seriously, concretely and purposefully—and to make a determined effort not only to limit the build-up of strategic arms, but to reverse it.. We intend to conduct our negotiations with the Soviet Union soberly and seriously, neither encumbered by prejudice nor blinded by sentimentality, seeking to reach agreements rather than to make propaganda. Whenever the leaders of Communist China choose to abandon their self-imposed isolation, we are ready to talk with them in the same frank and serious spirit."

International Co-operation: "There are five areas in particular of great concern to us all... securing the safety of international air travel, encouraging of voluntary service (for human advancement), fostering economic development and population control, protecting our threatened environment, exploring the frontiers of space."

US Aims: "...To encourage the creative forms of nationalism, to join as partners where our partnership is appropriate, and where it is wanted, but not to let a US presence substitute for independent national effort or infringe on national dignity and pride. Our most fundamental national interest is in maintaining that structure of international stability on which peace depends, and which makes orderly progress possible."

Election Of Office-bearers:

As Vice-Presidents, the General Assembly on September 17 elected the heads of delegations of the following 17 countries: Barbados, Chile, Formosa, Denmark, France, Ghana, Indonesia, Jordan, Luxembourg, Malawi, Mongolia (Outer), Nigeria, Panama, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, the United States and Yugoslavia.

The following were elected as Chairmen of Main Committees:

First Committee (Political and Security): Mr. Agha Shahi (Pakistan);

Special Political Committee: Mr. Eugenius Kulaga (Poland);

Second Committee (Economic and Financial): Mr. Costa P. Caranicas (Greece);

Third Committee (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural): Mrs. Abdallahi Ould Daddah Turkia (Mauretania);

Fourth Committee: (Trust and Non-Self-Governing Territories): Mr. Theodore Idzumbuir (Democratic Republic of the Congo);

Fifth Committee (Administrative and Budgetary): Mr. David Silveira da Mota, Jr. (Brazil);

Sixth Committee (Legal): Mr. Gonzalo Alcizar (Ecuador).

The President and Vice-Presidents of the Assembly, together with the Chairmen of the Main Committees, constitute the General Committee.

U Thant's Report:

The UN Secretary-General, U Thant, in the introduction to his annual report on the work of United Nations, said on September 19 that he could report "very little progress in the world at large towards the goals of the United Nations Charter—international peace and security, friendly relations among nations and international co-operation."

"Furthermore", he added, "I have a strong feeling that time is running out. This is true as much in regard to international peace and security, including disarmament, as it is true for economic and social development."

In other sections, he stated that the deterioration of the international situation had continued. In West Asia, the level of conflict had never been higher since June, 1967. Failing some early progress towards a settlement, there was a very real danger that the region would recede steadily into a new dark age of violence, disruption and destruction. It seemed clear enough that none of the parties to the conflict, no matter what temporary military or other superiority it might enjoy at any given time, could hope in the long run to emerge as the victor. It was imperative and urgent that some way be found to reverse the present trend towards catastrophe.

On the conflict in Nigeria, he continued to feel that the right course was to leave the political aspects of the problem to the Organization of African Unity (OAU) for solution. He hoped that initiatives taken at the recent Assembly of Heads of State and Government of OAU in Addis Ababa would be followed by wide and conciliatory action by both parties so that a just and fair settlement of the issues in this tragic war might be achieved by peaceful means.

Concerning Viet-Nam, he could see signs of some improvement. He believed that talks between the parties involved, such as those going on in Paris, were essential for working out a solution. He hoped that there might soon be a further de-escalation of the fighting and that the people might be enabled to resolve their differences by themselves without outside interference. Every opening that might present itself should be seized and fullest advantage derived from it in moving towards de-escalation and a final settlement.

The situation in Cyprus, he said, had improved steadily in terms of a return to normal conditions of civilian life; basic issues, however, still awaited solution.

He also made the following points:

Disarmament: Progress was indeed very limited. The world seemed threatened by an uncontrollable escalation of the nuclear arms race. He appealed to the Soviet Union and USA to begin immediately their bilateral talks to limit and reduce offensive and defensive strategic nuclear weapons. The world, now at a critical crossroads, could pursue the arms race at a terrible price to security and progress, or it could move towards the goal of general and complete disarmament. He proposed that the Assembly dedicate the 1970s as a Disarmament Decade and that it establish a programme and time-table for dealing with all aspects of the problem. He also hoped the Assembly at this session might reach some consensus on the future approach to the question of chemical and bacteriological (biological) weapons.

Colonialism and apartheid: These chronic problems had persisted in Southern Africa in defiance of United Nations. There was no evidence of political will to solve the problems on the part of those in a position to do so. The same was true of the difficult questions of Rhodesia and Namibia.

Organization's financial situation: This remained precarious. It might be anticipated that the situation would deteriorate and again become critical before the end of 1969.

Economic and social development: As the Assembly considered questions related to objectives and strategies for the Second Development Decade, it would be encouraging if there were a greater degree of optimism and enthusiasm consistent with the signal successes that had attended the efforts of the Organization, particularly as a multi-national instrument for promoting economic and social development.

Human environment: He hoped that international action in this field might result in improvement in those countries where pollution had already become a serious problem, and that developing countries might benefit from the experience of the advanced countries.

B. International Colloquium On Space Law: The United States and USSR agreed at an International Colloquium on Space Law in Mar del Plata (Argentina) on October 10 that the Moon belonged to no one nation and exploitation of the Moon's mineral matter should be for the benefit of all humanity.

The Colloquium was part of the 20th Congress of the International Astronautical Federation which ended after five days of debates.

World scientists including the Soviet scientist, Dr. Leonid Sedov, creator of the Sputnik, and United States' Apollo Director, Dr. George Muller, participated in them.

The 500 delegates at the Congress presented 136 papers concerning space propulsion, flight paths, space physiology, energy production aboard orbiting stations, the uses of satellites and other subjects. They also discussed problems of rescuing astronauts in case of space accidents.

The Federation's Governing Council decided to hold the next Congress in 1970 in West Germany.

CHINA

A. Talks With Soviet Union To Be Held: Peking Radio reported on October 7 that China and the Soviet Union had decided to begin negotiations on their border dispute.

The talks would be held at Deputy Foreign Minister level in Peking. The Radio did not say when.

It said that China was ready to seek "a global solution to the Sino-Soviet frontier question" on the basis of existing Treaties and, meanwhile, proposed that "the border status quo be maintained and armed conflicts avoided." The existing Treaties were "'unequal and imposed on China by imperialist Tsarist Russia in the second half of the 19th century and the beginning of the 20th century when power belonged to neither the Russian nor Chinese people."

It blamed Russia for the increase of tension along the 4,500-mile border and emphasized that they had "never demanded the return of the territory Tsarist Russia had annexed by means of the unequal Treaties". The Soviet Government had persisted "in occupying still more Chinese territory" in violation of the Treaties.

[China had proposed at the meeting on September 11 between Mr. Alexei Kosygin, the Soviet Prime Minister, and Mr. Chou En-lai, the Chinese Prime Minister, that "the armed forces of the Chinese and Soviet sides disengage by withdrawing from, or refraining from entering, all the disputed areas along the Sino-Soviet border." This would allow negotiations to be held "free from any threats." The Chinese had also proposed "provisional measures for reaching an agreement on maintaining the status quo of the border" and had repeated these in letters to the Soviet Government on September 18 and again in October.]

Negotiations would not reconcile the ideological differences between the Soviet Union and China, Peking Radio added, but this should not prevent the two countries maintaining normal relations on the basis of the five points for peaceful co-existence announced by Mr. Chou En-lai. There was no reason whatsoever for China and the Soviet Union to fight a war over the boundary question.

The Sino-Soviet border question was one of great concern to the Chinese and Soviet peoples and to the peoples of the world. The Chinese Government hoped that the Soviet Government "will truly take a serious and responsible attitude towards it."

The Radio repeated Mr. Chou En-lai's declaration that China was developing nuclear weapons only to break the nuclear monopoly of other countries, but warned that "should a handful of war maniacs dare to raid China's strategic sites in defiance of world condemnation, that will be war, that will be aggression."

The agreement to the talks was the climax of a series of Sino-Soviet exchanges since the two border clashes on Chen Pao (Damansky in Russian) Island on the Ussuri River in March.

Comment:

According to Mr. Richard Harris, commentator on Chinese affairs in The Times (London), the agreement between China and Russia to begin negotiations on their border dispute must be the fruit of Mr. Kosygin's flying call in September in Peking, though there were good reasons to think that the Chinese were now genuinely anxious to have such talks.

Attempts to reduce tension had been multiplying recently. The latest was a report from Alma Ata (Kazakhstan) quoting reliable local sources that both Russian and Chinese border troops had withdrawn 75 km back at certain points of the frontier, a story also reported by the Yugoslav agency. The Sinkiang frontier was the one most open to dispute as it had never been fully demarcated, whereas the north-eastern frontier was at least limited in any dispute to the main course of the Amur and Ussuri Rivers and the islands within them.

It would have been noted in Moscow that the Chinese had made no mention on their National Day of the two nuclear explosions carried out in the previous ten days, both of which were obviously timed to mark the 20th anniversary under arrangements no doubt made many months before.

The talks now agreed to would be a resumption of those temporarily adjourned in 1964. The matter did not become acute again until the outbursts of fighting over Chen Pao island in the Ussuri River in March. In the second of these on March 14 and 15, the Russians had mounted an all-out attack from which the Chinese suffered heavy casualties. The Chinese burst of protest at this was very quickly damped down.

However, Chinese anger at the belligerent tone and behaviour of the Russians was expressed in the curt dismissal of Mr. Kosygin when he came on the telephone from Moscow on March 21 and was told that ordinary diplomatic channels would do very well. On March 29, the Russians issued a statement denouncing Chinese claims but suggesting that the adjourned talks should be resumed.

This proposal was referred to by Marshal Lin Piao, the Chinese Defence Minister, in giving his report to the Ninth Party Congress two weeks later—the Russian Note may indeed have been timed to influence that gathering.

Not until May 24 did the Chinese clarify their position by answering the Russian Note with a memorandum of their own. The memorandum disputed the Russian claim that the Treaties of 1858 and 1860 had ended the matter, insisting that the navigation agreement for the Amur and Ussuri Rivers was not a substitute for a newly negotiated Frontier Treaty. The Chinese argued that the two Treaties must be confirmed as unequal ones but that they would be willing to take them as the basis for determining the alignment of the border.

Since then there had been the meeting in June of the Navigation Commission which seemed to have survived some bitter arguments and angry behaviour, finally reaching agreement.

Trade Talks:

Western news agencies quoting authoritative sources in Moscow said on October 2 that Soviet and Chinese representatives had opened trade talks as the first tangible result of Mr. Kosygin's recent visit to Peking.

The talks were being conducted on the Chinese side by the Embassy's Commercial Counsellor, who had returned to Moscow in June after an absence of more than two years.

The sources did not say when the talks began or who was taking part in them. There was also no suggestion that they were at a high level. They followed similar unconfirmed reports that frontier troops of the two countries had actually begun withdrawing from forward positions at disputed positions along their Far Eastern and Central Asian borders.

Another feature of the reported Kosygin plan was a stop in polemics in the Chinese and Soviet Press. While the Chinese had not stopped polemics, the Soviet Press had stopped virtually all attacks on Peking.

Trade between China and the Soviet Union had fallen over the past few years as friction between them increased. While the total trade volume reached almost $2,000 million in 1960, according to available figures it had dropped to $107 million in 1967.

B. Nuclear Test Explosions: Peking Radio reported on October 4 that China had successfully carried out two nuclear explosions in September, 1969.

It said that the one on September 23 was China's first successful underground nuclear test and the other, on September 29, was a hydrogen bomb test in the atmosphere.

In Washington, US Atomic Energy Commission officials said on October 5 that they had no evidence that China's nuclear tests were a leap forward in Chinese nuclear technology. It estimated the H-bomb explosion to have been equal to three million tons of TNT—the same as previous tests in 1967 and 1968.

C. Chinese Rule In Tibet—Dalai Lama's View: In his first political speech from a public platform, the Dalai Lama said in New Delhi on October 11 that whether or not a free and independent Tibet should be a Communist State was a matter for the people of Tibet to decide. He would not stand in the way.

He was confident that no Tibetan, not even the younger generation educated under the Chinese Communists, wanted Chinese rule over their country. Tibet, he said, had been independent all through its history. Under Chinese rule, the Tibetan race was facing a threat of extinction.

Addressing a meeting organized by the School of International Studies, he recalled that in ancient times Tibet had cultural relations with China. There was some exchange in the fields of science and medicine. Tibetans had adopted certain customs from her neighbours—philosophy and religion from India, the culinary art from China and clothing styles from Mongolia.

Tibetan history made it clear that Tibet was always independent. Before the advent of Buddhism, Tibetans had taken arms against others. The Tibetan Army had gone into China and records bore evidence that the Chinese Emperor had to flee before the advancing forces. Later, when China became strong, they came into Tibet, but no records showed that Tibet was ever a part of China.

He said: "We are not against China for their socialist system or ideology. It is possible that in future Tibet will be a Communist country—if the majority of the people want it. But the important point is that Tibetans want to be ruled by their own people, free from foreign domination."

Affirming his faith in the power of truth, he said Tibetans would continue to struggle for the desired end. Efforts were today concentrated on keeping alive the just cause of Tibetan independence. "We might have to change when the situation alters, but I cannot say yet in what direction."

He admitted that it was difficult to realise any immediate benefit from raising the Tibetan issue at United Nations, but in the past, three resolutions had been passed and that was some progress for the cause of a small nation trying to free itself.

Later, he invited questions from the audience. Asked what concrete steps the Tibetans were taking to free their country from Chinese domination, he said that the achievement of Tibetan independence depended on various changing factors, but presently "we are concentrating on keeping the Tibetan question alive." The strategy to achieve the goal of independence might have to be changed and, therefore, could not be outlined at present.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Mr. N. Ceausescu's Visit; Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan's Visit; Role Of SDR Scheme; Four Central Ministers Relieved; President's Rule In Manipur; National Integration Committee Meeting; Bangla Congress On Lawlessness In West Bengal; Telengana Regional Development Committee; Mr. Morarji Desai's Fast.

A. President N. Ceausescu's Visit: The President of Rumania, Mr. Nicolae Ceausescu, arrived in New Delhi on October 13 on a six-day State visit. He was accompanied by the Rumanian Premier, Mr G. Maurer.

In response to the welcome accorded to him by the President of India, Mr. V. V. Giri, at the airport, he explained the two-fold purpose of his visit—to further develop the existing friendly relations between the two countries and to accentuate co-operation between them in the peaceful settlement of international issues.

Discussions were held on October 14 between leaders of the two countries to strengthen bilateral relations. The consensus which emerged from these discussions was that besides increasing the volume of trade, there should be more co-operation in the industrial field, production should be diversified to meet each other's requirements and joint ventures might be set up in third countries.

Agreements Signed:

Two Agreements were signed the same day (October 14)—one for the purchase by India of 10 bulk carriers at a cost of about Rs. 24 crores for the Shipping Corporation of India and other shipping companies, for transport of iron-ore, fertilizer, sulphur etc, and the other a Trade Protocol for 1970 with a turn-over of about Rs. 40 crores, under which Rumania would take Indian iron-ore, wire ropes, machine tools and steel pipes, while India would import petroleum products, oil prospecting and drilling equipment, tractors and ships.

On the political level, the Prime Minister, Mrs. I. Gandhi, held talks with Mr. Ceausescu when the two reviewed the international situation. Earlier, on October 13, at a dinner given in his honour, President Ceausescu expressed the hope that the Paris talks would lead to cessation of hostilities in Viet-Nam.

Replying to a civic reception accorded to him at the Red Fort

On October 14, Mr. Ceausescu said that the expansion of economic and cultural co-operation between India and his country was a "vivid illustration" of the principles of peaceful co-existence.

Mrs. Indira Gandhi had an unscheduled meeting with Mr. Ceausescu on October 15 when they had detailed discussions on political issues. They specifically discussed European security, China, USSR and Viet-Nam. Mrs. Gandhi was stated to have maintained that India would favourably respond to any serious attempt by China to restore normal relations between the two countries.

President Ceausescu, with his entourage, flew to Bangalore on October 16 on a two-day visit to Mysore.

[Mr. Ceausescu was the third Rumanian President to visit India. The then President, Mr. Chivu Stoica had visited India in 1958 (see page 1948) and his successor, Mr. G. Gheorghiu-Dej in 1962 (page 4887). Mr. Gheorghiu-Dej was accompanied, among others, by the Prime Minister, Mr. Maurer and the Foreign Minister, Mr. Corneliu Manescu. These two dignitaries were again visiting India in the 24-member delegation accompanying President Ceausescu in the same capacities. In 1965, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, then President of India, had paid a return visit to Rumania on October 7. Rumania and India have an unbroken record of mutual co-operation in economic and cultural fields. Cultural Agreements were signed between the two countries in 1957 and 1963 and Trade Agreements and Pacts in 1959, 1961, 1964, 1966 and 1968. The 1961 Agreement was for a six-year term (see page 3733). In 1960, Rumania purchased 100,000 tons of Indian iron-ore. In July this year it agreed to purchase 23.4 million tons of iron-ore during the next 11 years (see page 9119). In 1968, Rumania contracted for the supply of 10 coastal coal-carriers to India during the Fourth Plan period, and to provide technical 'know-how' and machinery for oil refining, and petro-chemical plants, including a fertilizer plant.]

Joint Communique:

A joint communique issued in New Delhi on October 19 at the conclusion of Mr. Ceausescu's visit reflected the Agreements and consensus arrived at during the discussions at various levels.

It said in part: "Our co-operation in the economic sphere in third countries held good prospects." (Ceylon and Iran were understood to be among these third countries in view, though they were not specified in the communique). It emphasized identical or close views on international problems. On West Asia, it said that a settlement should be in accordance with the UN resolution of November, 1967 ensuring the withdrawal of Israeli forces from the occupied territories. "The banning of nuclear weapons, the liquidation of existing stock-piles, the elimination of military blocs, the dismantling of foreign military bases and withdrawal of foreign troops from the territories of other countries would constitute important steps for security and peace throughout the world."

Mr. Ceausescu left Bombay for Rumania on October 19.

B. Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan's Visit: Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, popularly known as "Badshah Khan" or the "Frontier Gandhi", arrived in New Delhi on October 1 to participate in the Gandhi Birth Centenary celebrations in response to an invitation from the Government of India and to receive the Nehru Award for International Understanding.

He was given a rousing reception at the airport. Welcoming him, the Prime Minister, Mrs. I. Gandhi, referred to the recent communal riots in Gujarat and hoped that his presence would help the country come out of darkness and restore communar harmony. Badshah Khan, in reply, regretted that the Indian people had forgotten Mahatma Gandhi and his teachings of love and affection for all.

The Pakistan Government and Radio blacked out his visit. The leader of the West Pakistan Awami League, Khan Lundhkar, demanded an official probe into the circumstances in which Badshah Khan was issued a passport, while the Daily News of Karachi said that his visit to India served India's interest against that of Pakistan and Indian Muslims.

On October 2, Mahatma Gandhi's birthday, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan placed a wreath on Gandhi's samadhi at Rajghat, watered a banyan sapling planted there, and released a set of five books in Hindi on Gandhi. In the evening, he attended a public meeting at Ramlila Grounds where he announced that he would observe a three-day fast from October 3 to protest against communal violence, mutual hatred and communal feelings (not specifically against the incidents at Ahmedabad, as he later explained). "My only purpose in visiting India is to offer my services to establish unity, love and affection among the peoples of various communities."

The President, Mr. V. V. Giri, at a reception given to the Khan at Rashtrapati Bhavan on October 3, described him as the "living spirit of Gandhi," and said that the fast which had "electrified the nation" was "a reminder to us of our responsibilities." People all over India observed token fasts as an expression of sympathy. The fast was broken on October 6.

Addressing newsmen on October 7, he said he had come to find ways and means to dispel the sorrow and the darkness that "our country faces today." In reply to questions, he said: "I find that there are very few people here who are concerned with the welfare of the nation. A handful of people have grown rich. This was not the objective of Gandhi or of the Congress". He also explained his idea of an autonomous Pakhtoonistan within Pakistan.

Again, on October 10, addressing a 50,000-strong congregation at Jama Masjid, he enjoined on Muslims to understand properly and strengthen the "spirit of nationhood". "If you understand and follow the true concept of nationhood, your religion will be automatically secure."

The same evening (October 10), he addressed a huge audience of Muslims at the Maulana Azad Park when he regretted that even after 22 years of Independence, the people of India could not get even two square meals a day. He castigated the Indian Government for going about with a beggar's bowl to America or Japan "for a few tons of grain or to Russia for some financial assistance. It cannot be called dignified or self-respecting."

Speaking at a reception given to him by the Press Club of India on October 11, he referred to the Kashmir problem and said: "If promises have been made, they should be honoured." Later, he elucidated that he was stating a fundamental principle, good for all at all times. He had also come to the conclusion that injustice had been done to the people of Telengana in Andhra Pradesh, who have been demanding a separate State.

On October 13, he met a delegation of Bharatiya Jana Sangh Members of Parliament who assured him that the Jana Sangh would wholeheartedly work for the goals set by him for peace, prosperity and patriotism in the country.

On October 14, he met a group of constructive workers representing Gandhi Smarak Nidhi, Gandhi Peace Foundation, Gandhi Centenary and Harijan Sewak Sangh. He also met a group of Congress Members of Parliament when he criticized the Press and radio for distorted presentation of news on political and economic issues in the country.

At a reception given by the Jamaat-ul-Ulema-i-Hind, he advised the Muslims to dissolve their religious and regional differences and unite to make the country strong and prosperous. "You have never learnt to know who your real well-wisher is. Even during the freedom struggle, you found leaders in those who were stooges of the British."

He left for Ahmedabad on October 16 for an on-the-spot study of the riot-affected areas.

D. Nationalization Of Foreign Oil Companies Ruled Out: The Minister of State for Petroleum and Chemicals, Mr. D. R. Chavan, said in Gorakhpur on October 15 that foreign oil companies in the country would not be nationalized immediately.

He said that the demand for petroleum was rapidly increasing and according to him the total demand for it by the end of 1975 would be 34 million tonnes. Efforts were being made to improve the country's oil resources and for this off-shore drilling in the Bay of Cambay region was proposed to be started in 1970. India was now importing about 10 million tonnes of crude oil worth about Rs. 100 crores a year.

He said that 671 wells had been drilled by the Oil and Natural Gas Commission at a cost of Rs. 110 crores. Of these, 270 wells had gone dry. However, drilling for oil would continue.

Replying to a question, he said that the country would achieve self-sufficiency in fertilizer by the end of the Fourth Five-Year Plan in 1973-74. At the end of the Fourth Plan, the total fertilizer output in the country would be about 6.4 million tonnes.

E. Role Of SDR Scheme: India's quota in the Special Drawing Rights (SDR) scheme approved recently at the International Monetary Fund meeting was officially stated in New Delhi to be as much as $750 million and arises out of her normal quota of the same amount, which is the fifth largest in the world.

The SDR will enable India to make this amount part of her external reserves and increase her trade without worrying about liquidity difficulties.

The scheme has been introduced for a three-year period initially, and the Indian Government has decided to draw $130 million in the first year and $105 million in each of the second and third years.

What facilitates matters for India is the fact that there is no burden involved in the special drawings made as and when necessary, the 1.5 per cent charge made on the drawings to obtain convertible currencies are also payable in SDRs.

A Bill now pending before Parliament proposes to make possible India's membership in the scheme. Its object is to empower the Reserve Bank to act on behalf of the Government of India to receive, acquire, hold, transact and operate in SDRs and perform all acts incidental to it.

The scheme has been welcomed by India and other developing countries because, by helping to increase international liquidity, it will enable the advanced countries to raise their assistance. In addition, the scheme does not involve contributions in gold and currencies to IMF; simple entries are made in a special account kept by IMF and allocated to each member-country in proportion to its Fund quota.

The main need for the scheme arose from the enormous growth of world trade and its attendant problems. Between 1950 and 1965, the volume of trade increased from $59 billion to $175 billion, but world monetary reserves have grown much slowly.

In 1958, world reserves were 57 per cent of the value of world imports, in 1967, the ratio came down to 36 per cent. Between 1963-68, world trade has grown from $143,000 million to $242,000 million, a rise by about 70 per cent. But in the same period, world reserves have risen from $66,000 million to only $76,000 million, an increase of 16 per cent.

The resultant problem of international liquidity and doubts about whether world reserves were adequate to meet the requirements of world trade were accentuated by the limits on the supply of gold. Countries started using dollars instead, only to lead to dollar accumulations and further doubts about the adequacy of the currency.

Another aspect of the problem was that the reserves creation did not ensure that those that needed reserves got them. While West Germany, France, Italy and Japan—whose industrial recovery has been rapid—accumulated surpluses, countries like Britain and developing nations which needed the reserves did not get them. The need, therefore, arose for some arrangement which would create reserves as a response to the needs of overall trade as well as the needs of individual countries.

The increase in quotas in the IMF would be one way of increasing liquidity. The quotas are to be revised every five years according to the provisions of the IMF. So far, they have been raised twice, once by 50 per cent in 1959 and again by 25 per cent in 1965. The next review is due in 1970. The scheme of Special Drawing Rights is another device to increase liquidity deliberately in an amount considered necessary.

F. Four Central Ministers Relieved: On October 15, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi asked for the resignation of two Ministers of State and two Deputy Ministers — Mr. M. S. Gurupadaswamy, Minister for State for Community Development and Co-operation; Mr. Parimal Ghosh, Minister of State for Railways; Mr J. B. Muthyal Rao, Deputy Minister for Social Welfare; and Mr. Jagannath Pahadia, Deputy Minister for Finance.

In her letters to the four junior Ministers, Mrs. Gandhi asked for their resignations to bring about "certain changes" necessary for a more cohesive and purposive direction of the work of the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Gurupadaswamy, Mr. Pahadia and Mr. Muthyal Rao immediately wrote to the Prime Minister resigning their offices. Mr. Pahadia has done so without protest, while Mr. Gurupadaswamy told newsmen that Mrs. Gandhi was adopting a factional approach in removing Ministers, which was not good either for the party or the country.

Mr. Gurupadaswamy, in his letter to the Prime Minister, said: "Events alone will show whether ejecting socialists out of the Government is the best way to promote socialism." He charged her with "uniform lukewarmness" towards proposals for rural works programmes to provide employment and accelerate rural development.

It was recalled by observers that Mr. Gurupadaswamy had refused to sign the Congress MPs' memorandum asking for a free vote in the Presidential election, so had Mr. Pahadia and Mr. Muthyal Rao. But Mr. Parimal Ghosh was believed to have been one of the signatories, despite his association with Mr. Atulya Ghosh.

On October 17, the President accepted the resignation of the four Ministers.

H. National Integration Standing Committee Meeting: Meeting against the background of communal rioting in Gujarat (see page 9205) in New Delhi on October 16, the Standing Committee of the National Integration Council adopted a 500-word Policy Statement underlining the need for joint mass campaigning and education by all political parties in favour of communal amity and harmony.

The Jana Sangh representative, Dr. Bhai Mahavir walked out of the meeting protesting against certain portions of the Policy Statement which impliedly sought to condemn some of the recent statements made by the Jana Sangh leader, Mr. Balraj Madhok.

While expressing its sense of horror at the recent communal disturbances in Gujarat, the Committee said that it was firmly opposed to the denunciation of any minority community as being unpatriotic or as an agency of a foreign Power. "Equally do we condemn the spread of the idea that any minority community requires to be Indianised or else it should be forced to leave the country."

Dr. Mahavir took exception to the above passage and made a vain attempt to have it deleted or considerably watered down. His amendment (which was not accepted by the Standing Committee) said: "While all sections of people are naturally expected to join the national mainstream, any wholesale denunciation of a community as of doubtful loyalty was damaging to national integration."

Another Jana Sangh amendment turned down by the Standing Committee sought to introduce a common civil code for all citizens. Except Mr. Jaya Prakash Narayan and Mr. Sardesai (CPI), one other member lent support to this proposal.

This was the first time since its formation that a resolution or a document adopted by the NIC Standing Committee was not unanimous. At its meeting in Srinagar in 1968, the Committee had stressed that all its resolutions should be unanimous.

The Standing Committee asked the administrative agencies to firmly and promptly put down communal agitation and provocation which usually preceded communal disturbances. The Government, it said, must intervene to suppress with utmost speed and vigour every outbreak of communal violence.

Text Of Policy Statement:

The following is the text of the Policy Statement:

"The Standing Committee of the National Integration Council expresses its sense of horror at the recent communal violence in Gujarat which has given a serious setback to the growth of communal harmony and goodwill as the basis of our secular democracy. The Committee conveys its deeply felt sympathy to all those who have suffered.

"The Standing Committee is of the opinion that the effective weapon for fighting communal conflict and disintegration is joint mass campaigning and education by all political parties in favour of communal amity and harmony. We are firmly opposed to the denunciation of any minority community as being unpatriotic or an agency of any foreign Power. Equally do we condemn the spread of the idea that any minority community requires to be Indianised or else it should be forced to leave the country. In the course of communal frenzy people are found sometimes to indulge in such irresponsible talk as exchange of population with Pakistan being a solution of the Hindu-Muslim problem. The Committee is firmly of the opinion that such ideas have got to be combated as they are not only totally inconsistent with secularism and our concept of nationalism but also harmful to our country's unity and security.

"In a secular democratic country, all minorities whether based on religion, caste or tribe have to be assured due protection of their just interests, above all their life, property and honour.

"Attempts by communal elements in the minority community to rouse communal passions and separatist feelings have also to be vigorously fought. Besides being harmful to the secular basis and unity of the country, they jeopardize the interests of the minority community itself.

"It is the duty of the Government to take firm action against the preaching of communal hatred and animosity, whether carried on from the public platform or in the Press, without any consideration for the person concerned.

"The administrative agencies should firmly and promptly put down communal agitation and provocation which usually precede communal disturbances. The Government must intervene to suppress with utmost speed and vigour every outbreak of communal violence. Further, it is the duty of the administration to bring to book all those induling in arson, loo and murder during communal disturbances and mete out deterrent punishment to them. The Committee is convinced that the idea that withdrawal of cases can help in the restoration of communal harmony is misconceived. The prosecution of those charged with such heinous crimes does not stand in the way of restoring communal harmony.

"It is the duty of the public, and particularly of all political parties, to support firm action by the Government in putting down communal violence and bringing to justice those responsible for crimes in such disturbances."

I. Mr. C. Subramaniam's Membership Of Congress Working Committee—Exchange Of Letters: After a six-week lull in Congress affairs, a new crisis erupted in the party on October 9 as Mrs. Indira Gandhi along with Mr. Y. B. Chavan and four other members of the Congress Working Committee (Mr. Jagjivan Ram, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Mr. U. S. Dikshit and Mr. C. Subramaniam) wrote to the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, accusing him of making "arbitrary" moves to remove Mr. C. Subramaniam from the Working Committee and the Presidents of UP and Andhra Pradesh Congress Committees from their offices.

The Congress President immediately wrote back refuting the charge of arbitrariness, but asserted that continuance of the three in their respective positions would have to be reviewed in the light of the provisions of the party's Constitution.

With Mrs. Gandhi away from New Delhi on a visit to the Laccadives, the exchange of letters halted with Mr. Nijalingappa's firm reply.

That a new confrontation had begun was clear from the demand made in the letter to the Congress President by Mrs. Gandhi and other signatories for a session of the Congress Working Committee on October 15 and an A-ICC session before Parliament re-convened on November 17 to consider the entire political situation.

Mr. Nijalingappa turned down both demands. The Working Committee would meet in the normal course on November 1 as settled earlier and it would decide the date and venue of the A-ICC session.

Mr. Chavan's signature to the letter was significant; it showed that his differences with Mrs. Gandhi had been resolved, paving the way for closer co-operation.

The Home Minister explained on October 9 that the main purpose of the letter to the Congress President was to avert a fresh cleavage in the party. They were anxious to prevent any move to drop Mr. Subramaniam from the Working Committee, until the matter had been fully discussed by the Committee itself.

Mr. Nijalingappa in his reply said that he had sent no communication to Mr. Subramaniam, but was "intending" to write to him to the effect that his resignation from the Tamil Nadu PCC Presidentship had terminated his ex-officio membership of the A-ICC, thus debarring him from continuing on the Working Committee.

He explained that successors had to be elected to the UP and Andhra Pradesh Congress Committee Presidents—Mr. Kamlapati Tripathi and Mr. Kakani Venkataratnam—because they were members of the respective State Cabinets.

This followed from a 1951 resolution of the Congress Working Committee which debarred Ministers from holding elective offices in the organization, but gave the Congress President discretion to make exemptions in special cases. Mr. Nijalingappa had himself continued as the Mysore Chief Minister for several months after election to the Presidentship.

Texts Of Letters:

The following is the text of the letter addressed by Mrs. Gandhi and others to the Congress President:

"On August 25, the Congress Working Committee, after reviewing the political situation, passed a resolution calling upon all Congressmen to create an atmosphere of unity in the organization. There have been complaints that the resolution was not observed in its letter and spirit by many important Congress leaders.

"The President's arbitrary orders removing Mr. C. Subramaniam from the Congress Working Committee and Mr. Kamlapati Tripathi and Mr. Kakani Venkataratnam and some others from various offices in the organization on the basis of some resolutions passed two decades ago will aggravate the situation, making the implementation of the unity resolution of August 25 more difficult.

"The Parliamentary Board met on October 7 and these matters could have been mentioned therein or they could have been kept pending consideration by the Congress Working Committee which has been convened to meet later this month (October, 1969).

"The action of the President is bound to have serious political repercussions and should, therefore, be considered by the Congress Working Committee at the earliest date.

"We therefore request that the Congress Working Committee, which has been convened to meet on October 30, may be called to meet around October 15.

"In the meanwhile, the orders issued by the President should be kept in abeyance. We feel that it is necessary also to have an early A-ICC meeting to consider the entire political situation.

"The President may kindly take steps to convene the meeting of the A-ICC before November 17."

The following is the text of Mr. Nijalingappa's reply delivered at the Prime Minister's house on October 9:

"I am pained to receive the communication sent by you and five of our colleagues of the Working Committee. You have stated that I have arbitrarily ordered the removal of Mr. C. Subramaniam from the Working Committee. I wish you had checked this matter with me before coming to this conclusion and allowing it to be broadcast. I have sent no communication to Mr. Subramaniam. I have never been in the habit of working arbitrarily. Such charges should not be loosely levelled by responsible colleagues.

"You are not unaware of the Congress constitution which demands that a member of the Working Committee is to be a member of the A-ICC. In the case of Mr. Subramaniam he was an ex-officio member of the A-ICC in view of his being President of the Tamil Nadu Pradesh Congress Committee. Now that he has ceased to be the President of the TNCC, the position needs to be gone into. I was intending to write to Mr. Subramaniam on this point. Not to have written to him about it and sought his consultation on it would be arbitrary, ignoring even the violation of the Congress constitution. Does devotion to unity demand that the Congress constitution should be ignored?

"From Andhra Pradesh I have received letters that the PCC President and Secretary have joined the State Government but no arrangements have been made to elect their successors in accordance with the resolution of the Working Committee.

"Mr. Kamlapati Tripathi has resigned long back from the Presidentship of the UPCC. A meeting of the UPCC to elect a fresh incumbent to the office was called and adjourned. It was, therefore, necessary for me to remind the PCCs in the usual course.

"It is surprising and painful to find you commenting that such communications sent to the PCCs, to quote your words, 'on the basis of some resolutions passed two decades ago will aggravate the situation making implementation of the unity resolution (of August 25) more difficult'.

"I thought the resolutions of the Congress are binding on us until they are either revised or rescinded, particularly the resolutions governing the procedure and functioning of the party.

"Is it your thesis that lapse of some time automatically erases decisions taken? Will arbitrary functioning on my part to suit the wishes of any party help implementation of unity? As no action has been taken by me which need have caused the concern you have shown in your communication, I presume that there is no need to alter the programme already decided upon for the meeting of the Working Committee and for it to decide the date of the meeting of the A-ICC.

"What new developments you have in mind that necessitates urgent consideration of entire political situation is not clear to me."

Background:

Mrs. Indira Gandhi's supporters argue that the Congress Party constitution favours Mr. C. Subramaniam's continuance in the Working Committee despite his resignation from the Tamil Nadu Congress Committee. They point to the absence of any provision in the amended constitution by which an elected member of the Committee would cease to be so simply because he had lost his membership of the A-ICC.

Article 18(A) of the party's constitution inter alia says: "Ordinarily members of the Working Committee will be appointed from amongst the members of the A-ICC but, in special cases, delegates who are not members of the A-ICC may be appointed; provided, however, that a delegate so appointed shall cease to be a member of the Working Committee if he is not elected as a member of the A-ICC within six months of his appointment."

Article 26 dealing with vacancies says:

"(a) The office of a delegate or a member of any Committee or Board constituted under this Constitution shall be vacated by resignation, removal or death;

"(b) All vacancies shall, unless otherwise provided for, be filled in the same manner in which the vacated member was chosen and members so elected shall hold office for the unexpired term of the seat vacated;

"(c) In the absence of any provision to the contrary, a Committee or Board, once it is properly constituted, shall not become invalid by reason of any vacancy on it."

It is, therefore, argued that, in the first instance, there is no provision barring Mr Subramaniam from the Working Committee membership. The party constitution should, therefore, operate in his favour rather than against him since he was an elected member.

The constitution permitted even non-A-ICC members to continue as Working Committee members for six months. Whereas there was nothing specifically to bar Mr. Subramaniam from membership, and even assuming he had earned a disqualification, could not he be asked to continue by the Working Commitee by virtue of his being an elected member or, as the last resort, allowed to continue for six months till he got himself elected as an A-ICC member?

It is argued that the matter is entirely within the jurisdiction of the Congress President and the Working Committee as the latter has the final say on matters relating to interpretation of the party constitution.

[Out of a total of 21 members in the Working Committee, seven are elected by the A-ICC and 14 are nominated by the Congress President].

Requisition For A-ICC Meeting:

The following is the text of the requisition to the Congress President for convening of an A-ICC session signed by nearly 400 members·

"We, the undersigned—members of the A-ICC—request the Congress Working Committee to convene a meeting of the A-ICC under Article 12 B (d) to consider at the earlier possible time the following resolution:

"The acceptance of the Prime Minister's Note, embodying a radical (economic) programme, by the Bangalore session of the A-ICC and the bold step taken by her to nationalize the major banks created a sense of confidence in the masses that the programme and socialist policies of the Congress will be fully carried out.

"The resolution of the Congress Working Committee passed on August 25, 1969 generated the hope that unity necessary for the full and effective implementation of the said policies and programmes would be brought about. Unfortunately, the wind of change, which had been welcomed widely by the nation, appears to have generated tensions within the party which threaten the execution of these basic policies to which the Congress stands committed.

"It is evident that the declared policies of the Congress cannot be fully implemented unless the Congress organization as a whole is attuned to this purpose and given its wholehearted co-operation, particularly at its top level.

"The A-ICC, therefore, resolves that the programme of electing a new Congress President in December, 1969, when the term of the present President would have ordinarily come to an end, be undertaken on the basis of the present delegates and steps to that end be taken without delay so that the election of the new President is completed by December 30, 1969".

J. Bangla Congress On Insecurity In West Bengal: The Bangla Congress, of which the Chief Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherji is the President, adopted a political resolution in Calcutta on October 7 stating that inter-party clashes, gheraos, repressive measures in educational institutions, forcible occupation of land, police inaction, a general deterioration in the law and order situation, activities of anti-social elements protected by different political parties, indignities suffered by women and indifference of the administration had combined to create a deep sense of insecurity and uncertainty in the public mind.

Giving a grim picture of the state of affairs in West Bengal, the resolution warned that "if such clashes and lawlessness were not stopped immediately the Bangla Congress would be compelled to build up a resistance movement on the Gandhian line to end this intolerable situation."

"If the situation in West Bengal is so grave as the resolution suggests, does it not warrant dissolution of the United Front Government and imposition of President's Rule?" newsmen asked Mr. Ajoy Mukherji and he replied: "No. Why should there be President's Rule? The coalition will continue."

The Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. Jyoti Basu CP(Marxist) reacted sharply to the Bangla Congress resolution. He said: "Let them say so at the UF meeting."

He took a copy of the resolution and read a portion which said that during the six-month rule of the UF "several hundred people had lost their lives". This statement, Mr. Basu said, was not correct. "It was absurd."

Mr. S. K. Dhara's Statement:

The Bangla Congress General Secretary, Mr. Sushil Kumar Dhara, declared on October 9 that they firmly stood by the party resolution despite the Marxist Politburo's view that it had no relation to reality.

He said: "We have taken up the challenge to substantiate our contention that there has been lawlessness in almost all spheres of life in West Bengal and that clashes had taken a toll of several hundred lives during the six months of the United Front rule."

There was, he added, "sufficient material" to substantiate the charges made in the Bangla Congress resolution and more facts were being collected from Bangla Congress organizations in different districts.

He, however, made it clear that the Bangla Congress had no intention to break away from the United Front. "We want to remain in the United Front as well as in the Cabinet and fight it out from within."

Satyagraha Plans:

On October 14, the Bangla Congress announced its decision to enrol immediately 20,000 satyagrahis to take part in the State-wide massive "resistance movement" to be launched in November, 1969.

The Bangla Congress General Secretary, Mr. Sushil Kumar Dhara, who is also West Bengal's Commerce and Industries Minister, told newsmen that the resistance movement would be in protest against "lawlessness in almost all walks of life" and inter-party clashes in which "several hundred persons were killed during the last six months of United Front rule in West Bengal".

The Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. Jyoti Basu, ridiculed the Bangla Congress plan.

Mr. Basu, who is in charge of the Home Department, said: "Against whom is the satyagraha directed? There should be a limit to frivolity."

The Chief Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee, denied rumours that he had planned to divest the Deputy Chief Minister of his Home portfolio.

Violence & Lawlessness In West Bengal—Bangla Congress Catalogue:

A catalogue of incidents of violence and lawlessness which occurred in West Bengal from February to September, 1969 was placed before the United Front Co-ordinating Committee in Calcutta on October 16 by the Bangla Congress in support of its allegation of widespread anarchy in the State.

According to this list, 378 people were assassinated in various types of incidents, including inter-party clashes, till October 4. Of these, 201 were political murders. The total number of people injured in these incidents was 673.

The Bangla Congress alleged that eight women were outraged in the course of political clashes. There were 25 inter-party clashes in August and 40 in September.

The list showed that 36 headmasters and headmistresses of educational institutions in different parts of the State were intimidated into resigning during the period. Hospital staff had been assaulted by mobs in 37 cases.

To substantiate the charge of police inaction, the Bangla Congress said there had been 292 cases in which the police did not act in spite of complaints having been lodged. In 24-Parganas District alone, strictures had been passed on the police for inaction in 202 instances. In three cases, policemen had been fined for non-compliance with court orders.

The figures compiled by the Bangla Congress regarding industrial relations showed that there had been 131 strikes and 73 lock-outs during the period. The number of workmen involved in these disputes was more than 5,74,000 and man-days lost exceeded 6,100,000. The number of gheraos till August was 367.

The Bangla Congress alleged that there were 218 instances of forcible occupation of land of small and middle peasants whose holdings were smaller than the permissible ceiling. The number of criminal cases which had been withdrawn or in which investigations had been stopped was 1,010.

The Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. Jyoti Basu, who is also in charge of the Home portfolio, retorted that the allegations were highly exaggerated and largely untrue.

He said it was in accordance with a Cabinet decision that 1,010 criminal cases had been dropped. It was not clear whether the number of "assassinations" cited by the Bangla Congress included the victims of communal riots also.

CPI(M) Committee's Rejoinder:

On October 19, the West Bengal Committee of the Marxist Communist Party decided to do "all in its power to keep the unity of the United Front" in the State in the face of the "disruptive tactics" practised by some members of the United Front.

The Committee's statement said that some United Front parties in West Bengal, including the CPI, had been "conspiring to isolate and malign our party and thereby weaken UF." Such attempts at disruption weakened the people's struggles and directly helped the vested interests.

It repudiated the recent Bangla Congress allegations of anti-social activities in the State and said that the catalogue of violence and lawlessness they alleged was based largely on unverified newspaper reports. "We are at a loss to understand how a responsible party can do such things in order to discredit UF."

According to it, there had been 48 political murders in the State since the installation of the UF Government and not 200 as alleged by the Bangla Congress. Of these, 26 people were killed in inter-party clashes.

Among the 26 deaths, 16 were of members of the CPI(M), two each of members of the Forward Bloc and SUC, and three each of members of the CPI and the RSP. Nine persons were killed in attacks by jotedars and Congress supporters. They included six from the CPI(M) and one each from the Forward Bloc, the RSP and the SUC. This showed that "our party is the principal victim of political murders."

Volunteer Force For Bangla Congress:

It was announced in Calcutta on October 22 that the Bangla Congress would soon have a volunteer force to be known as Shanti Fouz.

The Fouz would have a distinctive role to play. Unlike volunteer organizations of other political parties, it would follow the Gandhian principle of non-violent resistance to violence and other evils.

The inaugural rally of the Fouz was later held on November 2 at Bankura in connexion with the party conference there.

K. Telengana Development Review Committee: The Telengana Development Review Committee met in New Delhi on October 17 and, it was learnt, decided, on the recommendations of the State Government, that a Presidential notification be issued soon to enlarge the powers of the Regional Committee.

When the matter was raised at the meeting, it was pointed out that the Government's law advisers were of the view that a Constitutional amendment was not necesary for the purpose. The State Government could draft an order and forward it to the Centre to enable the President to take the necessary action.

The meeting, the first since the Prime Minister's eight-point plan on Telengana was announced in April, decided to associate a member of the Planning Commission with the Telengana Development Board, although allocation of funds did not come under the Commission's purview.

The Committee agreed that high priority should be given to the redressal of grievances relating to service conditions, fitments and promotions to those belonging to Telengana region.

It was decided that the Central Home Ministry should immediately send two senior officials to the State to deal with the pending cases on the spot.

The question of providing more resources for Telengana's development was raised by the Regional Committee Chairman, Mr. J. Chokka Rao. He pointed out that the State Government had proposed an outlay of Rs. 39 crores for Telengana out of the total provision of Rs. 87 crores for this year in the State, but the Planning Commission had reduced the latter to only Rs. 62 crores. He feared that Telengana might not get the requisite amount for development. It was pointed out to him that apart from the sanctioned resources, Rs. 18 crores more would be available for development through other means.

The meeting was attended among others by the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, the Industrial Development Minister, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, the Food Minister, Mr. Jagjivan Ram and the Defence Minister, Sardar Swaran Singh.

The Andhra Pradesh Chief Minister, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, who also attended, was happy that for the first time the Centre was involving itself in the implementation of Telengana's development plan. Pending the report of the Bhargava Committee on resources, the State Government had allocated an additional Rs. 9 crores for development in the nine districts of Telengana.

He said that the recommendations of the Wanchoo Committee on Services had already been implemented. Nearly 2,000 additional posts had been created and nearly 1,300 vacancies filled. The problem of integration of services concerned about 3,000 persons. Industrial development in Telengana in the last two years had created over 35,000 new jobs.

He said that "false and vicious propaganda" was being carried on by those interested in trouble that Telengana had lost a great deal. On the contrary, a new slogan—"Andhra for Andhras"—was being heard greatly.

He pointed out that the overall loss sustained by Telengana since the start of the agitation by the separatists exceeded Rs. 52 crores. This included loss of Government property, taxes and income from road transport and power generation. The demand for separation was no solution of the economic problem.

L. Mr. H. Sema On Naga Secessionist Movement: The Nagaland Chief Minister, Mr. Hokishe Sema, told newsmen in Shillong on October 18 that the Naga secessionist movement was showing signs of a gradual but sure death.

The arrest of most of the Peking-trained rebels and the capture of large caches of arms and ammunition, he said, had broken the spine of the underground set-up and more than 80 per cent of the Naga population was now in favour of a settlement within the Indian Union. Even some "underground" leaders, like former "President" Scato Swu and Mr. Kughato Sukhai were in favour of such a solution.

About 700 Naga rebels who sneaked into China last year, he added, had now returned to Nagaland. Of them, 555 had either been arrested or had surrendered. The hunt for the remaining 145 men was still on.

M. Communal Outbreaks During January-September: A review of communal outbreaks from January 1 to September 15, 1969 made by the Central Home Ministry disclosed that there were 210 communal incidents during the first nine months of the current year, the maximum number of 37 arising from quarrels about religious or marriage processions and playing music before mosques.

It showed that 18 incidents were due to dispute over cattle or cow slaughter. Twenty-two incidents owed their origin to dispute over land, nine to desecration, 10 to the sprinkling of coloured water, 15 to misbehaviour towards women and five to elections.

The total casualties in these incidents were: 78 deaths and injuries to 1,342.

Bihar claimed the maximum incidents—69. There were 19 incidents each in Uttar Pradesh, Kerala and Madhya Pradesh and 12 in Orissa. In other States, these ranged from three to nine.

The review said that the trend in regard to communal incidents had deteriorated in the latter part of 1967 and in the whole of 1968. This was also true in the first quarter of the current year, till it was reversed by the recent serious riots in Gujarat.

The worst month this year was March in which there were 65 incidents, including four major riots. A large number of those took place in connexion with the Ramnavami and Moharrum festivals.

Urging the State Governments to take effective administrative and legal action to prevent communal incidents, the review recalled the changes already made in the Criminal and Election Laws (Amendment) Act of 1969. The new law had enlarged the scope of Sections 15 (A) and 505 of the IPC and contained provisions for disqualifying persons convicted from standing for elections to Parliament or State Legislatures. It also empowered the Government to prevent the publication of material likely to inflame communal passions. The Home Ministry expressed the view that the communal menace could be curbed by an effective use of the new legal provision.

N. Mr. Morarji Desai's Fast: Mr. Morarji Desai who began an indefinite fast over the Ahmedabad communal riots (see page 9206) on September 22, broke his fast on October 2 (Gandhi's birthday) at a public prayer meeting held at Gujarat Vidyapeeth as part of Gandhi centenary celebrations.

Mr. Desai was offered a glass of sweet lime juice by Swami Jagdishwaranandji of Gita Mandir on behalf of the heads of different religions in the city who had been working for peace and communal amity.

A large congregation had gathered to pay homage to Mahatma Gandhi with a feeling of guilt and penitence. It heard the essential message of all religions—equality of all human beings—from preachers representing Islam, Sikhism, Christianity, Zorastrianism and Hinduism. It heard the Gita hymns and bhajans which used to be part of Gandhi's prayer meetings.

Mr. Desai spoke with a sense of grief and urged the people to stand unitedly against those who indulged in violence in the name of religion.

He said: "Gandhi was assassinated in New Delhi on January 30, 1948, but he is killed once again in Ahmedabad after 22 years."

O. State Lotteries: Since 1968, a number of State Governments and Union Territories have launched lottery schemes to augment their reviews for development and welfare purposes. The public response for them has been stated to be wide, even phenomenal. The winners have often been poor persons. The value of each ticket has been only one rupee.

Indeed, it is said that the success of the lotteries would seem to ensure the permanency of the lottery.

States which were previously quite averse to the idea of lotteries were now among those who prided themselves on offering the biggest prizes. States were now competing with one another to see who would offer the biggest first prize—some, in their bid to beat competitors, have taken to having three first prizes.

The main purpose for which the lotteries were first launched, which in fact made the scheme acceptable to those who tended to regard them as nothing more than a gambling game—to provide funds for welfare schemes, such as schools, hospitals, civic amenities—was, however, not being kept in mind by all the States.

There was no doubt that in some States profits from the sale of tickets were used for relief and welfare work, but there were many States where the money was just put in the General Development Fund, which really meant that it was just another form of revenue, not earmarked for any purpose.

The Andhra Pradesh Government had been generally averse to lotteries, but when it found that outside lotteries were doing good business in the State more encouragement began to be given to the Andhra Pradesh Welfare Fund.

When the Fund was first launched, the first prize was kept as low as Rs 10,000, but now it had been raised to Rs. 200,000. The proceeds were used to serve the needs of institutions engaged in welfare activities, with an accent on medical relief and welfare of children.

So far the Fund had held nine draws, the latest on August 30, which netted Rs. 21,00,000. The bulk of the proceeds from the eighth draw had been earmarked for the eradication of leprosy.

Gross collections of Rs. 22,00,000 had been the record so far, though the Fund had kept before it an ambitious target of Rs. 1 crore every year. When the Fund was first launched there used to be only one draw every year. Now it was proposed to have three or four.

The lottery scheme was launched in Kerala during September, 1967, and the draw of the first lottery was held on January 26, 1968 in Trivandrum . The gross receipts from the scheme up to the 14th draw drawheld on September 21, 1969 amounted approximately to Rs. 3.41 crores, yielding a net profit of approximately Rs. 2.56 crores.

The Kerala Government was the pioneer in India in the field of conducting State lotteries to mobilize resources for the Five-Year Plan. Although in the earlier stages the proceeds were earmarked for specific developmental activities, this had since been given up and the net income was now added on to the general revenues of the State.

In Maharashtra, estimates of the annual gross collections by lotteries was placed at Rs. 13.25 crores and net collection is estimated at Rs. 1.5 crores. According to present plans, the money collected out of the sale of tickets would be spent on development programmes.

During the last 15 months, the Punjab Government sold tickets worth Rs. 2.30 crores and made a profit of Rs. 1.15 crores. During almost the same period, Haryana made a net gain of Rs. 1.34 crores from tickets worth Rs. 2.60 crores.

Officials claimed that the money earned was exclusively spent on development activities. In practice, however, the profits went to the consolidated pool in the Budget from where allocations were made to various schemes.

The Rajasthan Government had fixed a target of a net income of Rs. 60,00,000 from its lotteries scheme for 1969-70. It had earned Rs. 33,00,000 since January when the scheme was launched. The income from the lotteries was added to the State's General Development Fund and was not being spent on any particular projects or institutions.

The Tamil Nadu Government's year-old lottery scheme had so far helped 104 people to win the first prize of Rs. 1,00,000 each.

The State Government had put on sale tickets valued in all at Rs. 10.4 crores. After distribution of prizes, totalling in all about Rs. 275,00,000, and overhead expenditure, the net revenue for the State exchequer to date had been put at Rs. 5.98 crores. This money was set aside for social welfare projects such as building of hospitals, schools, etc.

Uttar Pradesh so far conducted three lotteries, earning Rs. 90,00,000 out of the proceeds.

For the utilization of the money, a hospital fund at the State level had been created, and a committee would allocate funds for district-wise distribution by taking into consideration the recommendation of the district health committees.

P. "Own Your Telephone" System Declared Illegal: Mr. Justice P. D. Limaye, Senior Division Judge of Kolhapur, on October 17 held illegal and void the "Own Your Telephone" (OYT) system under which preference was given to people over those applying under the general category.

The judge said that the practice of giving preference under OYT to the "special" and "preferential" categories was also unauthorized and granted an injunction against the Central Government and the Telephone Department.

The judgment was over a suit filed by an advocate, Mr. Baburao Joshi, who told the Court that he had been on the waiting list for a telephone since 1964. He complained that the Telephone Department was wrong in putting his name in the "general" category and in giving preference to others on the ground of "special" categories.

INDONESIA

A. Curbs On Powers Of Army Commanders: The Defence Department Chief of Staff, Lt.-Gen. Sumitro, said on October 6 that President Suharto would now have full authority over military operations.

He said the Army commanders would no longer have authority to move troops from one area to another. They would now only be in charge of administration and management. This was to ensure stability in the country.

He was explaining a re-organization of the armed services in which the posts of Commanders-in-Chief of the Army, Navy and Air Force had been abolished. The commanders were immediately re-appointed Chiefs of Staff under the Defence Ministry headed by President Suharto, who in this position would also be armed forces Commander-in-Chief. He was expected to appoint a strong General as Deputy Commander-in-Chief.

The announcement meant that operational matters within the armed forces would now be directed and planned by the Ministry of Defence. The Chief of Staff of the Army would now have "no authority whatever to dispatch battalions or brigades to other parts of Indonesia outside the base area."

B. Repayment Of Debt To USSR —Talks: Indonesia and the Soviet Union concluded talks on September 30 in Djakarta on Indonesia's estimated $800 debt payment after reaching "mutual understanding."

Both sides agreed to continue the talks at a later date.

Earlier on September 20, the Foreign Minister, Mr. Adam Malik, after holding talks with the Soviet delegation, said the Soviet Union was willing to give aid totalling $25 million after agreement over repayment of the debt had been reached.

The Soviet delegation, led by the country's Deputy Minister for Development and Foreign Economic Relations, Mr. V. A. Sergeyev, had arrived in Djakarta in August. It was the first Soviet mission to visit Indonesia since the abortive communist coup of September, 1961.

Reports said that during the early stages of the talks, the Russian delegation wanted Indonesia to adhere to the terms of a Protocol under which Indonesia was to have made its first repayment of $25 million on April 1, 1969, with the balance over the next 12 years. While estimates of the Indonesian debt varied, the $800 million figure appeared the most accurate for medium and long-term debts. The bulk of the money—$523 million—had been borrowed for military spending. Implementation of the Protocol was made impossible by Indonesia's delayed process of stabilization. Indonesia's medium and long-term liabilities to the Soviet Union at the end of 1968 were put at $864.1 million principal and interests.

The Soviet Union is Indonesia's biggest individual creditor. Indonesia's total debt at the end of 1965, according to the Bank of Indonesia, was $3,133 million.

A. Scholar Dead: Prof. Lotifali Suratgar, Persian poet and scholar, died of a heart attack in Tehran on September 24.

Until recently, Prof. Suratgar held the Chair in English Studies at the University of Tehran. An alumnus of the University of London, he composed and read the Coronation Ode at the coronation of the Shah on October 26, 1967. He was a frequent visitor to England, most recently in the capacity of consultant on the 14-volume History of Iran project being written under the aegis of the Cambridge University Press and under the general editorship of Prof. A. J. Arberry, late Professor of Persian Studies at Cambridge University. He was in his mid-sixties when he died.

JAPAN

A. Soviet Rejection Of Claims To Islands: The Foreign Minister, Mr. Kichi Aichi, on a visit to the Soviet Union in the first week of September, told correspondents in Moscow that the Soviet Premier, Mr. Alexei Kosygin, had rejected demands for discussion on the future of the Russian-held islands in the Pacific close to Japan.

After two hours of talks with Mr. Kosygin in the Kremlin, Mr. Aichi said that the Russians considered the matter closed. Mr. Kosygin had told him that the situation as established in Asia after the Second World War was very important in the balance of world power and the Russians considered it essential that this should not be changed. The Soviet Premier had stressed that the balance had been fixed by International Treaties and he refused to discuss the question of the islands further.

Mr. Aichi arrived in Moscow earlier on September 4 to seek the return of the two islands of Konashiri and Etorofu in the Kurile chain as well as nearby Shicotan island and the Habonai group, all of them lying off the north-east coast of Japan and held by the Russians since the end of the War. He said that Japan would continue to press its demands over the islands in the future.

According to a Press release issued after Mr. Aichi's departure from Moscow, he and Russian leaders expressed their hopes that friendly relations between Japan and the Soviet Union would be strengthened.

The Press release issued in Tokyo and Moscow simultaneously, said that Mr. Aichi and the Soviet leaders had conducted a frank and useful exchange of opinions on Japan-Soviet problems and international matters of mutual interest.

It said that expansion of trade and economic relations and development of cultural exchanges were discussed at the meetings. Much attention was paid to various problems concerning peace and security in Asia and the world.

The leaders of the two countries agreed that the exchange of views between the two nations would serve to bring Japan and the Soviet Union closer together.

The document did not refer, in concrete words, to the problems taken up at the meetings between the Japanese and Soviet leaders.

The Soviet leaders indicated to Mr. Aichi that the Russians would consider freeing Japanese fishermen detained by the Soviet Union as well as study Japanese-proposed steps to ensure the safety of Japanese fishermen in northern waters.

About 140 Japanese fishermen had been arrested by Soviet patrol boats on charges of violating Russian territorial waters off the Kuriles' southernmost islands.

The Press release also avoided making any specific reference to the discussion on the northern territorial question and merely said the two sides had held a useful exchange of views on problems of mutual concern. In this connexion, it mentioned that the two sides recognized that contacts between the two Governments were useful and made it clear that they were ready to continue these contacts.

It added that Mr. Aichi had observed cultural facilities and the Russian people's life in Moscow and Leningrad during his visit.

B. Mr. E. Sato On Japanese Role In Asian Security: Speaking at Matsue in Western Japan on September 25, the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, said that Japan in future would play a leading part in the security of Asia while USA played a supporting role.

He hinted in what was described by observers as a policy speech that this new role would follow naturally on the return to Japan of the island of Okinawa, in American hands since the end of the Second World War.

He said Japan as an industrial nation had the responsibility for assisting developing countries. Since the Second World War, Japan's primary interests had been in economic development of the nation rather than in security. But the time had come for the Japanese people to have an independent mind and the determination to defend their nation by their own hands.

He said that once Okinawa was returned, Japan could make a rediscovery of itself and carry out its role in the international community.

He would continue to demand the return of islands which the Soviet Union had refused to discuss and would take full responsibility if he failed to win Okinawa back from USA.

Political observers noted that both Mr. Sato and Mr. Kichi Aichi had in the week made important statements which went a long way towards the type of posture USA had been encouraging Japan to adopt in Asia for the past two or three years.

At the same time, the two statements followed on the heels of a meeting in Washington between Mr. Aichi and the US Secretary of State, Mr. William Rogers to prepare the way for November's Sato-Nixon summit.

Four Principles In Okinawa Negotiations:

Mr. Aichi re-affirmed on October 29 that the Government was determined to carry through "four principles" in the crucial negotiations with USA over Okinawa's reversion to Japanese rule.

He spelled out the four principles as: (1) acquiring Okinawa's reversion in 1972; (2) having the status of the American bases in Okinawa scaled down to that of those in Japan; (3) getting nuclear weapons in Okinawa removed; and (4) working out an agreement on Okinawa's return with no special arrangements attached.

At a news conference, he said that strenuous efforts were being made to reach a clear-cut agreement on a "nuclear-free Okinawa" at the summit conference between Mr. Sato and President Nixon.

Draft On Okinawa:

A Japanese draft, prepared in the second week of September for the communique to be issued following the Japan-US summit talks in November, calls on USA to return Okinawa by 1972 within the framework of the Japan-US Security Treaty and for Japan to give consideration to the maintenance of the bases' functions.

The draft says that Japan explained the sentiments of the Okinawan people towards nuclear weapons and USA promised not to take actions that would run counter to the Japanese people's wishes concerning the matter.

According to the sources, the Japanese draft was submitted during a meeting between the Foreign Minister, Mr. Kichi Aichi, and the US Secretary of State, Mr. William P. Rogers in Washington.

The discussions on the joint communique were reported to have made progress. No promise was obtained, however, that USA had finally agreed to the proposal for the withdrawal of nuclear arms from the island chain.

As for Japan-US security arrangements, the draft says that Mr. Sato and President Nixon favoured maintenance of the pact.

It says that USA promised to return Okinawa by 1972 and that the two countries agreed to conduct negotiations on concrete arrangements for the realization of the reversion.

The document also states that the two leaders agreed to carry out the reversion within the frame-work of the Security Treaty and related accords. Mr. Sato promised to give consideration to the maintenance of the functions of the US bases in Okinawa so that American military actions necessary for the security of the Far East would not be hampered.

C. Move To Support Non-Proliferation Treaty: Mr. Koichiro Asakai, Japan's representative at the UN Disarmament Conference, recommended to Mr. Eisaku Sato on September 25 that Japan sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty at an early date. Mr. Sato withheld immediate comment.

Mr. Asakai told Mr. Sato that Japan should, in future sessions of the Committee on Disarmament, strive to expedite progress towards disarmament. For that purpose, Japanese political leaders should decide on Japan's concrete disarmament policy.

Mr. Asakai told a news conference later that it was inconsistent that Japan had urged inclusion of a clause obligating nuclear Powers to cut their arms while the Treaty was drafted and now refused to sign the pact despite the fact that her demand had been accepted.

He said that this country could sign the pact as a first step. Then Japan may put off ratifying the pact until its demand for elimination of inequality in verification was met.

He remarked that it was natural for Japan to request assurances that she would not be placed in a disadvantageous position as a result of her accession to the Treaty. He added that Japan should make its decision independently, regardless of how West Germany would behave on the Treaty.

Mr. Asakai's counsel was in accord with the Foreign Ministry's position in support of an early accession to the Treaty.

A. Tea Board Bill: The Government introduced in the House of Representatives on October 21 a comprehensive Bill to set up a nine-member board for the control and development of the tea industry.

The board, recommended by a Government commission which went into the problems and prospects of the industry, will have sweeping powers to regulate the activities of the industry and bolster it.

Its aim will be to promote by suitable measures the development of the tea industry as a whole for the improvement of the general economy of the Island.

The board will regulate the production and cultivation of tea, including the planting of new areas, replanting of existing estates and small holdings with high-yielding material, rehabilitating uneconomic estates and small holdings and replacement of tea on such estates and small holdings by other crops.

It will regulate the sale and export of tea and assist and encourage its marketing abroad and promote the demand for tea in the world markets.

The nine members of the Board will be headed by a Chairman, nominated by the Prime Minister and comprise secretaries to the Ministries of Planning and Economic Affairs, of Finance, of Agriculture and Commerce and Trade and four others possessing intimate knowledge of the industry to be nominated by the Prime Minister.

The Bill provides for the levy and recovery of an export duty calculated at the rate of Rs. 10 and 15 cents, on every 100 lbs of tea exported from Ceylon. The duty will not be leviable on tea imported for the purpose of re-export.

The Government has powers under the Bill to vary the duty subject to subsequent approval by the House of Representatives. The export duty on tea thus imposed shall be in addition to any export duty on tea levied under any other law.

The Board will become a single centralized body to look after the tea industry and its problems and replace the present independent boards, like the Tea Propaganda Board and the Tea Research Board.

B. ADB Assistance For Fishing Industry: The Asian Development Bank (ADB) has approved a technical assistance programme for Ceylon's fishing industry.

The programme will help the State-owned Ceylon Fisheries Corporation (CFC) in streamlining its organization and in improving its operational efficiency.

ADB will depute a seven-man technical assistance mission, comprising a management and institutional expert as leader, an economist, a fisheries technologist, a marketing expert, a mechanical engineer, a master fisherman and a fishing gear technologist.

The ADB mission will give advice and assistance to the CFC in respect of its organizational structure, finances, development projects, fishing operations, marketing, workshop facilities and fishing techniques.

It will also draw up a test fishing programme in coastal areas after reviewing available data on fish resources.

Aid For Walawe Development Project:

The Bank has also approved financial and technical assistance worth about $9 million for the multi-purpose Walawe development project in southern Ceylon.

The Walawe project is the first integrated multi-purpose development project and also the first single project for which diversified financing, comprising loans from both the Bank's special fund and ordinary capital resources, as well as a technical assistance grant, has been approved.

C. Loan Agreement With Canada: Representatives of Ceylon and Canada signed in Colombo on September 21 an Agreement under which Ceylon would buy newsprint worth $1.5 million and asbestos fibre worth $500,000.

The loan terms were the same as those laid down in two Agreements signed earlier this year. It will be interest-free and repayment will be semi-annual over 40 years, following a 10-year grace period.

A Press release said that in accordance with the economic development priorities established by Ceylon, Canada had committed to quick-disbursing aid almost all of the $5.8 million allocated under its 1969-70 assistance programme.

Since the completion of the Katunayake airport and the extension of the Mutwal fisheries plant, Canada has reviewed with Ceylon possible areas for other capital assistance projects.

CHINA

A. Release Of Six Britons: Six Britons held in China for varying periods were successively released in the first fortnight of October.

The first to be released was the Reuters correspondent, Mr. Anthony Grey, who had been held hostage for 26 months. He left Peking soon afterwards for London via Pakistan. Reports from British diplomats said that apart from a slight cold, he appeared to be in reasonable health and was quite composed. He talked a great deal to the British Charge d'Affaires, Mr. John Denson.

On July 21, 1967, the Chinese Government had called Mr. Grey to the Foreign Ministry and told him that from that moment on he would not be allowed to leave his house. The reason they gave was that the Hong Kong Government had illegally imprisoned Chinese journalists following disturbances in the British Colony. The last of the 13 Chinese for whom Mr. Grey was held hostage was released in Hong Kong on October 3 and Mr. Grey's release on the following day was the Chinese response to it.

According to a report issued by the official New China News Agency, Mr. Grey was also told: "It was the Hong Kong British authorities' unjustifiable persecution and imprison*ment of patriotic Chinese journalists that brought about the restriction of your freedom of movement.*"

A week after the release of Mr. Grey, China freed on October 11 another British journalist, Mr. Norman Barrymaine (69), after 19 months' imprisonment.

The Chinese authorities unexpectedly released another three Britons on October 14. Mr. Eric Gordon, his African-born wife Marie, and their 14-year-old son Kim walked across the railway bridge linking Hong Kong and China.

Mr. Gordon was nearing the end of a two-year contract as a translator with the Foreign Language Publishing Institute in Peking at the height of the Cultural Revolution in 1967 when the family was ordered to be confined for "violations of Chinese law." Mr. and Mrs. Gordon had planned to return to Britain at about that time. They were not imprisoned, but kept under detention in a single room at a hotel in Peking. The Chinese Foreign Ministry informed the British Government in February that the son was not actually under arrest, but his freedom of movement seemed to have been restricted nevertheless.

The sixth Briton to be released by China in less than a fortnight walked across the frontier bridge into Hong Kong on October 16. He was Captain P. M. Will, master of the Singapore cargo ship Kota Jaya, who was arrested by Chinese security officials in the northern port of Tientsin in May, 1968.

With the exception of Mr. Grey, none of the British subjects detained were allowed access by a British consul, nor was any information given about them except that they had "violated Chinese law."

In the case of Mr. Barrymaine, there was never even an admission that he was held at all. Thus in no case were the releases made known to the British mission in Peking.

According to observers, one reason why no releases were made earlier could be that the Chinese were unwilling to set a precedent until their terms for the release of Mr. Grey had been met. He was admittedly a hostage, but a hostage whose release was tied to specific conditions. Once the last New China News Agency man had been released in Hong Kong, the rest could begin to follow. Even then, there were unanswered questions. Mr Gordon was a political sympathizer working for the Chinese Foreign Language Press. Others in a similar position were still detained —Mr. David Crook, Mr. Israel Epstein (Elsie Fairfax-Cholmondeley) and Mr. Michael Shapiro.

Japanese Request Rejected:

Japanese Foreign Ministry sources in Tokyo said on October 13 that China had turned down a Japanese request for opening talks on the release of 13 Japanese journalists and businessmen detained in the country.

China replied that she had nothing to discuss with Japan about Japanese nationals in her custody.

B. New Industrial Strategy: On October 14, the authorities gave nation-wide publicity to the details of Mr. Mao Tse-tung's policy of achieving a new strategy of industrial development.

Emphasizing the need for a balanced approach between light and heavy industry and farming and manufacturing, Mr. Mao's guidelines issued in the latest edition of Red Flag called for the decentralization of industry to create "large and small reliable bases scattered all over the country" to meet the threat of invasion.

The article stated: "Should United States imperialism or Soviet social-imperialism impose a war on China, the nation would thus have greater freedom of manoeuvre and each locality could fight on independently, wipe out the enemy and carry on until final victory."

The version broadcast by Peking Radio suggested that the Chinese expected the main thrust of any aggression to come from the north—that is, the Soviet Union—and thus referred to the coastal provinces supplying the needs of the inland areas.

The policy of "deployment" in this style was not new. The most striking innovation in the article was the note of pragmatism struck in the earlier passages from Red Flag.

It said that China was not opposed to foreign aid so long as it "respects the sovereignty and independence of the recipients." The country should be prepared to learn from abroad, but not slavishly.

Special attention should be given to local light industries and to agriculture in order to meet the immediate needs of the population. Prosperity on these two fronts would generate the necessary surplus capital for the development of State-run heavy industries. These economic tactics were neglected before the Cultural Revolution, and farming and light industry had got into difficulties.

The correctness of Mr. Mao Tse-tung's approach to economic development, the article declared, was proved not only by the variety of new industrial achievements recently announced, including a 125,000-kwh generator of advanced water-cooled design, but also by the success of the recent nuclear tests.

C. American Attack On Fishermen Alleged: China charged on October 10 that American ships and aircraft had fired on Chinese fishermen in the Gulf of Tongking.

The New China News Agency said that the Chinese Foreign Ministry had "strongly denounced" USA for sending military aircraft and warships to carry out "unbridled armed provocations for many days against Chinese fishing fleets on the high seas" in the area of the Gulf of Tongking. A serious protest had been lodged with USA "against this piracy threatening the security of the lives and property of Chinese fishermen."

The report did not indicate how the protest was delivered, as there are no diplomatic relations between USA and China.

The Chinese protest represented the first serious incident between USA and China since the Chinese had cancelled the Warsaw talks (see page 8860).

The report said that between September 19 and 24, a US guided missile cruiser and a destroyer had followed in the wake of and made provocations against 24 fishing vessels from China's Kwantung province. "In spite of stern protests by the Chinese fishermen, the United States pirates wildly opened fire on the Chinese fishing vessels."

The report alleged that armed staff on board a US military helicopter had "even threatened the fishermen on the Chinese vessels with pistols and carbines."

There had been previous incidents involving US ships and aircraft and Chinese fishing craft in the Gulf of Tongking. Political analysts said they saw no particular reason why China had made a special issue of the latest incident.

In January, 1968 Peking had alleged that US aircraft had bombed a Chinese cargo ship anchored at a North Viet-Nam port and wounded several members of the crew. Peking had continued to issue its "serious warnings" against alleged American intrusions into Chinese territory. They now numbered more than 470.

A. Kerala Ministry Crisis—Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad Resigns—New Ministry: Six non-Marxist Ministers of Kerala—Mr. M. N. Govindan Nair and Mr. T. V. Thomas (CPI), Mr. Mohammed Koya and Mr. Avukaderkutty Naha (Muslim League), Mr. T. K. Divakaran (RSP) and Mr. P. R. Kurup (ISP)—jointly announced in Trivandrum on October 17 that they had decided to resign from the United Front Ministry in Kerala.

With their decision, the fate of the 32-month-old CP(M)-led United Front Ministry in Kerala hung in the balance.

The resignation letters were delivered to the Chief Minister, Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad, by four representatives of these parties. Copies of the resignation letters were also sent to the Governor.

The exit of the six Ministers left Mr. Namboodiripad with a six-member Ministry, including Mr. Wellingdon and himself. Four of the Ministers belong to the Communist Party of India (Marxist) and one each to the KTP and the Kerala Socialist Party. The Samyukta Socialist Party, though a coalition partner, is not represented in the Ministry.

Three of the six Ministers to resign—Mr. M. N. Govindan Nair and Mr. T. V. Thomas of the CPI, and Mr. P. R. Kurup of the ISP—were to face a probe into allegations of corruption against them, along with the Health Minister, Mr. B. Wellingdon, according to an announcement made by Mr. Namboodiripad in the State Assembly earlier in the day (October 17).

Mr. Namboodiripad had not asked them to resign as he had no occasion to examine the evidence against them to find out whether there was any prima facie case against them.

Mr. E.M.S. Namboodiripad's Request Rejected:

On October 19, the six Ministers wrote back to the Chief Minister, Mr. Namboodiripad, rejecting his appeal not to press their resignations.

In their reply to the Chief Minister, they said they could not reconsider their resignations because the Chief Minister had not given them any specific proposal.

The four non-Marxist parties felt that the terms of reference issued by the State Government for the inquiry against the former Health Minister, Mr. B. Wellingdon, amounted to a contempt of the Legislature.

The Special Committee constituted by the State Legislature to send up to the Government all the charges against the Ministers had submitted 12 charges made in the Assembly against Mr. Wellingdon for the consideration of the Government. The State Government ordered an inquiry into two charges only.

Charges Against Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad:

One of the charges made against the Chief Minister was that he had made a political decision on the corruption issue by putting the CPI and ISP Ministers before the Inquiry Commission along with the KTP Health Minister, Mr. B. Wellingdon.

While action against Mr. Wellingdon was recommended by the Legislature, action against the two CPI Ministers and the ISP Minister was an implementation of the CPI(M) decision. By implementing a party decision, it was said, he had acted as a partisan Chief Minister, violating all the established norms of the post of a Chief Minister.

Another charge made against Mr. Namboodiripad was that he had used the Chief Minister's powers to protect himself and his Marxist colleagues from corruption probe while using the same powers to order a probe against some of the non-Marxist Ministers.

[Mr. M. N. Govindan Nair and Mr. T. V. Thomas, the two CPI leaders against whom Mr. Namboodiripad has ordered a corruption probe, had been close associates of Mr. Namboodiripad since the very beginning of the Communist movement in Kerala nearly three decades ago, until the Communist Party of India split into the CPI and the CPI(M) in 1964. Mr. Govindan Nair was the Party Secretary when Mr. Namboodiripad formed the first Communist Ministry in Kerala in 1957. Mr. T. V. Thomas was the Labour Minister in the first Communist Ministry. Until very recently no one had openly charged Mr. Namboodiripad with corruption. Now his own political allies for the last three years describe him as the "chief of corruption."]

Mr. A. N. Mulla To Inquire:

Mr. A. N. Mulla, MP, a retired judge of the Allahabad High Court and a jurist of liberal and radical views, was appointed by the Kerala Government on October 18 as a one-man commission to go into the allegations of corruption against the four United Front Ministers.

In separate official notifications issued in respect of each Minister, the Government said that Mr. Mulla, who was being appointed under the Commission of Inquiries Act, 1952 had been requested to submit his report by January 31, 1970.

Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad Resigns:

On October 24, the Chief Minister, Mr. E. M. S. Namboodiripad submitted his resignation and of his Council of Ministers to the Governor, after his defeat in the Kerala Assembly in the morning on a motion demanding an immediate corruption inquiry against all his remaining Ministerial colleagues, including three Marxists.

The resolution, moved by a CPI member, Mr. T. A. Majid towards the end of the three-day discussion on Mr. Namboodiripad's statement on October 17 was carried by 69 votes to 60, with one abstention.

The Governor accepted the resignation and asked Mr. Namboodiripad to carry on until other arrangements were made. The Speaker adjourned the Assembly sine die.

New Ministry:

On November 1, an eight-member Ministry headed by Mr. C. Achutha Menon was sworn-in.

Mr. Menon, who met the Governor, along with Mr. C. H. Mohammed Koya (Muslim League), Mr. U. Kumaran (CPI) and Mr. Baby John (RSP) gave the Governor a letter signed by the leaders of the five parties — CPI, Muslim League, ISP, RSP and Kerala Congress—nominating him as leader of the coalition.

The eight members of the Cabinet are: Mr. C. Achutha Menon, Mr. K. T. Jacob and Mr. P. Ravindran (all CPI), Mr. C. H. Mohammed Koya and Mr. K. Ayukaderkutty Naha (both Muslim League), Mr. N. K. Seshan and Mr. O. Korank (both ISP) and Mr. K. M. George (Kerala Congress).

The RSP, though extending "positive support," it was said, would not be represented in the Cabinet for the time being.

The five parties forming the coalition Government have a combined strength of 57 in the 134-member Assembly.

The Government is also assured of the support of the two Karnataka Samithi members and the lone member of the Kerala Karshaka Party. The nine-member Congress Opposition group has also offered its support.

The party position in the Assembly with one seat vacant is: CPI(Marxist) 50, CPI 21, Muslim League 14, ISP 11, SSP 6, RSP 6, Congress 9, Kerala Congress 5, KSP 1, KTP 1, Independents 7, (including two Karnataka Samithi members and two members belonging to the Communist Revolutionary group), nominated Anglo-Indian 1 and the Speaker.

A sub-committee consisting of representatives of the five parties had been constituted for framing rules and procedures for a Co-ordination Committee of these parties.

Portfolios:

In the allocation of portfolios on November 2, the Home portfolio was given to Mr. C. H. Mohammed Koya (Muslim League).

Mr. Koya also retained the Education portfolio which he held in the previous Government.

The CPI Chief Minister, Mr. C. Achutha Menon: Planning, Law, and Electricity and General Administration.

Mr. K. T. Jacob (CPI): Food, Excise and Land Revenue;

Mr. P. Ravindran (CPI): Industries and Commerce, Forests and Labour.

Mr. N. K. Seshan (ISP): Finance, Information and Publicity;

Mr. O. Koran, (ISP): Agriculture, Irrigation and Co-operation, Devasthanoms and Harijan Welfare;

Mr. K. Avukaderkutty Naha (Muslim League): Panchayats and Community Development, Public Works and Jails;

Mr. K. M. George (Kerala Congress): Health, Transport and Communications and Engineering.

B. Progress Of Banking: According to an official report, released in New Delhi on October 27, commercial banks served only 5,000 of a total of 5,64,000 villages in the country.

The report, which threw interesting light on the under-development of banking in India, said that the magnitude of the problem could be gauged from the fact that the average population served by commercial bank offices in India was as high as 73,000 as against 4,000 in Britain, 7,000 in USA, 15,000 in Japan and 11,000 in Iran.

Commercial bank deposits and credit as proportion of national income formed hardly 14 per cent and 10 per cent respectively in India compared with 84 per cent and 79 per cent in Japan, 56 per cent and 36 per cent in USA and 40 and 25 per cent in Canada.

Tamil Nadu had the largest number of 91 towns without any office of a commercial bank, followed by Madhya Pradesh (79), West Bengal (64), and Uttar Pradesh (59), Almost all the towns in Gujarat, on the other hand, had modern banking facilities.

The unevenness of banking facilities was all the more glaring in respect of distribution of credit. The lion's share of bank credit went to two States of Maharashtra (32.3 per cent) and West Bengal (22.5 per cent). Tamil Nadu, which had the largest number of offices, claimed 10.2 per cent of the bank credit.

The urban-orientation of the banking system was also evident from the fact that five major cities of Bombay, Calcutta, Delhi and Madras and Ahmedabad accounted for as much as 46 per cent of the total deposits and 65 per cent of the total bank credit at the end of 1967.

In fact, Bombay and Calcutta accounted for 32 per cent of deposits and 51 per cent of bank credit which showed the large inflow of funds into these two cities from other banked centres.

There was, however, an improvement in the position with the share of Bombay and Calcutta in total deposits declining from 45 per cent in 1951 to 32 per cent in 1967. Their share in credit came down from 59 per cent to 51 per cent over the same period.

C. Punjab Congress MLAs' Defection: Three Congress Members of the Punjab Legislative Assembly defected to the Akali Legislature Party on October 29. One of them, Mr. Radha Kishan, is a Hindu.

Though Mr. Radha Kishan has been admitted to the Akali Legislature party the Punjab Chief Minister, Mr. Gurnam Singh, said the Akali Dal had yet to decide whether he can join the organization.

Mr. Radha Kishan thus became the only Hindu MLA in the party. The party also has a Muslim MLA—the Nawab of Malerkotla.

The other two MLAs to defect were Mr. Harcharan Singh Brar, Deputy Leader of the Congress Legislature Party, and Mr. Lajinder Singh Bedi. Two Congress MLAs defected to the Akali Dal a few days earlier.

This raised the strength of the Akalis in the 104-member Punjab Assembly to 55 (excluding the Speaker) and reduced the number of Congress members to 28. Two seats in the Assembly are vacant.

D. Sangeet Natak Akademi Awards For 1969: Twelve eminent artistes in the fields of music, dance and drama have been selected by the General Council of the Sangeet Natak Akademi for awards for 1969.

The awards include two each in the fields of Hindustani and Karnatak music, four in dance (one each in Kathak, Bharatanatyam, Kathakali and Manipuri), four in theatre (one each in play writing— Bengali, play production—Urdu and acting—Malayalam).

An award has been made for the first time in the field of traditional theatre. It goes to Ankia Nat, a theatre form of Assam.

The award winners are:

Music: Ramchatur Mallick (Hindustani vocal), Dabir Khan (been, instrumental), M. M. Dandapani Desigar (Karnatak vocal) and Devakottai A. Narayana Iyengar (veena and instrumental).

Dance: Vazhenkate Kunchu Nair (Kathakali), Thangjam Ojah Chaoba Singh (Manipuri), Tiruvalaputtur

K. Swaminatha Pillai (Bharatanatyam—for teaching) and Sitara Devi (Kathak).

Drama: Mammatha Roy (playwriting, Bengali), Habib Tanvir (play production, Urdu), N. N. Pillai ((acting, Malayalam) and Gahan Chandra Goswami (traditional theatre, Ankia Nat).

The artistes received the awards at a special ceremony. The Akademi arranged a week-long festival of music, dance and drama featuring some of the honoured artistes.

E. Remains Of Early Man Discovered In West Bengal: Fossilized remains of early man (hominid) were discovered for the first time in the Indian sub-continent in October at Susunia in Bankura district of West Bengal.

The remains, consisting of a well-preserved skull apparently of a child, a fragmentary jaw with teeth and a long bone, belong to the pleistocene age covering the period between 8.000 BC and one million BC.

According to an eminent scholar and explorer, Mr. D. Sen, reader, department of anthropology, Calcutta University, the identity of the relics and fossils, when established, would provide the "long-awaited solution to the problem regarding the emergence of man in India."

INDONESIA

A. Oil Development Plans: The development of oil and other mineral resources has received priority consideration as a potential source of foreign exchange earnings in the Five-Year Development Plan, which otherwise places emphasis on the agricultural sector.

Petroleum resources remaining open for exploration and exploitation in the form of joint ventures with foreign enterprises are those in the offshore areas. The onshore areas are reserved for further development by the State oil enterprise Pertamina, except for some areas which Pertamina finds difficult to develop through its own efforts

More than 25 foreign oil enterprises have concluded production sharing contracts with Pertamina, and further contracts are awaiting approval.

Oil companies which have already concluded production sharing contracts with Pertamina are Japex Indonesia, for exploration and exploitation of oil and gas offshore North Sumatra, Bunju, and Mahakam in East Kalimantan, and Kyushu Oil Development Co., Ltd., for the exploration and exploitation of oil gas off-shore south and south-east Kalimantan.

Indonesian crude oil production has kept increasing almost continuously year after year, from 170 million barrels in 1964 to 220 barrels in 1968.

Under the Five-Year Plan, a further large increase in oil production is forecast, with the production target for 1973-74 set at 440 million barrels, or twice the amount produced in 1968. This forecast is based on the expectation that the production sharing contracts with foreign companies will result in oil yields by 1972.

The increased Indonesian oil production has resulted in a parallel increase in crude oil exports, which rose from 99.5 million barrels in 1964 to 145.5 million barrels in 1968.

Crude oil exports have become one of Indonesia's biggest foreign exchange earners, netting about $130 million in 1967. With oil production expected to rise to more than one million barrels a day in the early 1970s, it is hoped that oil export earnings will be raised to more than $200 million a year.

A. Prime Minister's Right To Overrule Courts Held Constitutional: The Tokyo District Court in the last week of September ruled constitutional an article in a law that gave the Prime Minister the right to overrule a court decision on an administrative suit in turning down a claim for 1,000,000 yen in a damages suit filed by a Leftist group against the Government.

The article in question was Article 27 of the Law on Administrative Litigation which empowers the Prime Minister to overrule a decision of court when he sees the decision seriously affects the public welfare.

The suit was filed by a group named the League of Tokyoites for the Protection of the Constitution against the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato. It referred to an incident in 1967 when the group applied for an approval of a demonstration past the Diet Building to the Tokyo Metropolitan Public Safety Commission in celebration of the 20th anniversary of the enforcement of the Constitution. The Commission approved the demonstration but ordered a change in the course so that the demonstrators would not march past the Diet Building.

The group applied for an injunction against the order to the Tokyo District Court on the ground that such an order violated the freedom of expression as guaranteed under the Constitution.

Judge Hidero Ito of the District Court said that there may be argument as to the appropriateness of the Article in question on the part of legislators, but it could not be judged unconstitutional.

The plaintiff had argued that the Government's "abuse" of the power under Article 27 of the law caused them spiritual pain and demanded 1 million yen as compensation.

B. Community Development Plan: Building of a new type of "community" in every region or locality of Japan free from problems of a highly industrialized society has been proposed by the National Life Council.

Called "recovery of humanity in living," the recommendation was the third suggestion to be submitted to the Government by the Council for laying down future social policy guidelines. The preceding two concerned improvement of living conditions for the aged and leisure activities of the people.

The Council will make a fourth recommendation on "a new informationized society" (the Japanese society in the new age of evolutionary information industries now developing in the country).

The third recommendation called for: (1) more interchange and mutual assistance within the regional community; (2) better utilization of leisure time; and (3) improvement of living environment. All these aim at re-orientation of the society towards a new type of regional communities with an entirely new sense of citizenship.

Proposed as ways and means of realizing the three suggestions were: (1) training of community leaders; (2) administrative steps to back up voluntary public efforts to form new communities; and (3) planning of such community activities so as to build and maintain a comfortable living phase in national life.

C. "British Week": At a ceremony at the National Theatre in Tokyo on September 26, Princess Margaret opened "British Week," Britain's biggest attempt yet to publicize its products in Japan.

The opening ceremony for the carnival of British culture and Industry was attended by about 1,200 people, including Princess Margaret's husband, Lord Snowdon, and Princess Chichibu.

In her message, Princess Margaret said that both her country and Japan had a long history as a nation and had important roles to play in the present world. She hoped that the British Week would lead to expanded trade and closer ties between the two countries.

After the opening ceremony, Princess Margaret and Lord Snowdon left for Nippon Budokan Hall in Kudan to open the "Britain in Tokyo" exhibition. Later, she visited various department stores and other exhibition places. Lord Snowdon attended the opening ceremony of the British Hi-Fi and Domestic Appliances Exhibition at Sony Building in the Ginza.

Tokyo was enveloped in British colour during the Week.

"British Week," held in seven countries—one in Asia, one in North America, and seven in Europe—since five years ago, is to promote sales of British products as well as international friendship through the holding of various scientific and cultural exhibitions.

JORDAN

A. Alleged "Rightist" Plot Foiled: Amman Radio reported on October 6 that King Hussein's regime had foiled a plot to overthrow it by an extreme Right-wing group.

The Radio did not make it clear whether the plot was directed against the King himself or those round him.

The announcement, which followed an emergency session of the Cabinet, said that the plot was thwarted on October 4, the day after King Hussein returned from the Islamic summit meeting in Rabat. It had been directed by the leaders of the fanatical Tahrir (Freedom) Party which was banned throughout the Arab world and implied that a number of arrests had been made.

However, reports said that the chief plotter, Shaikh Taqieddin Nabhani, who founded the Tahrir Party in the early 1930s, and other leaders were still at large, and there had been some speculation that Shaikh Taqieddin had fled the country. (A plot by his party against the regime was crushed earlier this year).

The conspirators' objectives were not made clear by the statement, but as the party had little more than 100 members in Jordan and enjoyed little support, it was believed that it may have planned a campaign of assassination against King Hussein and his Ministers. The statement, issued by the Ministry of the Interior, said the plot first came to light five months ago when a number of members of the party were arrested.

[The Tahrir Party, which calls for the return of the Caliphate, bringing the entire Arab world under one leadership and based on Koranic laws, is under universal banishment because it regards all present Arab Governments as non-existent. It is regarded as even more fanatical than the Right-wing Brotherhood.] Muslim

A. Assembly Passes Referendum Bill: A constitutional amendment allowing President Park Chung Hee to seek re-election in 1971 was put to a national referendum for final approval on October 17.

The controversial Bill was earlier approved by the South Korean National Assembly on September 14 at a session attended by only Democratic Republicans and other supporters of President Park.

The 44 members of the Opposition Simminhoe (New Democrats) and their four supporting Independents were involved in a sleep-in demonstration right on the floor of the Speaker's rostrum protesting against the Bill. The 107 Democratic Republicans, re-inforced by 15 Independents "passed" the Bill in a predawn session without informing the opposition. The plenum was not held at the regular chamber, but inside a nearby annex building. It took only 25 minutes to pass not only the Constitutional Amendment Bill but also a Bill governing the rules of the national referendum.

The Simminhoe leader, Dr. Yu Chin-o described the passage of the Bill in such circumstances as "death of democracy."

The night before the Bill's passage, heated debates had taken place on the House floor over the precise implications of Article 69 of the Constitutional Amendment Bill. A literal translation of the Article meant that the President "might serve three terms consecutively." The Opposition insisted that there was a danger that the Article could be abused to give President Park Chung Hee life-long Presidency. He could serve, for instance, an additional three terms beginning in 1971—or he could resign at some point in a third term and start afresh for another two.

A. Remains Of Mr. J. Breitenbich Found: The remains of Mr. John Breitenbich, who died in an avalanche on March 23, 1963 while negotiating an ice-fall with the American expedition to Everest, were discovered by a group of sherpas on September 24. They were buried near the Buddhist monastery of Thyangboche on October 15.

Present at the funeral were Mr. Norman Dyhrenfurth, leader of the 1963 Expedition, and Mr. Barry Bishop, who was among six members of the American team which had climbed Everest.

Mr. Breitenbich's skeleton was buried facing Everest. The Head Lama of Thyangboche, whose blessings are sought by most expeditions to Everest, was also present.

Ever since a skeleton with a wrist-watch, a camera, a walkie-talkie and some other items was found by a group of sherpas on September 24, it was generally believed that the remains were those of the youngest member of the American expedition. Mr. Dyhrenfurth and Mr. Bishop later identified the skeleton at Thyangboche.

PAKISTAN

A. Third Plan Short-fall: The latest evaluation and implementation reports indicate that the Third Five-Year Plan, which ends on June 30, 1970, will fall significantly short of its targets.

Official sources estimate a shortfall of Rs. 8,000 million in the public sector programme alone.

The overall cost of the Plan was originally estimated to be Rs. 52,000 million. But, officials now say that only Rs. 42,000 million will be spent in terms of current prices. In terms of constant prices, the figure will be Rs. 36,000 million, leaving a gap of Rs. 16,000 million. This implies that prices rose by 20 per cent during the Plan period.

The main shortfall was in the public sector programme which has come from the original target of Rs. 30,000 million to Rs. 22,000 million. By contrast, actual private investment was estimated to be Rs. 20,000 million to Rs. 21,000 million as against the Plan target of Rs. 22,000 million.

Official explanation for the big shortfall in public sector investment was that it was during the Third Plan period that the war with India occurred, diverting resources to defence. Additional defence expenditure during the Plan was estimated at Rs. 5,000 million. Besides, there was a cut in foreign assistance. The Plan had anticipated the receipt of Rs. 13,500 million from aid-giving countries, but only Rs. 10,300 million was in fact received.

The Plan had envisaged additional taxes worth Rs. 3,000 million, but in fact taxes worth Rs. 6,500 million were introduced. Even then the actual collection did not match estimates Savings too were below expectations; they remained at the Second Plan level of 10 per cent of the Gross National Product.

Much of the growth during the Plan period was in the field of agriculture. Industry lagged behind. The growth rate in agriculture was set at 5 per cent and the actual achievement was 4.6 per cent in spite of the poor performance in the East Wing. The agricultural growth in West Pakistan was 5.6 per cent. The Plan had set a target of 15 per cent for the industrial sector, but actual performance will come up only to 10 per cent.

Meanwhile, according to the State Bank, foreign exchange receipts from visible exports during 1967-69 amounted to Rs. 3.25 million against Rs. 2.95 million a year before showing a growth of 9.36 per cent. For the first time, share of manufactures in total exports was more than the share of primary commodities: manufactures accounted for 55 per cent of Pakistan's exports as against 46.9 per cent in 1967-68.

Though total exports during 1968-69 were higher than in 1967-68, they fell short of the target of Rs. 3,291 million. The reasons included: less production of jute crops due to cyclones and floods in East Pakistan; shorter cotton crop and destruction of 80,000 bales of cotton by fire in Karachi; and political disturbances.

Nevertheless, the export policy for 1969-70, announced in Islamabad at the end of August, envisages a 10 per cent increase in Pakistan's export earnings over the current financial year.

B. Strength Of Air Force—Indian Institute's Analysis: According to a study made by the Indian Institute of Defence Studies and Analysis in New Delhi on October 19, the Pakistan Air Force, which now consists of 16 combat squadrons compared with India's 30, may not expand to any significant extent over the next 10 years.

Published in the Institute's journal, this study by Mr. S. B. Guna highlighted the financial burden that the acquisition of new aircraft would involve in the absence of military aid which had helped Pakistan build up the strength of its Air Force between 1954 and 1965.

Examining Pakistan's balance of payments deficit, the study suggested that Pakistan's ability to spare a sizeable amount of foreign exchange for buying aircraft had "serious limitations." In any event, Pakistan was faced with the problem of finding replacements for its aging fighter-bombers, the F-86 Sabres. Acquired partly from USA under aid and bought partly from West Germany via Iran after 1965, the eight squadrons would have to be retired before long.

The 25 Mirage aircraft Pakistan had bought from France in 1967-68 were a useful addition in the fighter-bomber category. Another 25 were believed to be on order, implying probably the beginnings of a programme for phasing out Sabres.

The study referred to reports that Pakistan was trying to persuade the Soviet Union to supply 100 MIG-19 fighter-bombers, as well as a few squadrons of the faster and more deadly Sukhoi. The request for MIG-19 confirmed that this aircraft—of which China supplied 40 to 60 in 1966—had proved itself highly effective. Since China was credited with an annual production capacity of only 40 to 50, its ability to meet further Pakistani requests was limited, and hence the need to look to the Soviet Union.

Pakistan's build-up of air power after 1965 was marked by a heavy emphasis on self-reliance for maintenance and spares. "Spectacular results" were claimed to have been achieved in the indigenous production of "sophisticated equipment." This related possibly to local manufacture of spares, since no aircraft industry worth the name was likely to come up in Pakistan "in the next decade or two."

Also noteworthy were the claims made by Pakistan to high standards of serviceability, through careful maintenance and servicing. As much as 80 per cent of the MIG-19 fighter-bombers were serviceable at any time—a very high figure.

Training was also receiving great attention. Air Force pilots were liable to be weeded out even after being posted for squadron duty if they could not maintain the high standards acquired.

The study noted that the overseas assignments obtained by Pakistan had given its Air Force pilots exceptionally wide operating experience on nearly all modern combat types. These assignments had been in Saudi Arabia and other West Asian countries, apart from training arrangements made with China for handling MIG-19's and with Australia for the Mirage.

C. Economic Situation In East Wing: In a joint statement issued on October 17, five educationists described the economic situation in the East Wing of the country as "fast deteriorating" and expressed their grave concern over the rise in prices of necessities of life.

They said: "The situation could not have developed all of a sudden, Floods have been ravaging the crops for years, yet nothing tangible has been done so far to control that."

The statement was issued by the Deputy Amir of the Jamaat-e-Islami Pakistan, Maulana Abdur Rahim, the Amir of the Jamaat-e-Islami, East Pakistan, Mr. Ghulam Azam, the General Secretary of the Jamaat-e-Islami, East Pakistan, Mr. Abdur Khaleque, and the Amir and Secretary of the Dacca Jamaat-e-

A. New President And Vice-President Elected: Hanoi Radio reported on September 24 that Mr. Ton Duc Thang had been unanimously elected President by the National Assembly.

Mr. Ton Duc Thang, who succeeds the late Dr. Ho Chi-minh, was formerly Vice-President.

A total of 361 delegates participated in the election. It added that Mr. Nguyen Luong Bang, formerly head of the control board of the Lao Dong (Communist) Party Central Committee, had been elected Vice-President.

President Thang thanked the members for electing him and, amid thunderous applause, declared that North Viet-Nam would step up its fight against the United States. He urged the Viet-Namese people to be resolute to surmount all difficulties ahead until victory in the war was achieved.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. President N. V. Thieu's "Peace Offer:" President Nguyen Van Thieu said on October 6 that South Viet-Nam was willing to negotiate a "cease-fire with conditions" at the Paris peace talks.

He told a joint session of the National Assembly: "Today we repeat the same calls for peace and the peace offers we have made on previous occasions. And today I declare that we are ready to discuss anything with the other side, including a cease-fire. But it must be discussed and agreed upon before it goes into effect, because we cannot let the Communists take advantage of a cease-fire."

He did not specify what conditions South Viet-Nam would require, but it was the first time he had formally offered to negotiate the whole question with the other side.

This offer represented a significant shift in his public attitude. In previous speeches he had all but ruled out a cease-fire, arguing that the Viet-Cong and North Viet-Namese would exploit any halt in the fighting to improve their position.

He made it clear that South Viet-Nam could not agree to "an unconditional cease-fire" before discussions with the other side. "But when I say discuss, I mean serious discussions between the two sides with the goodwill necessary to end the war."

On the question of further withdrawals of American forces, he said that South Viet-Nam was determined to replace the bulk of the American combat troops by the end of 1970. This would leave about 250,000 American air and artillery support troops in the country.

He said he was confident that the South Viet-Namese forces could replace the Americans if they were given the necessary equipment and weapons. He emphasized that the reduction in American troops should be "commensurate with the appropriate strengthening" of the forces of South Viet-Nam, if they were to avoid disastrous effects to territorial security and the results of the pacification and reconstruction programme.

"Provisional" Government's Criticism:

A spokesman for the South Viet-Namese "Provisional Revolutionary Government" delegation in Paris described President Thieu's offer to discuss a cease-fire as "part and parcel of the manoeuvre undertaken by the Nixon Administration".

This "manoeuvre," he claimed, consisted of "giving out information after information" to appease and mislead American opinion, which was demanding "the rapid and total repatriation of American troops."

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Russia Launches Three Spacecraft On Joint Mission: Russia began its most ambitious space mission on October 11 when it launched the first of its troika spacecraft, Soyuz-6 to rendezvous with two more in an experiment involving welding of metals in conditions of deep vacuum.

A Tass announcement of the objectives of the mission appeared to suggest that the new Soyuz mission—the first Soviet manned flight in more than nine months—might be a prelude to the construction of an orbiting space platform.

It said that a rocket-carrier with the space-ship was launched "with high precision on the calculated orbit." It was piloted by Lt.-Col. Georgy Shonin with Valery Kubasov, a Master of technical sciences, as flight engineer.

The two cosmonauts, at the time of take-off, had no space suits on, but wore comfortable woollen clothes. This was seen as an indication of the progress made by Soviet cosmic engineering in ensuring greater comforts and guarantee against risks within the space-ship.

Tass said that the extensive programme of scientific and technical explorations and experiments planned included:

(1) Complex checking and testing of systems on board and the improved design of the rocket-cosmic Soyuz complex;

(2) Further testing of the systems of manual control, orientation and stabilization of the ship in intricate flight conditions and checking of autonomous navigation facilities;

(3) Conducting a great number of scientific observations and photographing geological and geographical objectives of the Earth and also investigation of its atmosphere with the object of testing the methods of using the obtained data in the national economy;

(4) Exploring the physical characteristics of new-Earth outer space; and

(5) Conducting medical-biological investigations of studying the effect of factors of space flight on human organism.

It added: "Various methods of welding metals in conditions of deep vacuum and weightlessness will also be tested by means of unique technology apparatuses in the Soyuz-6 ship during the flight."

Describing the space-ship, Prof. Alexei Konstantinov, a member of the team that prepared the Soyuz-6 mission, said that the craft differed from some of its previous versions in that it lacked a docking collar. This appeared to mean that it was not intended to link up with another ship.

At Jodrell Bank (England), Sir Bernard Lovell, Britain's leading space expert, predicted that the Soviet manned space launching could be the beginning of a series that would result in an orbiting space platform. "The establishment of such a platform will have great consequences for the future of space research and deep space exploration."

Second Space Ship Launched:

On October 12, USSR launched a second space ship, Soyuz-7, with three men aboard to join Soyuz-6 which was circling the Earth.

Soyuz-7 was commanded by Lt.-Col. Anatoly Filipchenko (41). Other members of the crew were Flight Engineer Vladislav Volkov (36) and Lt. Col. Viktor Gorbatilo (35).

With Soyuz-7, the Soviets placed five men simultaneously in space—the largest number so far to be in space at the same time.

The two vehicles established radio contact within minutes of the blast-off of the second craft from Baikonur cosmodrome in Kazakhstan. An hour after the launching, Radio Moscow said the two vehicles were in group flight. They would engage in group exercises.

"Soyuz-8" Launched:

On October 13, two more Soviet space-men were lofted into Earth orbit in Soyuz-8 to join the five launched earlier in Soyuz-6 and 7.

This was the first time that three manned space-craft were orbiting the Earth simultaneously.

The two new cosmonauts on board Soyuz-8 were Col. Vladimir Shatalov and Dr. Alexei Yeliseyev, a scientist, both of whom had flown in the last Russian manned space shot in January.

Rendezvous In Space:

As the group flight by three spaceships with seven men on board continued for the third suspenseful day on October 15, Russia announced that its crews had conducted wide-ranging manoeuvres and tested techniques of piloting orbiting spacecraft "which is necessary in future for the establishment of space laboratories and for ensuring their long-term functioning."

Tass said that Soyuz-7 and Soyuz-8 came as close as 500 metres of each other. The rendezvous was observed and registered by the crew of the third ship, Soyuz-6.

The close approach made by Soyuz-7 and Soyuz-8 made it possible for crew members of the two spaceships to observe each other and carry out communication with the help of light indices. Through the portholes the cosmonauts were reported to have discerned clearly the panels of solar batteries, antennae and other elements of the spaceships.

The Tass statement said: "Twice within several hours Soyuz-7 and Soyuz-8 flew side by side, passed each other made close approaches. When the distance between them was about 3 km the ships, following the aviation custom, dipped their solar battery panels to each other."

Among the experiments performed were Soyuz-8's photography of luminous particles which, Tass said, "swarmed after the spaceships in their flight." These particles formed from the exhaust and burned fuel. "Only comprehensive research will make it possible to solve this problem," it said. The tiny crystals "may mislead sensors of automatic stations on their way to the Moon and the planets."

Metal-Welding Experiment:

On October 16, Russian scientists brought their Soyuz-6 spacecraft safely back to Earth after a unique molecular "cold" welding experiment and left two craft still in orbit.

Soyuz-6, carrying Col. Georgy Shonin and civilian flight engineer Valery Kubasov, was brought down in the Karaganda recovery area of Soviet Central Asia.

The unnamed chief designer of Soyuz space-ships was quoted in Pravda as saying that ships in orbit were working equipment, not testing out projects. "An important place in the programme of flights of Soyuz ships is given to studies of different ways of welding in space. Welding will be used to repair space objects and to assemble parts of orbital stations of the future."

He said that weightlessness and complete vacuum created ideal conditions for industrial production on big orbital stations for producing pure and superpure metals. It was possible that space vacuum would serve to develop space chemistry and help check some diseases.

Welding experiments were carried out within Soyuz-6 which carried special equipment in its orbital compartment. Before welding started, the ship's commander closed the hatch leading to the ship's cabin and at the 77th orbit depressurized the orbital compartment. After a high vacuum was created, Flight Engineer Kubasov switched on the welding equipment. Several types of automatic welding were tried. Then the orbital compartment was pressurized again and welded metals taken to the cosmonauts' cabin.

Space-crafts Return Safely:

On October 17, three more cosmonauts aboard Soyuz-7 returned safely to Earth.

Soyuz-7 made a flaming re-entry into the atmosphere around noon, popping its parachute and floating to a soft on-target landing a mere 25 km. from the place where Soyuz-6 landed the previous day.

Moscow Radio said the mission of Soyuz-7 had been "successfully completed." It included a "vast programme of scientific, technical, medical and biological research."

The last pair of cosmonauts aboard Soyuz-8 returned to Earth on October 18.

One of Soyuz-8's last experiments was a communications exercise between the flight control centre and the spaceship through the Atlantic-based ship Cosmonaut Vladimir Komarov and the communications satellite Molniya-1. It was carried out at a time when the spaceship was outside the zone of radio visibility from Soviet territory. The experiment was successful.

Tass stated that while the three ships did not dock in space, their crews practised rendezvous and group flight techniques. The seven spacemen had brought back vital information "which will enable us once again to storm the cosmos, and to fly higher and further for the benefit of our fatherland and the whole of mankind."

The experiments of the three spaceships were aimed at the future construction of an orbital station. The cosmonauts welded metals in space, a technique considered essential to future space construction. Other experiments included aerial photography and observation.

A scientist disclosed that the seven cosmonauts ate plastic-packed bread cubes, chicken, prunes and steaks during their space sojourn. They ate four meals a day.

Re-appraisal Of Soviet Space Programme Forecast:

A despatch from Moscow on October 20 indicated the possibility that the Soyuz troika flight may have started re-appraisal of the Soviet space programme leading to a new emphasis on unmanned spaceships.

The Soviet Press took to extolling unmanned flights as just useful in obtaining scientific information and preferable because no risk to human life was involved.

If all had gone well with the Soyuz troika and if it had produced a big leap forward, more manned flights could have been expected in the near future, with perhaps launchings to the Moon or planets from an orbiting platform.

Space authorities at the Baikonur cosmodrome had, however, used interviews with the Soviet Press to advocate going ahead with manned flights and construction of a space station. This had the look of a defensive manoeuvre.

The chief designer of spaceships, always unidentified for security reasons, said: "No matter how perfect an automatic equipment and how high the level of automation, it is the man whose decisions are most important."

Another space authority, identified only as a "leading specialist," insisted that "the building of orbital stations is the central problem of cosmonautics today." "Extra-terrestrial laboratories will have to be first built on Earth, then dismantled and taken into orbit and fitted together into a single whole."

The chief designer endorsed this view, emphasizing the importance of welding in space, which was tried for the first time in Soyuz-6. "Welding in space holds great promise. Orbital space stations would be constructed in the next few years."

B. Russia Launches "Intercosmos-1:" The Soviet Union launched on October 14 a new artificial satellite named Intercosmos-1 which joined the orbiting space laboratory and radio-astronomical observatories of East European countries in a large-scale probe into the mysteries of the Sun.

The satellite was named after an apparently new body formed to encompass space experiments of the Soviet Union and its European partners. Academician Boris Petrov was named Chairman of the Council for International Co-operation in the Field of Exploring and Studying Outer Space (Intercosmos).

Tass said that Intercosmos-1 was intended for studying the Sun's ultra-violet and X-ray radiation and the effect of such radiation on structures of the Earth's upper atmosphere.

C. Withdrawal Of Soviet Warships From Mediterranean: In a surprise move on October 16, Russia pulled the bulk of her warships from the Mediterranean.

The Soviet fleet, which had been built up to an unprecedented strength of 55 to 60 units only a few weeks earlier, was reduced suddenly to a token presence in the strategic area.

No reason was given, nor was any announcement made by the Russians. The move was carried out quietly, but was shadowed by Allied air and naval units.

Western experts said they assumed that Russia was pulling the units back to Soviet ports perhaps for the Winter unless they were being shifted to other undisclosed destinations.

Latest reports said that Russia now had about 10 to 12 warships in the Mediterranean, apparently one of the smallest concentrations there in recent times. The bulk of the bigger ships had been pulled out, but some submarines had been left in addition to about 14 supply ships which would enable the Russians to move their warships back fast if they wanted to.

D. Mr. Willy Brandt Elected Chancellor In West Germany: Mr. Willy Brandt was on October 21 elected as Chancellor of West Germany, the first Social Democrat to head the Government in the 20-year history of the post-War Republic.

The Bundestag (Lower House of Parliament) voted Mr. Brandt (55) into power at the first ballot, sending the Christian Democrats into Opposition for the first time. Mr. Brandt's coalition of Social Democrats and Free Democrats gave the Socialist leader 251 votes, only two more than the required absolute majority of 249. The Christian Democrats mustered 235 votes against Mr. Brandt. There were five abstentions and four invalid ballot papers.

A burst of applause went up from the Socialist benches when the Speaker, Mr. Hassel, gave the result and Mr. Brandt formally announced that he accepted his election as West Germany's fourth Chancellor.

Mr. Brandt later told a television interviewer: "I am satisfied and grateful for the trust placed in me and quite frankly I am a little proud that I can now carry out this high office.

"I ask my friends in Parliament and in the country to help us to do what must be done for our Federal Republic over the next four years."

Dr. Kurt Georg Kiesinger, the out-going Chancellor, said the new coalition would be in a very difficult position, faced with the strongest Opposition the West German Parliament has ever had.

New Cabinet:

On October 21, Mr. Willy Brandt announced the following Cabinet appointments for his Government of Social Democrats and Free Democrats.

Chancellor—Mr. Willy Brandt (SPD);

Foreign Affairs—Mr. Walter Scheel (FDP leader);

Economics—Mr. Karl Schiller (SPD);

Defence—Mr. Helmut Schmidt (SPD);

Justice—Mr. Gerhard Jahn (SPD);

Finance—Mr. Alex Moeller (SPD); and Labour—Mr. Walter Arendt (SPD).

The Soviet newspaper Izvestia carried a profile and photograph of Mr. Brandt and stressed that Mr. Brandt had fled into Scandinavian exile in 1933 after Hitler came to power. Western observers saw this as another sign of the importance Moscow attached to the change-over in Bonn.

E. Security Council Elections: On October 20, Syria was elected to the UN Security Council.

Syria's election came despite its repudiation of the Council's November 22, 1967 unanimous resolution establishing guidelines for a West Asian peace settlement.

Four other States were elected in the secret balloting: Poland (by 121 votes), Burundi (118 votes), Sierra Leone (117) and Nicaragua (103). Syria received 101 votes. The required majority, two-thirds of the 126-member States present and voting, was 84.

Poland was the nominee of the Soviet bloc to succeed Hungary.

The new members will take office, each for a two-year term, on January 1, 1970, filling vacancies created by the withdrawal on December 31 of Algeria, Hungary, Pakistan, Paraguay and Senegal.

From January 1 the Security Council will consist of USA, Russia, Britain, France, Formosa (all permanent members), Burundi, Colombia, Finland, Nepal, Nicaragua, Poland, Sierra Leone, Spain, Syria and Zambia.

As the election was being held, about 100 demonstrators outside UN protested against the continued detention in Damascus of two Israelis from a US jetliner, hijacked to the Syrian capital last August.

Earlier, the Israeli Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, had said in Jerusalem that if Syria was elected

Israel would have to re-examine its attitude towards UN. He added: "It is an aberration that a country which, by detaining two Israeli nationals, has made itself accomplice to an act of international piracy, should be elected to the Security Council."

Elections To ECOSOC:

On October 20, Ceylon was elected to the UN Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) for a three-year term from January 1, 1970.

Ceylon's election came on the fifth ballot. In the four earlier ballots, Ceylon was leading but was tied by Lebanon and failed to secure the required two-thirds majority. Just before the fifth ballot, however, Lebanon announced its withdrawal in favour of Ceylon, which then secured on that ballot 104 out of 108 votes cast.

Ceylon was one of nine countries elected to the ECOSOC. The others were: Peru, Brazil, Ghana, Kenya, Tunisia, France, Italy and Greece.

F. Aga Khan Weds: The Aga Khan (32), spiritual leader of 20 million Ismaili Muslims, married in Paris on October 29 an English woman, Lady James Crichton-Stuart.

The bride—first named Sarah Frances—had married Lord James Charles Crichton-Stuart, an English nobleman, in 1959. The marriage was dissolved in 1967.

Lady James was born in New Delhi in 1940 and spent her early childhood in India. Her father, Lt.-Col. Arthur Croker Poole, served in the Indian cavalry throughout his military career. When he retired in 1946, the family moved to England and a life of farming in Berkshire.

G. New Planet: It was disclosed in New York on October 22 that a team of Cornell University astronomers had discovered what it believed may be a planet the size of Earth in the vicinity of another star.

The planet was believed to be rotating round a pulsar or neutron star about 6,000 light-years away. The pulsar, in the Crab nebula, had been observed to have a slight variation in its pulsing. This variation occurred at three-month intervals and amounts in a variation of about 110,000th of a second.

H. Czech Government Resigns—Communist Party Purges: The Czechoslovak President, Mr. Ludvik Svoboda, accepted the resignation of the Prime Minister, Mr. Oldrich Cernik, and his Government in Prague on September 27.

President Svoboda immediately entrusted Mr. Cernik with the formation of a new Government.

The resignation announcement followed a crucial two-day meeting of the Czechoslovak Communist Party Central Committee called to decide the political fate of the former liberal leader, Mr. Alexander Dubcek, and other progressives.

Earlier, the Communist Party purged various Dubcek era figures from the party and the Government.

The Party's Central Committee ended its two-day session of probing into alleged errors of the past after approving a resolution "on organizational and personnel problems."

A Minister of the Czech State Government said that there had been sweeping personnel changes in the party and the Government and virtually confirmed that the former Party chief, Mr. Dubcek had been further downgraded. Mr. Dubeck had remained a member of the Presidium after losing the First Secretary post to Mr. Gustav Husak last April. The latest session apparently removed him from the 11-man Presidium.

Gen. Vaclat Prchlit was ousted as political chief of the Army after he had criticised the Warsaw Pact set-up and was expected to lose the Central Committee post as well.

Those purged from the Central Committee were Mr. Smrkovsky, Mr. Hajek, Mr. Milan Hubl, former head of the party's Political University, Mr. Hjaroslav Kpadiva, head of the Charles University Philosophical Faculty, the Agriculture Minister, Mr. Josef Boruvka, Mr. Josef Macek, Director of the Historical Institute in the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences, Mrs. Marie Mikova, Deputy Chairman of the Lower House of Parliament, Mr. Zdenek Mlynar, Presidium member during the Dubcek era, Mr. Bohumd Simon, former Prague city party chief, Mr. Vaclaf Slavik and Mr. Josef Spacek former Presidium members, and Mr. Zbynek Vokrouhlicky, who recently resigned as the head of the Czechoslovak youth union.

A party communique said that 25 persons addressed the session in the Prague Castle and the discussion had "helped clarify past developments and future orientation of party work." The 25 were in addition to Mr. Dubcek's successor, Mr. Gustav Husak, who made the opening report and recommendations and also delivered a final speech.

Mr. Dubcek was 17th of the speakers listed. In answering the charges against him, it was not known to what extent he defended himself and how far he went in admitting errors. He had been reliably reported unwilling to perform the traditional Communist ritual of self-criticism, in which an official about to be purged reads a script edited by his critics.

The session approved the Presidium report on the political situation and further party tasks. Prague Radio said it had also approved a resolution on organizational and personnel questions.

I. Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty Ratified By 20 Countries: It was disclosed at the 13th General Conference of the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna on September 23 that so far 91 countries had signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, but only 20 had ratified it.

Regretting that the Treaty had not yet come into force, the Agency's Swedish Director-General, Mr Sigvard Eklund, pointed out that it could only become effective after it had been ratified by 93 countries, including the three "founder members"—Britain, USA and the Soviet Union. Of the three, only Britain had so far ratified the Treaty.

Meanwhile, the undertakings contained in the Treaty's Fourth and Fifth Articles remained in suspense.

Under Article Four signatories belonging to the "nuclear club" undertake to assist ratifying non-nuclear nations in creating sources of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. The Fifth Article gives the Agency power to check on the application of the Treaty and in particular on any nuclear explosions carried out by American, Soviet or Soviet-American teams in developing countries with the object of extracting natural resources or aiding engineering projects.

Describing the past year as the "year of the non-nuclear countries," Mr Eklund emphasized the importance of the recent Treaty banning nuclear arms in 13 Latin American countries. The Agency was given the role of supervising the application of this Treaty, but a bilateral agreement had to be concluded between the Agency and each of the countries concerned. So far only Mexico had concluded such an agreement with the Vienna-based Agency.

J. Shah Reza Pahlevi Awards: At a ceremony held at the Paris headquarters of UNESCO on September 8—International Literacy Day—the Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlevi Prize for outstanding work in adult literacy was presented to the Cambodian National Technical Committee for Literacy.

By unanimous decision of the selection jury, the $5,050 Prize, donated by the Shah of Iran, went to the Cambodian Committee for "massive efforts and remarkable results" in a campaign to promote adult literacy and ensure participation in national development.

Volunteer workers including Buddhist monks, soldiers, civil servants and students, took part in the campaign, which was supported by radio broadcasts and involved a million pupils meeting at the homes of local leaders, in pagodas or in the open air. The pupils contributed such things within their means as chalk for blackboards and oil for lamps and in the four years of the campaign a third of them had gained their primary certificates of literacy.

The jury also made honourable mention of seven institutions and one individual. He was Rev. Charles T. Hein, an American pastor working in Togoland. His remarkable scientific work had "benefited several African countries and he had taken a direct part in the training of nearly a thousand literacy instructors."

Institutions commended included the Summer Institute of Linguistics, Australia, for work among 500,000 illiterates in Papua (New Guinea,) and the Bombay Social Education Committee for decisive contributions to making 522,000 adults literate.

Two institutions praised for their work among women were the Nepal Women's Organization for integrating literacy work into the national development effort and the Pakistan Girl Guides' Association, which in ten years had set up a net-work of 82 literacy centres.

Systematic work in the Bambara tongue won mention for the Technical Commission of Bambara in Mali which took part in a pilot project in functional literacy, while the Tunisian Institute for Adult Education was commended for launching a national programme using experimental methods. Pioneer work also won mention for Belgrade Television, Yugoslavia, which had made a "remarkable contribution" to audio-visual methods.

K. New Chemical Element: American scientists have discovered a new chemical element—the heaviest known to man.

The unnamed element is No. 104 in the Periodic Table, and is highly radio-active. It falls in the same family of metals as titanium, zirconium and hafnium.

University of California physicists, using a machine called a heavy ion linear accelerator, created two—and possibly three—isotopes of the element. Isotopes 257 and 259 of Element 104 definitely had been identified, and isotope 26 may have been discovered.

An isotope is one of two or more "kinds" of atoms which have the same chemical properties but differ in atomic mass and in certain physical characteristics.

L. Underground Nuclear Test By USSR: The Russians staged an underground nuclear test in the Arctic island of Novaya Zemyla on October 14, but experts differed over whether it was the most powerful yet.

The blast had probably a yield of five megatons.

The Seismological Institute in Upsala (Sweden) issued a bulletin saying that the explosion recorded 6.3 on the Richter scale. The Stockholm Institute'e Prof. Arne Bffierhammar retorted that the blast was nearer 7.2. He maintained that the explosion was the largest underground one ever recorded.

M. Russian And US Maritime Strength: A Times of India despatch in the second week of October analysed the comparative maritime strength of the two Big Powers—USA and the Soviet Union.

It said that the Russian merchant marine, which in 1950 had comprised only 432 ships aggregating 1.9 million deadweight tons, now had more than 1,500 ships and was expected to total 14 million tons by the end of 1970—a sevenfold increase in tonnage. By the end of 1980, the Russians expected to have a tonnage of 24 million.

The Russians seemed to proceed on the premise that the scope of international shipping would increase from 2 billion tons today to 3 to 3.5 billion tons by 1980. They intended to have enough ships on hand to tackle more than their share of the international cargo and were adding about 100 ships a year to their merchant fleet.

The Japanese had even bigger ambitions. Along with the Russians, the Japanese had prescribed that their merchant marine should carry 60 per cent of Japan's exports and 70 per cent of its imports by 1975. To meet this target they planned to have 2,050 ships of 29 million tons by 1975.

In sharp contrast, the American merchant fleet, which in 1950 had comprised 1,900 ships totalling 22 million tons, at the beginning of this year consisted of only 1,033 active ships of 15.8 million tons—a 45 per cent decrease in the number of ships and a 28 per cent drop in tonnage. Further contractions in the US shipping fleet were expected during the next 18 months.

What was even more ominous, while 80 per cent of the Soviet shipping fleet today was less than 10 years of age, nearly the same proportion of the American merchant fleet was 20 years of age or older. In naval matters, according to Admiral Thomas S. Moorer, US Chief of Naval Operations, "the United States no longer enjoys clear-cut military and technological superiority. By any measuring stick they (the Soviets) are today the second largest sea Power in the world. In a mere 10 years, the Soviet Union with dedication of purpose, huge outlays of funds and with priorities equivalent to or even surpassing their space programme, has transformed itself from a maritime nonentity to a major sea Power".

BRUNEI

A. Suspension Of Public Accounts Committee: The Sultan, by an Order issued under the Emergency Regulations recently, suspended the Public Accounts Committee.

The suspension order came suddenly. The Committee's first report was submitted last year. It had called to testify before it top Government officials including men of the Royal Brunei Malay Regiment.

According to reports, the Government did not appreciate the idea of "outsiders" looking too closely at its defence spending.

When the matter was referred to the Attorney-General, he ruled that the audit department had no power to audit the pay and allowances of seconded personnel in the Army. The Committee, for its part, asked the Auditor-General to ascertain his exact powers from the Government.

Brunei had been without a State Auditor after the last holder of the post, Mr. John Lee, was promoted as State Financial Officer.

The Public Accounts Committee was established a year ago. It consisted of five local businessmen, all members of the Legislative Council. It was a select committee appointed by the Council in accordance with the Constitution. The Committee had been looking into the 1968 accounts since the middle of this year when the suspension order came from the Sultan. The decision to suspend the entire Committee rather than exclude the Army from its purview, for example, made the episode somewhat mysterious.

Meanwhile, oil revenues are soaring. Brunei is not only recovering its former affluence but is heading for higher and higher riches. Its oil and natural gas royalties make up the bulk of its revenue, expected this year to reach a record $70 million, approximating to over $540 per head of the 130,000 population.

BURMA

A. Thai Asylum To U Nu: Bangkok reports on October 26 quoted a senior Thai official as saying that the Government had granted political asylum to the former Burmese Premier, U Nu.

The official said that the grant of asylum would be "subject, naturally, to the usual conditions that he does not engage in political activities against the Burmese Government while he is in Thailand."

He said: "The Government of Gen. Ne Win is a friendly Government and we do not want to be involved in any political moves against it. But, U Nu is a respected statesman and he knows that political asylum is granted on condition that he is forbidden to involve himself in political affairs. I am sure he will respect it and not embarrass his hosts."

[The 62-year-old former Premier was on a world tour seeking support to overthrow Gen. Ne Win. There had been mounting speculation that he was preparing to denounce the Ne Win Government and to establish himself as the linchpin of a national challenge to its authority. He was recently quoted as having denounced the Ne Win Government as "a fascist regime." U Nu had already made a constitutional challenge to Gen. Ne Win in the form of a minority contribution to the debate carried on earlier this year by the National Unity Advisory Board. He demanded a return to parliamentary democracy to be achieved after Gen. Ne Win had handed the leadership back to U Nu, with instructions to organize elections. Gen. Ne Win had flatly rejected the plea.]

INDIA

SUMMARY: IPU Conference; Congress Party Crisis; Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan In Gujarat; Mr. D. S. Pheruman's Death.

A. IPU Conference: The 57th Conference of the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) was inaugurated in New Delhi on October 30 by the President of India, Mr. V. V. Giri. Delegates from 69 countries attended.

In his inaugural speech, Mr. Giri said: "To one like me dedicated to the ideal of One World, this august assembly of parliamentarians from all over the globe is an affirmation of faith in an emerging world order. In spite of the chaos and confusion that we face today, I firmly believe that the world is groping towards unification and one can perceive, perhaps dimly, the birth of a world without war and without hunger."

He added: "Mankind is today facing the grim alternatives of annihilation or survival, and I am sure we have enough wisdom left in us to choose the right path."

The Vice-President of India, Mr. G. S. Pathak, in his speech said that IPU's importance "is enhanced by the fact that unlike United Nations, where the delegates represent their respective Governments, the expression of views in the conference of this Union is free and more independent."

The President of the Conference and Speaker of India's Lok Sabha, Mr. G. S. Dhillon, pointed to the widening gap between the rich and the poor nations and said that this was a danger to peace, which was today imperilled in several parts of the world and especially in Asia, which is "shaken by violent political tremors."

He added: "The worst threat to peace is the possibility of a division of mankind into two irreconcilable parts, so far removed from each other that no amount of goodwill, tolerance or compassion can hope to bring them together without being suspect of each other—a division into those who master nature, share out the world's riches among themselves and set out for the Moon and the stars, and those who remain fettered in their inescapable poverty and the darkness of ignorance."

Mrs. I. Gandhi's Address:

On October 31, India's Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, in an address, asked the IPU Conference to find an answer to the question whether international aid was to be part and parcel of genuine international co-operation or was it to remain primarily an instrument of the national policies of the donor-countries.

She said that India would like to see the whole pattern of international trade and aid "in a new perspective of international co-operation". As at present conceived and administered, such aid had produced disenchantment among recipients and donors alike.

India recognized that transfer of capital and technological resources from the developed countries to the developing could be a means of accelerating development. But, the terms of such transfer and the concepts governing aid and development needed closer scrutiny.

She hoped that the publication of the report of the committee presided over by the former Canadian Prime Minister, Mr. Lester Pearson, would provide an opportunity for a wide-ranging debate on the subject of aid for development.

She reminded them that unlike the Western world, where the social and economic revolution had been a "step-by-step process", in India several revolutions—political, economic, social, intellectual and technological—were taking place simultaneously and peacefully, although not always without creating an atmosphere of confrontation and crisis.

She spoke in this context of the reports "you read in your newspapers and ours of our great poverty, of our regional rivalries, of our student agitations, of religious riots and so on." All these conflicts, she admitted, were there, as indeed they existed in one form or other in most countries. Some of them were due to historic causes, some due to the tension unavoidable in a developing and changing society.

"But compared to the judgment and self-restraint shown by our people in matters related to the substance of Government, these disturbances are peripheral. The heart of India is strong and its limbs sturdy." It was true that mistakes had been made. But they were inevitable when so much was undertaken and on such an enormous scale "in conditions not experienced elsewhere."

Resolutions:

The Conference ended on November 7 after passing six resolutions.

However, India made known its objections to a resolution which, among other things, urged parliamentary groups to bring their influence to bear upon their Governments, through their Parliaments, "to sign and ratify the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty where it has not already been done."

Another resolution urged all Parliaments to search for new ways of promoting international cultural exchanges and requested that, in the development of communication satellites great cultural events, wherever they might take place, be given high priority as subjects to be made available to nations everywhere with the conviction that international peace and security would thereby be strengthened.

Yugoslavia scored a point at the concluding plenary session by getting adopted, unanimously, a resolution that delegations to the 25th General Assembly of United Nations be at the level of Heads of State or Government.

Another resolution noted that the constant role of the IPU was to oppose actions aimed at imposing, by force of arms, threats, economic pressure and other means, the political will of one State upon another, and called upon parliamentary groups to express to their respective Governments and Parliaments their strong support of the foregoing principle. It also called upon Parliaments to promote the development of regional co-operation.

The resolution on chemical and bacteriological weapons called upon Governments to consider the question of the prohibition of the production of such weapons and the conclusion of a Convention for effective international control. It appealed to all Parliaments to take legislative and other steps aimed at securing the effective and general prohibition of chemical and biological weapons.

Another resolution called upon all Parliaments to stress the importance, among other things, of the following social objectives and policies: "that all men and women have the right to adequate means of livelihood, with equal pay for equal work; that the distribution of the material resources of the community is done in such a manner as best to serve the common good and promote social justice, and that formulation of demographic programmes have a direct impact on raising the standard of living and promotion of the welfare of the community."

IPU Report—UAR Walk-Out:

The IPU session began in New Delhi on October 29 with the United Arab Republic delegation walking out of the IPU Council's meeting.

The UAR Parliamentary group, led by Dr. Labib Shukair, had earlier objected to certain observations in the report of the Secretary-General of the IPU dealing with the Arab-Israeli crisis.

Dr. Shukair had to be called to order by the President of the IPU, Mr. Andre Chandernagor, when he (Dr. Shukair) insisted on speaking on the subject even after the Council had voted to defer a debate on the Secretary-General's report until the plenary session of the IPU which was to be inaugurated by the Speaker of the Lok Sabha, Mr. G. S. Dhillon, next day (October 30).

The UAR's objections to the observations of the Secretary-General, Mr. Andre de Blonay, as stated in a document circulated to the IPU delegates, were, briefly:

(1) The reference to "the Armistice Agreements enforced by UN to put an end to the hostilities which broke out between Israel and its Arab neighbours is misleading," inasmuch as there were "no Armistice Agreements between Israel and its Arab neighbours except the Conventions of 1949 which Israel has disregarded and declared to be dead and buried." Thus, the use of the words "Armistice and Armistice Agreements" could only serve the Israeli cause which aimed at stabilizing the cease-fire lines with a view to imposing and legalizing Israel's fait accompli in the occupied Arab territories.

(2) The use of the word "terrorists" in describing the El Fatah organization was objected to by UAR.

(3) The description that the activities of the Fedayeen "take the form of bomb attacks, sabotage and guerrilla operations" was also objected to by UAR.

(4) The report used the phrase "the Jerusalem Government" when speaking of "the Israeli Government." This was also objected to by UAR.

(5) The reference in the report to "the new factor of USSR appearing on the scene as the avowed protector of the Arab peoples" was also objected to by UAR as being "biased and false."

(6) UAR objected to the "insinuation" contained in the report that no settlement of the Arab-Israeli question was possible "unless the parties to the conflict meet around the conference table."

When the discussion on the report went on for more than an hour, the line-up generally being the Arab countries and the Soviet bloc being on the side of UAR, and the West, notably Britain and USA, supporting the view that the debate on the report should be deferred, the delegate of Britain moved that further debate be postponed until the plenary session. It was seconded by USA.

The voting on the motion was 65 in favour of postponement, four against, and 17 abstentions.

Each delegation had two votes. Nepal cast one vote in favour of postponement; the other was "abstain."

The motion before the IPU Council was that the reports of the Secretary-General on the political situation and on the administration of the bureau be communicated to the plenary session.

Indian Objections:

As soon as the Conference re-assembled in the afternoon after its inauguration in the morning, India's Lok Sabha Deputy Speaker, Mr. R. K. Khadilkar, Deputy Leader of the Indian delegation, went up to the rostrum to record his protest against certain observations pertaining to India which he regarded as objectionable. The Lok Sabha Speaker, Mr. G. S. Dhillon, who had taken over as President of the Conference, however, did not permit Mr. Khadilkar to proceed with his speech.

Later interrupting the proceedings, Mr. Khadilkar rushed to the microphone and started speaking. Before he could be persuaded to withdraw, Mr. Dhillon had to raise his voice several times asking him to return to his seat as his name was not among the list of speakers.

Subsequently, the Secretary-General assured the Conference that he would circulate amendments to those portions of the report to which the Indian delegation had taken exception.

As an instance of factual incorrectness in the report, it was pointed out that in the later years of Mahatma Gandhi's life, according to the report, the Congress Party had become "sharply divided on the question of relations between the Muslim and Hindu communities. Mahatma Gandhi attempted by repeated fasting and appeals to heal these differences within the party and restore the unity of the movement which incarnated all hopes for freedom, but the communal struggle which ultimately made inevitable the division of the sub-continent on a religious basis between India and Pakistan was to destroy all these hopes."

Another passage which caused disquiet was a comment that Parliament and the Council of Ministers were so dominated by the Prime Minister, Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru that "the legislature was rarely in a position to arraign the executive even if it so wished."

Four Countries Suspended:

On October 29, IPU suspended the membership of Pakistan, Libya, Sudan and Somalia in view of the dissolution of Parliament in these countries following coups d'etat.

The decision to suspend these countries was unanimous.

In the morning session of the Council, the Lok Sabha Speaker, Mr. G. S. Dhillon, was elected President of the Conference.

The Council also decided to postpone the issue of admission of North Korea and East Germany until a working group submitted a report on it. This was decided by voting on a Venezuelan resolution. The voting was 60 in favour and 22 against. India voted against the resolution.

IPU Budget:

According to IPU Budget estimates placed before the Conference, IPU anticipates a deficit of 74,612 Swiss francs during 1970.

In their report on the budgetary position, the IPU President, Mr. Andre Chandernagor, and the Secretary-General, Mr. Andre de Blonay, said: "Once again the financial situation of the Union is jeopardized by an unfortunate conjunction of economic and political factors. The former affect the level of expenditure necessary for implementing the traditional work programme as it has developed over the years.

"Thanks to the generosity of those national groups who play host to the Union, it has been possible to stabilize more or less the costs of the two sessions convened by the Union every year, although the salaries and allowance for temporary personnel have risen."

The report noted that wherever a Parliament had been dissolved, suspended or suppressed, the national group not only ceased to participate in the activities of the organization but also to make its financial contribution. This was a hazard which no other international organization had to face; it was a heavy burden on IPU's financial administration.

It added: "Some years ago, there were 76 active national groups. Today, there are no more than 69, and recent events will cause a further shrinkage as, at New Delhi, the Council will once again have to suspend the affiliation of several groups."

According to the estimates, IPU receipts would be 736,388 Swiss francs and its expenditure 811,000 Swiss francs, leaving an uncovered deficit of 74,612 Swiss francs.

B. Congress Party Crisis—Stalemate Reached: The factional fighting within the Congress seemed on November 9 to have come to a stalemate, with neither side willing to make any concessions. At a news conference on November 8, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, made it quite clear that no purpose could be served by any further meetings with the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, after their luncheon meeting on November 7.

The main reason for the failure of this meeting was understood to be the insistence of Mrs. Gandhi's group to seek Mr. Nijalingappa's removal from the Congress Presidentship within the shortest possible time—preferably before the end of 1969. When Mrs. Gandhi raised the question of the three members dismissed from the Working Committee (see page 9242), Mr. Nijalingappa replied with the suggestion that there was a feeling among his friends that the five dismissed Ministers should also be re-instated in the Cabinet. Mrs. Gandhi expressed her reluctance to do so. Later, at her news conference, Mrs. Gandhi denied that the current crisis in the Party involved a struggle for power and a clash of personalities. She had nothing against Mr. Nijalingappa personally, "but when they try to throw out certain people, this sort of situation will arise", she added. "I had a cordial talk with Mr. Nijalingappa. But they are determined to cause a split in the party. They want to throw out a large number of people from the Congress. This is not our intention".

When asked for clarification, she replied: "I have always tried to work with people with whom I have differences, even with my opponents, but when they try to push people out, then the situation is different". The present critical situation, she said, "is not of our making. It has been building up over many years, due to different attitudes, lack of a spirit of accommodation, ets." It was due basically to a difference in outlook. Unless the Congress Party became more democratic at all levels and was willing to fight for its ideals and aims, it would not long survive. The world had changed, but not so the Party, which was why it did not occupy the hearts of the people.

She denied that she had violated the Party constitution in requisitioning a special A-ICC session. The constitution of the Party, she claimed, was not an end in itself. It had been framed to help the party work effectively. When the necessity arose, it could be adjusted to ensure the Party's smoother functioning.

She denounced those who called her a dictator. "The people who are dictators are those who are sending other people out of the Congress." She also termed as "malicious" the campaign aimed at insinuating that she was "going Communist".

Ever since the Bangalore sesion of the A-ICC (July, 1969), events had moved swiftly, with each side moving inexorably towards the present confrontation. The dismissal of Mr. Morarji Desai from the Central Cabinet, the "conscience vote" during the Presidential election leading to the defeat of the Congress candidate, Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy, the nocturnal exchange of letters by the Syndicate and the Prime Minister followed by the dismissal of four more junior Ministers by the Prime Minister and the dismissal of Mrs. Gandhi's supporters from the Congress Working Committee by Mr. Nijalingappa, further aggravated the crisis. A letter sent to her by Mr. Nijalingappa on October 31 contained the severest yet indictment of her "anti-party" activities and of the failure of the Government to implement the economic programme. It particularly found fault with her for not obeying the A-ICC mandate to scrap the privy purses and privileges of the princes. Mr. Nijalingappa charged her with taking personal credit for the Party decision in favour of bank nationalization and repeated the charge of indiscipline and splitting the Party.

On November 1, Mrs. Gandhi and her supporters decided to boycott the Congress Working Committee session in New Delhi that morning, and held their own Working Committee meeting. Mr. Nijalingappa then dropped Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed and Mr. C. Subramaniam from the Working Committee, which later warned Mrs. Gandhi's camp that the latter's decision to call a parallel meeting of the A-ICC in Delhi on November 22 was unconstitutional. It declared that no one other than the A-ICC officers could call for an A-ICC meeting.

In yet another letter to Mrs. Gandhi on November 3, Mr. Nijalingappa accused her of indulging in "intrigue and disruption", with the threat that her actions, which amounted to "an unpardonable act of gross indiscipline" and a flagrant violation of the Party constitution, may lead to "far-reaching consequences". He asked her to turn from the "brink" and added: "You seem to have made personal loyalty to you the test of loyalty to the Congress and the country. All those who glorify you are progressives, but those who are loyal to the organization and its policies are reactionary and disloyal. The baits and threats that the Government can use are being used freely and openly to secure regimentation and personal loyalty. All this creates the impression that in your scheme of things there is no place in the Party or Government for any one who differs even slightly from your personal views and likes and dislikes". He expressed the fear that this pattern may lead to "one-man rule in the organization and Government and not to the strengthening of democratic socialism."

In her reply on November 3, Mrs. Gandhi rebutted all these charges and said she saw nothing wrong in the requisition move, particularly when a majority of the A-ICC members felt that it would be in the interests of the organization to hold the election for a new President at the end of Mr. Nijalingappa's normal term.

Next day, on November 4, Mr. Nijalingappa served a "show cause" notice on Mrs. Gandhi enquiring as to why disciplinary action should not be taken against her for organizing a parallel A-ICC session. This was seen as a sign that the unity moves had finally been abandoned and a split in the Party was a matter of days. Mrs. Gandhi reacted strongly and said that it was "unfortunate, if not hypocritical" for him to charge her with serious breach of Party discipline. She refused to give an explanation of the charges levelled against her and maintained that she had done nothing illegal or improper.

At this stage, two States' Chief Ministers—Mr. M. L. Sukhadia and Mr. B. P. Chaliha—initiated efforts to bridge the gulf, but they gave up on November 3 when they failed to discover any meeting ground between the two leaders. Also, on November 4, Mr. Ram Subhag Singh resigned from the Central Cabinet at the Prime Minister's request, as he had refused to "toe her line" in the current crisis. He had also attended the Working Committee meeting called by Mr. Nijalingappa "as a disciplined Congressman."

The Mysore Chief Minister, Mr. V. Patil's subsequent efforts to bring about a meeting between Mrs. Gandhi and Mr. Nijalingappa raised some hopes of a rapprochement, but these were dashed after the two leaders met on November 7 at lunch and Mrs. Gandhi cancelled another meeting which was due to take place the same night.

As things stood, a break-up of the Congress Party seemed irrevocable when Parliament re-assembled on November 17.

The present party position in the Lok Sabha is: Congress (282), Swatantra (42), Jana Sangh (31), DMK (25), CPI (24), CPM (19), PSP (17), SSP (17), United Progressive Group (23), BKD (11), Independents (27), Vacancies (4). Total: 522. In any case, even if Parliament is dissolved, the Congress would have to break up into two separate parties in order to face fresh elections.

Details Of Events—Indictment Of Mrs. Gandhi:

A letter sent by the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, to the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, on October 31 contained the severest yet indictment of Mrs. Gandhi's "anti-party" activities and of the failure of the Government to implement the economic programme.

It particularly found fault with her for not obeying the All-India Congress Committee (A-ICC) mandate to scrap the privy purses and privileges of the princes.

It criticized her functioning as leader of the Congress Parliamentary Party and blamed her for having discriminated against Ministers and choosing MPs for delegations for visits abroad.

He charged her with taking personal credit for the party decision in favour of bank nationalization.

The letter traced the events since the Bangalore A-ICC session on July 10, particularly mentioning her role and the attitude of her associates in the Presidential contest.

He also charged her with continuing her anti-Party activities even after the Working Committee adopted the "Unity Resolution" on August 25. The letter repeated the charges of indiscipline and of splitting the Party.

He asked for a Note from her on the steps taken by the Government on the economic programme, to enable the Working Committee meeting on November 1 to discuss the issue in depth.

This was Mr. Nijalingappa's second letter to Mrs. Gandhi within a week.

The first letter was sent on October 24 from Bangalore.

In reply, Mrs. Gandhi welcomed such a discussion in the Congress Working Committee, but said that she could have prepared a comprehensive Note had she got longer notice.

Rival Working Committee Meeting Held:

Next day (November 1), Mrs. Gandhi and her supporters decided to boycott the Congress Working Committee beginning its two-day session in New Delhi that morning and hold their own Working Committee meeting.

The decision was taken at a midnight session convened by Mrs. Gandhi at her residence soon after Mr. Nijalingappa had sent letters to Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed and Mr. C. Subramaniam dropping them from the Working Committee.

Mr. Nijalingappa dropped Mr. F. A. Ahmed from the Working Committee for his alleged anti-Party activities.

He also removed Mr. C. Subramaniam, another supporter of Mrs. Gandhi, from the Working Committee on the ground that since he had resigned from the Tamil Nadu Congress Presidentship, he had ceased to be a member of the A-ICC and, therefore, ineligible to be a Working Committee member.

The decision to drop the two members was taken at a meeting held at Mr. Nijalingappa's residence. Others present besides the Congress President were Mr. Morarji Desai, Mr. S. K. Patil, Mr. Atulya Ghosh, Mr. K. C. Abraham of Kerala and Mr. Sadiq Ali, one of the three General Secretaries.

All of them advised Mr. Nijalingappa to take a tough line and make it clear to Mrs. Gandhi and her supporters that the move for his ouster would be firmly resisted both in the Working Committee and at the A-ICC session.

In a letter to Mr. Ahmed, Mr. Nijalingappa said that he was dropping him because he had lost his confidence which he enjoyed at the time of his nomination to the Working Committee. He also referred to the "anti-party" role played by Mr. Ahmed during the Presidential election and his recent criticism of the Congress President at a news conference where he had stated that a change was being sought in Presidentship because the A-ICC had ceased to function effectively.

Mr. Nijalingappa took exception to the campaign conducted by Mr. Ahmed for collecting signatures of the A-ICC members on the requisition to convene a special session to elect a new President.

In his letter to Mr. Subramaniam, Mr. Nijalingappa said that although he was an elected member of the Working Committee, his membership had automatically lapsed after he ceased to be the member of the A-ICC. He was taking this step strictly in accordance with the rules which must be scrupulously observed. There was no question of any relaxation in the rules.

The move to drop Mr. Subramaniam was initiated several days earlier, but it was held in abeyance following strong protests from Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Chavan, Mr. Jagjivan Ram, Mr. Ahmed, Mr. Subramaniam and Mr. U. S. Dikshit.

Mr. F. A. Ahmed's Reply:

On November 3, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed challenged his removal from the Working Committee by the Congress President, Mr. Nijalingappa.

In a letter to the Congress President, Mr. Ahmed called the action against him mala fide and refused to accept the "illegal" order.

In his reply, Mr. Ahmed maintained that he was still a member of the Working Committee because the Congress constitution did not empower the President to remove any one from the Working Committee. The constitution did not also make any distinction between elected and nominated members.

Official Working Committee's Resolutions:

The official Congress Working Committee held two meetings on November 2 under Mr. Nijalingappa's chairmanship.

After a prolonged morning session, it passed five resolutions ranging over Congress affairs, the communal situation, the economic programme and the Rabat debacle.

The underlying theme of the resolutions was a condemnation of the Government's failure to implement economic and other programmes, the warning that the responsibility for these programmes should not be shifted onto the Congress organization.

But the main punch was reserved for the plan of Mrs. Gandhi's camp to call a parallel meeting of the A-ICC in New Delhi on November 22 and 23. The Working Committee warned members against taking part in this meeting, which it described as unconstitutional. The resolution said: "Those who take part in this meeting must be prepared to face the constitutional consequences."

It declared that no one other than the A-ICC office-bearers had the authority to convene the A-ICC meeting.

The resolution made the point that "even now it is not too late" for Mrs. Gandhi and her supporters to retrace their steps and bring unity to the organization. One resolution "urges the Prime Minister to see her way to co-operating with the organization in re-establishing co-operation and unity in the Congress ranks."

The later meeting of the (official) Working Committee passed two resolutions, one of them suspending Mr. Shashi Bhushan, Mrs. Subhadra Joshi and Mr. Om Prakash Bahl from the Party's primary membership for participating in the "rowdy and unseemly demonstrations" on November 1 outside the A-ICC office.

The second resolution welcomed Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, thanked him for his "healing touch" and said: "He has shown how our country is paying dearly for the departures it had made from the path shown by Gandhi."

On the Rabat Islamic "Summit," the Working Committee resolution blamed the Government for compromising India's position in the world and said that India had no place in "a purely Islamic summit."

It said: "The very effort to secure an invitation to attend a gathering of this kind is not only an unseemly act by itself, but it also greatly offends the national honour and self-respect of our people".

Rival Working Committee's Resolution:

The reply of Mrs. Gandhi's camp to these resolutions was of defensive nature, often apologetic in tone. It described the Congress President's camp's arguments as "wholly disingenious", called the other side's call for unity "pretentions of solicitude for unity", and repeated many old arguments used in the present phase of the crisis.

Interestingly, the resolution took the official Working Committee to task for not re-instating Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed and Mr. Subramaniam and suggested that if the other side's appeal for unity had been genuine, the December A-ICC session called by it would have taken cognizance of the requisitionists' demand.

The resolution added: "On top of it, to threaten those who would participate in the meeting to be held in pursuance of the requisition notice would be an act of suppression and a clear violation of democratic spirit and principles."

On Rabat, however, the resolution took a stronger line: "It is strange that those who call for unity and co-operation have in unmistakable terms condemned the foreign policy of their own party's Government without verifying the facts from the Government."

Immediately afterwards, the Foreign Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh issued a statement deploring the fact that the "name of the highest executive of the Party has been dragged in" to criticize the foreign policy of the Government.

He said: "It is clear that participation in the Rabat Conference is being exploited to promote group interests while it is really in keeping with the continuing policy of the Government as approved by the Party."

Besides Mrs. Gandhi, the rival Working Committee meeting was attended by Mr. Y. B. Chavan, Mr. Jagjivan Ram, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Mr. C. Subramaniam, Mr. V. P. Naik, Mr. Mohan Lal Sukhadia, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, Mr. S. D. Sharma and Mr. Uma Shankar Dikshit.

The special invitees were Mr. G. M. Sadiq, Mr. Shyama Charan Shukla, Dr. Y. S. Parmar, Mr. Dinesh Singh, Mr. Satya Narayan Sinha and Mr. D. P. Mishra. Mr. Bansi Lal (Chief Minister of Haryana) who was taken ill expressed solid support for Mrs. Gandhi.

Requisition For A-ICC:

Mr. H. N. Bahuguna, General Secretary of the Uttar Pradesh Congress Committee, submitted a requisition signed by 407 members (out of a total of 703) to the A-ICC Secretary, Mr. Sadiq Ali, on November 1.

He first went to the residence of the Congress President at 1.30 a.m. to present the requisition but could not do so because there was no one to receive it. Mr. Nijalingappa had gone to sleep.

The requisition sought to hold a special A-ICC session to elect a new Congress President before the end of December, 1969. The signatories to the requisition included about half-a-dozen members of the Working Committee including Mr. Y. B. Chavan and Mr. F. A. Ahmed.

Mr. S. Nijalingappa's Letters To Mrs. I. Gandhi:

Mr. S. Nijalingappa released to the Press on November 3 two letters he had addressed to Mrs. Indira Gandhi—one dated October 28 and the other dated November 3.

In his letter dated November 3, Mr. Nijalingappa accused Mrs. Gandhi of indulging in "intrigue and disruption" with the threat that her actions, which amounted to "an unpardonable act of gross indiscipline" and a flagrant violation of the Party constitution, may lead to "far-reaching consequences."

He did not define what such consequences might be, but his supporters felt that a call to the Congress Parliamentary Party to elect a new leader in place of Mrs. Gandhi would be one of them. With the release of the letters, it was said, there was little hope of unity between the two groups.

The text of two letters written by Mr. Nijalingappa to Mrs. Gandhi—one on October 28 in reply to her protest against the "arbitrary" removal of Mr. C. Subramaniam from the Working Committee, and the other sent on November 3 informing her, among other things, that he was releasing the text of the earlier letter to the Press — were made available from the Congress President's house which was converted into the office of the A-ICC "to prevent leakages."

In the second letter, Mr. Nijalingappa told Mrs. Gandhi to turn back from the "brink" and made the accusation that her conduct had "sullied" the traditions of the great Indian National Congress. He took exception to her having arranged a meeting of ten members of the Working Committee at her house, for having characterized some of his actions as unconstitutional, for having backed the requisition move to elect a new Party President and for giving the call for a special A-ICC session in New Delhi on November 22 and 23.

In his letter of October 28, Mr. Nijalingappa referred to the controversy over the Party's nomination of Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy as its candidate for the Presidential election and accused her of making "grave" allegations against him on the basis of "hearsay or suspicion" and later admitting that she had no evidence.

He said that he was "baffled and distressed" by her reluctance to accept the decision of the Parliamentary Board and regarded Mr. Morarji Desai's dismissal as "peremptory."

The organization, he said, could not be sure under such circumstances that its candidates would be elected. The Government could not be sure of the support of the members of the Party. Such a Government would have to work in "perpetual uncertainty." Unity could be maintained only by "disciplined acceptance" of the decision of bodies competent to decide on policies and candidates.

He said he "scrupulously" adhered to the letter and spirit of the Unity Resolution of August 25. "Your attitude seems to be that the candidates that the party sets up for elections should be persons of your liking and the rules of the organization should be applied when it suits your interests in certain individuals and groups and ignored when that is in the interest of individuals and groups you support."

One could not take the view that once the Party got a majority in the Lok Sabha and a Prime Minister was chosen, the necessity for the organization disappeared. In a democracy, no one could take away the right of the Party to formulate policy "or even to change the leader."

Almost half of Mr. Nijalingappa's letter was a personal attack on Mrs. Gandhi. He told her that she thought she was free to work against the Party candidates and to implement only what appealed to her. "You seem to relish the propaganda that your close associates carry on, ascribing the authorship of the 10-point programme to you, and ignoring the role of the Party."

He added: "You seem to have made personal loyalty to the Congress and the country to you the test of loyalty. All those who glorify you are progressives" but those who were loyal to the organization and its policies were "reactionary and disloyal." The powerful medium of the radio and influence of the Government on the Press" were used to paint them as reactionary. "The baits and threats that the Government can use are being used freely and openly to secure regimentation and personal loyalty. All this creates the impression that in your scheme of things there is no place in the Party or Government for any one who differs even slightly from your personal views and likes and dislikes."

Making a veiled reference to Mr. Jagjivan Ram, he said that everything was permissible and pardonable to those who were recognized supporters of the "personality cult that is threatening democracy in the organization." They might have committed "serious breaches of laws" like income-tax laws. They might not have submitted the declaration of their assets to the A-ICC. They might have collected large amounts of money from various sources in the name of the Party and not accounted for them. "I have my apprehension that this pattern may lead us to one-man rule in the organization and Government" and not to the strengthening of democratic socialism.

In reply, Mrs. Gandhi wrote on November 3 rebutting the various charges levelled against her and saw nothing wrong in the requisition move, particularly when a majority of the A-ICC members felt that it would be in the interests of the organization to hold the election for a new President at the end of Mr. Nijalingappa's "normal term" and that it was open to him to contest the election and get re-elected in the usual course.

She told Mr. Nijalingappa that it was his duty to respond to the majority in the A-ICC which had asked for a special A-ICC session to weed out the anti-party forces and re-vitalize the organization. She saw nothing wrong in A-ICC members submitting a requisition as provided for in the constitution.

She maintained that Mr. Nijalingappa was guilty of actions which were "patently illegal" and also contrary to the plea for unity made by the Working Committee on August 25. She was referring to the removal of Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Mr. C. Subramaniam and Dr. S. D. Sharma from the Committee. These actions had been taken only to serve Mr. Nijalingappa's purpose.

She expressed regret that Mr. Nijalingappa had allowed a vilification campaign to be conducted against the Government and herself. She could not ignore Mr. S. K. Patil's outbursts against bank nationalization, abolition of privy purses and other accepted policies of the Congress. Nor could she ignore Mr. Nijalingappa's "unfortunate" Presidential speech at Faridabad in January, 1969 in which he took a line strongly critical of the public sector.

She traced the origin of the present crisis in the Party to the "snap decisions" taken at Bangalore to adopt Mr. N. Sanjiva Reddy as the Party candidate for India's Presidency. The manner is which this decision was taken was neither "responsible" nor "mature". She protested against the insinuation that those who had pleaded for free vote in the Presidential election were collaborating with the Communist Party and the Muslim League.

Charge-Sheet Against Mrs. Gandhi:

On November 4, Mr. Nijalingappa released a letter he wrote to Mrs. Gandhi on November 2 enquiring as to why disciplinary action should not be taken against her for organizing a parallel A-ICC session.

[This meant that the unity moves had been finally abandoned and a split in the Party was a matter of days.]

Mr. Nijalingappa's letter said: "This morning's newspaper (November 2) reports say that you presided over a meeting of some members of the Working Committee yesterday. The reports say that the meeting was held at your residence. They also say that the meeting over which you presided decided, inter alia that "any decision by the Working Committee will be improper and not binding on the Congress organization." The meeting is also reported to have decided to convene a special meeting of the A-ICC in New Delhi on November 22 and 23 to consider the requisition resolution to elect a new Congress President.

"I am enclosing a copy of the resolution of the Working Committee passed today (November 2) on this reported decision. You are well aware that meetings of the A-ICC can only be convened by those whom the constitution of the Congress has empowered to do so and not by individuals who have no constitutional locus standi or rights in this behalf.

"If the reports appearing in the Press to the effect that you presided over the meeting which decided to convene a session of the A-ICC and authorize Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Mr. C. Subramaniam and Mr. S. D. Sharma to take necessary steps for convening such a session are right, you will be deemed to have committed a serious breach of the Party discipline and flouted the constitution of the Party.

"I write this, therefore, to request you to explain your reported association with the move to convene an illegal and unconstitutional meeting of the A-ICC in violation of the Party constitution and resolutions of the Working Committee."

Reacting strongly to Mr. Nijalingappa's letter, Mrs. Gandhi said in reply that it was "unfortunate, if not hypocritical" for him to charge her with serious breach of party discipline and with having flouted discipline.

Refusing to give an explanation of the charges levelled against her, Mrs. Gandhi maintained that she had done nothing illegal or improper. "If your intention is to frighten those who differ from you from expressing their points of view, you will be disappointed."

She argued that the demand for an explanation confirmed the general belief that "you and your supporters are bent upon (even at the risk of splitting the Party) ousting those who do not see eye to eye with you even though they may represent the majority view in the Party."

She said she did not expect that the requisition move would be set at naught "on absolutely untenable, flimsy and tactical grounds."

States' Chief Ministers' Unity Efforts:

As the throes of a split between the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, and Mrs. Gandhi showed no signs of abatement, tha Rajasthan and Assam Chief Ministers, Mr. M. L. Sukhadia and Mr. B. P. Chaliha, initiated efforts to bridge the gulf on November 1, but they gave up their efforts on November 3 when they failed to discover any meeting ground between the two leaders.

The failure of the Chief Ministers' initiative was pre-shadowed by the tone of the letter Mr. Nijalingappa had addressed to Mrs. Gandhi on November 3.

The Chief Minister of Gujarat, Mr. Hitendra Desai chose to stay away from the talks altogether, while Mr. C. B. Gupta of Uttar Pradesh attended only a part of the talks.

Conceding failure, Mr. Mohan Lal Sukhadia put the blame on the "provocative" nature of Mr. Nijalingappa's letter. Both Mr. Sukhadia and Mr. V. P. Naik, Chief Minister of Maharashtra had sounded faintly hopeful at the end of the first session of Chief Ministers. The compromise they evidently had in mind was the continuance of Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Mr. C. Subramaniam and Dr. S. D. Sharma in the Working Committee, while the issue of a new election to the Congress Presidentship was left to the verdict of the A-ICC whenever it met in its normal course.

This was not acceptable to Mr. Nijalingappa, who countered with the suggestion that while Mr. Ahmed's case might be re-considered, there was no question of re-opening the decision he had handed down in respect of Mr. C. Subramaniam and Mr. S. D. Sharma.

The only concession the Congress President was willing to make was to give Mr. Subramaniam the status of a permanent invitee.

Mr. Nijalingappa was insistent that the threat held out against him, via the demand for a special session of the A-ICC, should be withdrawn without any pre-conditions before the matter of re-instatement was discussed. He indicated that he might ask the next session of the A-ICC, when held in its normal course, to consider whether all organizational elections, and not merely that for the Presidentship, should be held at the end of the year.

Mrs. Gandhi wanted fresh elections only for the Presidentship and not for other organizational bodies, and requisitioned a special session of the A-ICC solely to rescind the decision taken at the Faridabad session of the Congress to let Mr. Nijalingappa continue for another year.

Dr. Ram Subhag Singh Resigns From Cabinet:

The Central Railways Minister, Dr. Ram Subhag Singh, who was a party to the resolution of the Congress Working Committee censuring the Government on the Rabat Islamic "Summit" Conference, was dropped from the Cabinet by the Prime Minister on November 4.

Dr. Singh's removal from the Government was not unexpected, because he had firmly refused to toe Mrs. I. Gandhi's line in the current crisis facing the Congress. Despite repeated attempts by Mrs. Gandhi and her supporters to win him over, he declined to sign the requisition for a special A-ICC session to oust

Mr. Nijalingappa from the Party Presidentship.

He tendered his resignation to Mrs. Gandhi immediately after receiving a letter from her on November 4 in which she took exception to his association with the resolutions passed by the Congress Working Committee, including the one on Rabat, which were highly critical of Government policies and performance. She said that in the circumstances he should resign from the Cabinet.

Dr. Singh lost no time in submitting his resignation. In a letter to Mrs. Gandhi, he said that the Central Cabinet was not given an opportunity to discuss the Rabat debacle, although he had expressed a strong desire that it should be debated. The Cabinet merely heard the views of the Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Dinesh Singh, and the Minister for Industrial Development, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, who was the leader of the Indian delegation to the Islamic "Summit" Conference at Rabat.

His letter disclosed that Mrs. Gandhi had requested Dr. Singh to attend the meeting of her supporters in the Congress Working Committee at the Prime Minister's house on November 1 exactly at the time figed for the meeting of the official CCongress Working Committee. "I told you that I won't attend your meeting, because I do not want the Congress to die".

He also referred to his refusal to side with the Prime Minister during the recent Presidential election and said that he had made it clear to her that he would back the official Congress candidate.

Dr. Ram Subhag Singh entered Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru's Council of Ministers in 1962 as Minister of State for Agriculture. He later became Minister of Social Security and Cottage Industries. In June, 1964, he was appointed Minister in charge of Railways when Mr. S. K. Patil was Cabinet Minister in Charge of Railways. He continued in this post both when Mr. Lal Bahadur Shastri was Prime Minister and later when Mrs. Gandhi formed her Government in 1966.

He was later appointed Cabinet Minister by Mrs. Gandhi and placed in charge of Parliamentary Affairs and Communications.

When the Opposition had put up the candidature of Mr. K. Subba Rao for the office of President against the official candidate, Dr. Zakir Husain, Dr. Ram Subhag Singh was in charge of organizing the Congress Party's campaign. Dr. Husain was elected with an unexpected majority in the Presidential election.

In a recent re-shuffle, Mrs. Gandhi appointed Dr. Ram Subhag Singh as Cabinet Minister for Railways in place of Mr. C. M. Poonacha, who was transferred to the Ministry of Steel.

Dr. Ram Subhag Singh (52) has been a Member of Parliament since 1952. He represents the Buxar constituency of Bihar in the Lok Sabha.

Dr. Singh was the second senior Minister to be dropped from the Cabinet. In a surprise move immediately after the Bangalore A-ICC session in the middle of July, Mrs. Gandhi divested Mr. Morarji Desai of the Finance portfolio which led to his exit from the Cabinet. She dropped recently four junior Ministers to make her Cabinet "cohensive and purposive". At least three of them were ranged against her during the Presidential election.

Having incurred Mrs. Gandhi's displeasure during the Presidential election, Dr. Singh wanted to resign following Mr. Sanjiva Reddy's defeat. But he was advised by his friends to continue in the Government so long as he was not asked to resign. He had actively campaigned for Mr. Reddy on behalf of the Congress.

Mrs. Gandhi sent for Dr. Singh on October 22 and requested him to support the move to hold a special A-ICC session. Dr. Singh, however, declined to associate himself with the requisition and urged Mrs. Gandhi not to precipitate a crisis in the Party. He frankly told her that as a loyal Congressman, he could not be a party to any move which would disrupt the organization. He questioned the propriety of rescinding the decision taken by the Working Committee at the Faridabad session in January, 1969 extending Mr. Nijalingappa's term for one more year.

Since then, efforts were made by Mrs. Gandhi's aides to win him over, but Dr. Singh did not budge from the stand taken by him. He was woken up by Mr. Satya Narayan Sinha late on November 7 and taken to Mrs. Gandhi's house to attend a meeting of her supporters on the eve of the Working Committee meeting. Dr. Singh was again requested by Mrs. Gandhi to revise his attitude regarding the requisition move and attend the rival meeting of the Working Committee at her house the next morning. Dr. Singh was, however, unrelenting. He told her that as a disciplined Congressman, he would attend the duly constituted Working Committee at the A-ICC office, of which he was an elected member.

Mrs. I. Gandhi's Rejoinder:

In a rejoinder to Dr. Singh soon after receiving his letter of resignation, Mrs. Gandhi said that neither Dr. Singh nor any one else had asked for a separate discussion on Rabat. She asked why, if Dr. Singh had strong feelings on the subject, he did not take the earliest opportunity to express them in the Cabinet, or either speak or write to her about them. All Cabinet Ministers would agree that at no Cabinet meeting had she ever cut short any discussion. During the Cabinet discussion on Rabat, several Ministers did ask questions and express their views.

In reply, Dr. Ram Subhag Singh wrote to Mrs. Gandhi on November 4 as follows: "I stick to what I have said in my letter of November 3 not only about what I said at your residence but also about the Rabat debacle. It was I who had raised this matter in the Cabinet last month (October). I was joined by certain other members to have such discussion. We wanted the matter to be discussed. But after the Foreign Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh and the Minister for Industrial Development, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed gave their views to the Cabinet, the meeting was adjourned. I had asked for discussion on the subject three or four times in that Cabinet meeting. In the circumstances, it is not correct to say that neither I nor any one else asked for a separate discussion."

Mrs. Gandhi-Nijalingappa Talks Fail:

Through the efforts of the Mysore Chief Minister, Mr. Veerendra Patil, Mrs. Gandhi and Mr. Nijalingappa met at lunch at Mrs. Gandhi's residence in New Delhi on November 7, but the talks to resolve the organizational crisis broke down. A scheduled dinner meeting at Mr. Nijalingappa's residence the same evening (November 7) was cancelled by Mrs. Gandhi.

The talks failed because of disagreement over the vital issues of organizational elections and re-instatement of those dropped from the Central Cabinet since the Bangalore session of the A-ICC in July, 1969 and those removed from the Working Committee on October 31.

The two leaders disagreed on the basis of the organizational elections. While Mr. Nijalingappa insisted that it should be from the bottom unit of the organization (mandal) on the basis of existing membership, Mrs. Gandhi was prepared to agree to elections only from the PCC level by the existing delegates.

According to Mr. Nijalingappa, Mr. Gandhi had made two proposals : (1) the Working Committee should reconsider its rejection of the requisitioned meeting of the

A-ICC; and (2) the three Working Committee members dropped by the President should be taken back.

Mr. Nijalingappa's counter-proposals were that the requisition should be presented afresh in an "acceptable form," asking for organizational elections from the middle-level up, and that Mr. Morarji Desai and other Ministers dropped from the Central Council of Ministers should be taken back.

Mrs. I. Gandhi's News Conference: Mrs. Indira Gandhi told a news conference in New Delhi on November 8 that there was no danger to the stability of the country, whatever the consequences of the present crisis in the Congress Party, but she added that the split in the Party had created a serious situation and nobody could prophesy what might happen.

Mrs. Gandhi was not categorical whether the last word on unity had been uttered, but throughout the 55-minute meeting with newsmen, she spoke in terms of "we" and "they", suggesting that the gaping cracks in the Party were virtually impossible to repair.

It was not a clash of personalities, she said, but a combination of "many things" involving several basic issues. The split in the Congress was nothing new. The party was already divided in Orissa, Kerala, West Bengal and Uttar Pradesh.

She declared that even during the last three years of Mr. Nehru's Prime Ministership, differences had developed and the Kamaraj Plan came about. The Congress had not changed with the times, and had to be transformed into a dynamic organization immediately if it was to play a meaningful role.

She had no solution to end the present organizational crisis.

She ruled out the question of her seeking a vote of confidence in the Congress Parliamentary Party. She had "no great objections" to elections at all levels including the election of the leader of the Congress Parliamentary Party, but she did not think the question was seriously posed.

She strongly repudiated the "insinuation" that she was "going Communist or relying on their support." For some time this "malicious" propaganda had been going on. "I am in no way getting aligned to these forces." Her major differences with the Communists were about method. She believed that the method of persuasion was the better one.

Mrs. Gandhi's reply was "no" to the question whether dissolution of Parliament was the only solution to resolve the present cisis.

C. Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan's Visit To Gujarat: Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan was accorded a rousing reception at Ahmedabad (Gujarat) when he arrived there on October 16.

He was received at the airport by the Governor of Gujarat, Mr. Shriman Narayan, the Chief Minister, Mr. Hitendra Desai, the Mayor of Bombay, Mr. Narottam Zaveri, Mr. Morarji Desai and others. He told the gathering that he had come to the "land of Mahatma Gandhi" to make serious efforts "to find a remedy for the disease which was weakening India."

His first engagement was to attend a meeting of the all-parties' Peace Committee set up to restore communal harmony in the riot-affected city. At a prayer meeting at Vidyapith, he said: "Self-interested people have exploited religious sentiments and fomented communal trouble." On October 17, he visited some of the riot-torn areas—Rangwala building, where about 400 Muslims lived as refugees, Momnawad in Jamalpur where Hindus were sandwiched between Muslims but maintained peace throughout, and the Gandhi Park area, where he said leaders and not people were responsible for the partition of the country to which communal feelings could be traced. Later, he visited the Jagannath Temple and the Mariam Bibi Mosque.

Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan delivered the Convocation address at the Gujarat Kashi Vidyapith under the presidentship of its Vice-Chancellor, Mr. Morarji Desai. In it, he said it was not right for Hindus to be distrustful of Muslims. He deplored that they had been left leaderless after the Partition, while during the British period their leaders were British stooges who had served the interests of the British. This was responsible for widening the gulf between the two communities.

Addressing a gathering of Sikhs at the Dudheshwar Road gurdwara, he referred to the Viet-Nam war and said that he felt religion no longer existed in the world, as man was modifying it to suit his own purpose. He was visibly moved when on October 20 he saw destruction of property in the areas inhabited by Sindhis. Earlier in the day (October 20), he discussed the communal situation with the delegations of the SSP, CPI and CPM. He addressed a news conference on October 21 and was subsequently given a warm welcome by the Pathans resident in Ahmedabad. He met Muslim students on October 22 and addressed two congregations of Muslims and a gathering of intellectuals—teachers, lawyers and doctors—at Raj Bhawan on October 25, when he emphasized that all social work in India was motivated by the desire to capture votes and that a shift should now be made for service of the people.

He left for a tour of the mofussil areas on October 26 accompanied by the Governor, Mr. Shriman Narayan and addressed crowds all along the 20-km route to Kalol and then went to Sartha village. He visited Sidhpur and Palanpur on October 27 and Mira Mohla, Deesa and Mehsana on October 28. At Deesa, he said the police and the administration could end communal disturbances by remaining vigilant against "mischief-mongers" and meeting out proper punishment to them. At Baroda, on October 10, he said for the first time that a foreign hand was working behind the communal disturbances with a view to weakening the strength and stability of the country.

He addressed the 15th session of the Indian Council of Social Welfare at Ahmedabad on November 1. Referring to the Rabat "summit," he said the Ahmedabad riots had provided an opportunity to Pakistan to organize opposition to India. This was responsible for the "embarrassment" India had to face there.

Earlier, on October 31, the General Secretary of the Frontier Unit of the Pakistan National Awami Party, Khan Bahadur Khan condemned a "campaign of vilification in the Pakistan Press by a coterie of capitalists of former Punjab" against Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan who had gone to India "at the risk of his own life" to protect Muslims there. The convenor of the West Pakistan Muslim League, on the other hand, alleged that Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan had visited India only to receive the Nehru Award and the Rs. 80,00,000 purse and not to protect Indian Muslims.

D. Mr. D. S. Pheruman's Fast Unto Death – Chandigarh Issue: Mr. Darshan Singh Pheruman, Punjab's veteran political leader, who had gone on an indefinite fast on August 15 to secure Chandigarh for Punjab, died at Amritsar on October 27.

His body was taken to his village—Pheruman—for cremation in compliance with his wishes. He was given a State funeral on October 28. The objectives of his fast were said to be to make the Central Government agree to the inclusion of Chandigarh in Punjab along with the Bhakra-Nangal complex and the Punjabi-speaking areas of Haryana.

Background On Chandigarh Issue:

The question of Chandigarh arose from the re-formation of Punjab State on linguistic basis in 1966. On March 21, 1966, the then Home Minister, Mr. G. L. Nanda, announced in Parliament that the Government had accepted in principle the recommendations of the Parliamentary Committee for the re-organization of Punjab on linguistic basis. The Government had made it clear: (1) that the proposed re-organization of Punjab would be on linguistic basis without any communal or religious factors influencing it; and (2) that the legitimate rights and interests of minorities, linguistic or others, would be fully safeguarded in the two units.

The constitution of a three-man Boundary Commission under the chairmanship of Mr. J. C. Shah, a Judge of the Supreme Court, was announced on April 23, 1966. The Commission released its report on June 8, 1966 recommending that the Kharar Tehsil which included Chandigarh should be assigned to the proposed Haryana State and rejectign most of the grounds advanced for inclusion of Chandigarh ni Punjab. On June 9, 1966, however, the Central Cabinet decided that Chandigarh would be a Union Territory and that both the States of Punjab and Haryana would utilize it as their capital. Whether this arrangement was intended to be temporary or permanent was not made clear, but the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi told newsmen: "We have taken a temporary decision."

The issue was revived in all its strength by the fast of Mr. Pheruman and the counter-fast by Mr. Uday Singh Mann from August 31, 1969 who demanded Chandigarh's inclusion in Haryana. Mrs. Indira Gandhi and Mr. Y. B. Chavan assured a deputation of the all-party Haryana Action Committee on September 10, 1969 that the Centre would not take action under pressure from any quarters. On September 16, she told Mr. Shrichand Goel, MP (Jana Sangh) that the people of Chandigarh who wanted the city to continue as a Union Territory would be consulted before a decision was taken. She met Punjab and Haryana leaders on September 19, while the Chief Ministers of Punjab and Haryana had a round of talks on September 21. The Akali Dal, accusing the Government of India of "deliberately complicating issues", set up an action committee on September 23 to secure all the demands of Punjab. In Haryana, all the parties except CPI and the Akali Dal backed the agitation, "Chandigarh for Haryana". Mr. U. S. Mann broke his 43-day fast on October 14 in response to the Prime Minister's appeal. Negotiations were continuing when Mr. Pheruman died after his 74-day fast.

Earlier, on September 13, before Mr. Pheruman commenced his fast, he was arrested in the interest of maintaining peace but was released on October 11 when he categorically declared that the sole purpose of his fast was only to press the Government of India to transfer Chandigarh to Punjab and he was not interested in the demolition of "Agni Kunds" raised at the Golden Temple for self-immolation purpose.

Mrs. Indira Gandhi appealed to him on August 31 and on several other occasions also to give up the fast as she herself was keen on finding an early and satisfactory solution of the Chandigarh issue. The Punjab legislators of all the parties, under the presidentship of the Chief Minister, Mr. Gurnam Singh, appealed to Mr. Pheruman on September 25 to give up his fast. His condition became critical on October 14 (the 61st day of his fast) and on October 29 it was "very grave". He ultimately expired on October 27.

Life-Sketch:

Mr. Darshan Singh whose childhood name was Bhagat Singh was born on August 1, 1884 in the village of Pheruman about 40 km. from Amritsar. He joined the Army in the Eleventh Lancers in 1912 but gave up the job in 1919 after the Jallianwala Bagh tragedy. He then began taking active part in the politics of the Akali and the Congress parties. He organized the Tegh Bahadur Jatha in Amritsar and two years later a "morcha" for the restoration of the keys of the Golden Temple taken away by the British. He participated in the Jaitu Satyagraha to protest against police entry into a gurdwara when an Akhand Path was in progress for re-installation of the deposed ruler of Nabha, and led the 14-member Shaheedi Jatha.

In 1922, he joined his father in Malaya to assist him in his business. There he organized nationalist groups of Punjabis, was jailed where he undertook a 21-day fast to secure better conditions for prisoners, and was subsequently deported to India. Here he participated in the Civil Disobedience Movement in 1930, organized a kisan movement against increase of revenue collections in Punjab and took part in the "Quit India" movement of 1942.

He spent nearly 20 years of his life in jail.

Mr. Pheruman was twice elected President of the Akali party and subsequently joined the Indian National Congress. In the post-Independence period he was elected Member of the Rajya Sabha in 1952 but resigned from the Congress and the Rajya Sabha. He was re-elected to the Rajya Sabha as an Independent and remained as such till 1964. On the formation of the Swatantra Party by Mr. N. G. Ranga and others, he became its member and was elected President of the Punjab unit of the Party. He resigned from its Presidentship only on August 1, 1969 when he decided to undertake the fast.

Mr. Darshan Singh had been living on non-cereal diet of fish, eggs, fruit and curd since 1947 and had a daily walk of over 11 km. He did not believe in compromises and just before his fast he declared: "If a Sikh decided to lay down his life for a noble cause, nobody on earth can stop him."

JORDAN

A. Claim To Temple Scroll: Addressing the Executive Board of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) in Paris on October 10, the Jordanian representative, Mr. Abdallah Salah, formally laid claim to the legal ownership of the controversial Temple Scroll, acquired by Israel from a Jordanian antique dealer for, it was believed, £50,000.

He accused Israel of acquiring it from "a Jordanian citizen" who did not own it. "This Scroll belongs to the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan," he declared, adding that Israel's possession of it was a violation of international law.

Mr. Salah revealed that the dealer who had sold Israel the Scroll was known to archaeologists as Kando and was a wanted man in Jordan, facing criminal charges there for withholding the Scroll. Kando, who was known to have close contact with Bedouin who bring him their finds, now lives in Israeli-occupied Jordan.

On October 8, Israel's delegate claimed that his country's scholars had rescued the Scroll, partly paid for by a British charity, from what he described as "oblivion."

Israel gave the other members of UNESCO an undertaking that other scrolls in her possession belonging to Jordan would be returned very shortly to the Rockefeller Museum in Israeli-occupied Jordan.

For two days the UNESCO Executive, of which Britain is a member, had listened to bitter accusations against Israel of violation of the Hague Convention on the care of relics in occupied territories.

Twenty-six of the 34 nations represented at the meeting voted in favour of a resolution expressing the Executive Board's "deep concern at the repeated violations by Israel of the Hague Convention."

They also asked Israel "to preserve scrupulously all sites, buildings and other cultural properties especially in the Old City of Jerusalem, and to desist from any archaeological excavations...and to adhere scrupulously to the provisions of the Convention..." Four other members, including Britain, USA and Canada, abstained.

After the vote Mr. Moshe Avidor, the Israeli delegate, assured members that his Government was aware of the world's interest in Jerusalem and that his country would abide by all provisions of the Hague Convention.

A. President Park Chung Hee's Victory In Referendum: President Park Chung Hee won in a referendum held on October 17 enabling him to seek a third four-year term in office.

The referendum victory allowed him to alter the Constitution which currently forbids more than two consecutive Presidential terms (see page 9254 for Assembly decision).

The Central Election Commission announced in Seoul that 65.1 per cent of the voters backed him.

Complete official returns showed that 75.9 per cent of the country's 15,048,925 eligible voters went to the polls.

The voting followed a pattern similar to that of the 1963 Presidential elections. Gen. Park, who had risen to power in a 1961 military coup, won an election two years later by landsliding through rural areas. As in 1963, the voting showed that he had retained popularity in the countryside, but still faced major opposition in the cities, notably Seoul.

NEPAL

A. Tele-communications Under Official Committee: The tele-communication system (controlled hitherto by a Government department) was placed under the charge of an official committee just before Government offices were closed in the third week of October for festival holidays.

The administrative change was to enable the tele-communication system to secure some measure of autonomy from the financial and budgetary control it was subjected to.

The change also indicated that the tele-communication system—operating 4,000 to 5,000 local telephone lines in different towns of Nepal—was moving towards a self-reliant economy. Like several other developing countries in the region, the Nepalese tele-communication system was also going to be run on commercial lines.

Though Khatmandu was also connected by the tele-communication system with Dacca, the bulk of Nepal's traffic is with India through Delhi. The Khatmandu-Calcutta link was operated recently on an experimental basis, but the channel operated only for a limited number of hours every day. Apparently, arrangements had now been made to utilize the Calcutta channel as and when the Delhi channel was out of order or overburdened.

Besides, Khatmandu was being connected with the Indian trunk system. A surface telephone line linking Khatmandu with Raxaul, a railhead in north Bihar on the Indian border, was being provided. Work on laying overhead mains across this mountainous terrain was in an advanced stage.

International telephone exchanges would soon be set up at Birganj town and Raxaul. They would provide new contact points on the wires between Nepal and India.

B. Mineral Deposits: The UN Development Programme (UNDP) announced in New York in September that two Soviet geologists attached to the Programme had located magnesite, talc and several other mineral reserves about 60 miles north-east of Khatmandu along the Khatmandu-Kodari highway.

The Rising Nepal, a Khatmandu daily, which usually reflects the Establishment's view, said editorially: "Nepal is soon going to be an El Dorado".

The UNDP's announcement said that Mr. Y. V. Kazitain and Mr. V. A. Talalov, working with the Nepal Geological Survey, had discovered reserves of 104 million tons of magnesite and 60,000 tons of talc, about 60 miles north-east of Khatmandu. They had also found geological structures confirming the existence of copper, lead, zinc, bismuth, molybdenum, tungsten and iron and indications of gold and tin.

Observers expressed the view that the discovery was a major breakthrough. But, as far back as 1961-62 deposits of magnesite and talc had been located at or around Kharidunga by two Indian geologists, Mr. B. B. Nadgir and Mr. P. N. Sharma. Their findings had also been acknowledged by the Nepal Bureau of Mines.

In 1967, Dr. D. N. Rimal, the then Director of the Nepal Bureau of Mines, had in a pamphlet, "A Guide to Mineral Resources of Nepal," indicated the presence of massive dolomite and magnesite formations and reserves of about 57,000 tons of talc at Kharidunga, Begmati and Anchal, about 40 miles from Khatmandu along the Kodari highway. It would appear from Dr. Rimal's pamphlet that the occurrence of ochre, pyrite and pyrrhotite was known to the Nepalese. The Kharidunga magnesite deposit was discovered by the geological wing of the Indian Co-operation Mission (ICM) as far back as in 1961-62, and its extension delineated during the subsequent years.

In the note captioned "Geological Surveys, a Layman's Guide," prepared this year by the Nepal Geological Survey, the ICM geologists' discovery has also been acknowledged.

The 1965 report of Mr. G. R. Manandhar, mining engineer, Nepal Bureau of Mines, referring to "Exploration of Kharidunga: Prospects", said: "In addition, Mr. B. B. Nadgir and Mr. P. N. Sharma, geologists of the Geological Survey of India, also have prepared a geological map, inclusive of this area in connexion with the exploration of copper and nickel occurrences at Nangre and Bhorle. They have observed magnesite in the area."

Mr. Manandhar placed the reserves at 100 million tons of magnesite and 57,000 tons of talc in the same report and also referred to the occurrence of ochre, pyrite and pyrrhotite in the Kharidunga area.

The Indians had, however, not visited this area under any bilateral agreement.

Chinese geologists had given a negative report about mineral prospects in this area in 1967.

PAKISTAN

A. Mr. A. R. Cornelius On Constitutional Reforms: The Law Minister, Mr. A. R. Cornelius, said in Lahore on October 29 that certain basic issues, including the future of One-Unit in West Pakistan, the structure of the Central Legislature, provincial autonomy and the division of finances, would have to be decided before a constitutional basis for General Elections in the country could be laid.

He did not consider it impossible to evolve a formula by the middle of next year (1970) as a pattern of parliamentary government was already available.

He referred in this context to the Constitution that existed in 1954 and the one that was approved in 1956, and said that one thing was however certain—the Constitution (promulgated by F-M Ayub Khan while withdrawing Martial Law) "is dead as it is considered too authoritarian."

He said there was no question of holding a referendum on any constitutional point at the moment.

He added that the Government was taking notice of what the political parties had been saying about One-Unit.

[While there had been a more or less unanimous demand for the splitting of the One-Unit of West Pakistan into linguistic units of Sind, Baluchistan, Punjab and Pakhtoonistan, there have been suggestions from a section of West Pakistani leadership and endorsed by a small section of East Pakistani leadership for the division of East Pakistan into at least two Provinces. Observers feel that the new West Pakistani demand for the division of East Pakistan into two or three Provinces is to prevent that Wing from having a predominant say as One-Unit in the country's affairs].

B. Warning Against Chinese Influence: A large section of Muslim divines has openly come out against the increasing Chinese influence in the country.

According to newspaper reports appearing in leading dailies Jung (Karachi) and Mashriq (Lahore) Maulana Ehtisham ul-Huq Thanavi, President of the Jamaat-ul-Ulema of Pakistan has warned that the Chinese were bent upon creating a Viet-Nam-type situation in Pakistan and alleged that large sums of money were being distributed among the pro-Chinese elements to create trouble, especially in the West Wing.

Referring to his recent visit to China where he had gone as a member of one Goodwill Delegation, he said: "Some people in Pakistan have funny ideas about conditions in that country." Though he was not allowed to visit the Muslim majority areas in China where a large-scale campaign of genocide was going on, he did see quite a bit in China during a month of his stay. "It was worse than a large prison."

Another religious leader, Mufti Mahmud of Jamaat-ul-Ulema Islam of Pakistan (a rival organization) has also come out with a warning against Chinese machinations in Pakistani policies. Speaking at Lyallpur, he said that one of the main factors contributing to F-M. Ayub Khan's fall was the entrenchment of the Chinese lobby in all positions of importance.

The leader of the Jamaat-e-Islami, Maulana Maudoodi, has asked the Government to institute an inquiry into the funds of Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's People's Party and Maulana A. H. Bhashani's National Awami Party and alleged that they had been receiving large funds from Chinese and other foreign sources.

The leader of the Pakistan Democratic Party and a former Prime Minister, Chowdhury Mohammed Ali, expressed the fear while addressing workers of his party at Lahore that if immediate steps were not taken to combat the danger being posed by ultra-Leftist forces being financed from abroad, the country would have to face a civil war whose dimension might be much worse than the one in Indonesia.

C. Decline In Newspaper Industry—IPI Report: The International Press Institute (IPI) in its October bulletin stated that 21 Pakistani dailies were closed during the 10-year rule of President Ayub Khan.

Among the casualties was the 93-year-old English language daily, Civil and Military Gazette of Lahore, once edited by Rudyard Kipling.

IPI quoted a survey by the Yahya Khan Government's Bureau of Statistics as saying that leading daily newspapers in English, Urdu and Bengali were taken over by the Government during the period in the name of the National Press Trust. The national news agency, the Associated Press of Pakistan, was also taken over and put under the direct control of the Press Information Ministry.

IPI noted that weeklies and bi-weeklies had also showen a sharp decrease during the Ayub regime. Their number dropped from 379 in 1958 to 260 in March this year.

It said that the decline in Pakistan's newspaper industry was in sharp contrast to the great progress in other fields of industry, some of which had registered a rise of 500 per cent.

The bulletin also reported the recent dismissal of Mr. Z. A. Suleri, Editor-in-Chief of The Pakistan Times. Quoting published reports, it said that his dismissal was supposedly because of recent anti-communist comments in the newspaper which did not suit the Government.

A. Mr. R. K. Khadilkar Appointed Minister Of Supply: The appointment of Mr. R. K. Khadilkar as a Minister of State in the Central Council of Ministers was announced on November 3.

The Ministry of Foreign Trade and Supply was bifurcated and Mr. Khadilkar was appointed Minister of Supply.

Mr. B. R. Bhagat would be Minister of Foreign Trade with Cabinet rank.

A communique from Rashtrapati Bhavan said: "The President, on the advice of the Prime Minister, has been pleased to appoint Mr. R. K. Khadilkar as a Minister of State in the Council of Ministers and to hold independent charge of the Ministry of Supply. Mr. Baliram Bhagat, at present Minister of Foreign Trade and Supply, will continue to be in charge of the Ministry of Foreign Trade."

Mr. Khadilkar took over on November 4.

On November 7, he was also appointed concurrently as Minister of State in the Ministry of Finance.

B. West German Aid For Bombay TV Station: It was announced in New Delhi that West Germany had agreed to provide equipment and technical assistance for setting up a TV station at Bombay with relay facilities to Poona under an Agreement signed on October 29. The project is expected to be ready by May, 1971.

The West German Government would supply equipment for the transmitters at Bombay and Poona and for the studios at Bombay and expert technical assistance for installation of this equipment and training in programme presentation techniques.

The entire foreign exchange cost of the project would thus be met by the West German Government, which has offered the TV equipment as a gift. The counterpart expenditure in rupees would be incurred by the Government of India. The cost of the equipment, to be received by way of gift, would be Rs. 1,13,00,000.

[The transmitter at Poona will not be an independent TV station but will relay programmes originated at Bombay. For this purpose a micro-wave link between Bombay and Poona, being set up by the Department of Communications, will be used. The transmitter at Poona has thus been planned as a part of the technical configuration of the Bombay station. The station at Bombay will serve the whole of Greater Bombay, its industrial environs and some rural areas of Thana and Colaba districts. The relay transmitter at Poona will serve the city of Poona, its industrial environs and rural areas around. The total area round Bombay and Poona to be served by this complex is likely to be about 10,000 square kilometres].

The Government of the Federal Republic of Germany had also given assistance for the establishment of the TV station at Delhi.

C. FCI Wins Award Against French Firm: It was learnt in New Delhi on October 31 that the Fertilizer Corporation of India (FCI) had won an award against a French firm which had been directed to pay approximately Rs. 1.23 crores to FCI.

The award was given by the Court of Arbitration of the International Chamber of Commerce, Paris.

The French firm was given a contract in 1957 for certain fertilizer plants to be set up at the Nangal project of FCI.

On completion of the project, the contractors raised various claims against the Corporation which were not accepted.

As a negotiated settlement did not materialize, the contractors went for arbitration under the Rules of ICC, Paris.

The arbitration proceedings continued for over five years. In the meanwhile, the President of the Tribunal expired, necessitating the appointment of Lord Devlin of England as successor-arbitrator to complete the proceedings. After hearing both the parties, Lord Devlin submitted his award in favour of FCI.

E. Prohibition In States: On November 1, Andhra Pradesh went "wet" with the abolition of prohibition throughout the State.

The A-ICC, meeting at a special session at Panaji, had decided in November, 1968 that total prohibition should be introduced over a seven-year period, beginning from October 2 this year. With about half the States outside the realm of Congress hold, it was clear even then that there was little possibility of the whole country going dry in terms of this resolution.

A survey showed that even Congress States had not all been very enthusiastic about the resolution.

Among the States, Gujarat had been totally dry for many years. There had been no move to relax prohibition.

The following are the reports from other States:

Assam: The State Government had not taken any step in pursuance of the Panaji resolution. Of the 11 districts, three were dry. There was no proposal to extend the dry law to more areas. The reason was financial. The Government was reportedly considering modification of the prohibition policy in the light of the Tek Chand Committee's report (see page 6888).

Mysore: Since the Panaji session, there had been no change in the prohibition policy in the State, which went dry in 1960 but relaxed the law in 1966 to permit sale of toddy and arrack in all talukas except two. The State Government's position was that it would fall in line if others also implemented the Panaji decision.

Maharashtra: The State Prohibition Minister, Mr. B. M. Yagnik said the Government had decided not to open toddy shops in a village if the panchayat, by a resolution, opposed it. Toddy shops in 625 of the State's 35,000 villages had been closed down accordingly. On the Panaji resolution implementation, the State's position was that the Chief Ministers and the Working Committee had to decide the details. Before the Panaji session, the Government had followed up the 1963 decision on relaxation of prohibition with a further modification to permit sale of toddy and beverages with an alcoholic content of up to five per cent.

Rajasthan: The State Government was implementing the Panaji resolution. Since April, there had been two dry days in a week. In the next financial year, the number of dry days would be raised to four and in the following year to six. On April, 1, 1972, it was proposed to introduce total prohibition. Dungarpur, Banswara and Sirohi districts, parts of Udaipur district and areas on the Gujarat border were already completely dry.

Madhya Pradesh: The State Government had declared its willingness to enforce prohibition in any area if 70 per cent of the residents asked for it.

Haryana: The Finance Minister, Mrs. Om Prabha Jain, has said total prohibition will be introduced by April, 1971. Since April, 1969 two days in the week are dry days. From April, 1970 there will be four dry days.

INDONESIA

A. Act Of Free Choice In West Irian: The Act of Free Choice in West Irian closed on August 2 with the Djajapura Regency choosing unanimously in favour of continued ties with Indonesia.

[Article 21, Section 2 of the New York Agreement of August 15, 1962 provided that the two parties to the Agreement—Indonesia and the Netherlands—would "recognize and abide by the results of the Act of Free Choice." The Act of Free Choice was held in eight Regencies through musjahwarah (Consultative) Councils. Government sources said that everywhere the verdict was in favour of integration with Indonesia.)

The Interior Ministry described the result of the Act as legal and within the terms of the 1962 New York (hand-over) Agreement with the Netherlands.

The successful conclusion of the Act of Free Choice means that the long-cherished dream of a Republic united from Sabang in the northern tip of Sumatra to Merauke in south-eastern West Irian has come true.

Though critics, particularly in Holland and Australia, expressed doubts about the outcome of the Act of Free Choice as representing the collective will of the backward people, the Indonesian Government maintained that the decision was valid and final.

The United Nations was expected to receive a report from the UN Secretary-General, U Thant, on the Act of Free Choice. UN, however, has no authority to approve or disapprove the result.

Comment:

To observers of the scene, there was never any doubt about the outcome. For one thing, the "Act of Free Choice" was confined to 1,025 handpicked representatives and even they were to decide by a non-voting consensus or musjahwarah. For another, Indonesia had made it clear that no other choice would be acceptable to her.

A senior spokesman of the Government had summed up the official stand a few weeks before the Act of Free Choice. He said: "We have died for Irian Barat. The Revolution was made to free the whole of Indonesia which included Irian Barat." That was a reference to the early days of the Sukarno era. Dr. Sukarno was the one who had first introduced the concept of a single nationhood among the sprawling islands of the Indonesian archipelago and his slogan was "From Sabang to Merauke."

Indonesians had consistently maintained that there was no real alternative to West Irian staying within Indonesia. According to them, West Irian, though as large as France, just could not exist as a viable separate entity. If it became independent it would be entirely at the mercy of some foreign Power and this would raise questions of security.

Once in control, Indonesia proceeded to set up a Legislative Council with nominated members. In 1963 this Assembly negatived the idea of a plebiscite and eventually settled for the Act of Free Choice in musjahwarah style. The Australians were the most critical about this turn of events. This was natural because they rule the other half of the New Guinea island under UN trusteeship. The whole island is in close proximity to Australia's northern coast.

The Indonesian case apparently rests on the nature of the territory and its people. Out of a population of 800,000 as many as 500,000 still live in dense jungles in Stone Age and often pre-Stone Age ways. There are hundreds of local dialects so that almost all communication is carried on in Indonesian. The official UN representative said: "To hold a one-man, one-vote referendum in West Irian would require 200 men, two months and 20 helicopters to reach remote parts—and still you would not know if the tribes know what they are voting for."

Despite Australian and Dutch criticism, it was largely UN support which enabled Indonesia to go its own way in West Irian.

B. British Loan: The Ministry of Overseas Development in London announced on October 23 the signing of an Agreement in Djakarta under which Britain would make a further loan of £500,000 to Indonesia for buying a wide range of British goods.

The loan, for 25 years, is interest-free, with a seven-year grace period for repayment. This was the fifth Aid Agreement between Britain and Indonesia signed this year, bringing the total of new British aid to Indonesia in 1969 to £2,215,000.

The earlier loans were for the supply of New Leyland buses and spare parts, provision of pharmaceuticals and medical equipment and the supply of electrical equipment.

The two loans totalling £1.2 million were for other British goods.

IDA Credit:

Meanwhile, it was officially announced in Washington that the International Development Association (IDA), an affiliate of the World Bank, had approved a credit of $15 million to Indonesia for constructing an electric power project.

The credit will be interest-free and repayable in 50 years with 10 years of grace.

The loan will be used mainly for improvement and expansion of the electricity distribution system in Djakarta and environs.

IRAN

A. Gen. Yahya Khan's Visit: President Yahya Khan of Pakistan arrived in Tehran on October 29 on a week's visit at the invitation of the Shah.

The Shah and Gen. Yahya Khan later drove through flag-decorated streets to the capital's main square, where the Mayor, Mr. Gholam Reza Neikpay, presented the President with a golden key to the city.

Replying to an address of welcome at a State banquet given in his honour by the Shah the same night (October 29), Gen. Yahya Khan said that his country would "continue to strive" for a peaceful settlement of its disputes with India and maybe "India will see the wisdom of having a friendly Pakistan as its neighbour."

He said: "In its dealings with the three major Powers, namely, the United States, USSR and China, Pakistan continues to follow a policy of bilateralism while cultivating friendly relations with all of them." But, he added, "we scrupulously avoid taking sides in their quarrels."

"The only dark spot in our relations with the outside world is the state of our relations with neighbouring India. I regret to say that there is little progress in the resolution of the two basic disputes between our two countries, namely, the future of Jammu and Kashmir and the equitable distribution of waters of the Ganga. We shall continue to strive for a peaceful settlement of these disputes, and maybe India will see the wisdom of having a friendly Pakistan as its neighbour."

He re-affirmed that Pakistan attached "the highest importance" to the Regional Co-operation for Development Organization (RCD), which groups Iran, Turkey and Pakistan.

Address To Parliament:

Addressing a joint session of Parliament on October 30, Gen. Yahya Khan said that China had been a very good friend of Pakistan, but stressed that Pakistan aimed to hold a balance in its relations with the major Powers.

He said: "We do not solicit the friendship of one at the expense of the other. Thanks to the policy of bilateralism that we have been following, Pakistan today is one of the very few countries to have friendly relations with all the three major Powers—USA, the Soviet Union and China."

Because of Pakistan's geographical situation—its being surrounded by the world's largest nations, Russia, China and India and the country being divided into two parts with a thousand miles of Indian territory in between—it had to find an equation with its big neighbours and USA which had global interests.

Joint Communique:

A joint communique issued at the end of the visit showed that Kashmir and Ganga waters issues figured dominantly in it.

According to it, Gen. Yahya Khan had informed the Shah of Iran of the "lack of progress" in resolving these "disputes" with India.

Radio Pakistan quoted the communique as saying that Pakistan expressed the hope that these "disputes" would be settled "peacefully and in accordance with the UN resolutions and international laws and usage."

News Conference:

President Yahya Khan of Pakistan told a news conference in Tehran on November 4 that he did not expect another war with India but he saw no immediate hope of improving relations between the two countries.

He also indirectly referred to India as the "enemy."

He rejected the idea of reaching an understanding with India to re-establish the historic "silk route" through Turkey, Iran, Afghanistan, Pakistan, the Soviet Union and India to China.

He would not mention any date for Pakistan's General Elections but hoped that an election would be called "soon."

He welcomed the co-operation between Iran, Pakistan and Turkey but was reluctant to express support for the Central Treaty Organization (CENTO) of which Iran, Turkey, Pakistan, Britain and the United States were members.

India's Reaction:

The statement by the Shah of Iran that "Iran and Pakistan are like one soul in two bodies" during the visit of the Pakistan President, Gen. Yahya Khan, to Tehran has given the policy-makers in New Delhi a new turn on the relations between the two countries.

The warmth shown towards Pakistan in the Shah's speeches was regarded as particularly baffling, because Pakistan's consistently intransigent attitude had wrecked one of the Shah's pet proposals—re-establishing the historic "silk route" through Turkey, Iran, Afghanistan, Pakistan, India and the Soviet Union.

Pakistan took full advantage of its President's visit to Iran to reiterate the special relations that it considers, exist between the two countries. This aspect was evident during the visit, because exchanges between Iran and Pakistan in other spheres, particularly in the economic field, have been negligible. Even projects agreed upon to be undertaken have made little progress.

It was considered reasonably certain that the Shah of Iran could not have made a special diplomatic gesture to Pakistan unless Iran decided to treat its relations with Pakistan on a special basis.

It is significant that Gen. Yahya Khan rejected the proposal for regional co-operation as propounded by the Soviet Prime Minister, Mr. Kosygin, even after the Iranian Government had indicated its interest in the proposal at the official-level talks with Pakistan.

While Iran's friendly relations with Pakistan are considered as normal, no rational justification for Iran's lack of appreciation of Pakistan's disruptionist role in the region has been found.

Gen. Yahya Khan's brief statement in Tehran that he did not expect another war with India is not considered worthy of any notice, because, in the same breath, he referred to India as the "enemy."

Background:

President Yahya Khan's visit to Tehran emphasizes the close relationship between Iran and Pakistan, stemming from the links formed through CENTO and the Regional Co-operation for Development (RCD).

At the moment, Pakistan is perhaps more keen than Iran to strengthen the ties between the two countries which have shown some signs of loosening.

Iran's bonds with Pakistan were formed when both became part of the Western alliance system in the early 1950s. Both of them signed mutual defence pacts with USA and became members of the Baghdad Pact, later re-named CENTO. While Pakistan's motive in joining the SEATO Pact was its obsession with India, Iran at that time was genuinely afraid of its northern neighbour, USSR—because of its experience in the past.

Over the years, the military alliance system failed more and more to satisfy Pakistan's needs. This led to a gradual disengagement, highlighted by the fact that both China and USSR today supply military hardware to the predominantly American-equipped armed forces of Pakistan.

All the same, Pakistan has tried to maintain intimate ties with Iran in the hope of securing the latter's superiority in the sub-continent. This hope derives evidently from the moral support Iran gave to Pakistan during its 1965 conflict with India. In fact, Iran acted as an intermediary in a deal which later brought 90 Sabre jets from West Germany to Pakistan.

There is another factor which makes Pakistan anxious for close ties with Tehran. The Pakistani ruling elite (which largely hails from the West Wing, as well as the common people of West Pakistan) look towards the Muslim world of West Asia for psychological sus*tenance and support.* Gen. Yahya Khan's regime is hoping to improve ties with the Muslim world in general, and the RCD countries in particular, to refurbish its image at home.

The regime in Iran suffers from no such compulsions. In fact, the thaw in the 'cold war' and the changed situation in West Asia have brought about significant shifts in Iran's foreign policy attitudes. The importance of ties with the Western Powers and their friends in Asia has lessened in direct proportion to the improvement of Tehran's relations with USSR. This has eroded the importance Pakistan, as a member of the common alliance against the Soviet Union, once had for Iran.

Russia has contracted for $110 million worth of military supplies to Iran under an Agreement signed in 1967. Most of the military supplies are non-lethal, but they do include a few 57-mm and 85 anti-aircraft guns. Economic co-operation between the two countries has resulted in several important deals which include a long-term contract for the sale of Iranian natural gas to Russia via a pipe-line running from the southern Iranian fields to the Russian border at Astara. A major part of the pipe-line is being built through a Soviet credit given in April, 1968.

USSR is participating also in oil exploration in northern Iran. Work is now under way in the northern Caspian coastlands of Iran, and Russia is reported to be eager to take up a concession in southern Iran as well. Under the 1966 Soviet-Iranian Economic Agreement, the Soviet Union is building a steel mill near Ispahan with an annual capacity of 680,000 tons which will be ready by 1971.

The Shah of Iran, at one time, looked upon "Nasserism" as the greatest threat to his position. But, after the humiliation suffered by the Arabs in the 1967 war with Israel, he has little cause for apprehension. Thus, he no longer needs Pakistan's friendship as an insurance policy to cover the contingency of a conflict with his Arab neighbours.

The change in Iran's relationship with the Arabs is illustrated by the recent Rabat Islamic Conference. Some years ago, Iran and Saudi Arabia had tried to float the Islamic "summit" balloon, but it was shot down by President G. A. Nasser of UAR. More important, most Arab States would have until recently strongly objected to Iran's participation in a conference called to discuss Arab relations with Israel in view of the cordial ties between Tehran and Tel Aviv. Yet, Iran was not only represented at the Rabat "summit" but was also a member of its Preparatory Committee.

Iran's problems with Saudi Arabia over the question of the Gulf States, and particularly Bahrain, are now things of the past. The Shah has explicitly stated—he did so at a news conference in New Delhi in January, 1969—that he would abide by the decision of the people of Bahrain regarding the future of the island. But even when Bahrain was a live issue between Iran and Saudi Arabia, there was much disappointment in Tehran at Pakistan's failure to come out unequivocally on Iran's side.

A dispute still lingers with Iraq on the question of the Shatt-al-Arab. But Iran feels strong enough to abrogate unilaterally the Treaty of 1937. Iranian ships have passed the Shatt under a protective convoy without Iraqi interference, suggesting that the balance of power is now very much in favour of Iran.

Another factor relevant to the consideration of Iran's foreign policy motivations is that the internal challenge to the regime is no longer as serious as it was some time ago. Young Iranian emigres may demonstrate against the Shah during his visits abroad—as they did in USA (see below under B)—but the banned Tudeh Party is in hibernation at home. In sum, the Shah is no longer faced with foreign or domestic threats which gave him an interest in maintaining cordial relations with neighbouring Pakistan with its large armed forces.

Even economic relations between Pakistan and Iran are not as important or vital as they are made out to be by Pakistan. Pakistan's imports from Iran in 1967-68 were a little over (Pak)Rs. 757 million, while exports to Iran were valued at (Pak)Rs. 21 million. During the same period, Iran's exports to India amounted to (Indian) Rs. 329 million and imports from India were around (Indian)Rs. 142 million.

Even after taking into account the difference in the official rates of the Indian and Pakistani currencies, the difference in the volume of Iranian trade with India and Pakistan is significant. It should also be noted that the open market value of the Indian rupee is much closer to its official rate than is the case with the Pakistani rupee, which has undergone a drastic de facto devaluation.

It is true that RCD has strengthened the economic bonds between Iran and Pakistan. Commitments on paper far exceed, however, the number of joint ventures actually initiated. A list of 54 industrial projects has been approved, but, of these, only four have been taken in hand so far—three in Pakistan and one in Iran. The three located in Pakistan are for the printing of banknote paper, an RCD jute mills project, and another for a ball-bearing plant. A joint aluminium project, in collaboration with a US firm, is being set up in Iran.

The Shah has been quick to realize that he can expect only limited economic benefits from his association with Pakistan in RCD. He also feels that the RCD ties need not rule out closer economic relations with India, specially because Iranian and Indian economies are supplementary in many ways. Economic collaboration has become, therefore, the main means for both India and Tehran to disentangle Indo-Iranian relations from the Pakistan-Iranian ties.

In 1968, two senior Cabinet members in charge of economic portfolios—Mr. Morarji Desai and Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed—visited Iran. The Shah's visit to India in January, 1969 gave further impetus to proposals for economic co-operation. Iran is already a partner in the Madras Refinery, while India is participating in off-shore oil exploration off the Iranian coast in association with the National Iranian Oil Company and others. India has agreed to train 500 Iranian technicians in the next two years in iron and steel technology.

The growing ties between India and Iran give Pakistan little cause for satisfaction. This is probably one of the reasons prompting Gen. Yahya Khan to single out Iran for his first goodwill visit abroad.

B. The Shah's Arms Mission To USA: The Shah said in Washington on October 24 during a State visit to USA that Iran did not mix trade and politics, but treated them separately.

He said that the Russians were not a threat in West Asia as they had no "physical expansionist policies." The threat to peace in West Asia, he said, came from the "weak, corrupt countries" in the region.

The Shah gave some inkling of his two-fold mission to Washington in a question-answer session on the television programme, "Meet the Press."

It was known that his primary aim was to seek F-104 fighter planes and a vast array of arms and weapons for the Iranian armed forces, but, he deliberately underplayed this part of his mission.

Though, he said, Iran required the means to defend itself and could not appeal to any one super-Power for help in an emergency without precipitating a "confrontation" with another, it was also in the market for a wide range of capital goods like heavy machinery, power plants, locomotives and agricultural tools and implements. In order to pay for these, Iran wanted USA to buy its oil. In return, he promised to spend every cent of the money earned thereby to purchase American goods.

[The Shah was questioned intensely over Iran's attitude towards the conflict in West Asia. Iran is the only Muslim country to have trade relations with Israel and it was by way of explaining this that the Shah said that his country separated the question of trade from politics.]

He technically absolved the Soviet Union of any responsibility for the crisis in West Asia, but indicated that on the United States and the Soviet Union jointly lay the responsibility to find a satisfactory solution to the West Asia crisis.

ISRAEL

A. West Asia—Americans In Israeli Armed Forces: Anti-American psychosis in the Arab world reached a climax on October 19 with Mr. Anwar Sadat of UAR calling USA "our first and principal enemy."

A furore was created by a US Embassy statement released at Tel Aviv saying that American Jews who joined the Israeli armed forces would not automatically lose their American nationality.

This was interpreted in the Arab Press not only as admission of the presence of Americans in the Israeli armed forces but as "encouragement" to them to join these forces.

The US State Department also acknowledged on October 17 that some American citizens were serving with Israeli armed forces, but denied they were being encouraged to do so by the Administration.

There has been a flurry of diplomatic notes and American explanation that a change in the citizenship law was not an executive action but an offshoot of a Supreme Court decision in a case filed by an American citizen appeared to be of no avail.

The UAR Foreign Minister, Mr. Mahmoud Riad, who had already made representations to the US diplomatic mission in Cairo and to the United Nations, sent a Note to the Arab League asking it to take up the matter at the Arab Joint Defence Council meeting scheduled for November 8.

Mr. Riad said in the Note that by its action, USA had contradicted its pledge to work for the implemention of the Security Council resolution on West Asia and reneged its responsibilities as a Big Power and violated the UN Charter.

He added that the Arab war of attrition and commando activities were beginning to take their toll of Israeli armed forces and Israel needed more military support. The United States, therefore, took the initiative in allowing its citizens to enlist in the Israeli armed forces.

Strong reactions were also expressed in Jordan, Iraq, Syria and Libya.

Official American sources, however, said that US policy was that if an American enlists in the armed forces of a country not hostile to the United States, he will not necessarily lose his citizenship.

USSR Warning:

In a statement issued at a Foreign Ministry news conference in Moscow on October 31, the Soviet Government warned the United States that its decision to permit its citizens to enrol in the Israeli Army could lead to serious complications.

It charged that USA was encouraging the aggressor by providing not merely weapons of war but pilots and personnel for technical maintenance.

Mr. Leonid Zamyatin, Head of the Foreign Ministry's Press Department, who read out the statement at the news conference, dealt with scores of questions bearing on West Asia and East-West relations.

The Soviet Union, he said, pledged itself to continue its support to the Arab countries in West Asia. "The Soviet Government considers it necessary to repeat its determination to continue its comprehensive aid to the Arab States struggling for national independence."

US Supreme Court Ruling:

The official US admission that Jewish American citizens had been enlisted in Israel has only served to confirm long-standing Arab suspicions of direct US participation in military action against the Arabs, specifically in June, 1967. Because of this background, Arab anger now is much stronger and has been expressed even in a pro-American country like Jordan.

The chain of events began on May 29, 1967, when the US Supreme Court decided on the case brought by an American Jew, called Afroyim, who had voted in elections in Israel ten years before, which till then meant the loss of American citizenship. The Court decided that every American had a "constitutional right to remain a free citizen in a free country unless he voluntarily relinquishes that citizenship, which was taken to mean that voting abroad was not a bar to citizenship."

Thus American citizenship becomes not a privilege conferred by the State but depends wholly on the will and even the presumed intentions of the citizen—which the citizen does not have to profess but the State has to establish.

Some time later, in 1967, the Justice Department in Washington interpreted this Court decision as also meaning that military service in a foreign country should not necessarily cause a loss of citizenship, depending on how "hostile" that country was to USA.

The obvious political implications of this unorthodox decision, which are particularly relevant to Israel and hence to the West Asia crisis, were fairly widely commented on at the time, but the Arab Governments took no notice.

The seriousness of the situation does not arise from the Arab claim that Americans have served or are serving in Israel's armed forces, but from the public recognition that from now on they can openly do such things as flying Israeli Phantom planes with perfect legality. And Israel is a special case among the countries of the world because both in USA and in Israel there are powerful and efficient Zionist organizations whose sole aim is to get young American Jews to emigrate to Israel.

Maj.-Gen. M. Dayan On UAR's "Mistake":

Speaking to a group of American Jews in Tel Aviv on October 10, the Israeli Defence Minister, Maj.-Gen. Moshe Dayan said that Egypt had made a "great mistake" in abandoning the Suez Canal cease-fire without being prepared for the kind of warfare that followed.

Israel, he said, had replied to intensified artillery barrages and commando raids with its own Canal crossings and aircraft raids. In the outcome, it had cost Egypt far more that it did Israel. "I don't feel the worse for it."

He described President Nasser's position as shaky. He said that Mr. Nasser had fired many top officers, and Egypt's internal situation had deteriorated. Egypt was not ready to start a major war. He cited the Israeli amphibious landing on the Egyptian Gulf of Suez in September, 1969 and the almost daily air attacks in the same area as proof.

Asked if withdrawal from the occupied Arab lands was negotiable, he replied in the affirmative, but added that he personally believed Israel should not withdraw from Sharm al Sheikh guarding the Tiran Strait. He described on the Red Sea bastion as being more important to Israel than the Golan Heights captured from Syria in the 1967 war.

Maj.-Gen. M. Dayan On Acts Of War:

The Israeli Defence Minister, Maj.-Gen. Moshe Dayan said on October 21 that he expected a calmer Winter, but "acts of war" again next Summer.

Over the last six months, he said, "UAR and its armed forces have grown weaker, while Israel has strengthened its defences and lines of defence."

He said that the Golan Heights which Israel had captured from Syria during the six-day June, 1967 war must remain under Israel's control.

He disclosed that Israel would spend 40 per cent of its Budget, a total of £ 10,000 million, next year on security. Already she was spending £10 million a day on security and added: "Our struggle continues for a greater, stronger and more Jewish Israel."

Mr. Y. Allon On Palestinian Arab State:

The Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Yigal Allon told foreign correspondents in Jerusalem on October 14 that Palestinian Arabs might try to re-establish their own State, and Israel should be prepared to negotiate such demands.

He said: "If the time is ripe for a Palestine-Arab State, they can do it any day they like. Israel may be witnessing a Palestine-Arab national entity in the making and should be prepared to discuss any demand such a State would make for the occupied (formerly Jordanian) West Bank territory."

He added that Arabs in such a State might demand that Israel return the West Bank territory across Jordan acquired in the Arab-Israeli war in 1948 which Jordan lost in the June, 1967 war.

Mr. Y. Allon On "Settlement In Strategic Areas":

Mr. Yigal Allon told Zionist leaders from Britain on October 31 that Israel must continue to establish settlements in strategically important areas. "We have as much right to the Sinai as the Egyptians."

Asked how Israel justified the establishment of settlements in Sinai, he replied: "The more settlements are established in strategically important areas, the greater our ability to establish secure borders in the future."

He said that Israel must refrain from drawing detailed maps, but he indicated that by not establishing settlements Israel was in effect "drawing a minimum map." This was "despite the fact that the Government has decided to take no decision on the secure borders to be decided upon at a peace conference."

Mrs. G. Meir On UN:

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, said in Beersheba on October 23 that Israel was no longer able to depend on UN.

Speaking at an election rally, she said: "The election of Syria to the Security Council, after that country had become an accomplice in an act of piracy, has strengthened Israel's decision to reject any advice to depend on UN. The UN has ceased to be an objective and just body dealing with world, and especially our, problems."

She added that Israel would never again agree to have UN Observers or truce-keeping force on her borders, responsible for demilitarized zones.

Mr. W. Rogers On "Some Progress":

The US Secretary of State, Mr. William Rogers, said in Washington on October 12 that "some progress" was being made in discussions with the Soviet Union in their efforts to bring peace to West Asia.

"Just say we made progress," he said in a nation-wide television programme, "Meet the Press." He would not elaborate.

He added: "We have developed the thought that the parties have to negotiate. We have to have more negotiations and we develop what is known as the Rhodes Formula which, we think, could lead to more active negotiations".

[The Rhodes Formula refers to the talks held between the Israelis and the Arabs on the island of Rhodes in 1948 through a UN intermediary.]

Asked if the UAR had not already rejected such talks as indicated by the semi-official Cairo daily, Al Ahram, Mr. Rogers said: "We are not too sure about that. It was an editorial in a paper that suggested that. But we have no reason to think that is the attitude of the Government as yet."

[Al Ahram had said that the UAR "refuses to negotiate with Israel, whether directly or indirectly, whether according to the Rhodes Formula or any other formula."]

The Fighting:

An Israeli spokesman announced that Israeli jets had roared across two fronts on October 2 in attacks on Jordanian Army position and Egyptian military objectives at the Suez Canal. All planes returned safely in both attacks.

Also, on October 2, Egyptian air and sea commando units launched a three-pronged attack on Israeli positions across the Gulf of Suez in the first co-ordinated operation.

It was the second Egyptian "special units" operation in a week. Air and sea forces struck the east coast of the Suez Gulf opposite the general area where Israel had launched a combined services operation three weeks earlier.

An Egyptian spokesman said that all Egyptian forces returned safely to base, but gave no details of the casualties or damage inflicted on the Israelis.

He said that while air-borne units were attacking Israeli positions in Ras Matarma and Ras Malaab, 37 km apart, the naval force raided positions in between them.

The Chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization claimed on October 2 that the commando organizations affiliated to the Palestine Armed Struggle Command had launched about 500 attacks in September and killed at least 300 Israelis. This worked out to 16 attacks and 10 Israeli fatalities a day.

An Israeli Army spokesman said that Israeli troops had crossed into Lebanese territory during the night on October 3-4 and attacked two Arab saboteur bases, blowing up a number of houses belonging to Arab saboteurs and their supporters.

The raids were mounted against two bases, one in Mazzaat-Bahrad Jat, east of the Hatsbani, and the other at Itron village in southern Lebanon.

Earlier in the night (October 3-4), Israeli forces defeated an Egyptian attempt to cross the Suez Canal north of the Great Bitter Lake.

An Israeli patrol killed two Arab saboteurs in a skirmish on the Jordan River on October 4. There were no Israeli casualties in the incident.

The Israeli military command said four Israeli soldiers were wounded when their Army vehicle struck a mine outside the Gaza Strip.

A spokesman said that Israel Air Force units brought down three UAR war-planes during an attempted attack across the Suez Canal into Israeli-held territory on October 6. Two Russian-built MIG-21s were hit in air combat. Their pilots were seen bailing out over UAR territory.

According to a UAR spokesman, two Israeli fighter aircraft and one Egyptian jet were downed in an air battle during the raid.

According to Cairo Radio, the UAR Air Force staged a massive attack on Israeli radar positions and missile launching pads on the eastern bank of the Suez Canal on October 6, and two Israeli fighter aircraft and one Egyptian jet were downed in an air battle during the raid.

According to an Israeli military spokesman, Israeli planes went into action against guerrilla bases east of the River Jordan on October 7 following a mortar and rocket attack by guerrillas on Israeli villages in the northern part of the Valley. Israeli guns also pounded the bases. The Israelis had no casualties and all their aircraft returned safely to base.

On October 8, Israeli jets pounded an Arab guerrilla base in the Irbid region of Jordan in two successive air strikes.

Military sources in Tel Aviv said that the target in the two raids was an Arab guerrilla base in Wadi Shallala, east of Irbid. The Israeli jets struck at guerrillas belonging to the El Saeka group known to be based there.

Two UAR soldiers were reported killed in an encounter with Israeli forces south of the Timsah Lake area in the Suez Canal sector on October 8. This was the first Israeli acknowledgement or reconnaissances which UAR said had been carried out on the Israeli bank overnight by UAR army units.

On October 12, Israeli jets attacked UAR military targets on the western coast of the Gulf of Suez.

Also, on October 15, Israeli jets swept into action on two fronts, hitting Egyptian missile sites and radar stations across the Suez Canal and Arab guerrilla positions in southern Jordan.

In the air strike against Jordan, Israeli jets pounded an area southeast of the Dead Sea from which rockets were fired at the Sodom potash works a few nights earlier.

In another action, an Arab guerrilla was killed on the Israeli frontier with Lebanon by troops combing the scene of a clash on October 14 in which three guerrillas and an Israeli soldier were killed and an Israeli wounded.

It was stated in Beirut that four rockets were fired at the office of the Palestine Liberation Organization, injuring 10 people on October 15. The PLO Director, Mr. Shafik Alhout, said he suspected that Israeli military intelligence was behind the attack. Mr. Alhout received a small cut in the hand. Some others were slightly hurt. One person was taken to hospital. The rockets were fired from a building opposite the PLO office. Rocket launchers were found in an apartment at the same level as the PLO office.

Next day (October 16), Israeli jets streaked across the Suez Canal and hit UAR military targets.

On October 21, Israel said that UAR mortars fired across the Suez Canal in the El Qantara area wounding five Israeli soldiers. This had started an exchange of gun and automatic weapons fire practically throughout the day.

UAR said its troops attacked successfully across the Suez Canal and an Israeli force was driven off as it tried to land in Egypt.

It claimed that regular Army commandos crossed the Canal and blew up all installations at an Israeli position near the Bitter Lakes and returned without losses.

Israel had attacked earlier in the morning on October 21 on the west coast of the Gulf of Suez, about 60 miles south of Suez town. Coast guardsmen engaged the Israeli unit and drove it off, wounding several Israelis. One Egyptian was killed.

On the cease-fire line, the Israeli Army reported that UAR troops fired Russian-made rockets and mortar shells at a potash works on the shores of the Dead Sea shortly before mid-night on October 21. The fire was returned.

No casualties were reported, but there was some damage to the plant's electrical system.

Explosive charges that police said were set by saboteurs ripped through three apartment buildings atop Mt Carmel on October 22, killing one man and injuring ten persons.

The attacks followed similar incidents in other Haifa areas, notably in an open air market, in dwellings and at oil installations.

On October 22, Israeli jets blasted UAR military positions along the Suez Canal after two Israelis were killed and eight wounded in two days of sporadic exchanges of artillery and small arms fire.

The strike was the first Israeli air strike for almost a week following an almost daily series during which at least eight Soviet-built SAM-2 missile bases and their accompanying radar stations were believed to have been put out of action.

According to Cairo, Israeli forces occupied the village of Kaft Kala in south Lebanon on October 22.

According to UAR, Arab war planes raided Israeli positions in northern Sinai on October 22. This was the first Egyptian air raid on the Israeli-held eastern bank of the Canal since October 6.

On October 23, according to Tel Aviv, Israeli planes struck on two fronts hitting UAR military installations on the Suez Canal and suspected commando bases inside Jordan. The planes swooped across the Jordan River cease-fire line to hit "terrorist bases".

The raid followed Arab commando attacks on two Israeli border police patrols south of the Sea of Galilee.

The Israeli raid on UAR followed one of the UAR's deepest penetrations into Israeli-held Sinai reported since the 1967 six-day war in what the Israelis said was an unsuccessful attempt to bomb a para-military settlement on the Mediterranean.

In Cairo a communique said: "Enemy camps and outposts in the area, about 100 km from the Suez Canal were left in flames. All our planes returned safely to base after successfully accomplishing their mission."

This was the first UAR air raid on the Israeli-held eastern bank of the Canal since October 6. It was also the first night-time aerial attack by UAR since June, 1967.

Israeli jets blasted UAR military targets on the east bank of the Gulf of Suez in the fifth air strike against UAR in less than 48 hours on October 24.

On October 30, Israeli and Arab forces exchanged fire near a para-military unit in the occupied Golan Heights of Syria.

The Israeli returned the fire which lasted for about 1½ hours. No Israeli casualties were reported.

UAR war-planes roared across the Suez Canal twice on October 31 to strike at Israeli troops and installations in the occupied Sinai. It was the first UAR aerial attack against the Israelis in the Sinai since October 26.

An Israeli military spokesman said the UAR MIG-17s struck the El Qantara area. This was followed by an attack by Sukhoi fighter-bomb*ers against the Israelis in the Babrit area on the Canal. Kabrit is a UAR air base about 67 km south of El* Qantara.

Only four planes were involved in each attack and the raids lasted only a few minutes. There were no Israeli casualities or damage caused by the Soviet-made planes.

JAPAN

A. Cut In Rice Acreage Proposed: The Agricultural Administration Council, in the first week of October, submitted to the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato, a report calling for a cut in rice acreage to pave the way for modernizing the farming industry.

The Council, an advisory body, drew up the report after ten months of study in response to Mr. Sato's proposals for agricultural reforms.

The report pointed to the need to solve problems posed by mounting rice surplus before the nation launched a comprehensive programme for modernization of agricultural administration.

In this respect, the report put emphasis on measures for controlling rice production and asked the Government to consider the following steps in working out its policy:

(1) Changing part of the rice acreage to other crops and dairy farming;

(2) Slashing the producer's rice price, with the gap between the present price and the reduced one covered by Government subsidies;

(3) A revision of the food control system or some provisional legislation should be considered so that the Government could freeze its rice purchase price.

The report, among other things, proposed that the Government provide positive co-operation for promotion of exports and imports of agricultural products.

Addressing the Council meeting, Mr. Sato said he would do his best to modernize agriculture and create new farming communities in the country.

He said Japan's agriculture industry was beset with difficulties amid rapid economic growth of the nation.

The Agriculture-Forestry Minister, Mr. Shiro Hasegawa, said that the Government would like to decide its policy on the basis of the recommendations after thorough consultations with the Liberal-Democratic Party, rice growers' associations and Government experts.

Mr. Tomoo Miyawaki, a member of the Council representing rice producers, urged the Government to "take special care" in adjusting rice production to cushion the impact on rice growers.

Bigger Crop Forecast:

During the week, Mr. Hasegawa also told the Cabinet that this year's rice crop would exceed 14,167,000 tons. The rice crop for this year would top the 14-million-ton mark for the third time in history after 1967 and 1968. It reached 14,453,000 tons in 1967 and 14,449,000 tons in 1968.

The estimate was made on the basis of a crop survey as of September 15. It was better than the previous estimate made as of August 15.

The anticipated bumper rice crop will exceed the demand for rice, now estimated at 12,400,000 tons a year, by about 1,500,000 tons. The country's rice surplus, as a result, will rise further to about 7,100,000 tons.

Meanwhile, the Director-General of the Food Agency, Mr. Tokutaro Higaki, indicated that in the Government's view there was no feasible way to dispose of the current rice stock surplus other than using old rice as feed for live-stock.

Mr. Higaki discussed alternative measures to reduce the surplus at a session of the Rice Price Council.

He warned that unless some steps were taken to restrain rice production, rice stocks would grow from the present 5,600,000 tons to 25 million tons, or double the annual rice demand, in nine years.

Along with the production restraint, he suggested that rice carried over from the year before be released as livestock feeds, at a rate of two million tons a year. Various proposals advanced so far to cope with the rice surplus were all inadequate. A plan to subtitute old rice for imported soybean and other materials for miso (fermented bean paste) and soy sauce, for instance, would require the use of only 140,000 to 150,000 tons of old rice.

He told the Council that 1,200,000 tons would be enough to meet the needs of domestic consumers.

B. Aviation Agreement With USA: Japan and USA concluded their aviation talks in Tokyo in the first week of October when they signed a memorandum allowing Japan Air Lines (JAL) to fly to New York from Tokyo on the great circle route via Anchorage (Alaska).

JAL will also be allowed to operate a Tokyo-Saipan-Guam service under the new arrangement signed by the two countries.

In return, Japan agreed to let US airlines increase the annual number of chartered flights to Tokyo to 55 this year and 75 in 1970 from the present 46. No restrictions were set, however, on the number of chartered flights to carry visitors to the Japan World Exposition to be held in Osaka in 1970.

In the talks, Japan failed to obtain consent to its demand for routing JAL's great circle flights to New York by way of Chicago as well as Anchorage. The matter will be discussed at a meeting to be held not later than the end of 1970.

The memorandum made it clear that Japan agreed to resume negotiations in Tokyo next Spring over the number of chartered flights by US airlines to Tokyo from 1971 onwards.

Under the new arrangement, JAL will be able to operate two trans-Pacific services — the newly-won shortest trans-Pacific route to New York and the existing mid-Pacific route by way of San Francisco. This meant that Japan had achieved parity with the US carriers in the number of trans-Pacific routes.

A. Report On Economy: According to two reports on the 1968 economy and Budget estimates for 1969, prepared by the Minister of Finance, Mr. Yun Ki-pok, revenue is expected to rise by 19 per cent.

The allocations also showed that a greater share of the State funds had been earmarked for development of extractive and power industries.

The following is a summary of the two reports:

"Despite the difficulties encountered during 1968, industrial production increased by 15 per cent over that of the preceding year.

"Emphasis was on capital construction, which accounted for 48.9 per cent of the economy. New thermal and hydro-electric power stations were built and existing power stations enlarged. In the mining industry, a number of new mines were commissioned.

"Investment in the metal industry was 70 per cent greater than it was in 1967. Existing iron and steel works were modernized, and construction has started on a ferrous-metallurgical works. Outputs of iron, steel, and various non-ferrous metals needed for economic development and defence showed a marked rise.

"In the chemical industry, manufacturing of chemical fibres, synthetic resin and tyres was expanded and an oil refinery constructed. Outputs of phosphate and molecular fertilizers with indigenous raw materials increased, and a substantial rise was achieved in the output of various agricultural chemicals, weed-killers, and other pesticides.

"Funds allocated to the building industry were raised by 80 per cent and plans for the expansion of building-material plants were pushed forward. New textile plants were erected.

"Over the last five years, 21 per cent of capital construction investment had been allocated to the rural sector. Irrigation systems have been established and electricity is now supplied to almost all the villages and to 91.2 per cent of peasant households. The number of tractors per 100 chongbo of arable land reached 1.22 (in terms of 15 h.p. units) at the end of last year.

"Thirteen thousand electric motors and other machines and installations were supplied gratis. Expenditure on social services and cultural activities was increased by 20 per cent and the number of dwelling houses was up by 70 per cent. More funds were also allocated towards public health and education.

"These estimates placed revenue and expenditure for 1969 at 5,995 million won, with revenue 19 per cent higher than the 1968 figure and expenditure up by 24 per cent. Funds for the development of the national economy have been increased by 27 per cent, and the capital construction fund is expected to be 37 per cent higher.

"Engineering is to receive 13.5 per cent allocated to the industrial sector. The Budget envisages a 300 per cent increase in the production of various machine tools, motor vehicles, tractors, electric motors, and generators. There should also be an increase in numbers of large Korean-built excavators, heavy-duty lorries, ships, complex machine tools and precision machines.

"To ease the strain on transport, appropriation for rail improvements has been increased by 50 per cent. The year 1969 will see the completion of the electrification of the railway between Myongchon and Chongchin, and between Pyongyang and Chongchin. Hundreds of kilometres of track will be replaced with rails capable of taking heavy-duty wagons. New rail links will come into operation and rolling stock augmented.

"To boost agricultural production, irrigation systems will be consolidated and a larger proportion of farms mechanized. There will be an increase in the allocation of chemical fertilizers by 20 per cent a chongbo."

Mr. Yun Ki-pok, completing his report, said it was necessary for the economic development of the country that the extractive and power industries be advanced ahead of the other sectors.

He added: "In the coal industry, there is need for more geological surveys and training facilities. Existing mines will have to be enlarged and mechanized.

"There should be a transition in open-cast mining in order to develop and expand small and medium-size collieries on a large scale, and at a pace that should result in more fuel and power to meet the demands of all branches of the economy."

A. Cabinet Re-shuffle: President Park Chung Hee carried out a Cabinet re-shuffle on October 21 in the wake of his landslide victory, with 65.1 per cent supporting him in the national referendum for approval to seek a third term in 1971 (see page 9254).

In the re-shuffle, he removed Mr. Lee Hu Rak as Chief Presidential Secretary and Mr. Kim Hyung Uk as Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

The two posts were filled by the Commerce and Industry Minister, Mr. Kim Chung Yum, and the former Army Chief of Staff, Gen. Kim Key Won, respectively.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Chung Il Kwon, and the Deputy Premier, Mr. Kim Hak Yul, were retained in the 21-member Cabinet.

PAKISTAN

A. Right-wing Political Alliance: The Daily News of Karachi reported on November 1 that two leading Right-wing political leaders had forged an alliance at meetings in London.

They were Sheikh Mujibur Rehman, chief of the East Pakistan Awami League and Mian Mumtaz Mohammed Khan Daultana, a former Chief Minister of Punjab.

The Daily News reported that the alliance had the backing of an influential West Pakistani industrialist and politician, Mr. Yusuf Haroon.

It added that Mr. Mujibur Rehman and Mr. Daultana might approach the former Foreign Minister, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, who was also in London. Mr. Bhutto appeared to have moderated his Leftist leanings to a point where he could ally with the Awami League.

With the Army planning to hold elections by the middle of 1971 and turn the country over to civilian politicians, such an alliance could from the basis of a ruling Right-of centre coalition in Parliament.

TURKEY

A. USA To Return Two Military Bases: It was officially announced in Ankara on October 8 that two American military bases, established on the Black Sea coast within the frame-work of the Atlantic Alliance, would be handed over to Turkey as soon as possible.

The handing over of these bases, with others to follow, was the outcome of an Agreement signed between Turkey and USA in July. This replaced over 50 separate bilateral Agreements signed over the past 20 years.

The Foreign Ministry said that Turkish personnel who would eventually man the bases at Samsun and Trabazon had been selected, and some were already receiving training in USA.

Foreign Ministry sources said that eventually all American-manned bases would be handed over to Turkey. Talks were continuing to fix the details and procedures. Next on the list for transfer were the Cigli Air Base at Izmir and a naval base at Karamusel on the Marmara Sea.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Increased Assistance From China And USSR: Both China and the Soviet Union have pledged increased economic and military assistance to North Viet-Nam.

According to an Agreement signed in Peking on September 27, China undertook to provide North Viet-Nam in 1970 with economic and military aid. The Agreement was signed for North Viet-Nam by the Vice-Premier, Mr. Le Thanh Nghi, and the Chinese Vice-Premier, Mr. Li Hsien-nien, for his country. No other details were given.

In the third week of October, the Soviet Union signed an Agreement to supply North Viet-Nam with wide-ranging military and economic aid "necessary for strengthening defence capacity" and restoring and developing the economy. The aid was to include considerable quantities of food, transport equipment, cotton and fertilizers as well as arms and ammunition.

Mr. Pham Van Dong's Visit To Moscow:

In a Joint Statement issued at the conclusion of Mr. Pham Van Dong's visit to Moscow on October 20, he spoke warmly of Soviet "assistance in all fields to help defeat the United States aggression."

The strongest denunciation of the US war effort in South Viet-Nam came in the sections of the Statement attributed to the North Viet-Namese. But the Soviet Union felt obliged to state that it "resolutely condemns the armed intervention of the United States imperialists in the affairs of South Viet-Nam" and to promise Hanoi "all necessary assistance until the complete victory of their just struggle to liberate the South, defend the North and peacefully re-unify the country."

Moscow also supported Hanoi's demand for the complete and unconditional withdrawal of all US forces from the South.

Unlike the North Viet-Namese, the Soviet side did not condemn the American stand at the Paris peace talks. At the same time, while the Soviet Union seemed to have agreed on a tougher line on the war, the Statement implied that Moscow, in contrast to Peking, did not see success on the battlefield as the only road to a communist victory.

In a speech honouring his North Viet-Namese counterpart, Mr. Pham Van Dong, the Soviet Premier, Mr. A. Kosygin promised support as long as needed "in repelling imperialist aggression."

Mr. Pham Van Dong replied that his talks with the Soviet leaders had shown "splendid results" and the agreement had shown Moscow's will to strengthen its all-round support to North Viet-Nam.

Speculative estimates of Soviet aid suggest something in the neighbourhood of $3,000 million to $4,000 million since the war started.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. Food Losses Through Spoilage And Waste: Staggering statistics of world food losses through spoilage and waste have been given in a booklet Food Losses, The Tragedy....And Some Solutions published by the UN Food And Agriculture Organization in Rome.

Rodents, locusts and other pests take an alarming toll of crops and food lying in warehouses and granaries, cancelling out much of the effort to increase production for expanding populations. In both advanced and developing countries, the problem begins with the land itself.

In Africa the Sahara Desert, already a great wasteland, is steadily encroaching into arable areas along its 6,000-km southern perimeter. Over the last 50 years it had advaned at an annual rate of 1.5 to 10 km largely because of overgrazing and the burning of pastures to speed new growth.

An estimated 15 per cent of the world's agricultural land is affected by wind and water erosion. Torrential rains in the Philippines have damaged up to 75 per cent of the land owned by farmers, while in Somalia 90 per cent of all farmlands have been eroded or are threatened by water rushing down from escarpments in the interior. Poor irrigation methods defeat the purpose for which they were intended.

Burning forests to clear land for subsistence farming has progressively exposed some 50 per cent of the world's exploitable soils to erosion or infertility. In Africa, at least 100 million hectares of tropical forest have disappeared in this way. In Asia 8 million hectares and in Latin America 5-10 million hectares of forest are similarly destroyed annually.

Direct food waste is most evident in destruction by pests, diseases and weeds. One authority has estimated world-wide losses from these sources to total $24,000 million to $48,000 million a year. This includes losses in developed countries too.

In USA, in 1963, it was found that the ravages of insects in fields and stores had nullified the work of a million men, or 10 per cent of the country's farm labour force. Waste of this kind robs hundreds of millions of people of at least a fifth of the food they might be eating. "In more direct human terms, it means that where there might have been enough food for five children to eat properly, one, owing to waste, will starve."

In Latin America, annual crop losses from pests, diseases and weeds have been stated to reach a level of 40 per cent. In Central Africa, 50 per cent of sorghum was found to be eaten by insects during a 12-month storage period. In Asia, a great deal of rice is lost because growers do not find it worthwhile to dry it; losses of this kind have been estimated to approach 3 million tons a year.

Rats, locusts and other predators exact a staggering toll. An outbreak of rats in two Philippine provinces in 1952-54 resulted in losses of 90 per cent in rice, 20-80 per cent in maize, and more than 50 per cent in sugar-cane.

Mishandling of food in shipment and storage also causes untold losses. Birds pecking holes into bags can cause losses of up to 70 per cent of the contents. Poor packing causes both spillage and spoilage.

The booklet in its conclusion stated: "The ultimate object...is to reverse the downward spiral of poverty and waste and turn it into an upward surge of more food for the farmer and fisherman and their families, more for sale, better quality, better living, and—in the country as a whole—more for export, producing a sound economy in which further improvements are possible."

B. IFC Investment In Asia: The International Finance Corporation (IFC), a World Bank affiliate to help private enterprise in developing countries, invested $54 million in Asia and the Middle East during the year ended June, 1969.

According to the IFC annual report, 58 per cent of the Corporation's investments of $92.9 million during the year was allotted to this region and would help to finance projects with a total cost of $262 million.

IFC's largest single investment in its 13-year history was made in Asia during the year. This was a $22.1 million commitment to a $60 million expansion of the Siam Cement Group companies. The Corporation's previous large investment was a $20 million commitment to a Mauretanian copper mine in 1968.

The report said that participations in the IFC commitment to Siam Cement by private banks and other financial institutions had also set a record. Nineteen such participants—in North America, Europe and Asia—took $14.9 million, or 67 per cent of IFC's commitment in Siam Cement, exceeding considerably participations in any previous IFC investment.

The new commitments of $92.9 million in 1969 were in 24 private companies, with project costs—total investments by IFC and others— of $505 million. Commitments during the year were 84 per cent higher than in the previous year and raised total investments by the Corporation's 131 enterprises to $365 million. Project costs of these enterprises totalled $2,165 million or some six times IFC's investment.

Under a new policy, IFC took a more active role in the promotion of development investments in 1969. The Corporation took primary responsibility for organizing a joint venture in cement production in Indonesia, invested in promotional companies in Colombia and Honduras and pioneered in tourism development through a specialised company set up to promote tourism on a countrywide scale in Tunisia.

The innovation in Tunisia—setting up an institution specializing in integrated assistance to a single industry of high developmental potential—is expected to be applicable in other countries and in industries other than tourism as a means of realising the full potential, on a national scale, of a promising industry.

A $15.9 million commitment to the Zuari Agro Chemicals Limited in Goa is IFC's largest single commitment to India. The company will establish a fertilizer plant at a cost of over $70 million. The sponsors of Zuari, the US Steel Corporation and the Birla group of industries, are supplying over 50 per cent of the new company's share capital, which totals $16.6 million. IFC's investment consists of a common share subscription of $3.9 million, a loan of $12.15 million and a contingent commitment for a further $600,000.

C. World Bank Report: According to the latest annual report of the World Bank and its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), released on September 26, commitments by the two lending bodies reached a record level in the fiscal year that ended on June 30.

Assistance to industry, largely made up of loans to development finance companies, amounted to $366 million, or $241 million if an industrial imports credit to India was excluded. The comparable figure of the previous year was $191.5 million.

A comparison of loans and credits by purpose in 1969 with the average over the previuos five years (1964-68) showed that loans and credits for agriculture in 1969 were 198 per cent above the 1964-68 average; for education, 156 per cent up compared with 1964-68; for industry (excluding industrial imports credits), up by 72 per cent; for transportation, up by 32 per cent; for public utilities up by 30 per cent.

A comparison of lending by area in fiscal 1969 with the average over the previous five years showed that lending to Africa in 1969 was 116 per cent above the 1964-68 average; lending to Asia and West Asia rose by 62 per cent compared with 1964-68; lending to the Western Hemisphere by 52 per cent; and lending to Europe by 21 per cent.

The especially high rates of increase during the year, both by area (Africa) and by sector (agriculture and education), reflected the World Bank's priorities as indicated by the President of the World Bank, Mr. Robert S. McNamara, in his speech to the World Bank's Governors on September 30, 1968.

The report noted that the net total flow of resources from the developed to the developing world grew in absolute terms in 1968. There was a sharp rise in private capital investment, but preliminary estimates showed a slight fall in official flows. Official and private flows combined, estimated at $12.8 billion, represented about 3/4 of one per cent of developed countries' combined GNP in 1968.

Commitments during the 1969 fiscal year brought the cumulative total of World Bank and IDA lending to $14,793 million, of which $6,424 million, for 357 projects in 84 countries, had been committed during the last five years.

Loans and credits for agricultural development totalled $367.3 million —more than double the previous year's figure of [172.5 million (itself a record). This included the largest agriculture loan ever made by the World Bank ($65 million for a livestock project in Mexico), the group's first financing in Indonesia, and its first loan for seed production—$13 million—to India.

World Bank and IDA lending for public services amounted to nearly $1,000 million in fiscal 1969. Loans and credits of $474.5 million were made for transportation projects (compared with $247.3 million in 1968), and $485.1 million for public utilities ($317.5 million in 1968), of which $369.8 million was for electric power (1968: $268.5 million), $80.7 million for tele-communications (1968: $27 million) and $34.6 million for water supply and sewer systems (1968: $22 million).

D. Elections To World Court: Five new members were elected to the International Court of Justice at The Hague on October 27.

In simultaneous elections held by the General Assembly and the Security Council, Mr. Jimenez de Arechaga of Uruguay, Mr. Hardy Dillard of the United States, Mr. Platon D. Morozov of the Soviet Union, Mr. Federico de Castro of Spain and Mr. Ignacio-Pinto of Dahomey were declared elected, having secured an absolute majority of votes in the Assembly and the Security Council.

While the five successful candidates got an absolute majority of 65 votes on the first ballot in the Assembly, it required six ballots in the Security Council to resolve the tie for the fifth seat, Mr. Ignacio-Pinto winning on the sixth.

In the Council, on the first ballot, Dr. Nagendra Singh of India, the Thai Foreign Minister, Mr. T. Khoman and Mr. Ignacio-Pinto got four votes each and the UN legal counsel and a Greek national, Mr. Stavropoulos, three. On the second, third and fourth ballots, Dr. Singh was leading with six, Mr. Ignacio-Pinto got four, Mr. Khoman three and Mr. Stavropoulos two. On the fifth ballot, Mr. Ignacio-Pinto took a lead with seven votes, Dr. Singh got five, Mr. Khoman one and Mr. Stavropoulos two. On the sixth ballot, Mr. Ignacio-Pinto got nine votes and Dr. Singh got six votes.

In the Assembly, on the first ballot, while Mr. Ignacio-Pinto got 69 votes, Dr. Singh 62 votes.

The ultimate result was somewhat a surprise and appeared to be the outcome of a deal between the South American nations and the Spanish and African nations to protect each other's candidate.

The new judges replaced for nine-year terms Mr. Philip C Jessup of USA, Mr. J. L. Bustamante y. Rivero of Peru, Mr. V. M. Koretsky of the Soviet Union, Mr. G. Morelli of Italy and Mr. K. Tanaka of Japan.

Dr. Nagendra Singh's failure to secure election to the World Court was interpreted in New Delhi as the unfortunate result of two Asian countries—India and Thailand—competing with each other in a world forum, only to benefit third parties.

Initial reaction in Delhi was inclined to accept reports that the Latin American and African groups had combined to deprive India of a seat on the World Court which was, by convention, Asia's. Besides, US support for Thailand had played a role in the Indian candidate's defeat. This, however, could have come as no surprise to India because Washington had officially informed New Delhi of its decision to support the Thai candidate in view of its special relations with that country.

E. Elections To International Atomic Energy Agency: Pakistan and South Viet-Nam were elected to represent Asia on the Board of Governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) Conference which concluded its 13th session in Vienna on September 29.

The session also approved the IAEA Budget for 1970, re-appointed Mr. Sigvard Eklund as Director-General of IAEA, and adopted a resolution regarding the Agency's responsibility in connexion with the use of nuclear explosives for peaceful purposes.

The regular Budget amounted to $12,250,000. In addition, a target was again set at $2 million for voluntary contributions for technical assistance which, together with the income for special purposes, would make a total of $14,837,000, as compared to the previous year's budget of $13,763,000.

Board Of Governors:

The following were elected to the Board of Governors for two years: Uruguay (Latin America), Hungary (Eastern Europe), Nigeria and Morocco (Africa and West Asia), Pakistan (South Asia), South Viet-Nam (Far East) and Spain (member-at-large).

Those countries whose terms of office had expired included Algeria, Bulgaria, Ceylon, Malagasy, Peru, the Philippines and Turkey.

CEYLON

A. IDA Assistance: A credit equivalent to $2.5 million from the International Development Association (IDA) to finance a drainage and flood control works in Ceylon was announced in Washington on October 31.

The project will also increase the income of 10,000 farmers and improve Ceylon's balance of payments position through savings on rice imports.

[Agriculture is the largest single sector in the economy of Ceylon. It accounts for over one-third of the gross domestic product, 90 per cent of foreign exchange earnings (mainly tea, rubber and coconuts), and employs more than half the population. In recent years about half of the total imports has been accounted for by food, mainly rice, and Government policy has been to reduce the need for food imports by increasing production at home. This policy has met with considerable success in the last two or three years. Between 1962 and 1968 the acreage planted to rice has increased by 13 per cent and yields have risen by 22 per cent. There has also been a marked increase in the production of subsidiary food crops.]

The project being assisted by the IDA credit is part of the Government's programme to increase rice production. The works to be undertaken will be located in six non-contiguous areas along the south-western coast. Agricultural production in the areas is now limited and uncertain because of poor drainage and frequent flooding. The works to be undertaken involve an improvement of drainage by deepening, enlarging and extending the system, improvement of drainage outlets to the sea, and construction of levees with control structures.

The total estimated cost is equivalent to $4.1 million. The IDA credit of $2.5 million will cover approximately 60 per cent of the total, and the remainder will be met by the Government. The Irrigation Department, an agency within the Ministry of Land, Irrigation and Power, will be responsible for the execution of the project.

The IDA credit to the Government will be for a term of 50 years, including a 10-year grace period. It will be interest-free, but a service charge of 3/4 of one per cent will be made to cover IDA's administrative costs.

The Food and Agriculture Organization of United Nations assisted in the identification and appraisal of the project under the Bank-FAO Cooperative Programme.

B. Government Take-over Of Schools In Plantations: The Government accepted in the House of Representatives on November 5 a private member's motion calling for early steps for State take-over of all schools in tea plantation areas.

The Lower House adopted the motion unanimously and thus conceded a long-standing demand of the Indian estate labour for integration of their schooling system with the national educational scheme.

At present, schools in the plantation areas are run by the estate owners and are ill-equipped, unhygienically maintained and staffed mostly by unqualified teachers.

The motion, tabled by Mr. K. P. Ratnam and seconded by Mr. A. Amrithalingham, both of the Federal Party of Tamils, will ensure for the children of the estate labour free education and the same curricula as those adopted by the rest of the schools in the Island.

SUMMARY: Mrs. I. Gandhi Expelled From Congress Party—Split In Organization; Two Central Ministers Resign; Mr. Pal Losonczi's Visit; Presentation Of Nehru Award.

A. Mrs. I. Gandhi Expelled From Congress Party—Split Complete: The Congress Party formally split on November 12 when Mr. S. Nijalingappa's half of the Congress Working Committee expelled Mrs. Indira Gandhi from the party and directed the Congress Parliamentary Party to immediately elect a new leader.

Before the Working Committee passed a resolution removing Mrs. Gandhi from the primary membership of the Congress, a fresh compromise bid was made by Mr. C. B. Gupta, despite the collapse of unity efforts by him and other Party Chief Ministers on November 11. But this did not produce any results and the Working Committee decided to proceed against Mrs. Gandhi for "deliberately" defying its decision and for actively sponsoring the setting up of a rival Working Committee and a rival A-ICC and "by her other actions and attitudes, spreading indiscipline in the Congress."

The meeting, presided over by Mr. Nijalingappa, was attended by ten other members. It lasted about three hours. Although the resolution, which was a strong indictment of Mrs. Gandhi and her supporters, was finalized by the Committee at its meeting on November 11, it decided to defer action against Mrs. Gandhi pending the outcome of the unity efforts by the Congress Chief Ministers initiated by Mr. Mohan Lal Sukhadia. Since both sides had adopted rigid postures, the Chief Ministers' meeting proved yet another abortive attempt to bring the two warring factions together.

As the Working Committee was in progress on November 12 discussing the draft resolution, Mr. C. B. Gupta and the Chief Minister of Gujarat, Mr. Hitendra Desai, left the meeting for talks with Mr. Sukhadia who was acting as the spokesman of Mrs. Gandhi's group. They returned to the Working Committee disappointed as there was no meeting ground between the two camps.

Characterizing Mrs. Gandhi's removal from the primary membership of the Party as the "saddest moment in the history of the Congress," the Working Committee said in another resolution that it was an hour of self-introspection. "Let not the future historian say of us that in the hour of peril, both to the Congress and the nation, we wavered and faltered in our loyalty to the great organization to which we all have the honour to belong."

It warned all loyal Congressmen that the immediate future would be one of trials and tribulations and they had to be vigilant and prepared for whatever sacrifices that might be demanded of them to maintain the integrity of the organization.

In the first resolution, which was originally drafted by Mr. Morarji Desai, the Working Committee said that Congress was badly split, with indiscipline indulged in by Mrs. Gandhi and some of her colleagues. The Committee, however, in its anxiety to maintain the unity of the Party for the sake of democracy and the country, condoned this indiscipline. But, the hope entertained at the time of passing the August 25 Unity Resolution had been shattered by subsequent events.

The Working Committee referred to the campaign launched for ousting the Congress President and said it was inspired and organized by Mrs. Gandhi and her colleagues. It was significant that barring a few exceptions, all Ministers, whether at the Centre or in the States where the Chief Ministers fell in line with the leading organizers, put their signatures to the document. Pressure tactics and other influences had brought reluctant signatures from other A-ICC members who signed the document.

Such a thing had never happened in the Congress' history before. In the event of differences between the Prime Minister and the Congress President in the past, talks and discussions at the top level were enough to bring about the desired results. But in the present case, the entire organization was exposed to false and misleading propaganda and "pressurized" to toe a particular line. This was not a situation which the Working Committee, charged with the responsibility of maintaining the dignity and discipline of the Party, could view with equanimity.

Mr. Nijalingappa took some steps to maintain the dignity of the Working Committee and removed Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed and Mr. S. D. Sharma from the Committee. Mr. C. Subramaniam had ceased to function as a member of the Committee when he ceased to be a member of the A-ICC.

Mrs. Gandhi and some other members not only boycotted the Working Committee on November 1 and 2, but held their own separate meetings and questioned the authority of the legally-constituted Working Committee and refused to abide by its decisions.

While the Working Committee declared that the requisitioned A-ICC meeting was unconstitutional, Mrs. Gandhi and her colleagues had sponsored such a meeting to consider a proposition declared out of order by the Working Committee. "A parallel Working Committee and parallel A-ICC are patent and grave acts of indiscipline."

The Working Committee endorsed the stand taken by Mr. Nijalingappa in his letter to Mrs. Gandhi on October 28. In her reply, Mrs. Gandhi had defended her "illegal act" in convening a special A-ICC session and refused to recognize the authority of the Working Committee.

It said that this stand of Mrs. Gandhi was in keeping with her conduct at the time of the Presidential election, the tenor of her public pronouncements on her position as Prime Minister, her constant denigration of the Party, her tendency to divide Congressmen, her peculiar attitude to the question of discipline, her basic and overriding desire to concentrate all power in her hands so that her colleagues were her nominees in any offices they might occupy.

This spelt grave danger to the democratic functioning of the Party. The Working Committee was, therefore, "regretfully" obliged to remove Mrs. Gandhi from the primary membership of the Party. With her removal, the resolution said, she ceased to be the leader of the Congress Party in Parliament.

Ten of the 11 supporters of Mr. Nijalingappa were present. The Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister, Mr. C. B. Gupta, arrived 40 minutes after the meeting began. Those present at the meeting, besides Mr. Nijalingappa and Mr. Sadiq Ali, were: Mr. P. Venkatasubbaiah, Mr. Atulya Ghosh, Mr. Hitendra Desai, Dr. Ram Subhag Singh, Mr. S. K. Patil, Mr. Morarji Desai, Mr. Kamaraj, Mr. K. C. Abraham and Mr. C. B. Gupta.

Texts Of Working Committee's Resolutions:

The following is the text of the resolution expelling Mrs. Gandhi from the Congress:

"The Working Committee has given deep thought to the painful situation resulting from a series of developments in the recent past in connexion with the maintenance of discipline in the Congress organization. The public conduct of Congressmen has always been subject to certain well-defined rules and procedures and some well-established conventions. Violation of these rules and procedures particularly by Congressmen occupying leading positions can have ruinous consequences for the organization as well as the country. We saw convincing evidence of this at the time of the Presidential election. The Congress was badly split with indiscipline indulged in by the Prime Minister and some of her colleagues. There was insistent demand by many sections of Congressmen for action to be taken to deal with a grave act of indiscipline. The Working Committee in its anxiety to maintain the unity of the Party for the sake of democracy and the country condoned this indiscipline. Many members of the Working Committee and other Congressmen were not happy with this condonation, but there was a feeling of relief that the unity of the Party even at a heavy price was saved.

"The hope entertained at the time of passing the unity resolution has, however, been rudely shattered by subsequent events. The Prime Minister launched a campaign against the Congress organization, especially at its top level, holding it mainly responsible for whatever ills the country was afflicted with and slowness in the implementation of radical Congress policies embodied in the resolutions of the Working Committee and the A-ICC. It was propagated that to speed up the implementation of Congress policies, it was necessary to have greater harmony between the parliamentary wing and the Congress organization. The word harmony is a misnomer for dominance and the desire to capture the Congress machinery first at the top level and then at other levels.

"To achieve this objective a signature campaign was launched for ousting the Congress President. The campaign was inspired and organized by the Prime Minister and her colleagues. The A-ICC members in various States left to themselves would have thought of no such move, but the picture changed when the inspiration came from the top and from persons occupying high Ministerial positions. It is, therefore, significant that barring a few exceptions, all Ministers, whether at the Centre or in States where the Chief Ministers fell in line with the leading organizers, put their signatures to the document. Pressure tactics and other influences brought reluctant signatures from many other A-ICC members who signed the document.

"Such a thing has never happened in the history of the Congress before. In the event of differences between the Prime Minister and the Congress President, talks and discussions at the top level were enough to bring about the desired result. But in the present case, the entire organization was exposed to false and misleading propaganda and pressurized to toe a particular line.

"This is not a situation the Working Committee, charged with the responsibility of maintaining the dignity and discipline of the Congress organization can view with equanimity. The Congress President took some steps to maintain the dignity of the Working Committee and removed for reasons which are now public knowledge two members from the Working Committee. A third ceased to function as a member of the Working Committee when he ceased to be a member of the A-ICC. The Prime Minister and some other members of the Working Committee in protest not only did not attend the meeting of the Working Committee held on November 1 and 2, 1969 but held their own separate meetings and questioned the authority of the legally constituted Working Committee and refused to abide by its decisions. While the Working Committee declared that the requisitioned meeting of the A-ICC was unconstitutional, the Prime Minister and her colleagues in defiance of the Working Committee's decision sponsored the requisitioned meeting for considering a proposition which has been declared out of order by the Working Committee. A parallel Working Committee and a parallel A-ICC are patent and grave acts of indiscipline.

"The Working Committee is grateful to the Congress President for his letter to the Prime Minister, dated October 28, 1969. The Working Committee endorses what has been said in that letter because it puts the case of the Working Committee in its proper sequence and perspective. The Congress President wrote to the Prime Minister requesting her to explain her reported association with the move to convene an illegal and unconstitutional meeting of the A-ICC in violation of the Party constitution and the decision of the Working Committee. In her reply which has been published the Prime Minister defended her illegal act and refused to recognize the authority of the Working Committee.

"This stand of the Prime Minister is in keeping with her conduct at the tenor of her public pronouncements on her position as the Prime Minister of India, her constant denigration of the Congress organization, her tendency to divide Congressmen among those who are her supporters and those who are not her supporters, her peculiar attitude to questions of discipline, her basic and overriding desire to concentrate all power in her hands so that her colleagues are her nominees in any offices they might occupy. This spells a grave danger to the democratic functioning of the Congress organization. The Working Committee is, therefore, regretfully obliged to remove Mrs. Indira Gandhi from the primary membership of the Congress for her deliberate act of defiance of the decision of the Working Committee and for actively sponsoring the setting up of a rival Working Committee and a rival A-ICC and by her other attitudes and actions spreading indiscipline in the Congress organization.

"With the removal from membership of the Congress, Mrs. Indira Gandhi ceases to be the leader of the Congress Party in Parliament. The Working Committee directs the Congress Party in Parliament to take necessary steps immediately to elect a new leader."

In another resolution, the Working Committee said:

"The Congress Working Committee has taken a decision today removing Mrs. Gandhi, Prime Minister of India, from the primary membership of the Congress. This is the saddest moment in the history of the Congress.

"'Ever since the Bangalore session of the A-ICC in July, 1969, there has been a continuous chain of unhappy events causing anxiety and pain to millions of Congressmen whose loyalty to the organization has been its greatest source of strength. The Working Committee had to choose between Mrs. Gandhi and everything that the Congress stood for; and it has rightly decided in favour of the latter.

"The Working Committee warns all loyal Congressmen that the immediate future will be one of trials and tribulations and they have to be vigilant and prepared for whatever sacrifices that may be demanded of them to maintain the integrity of the organization. The greatest of national heroes have given all they had to build this great organization. They have also shown us the path of unity, discipline and strength.

"The people of this generation owe a deep debt of gratitude to them and the nation. In the hour of peril we must not falter, whatever the cost we will have to pay. The Congress Working Committee has no doubt that in the end truth will prevail over falsehood and we shall be vindicated for what we were compelled to do today.

"This is an hour for self-introspection. Let not the future historian say of us that in the hour of peril both to the Congress and the nation we wavered and faltered in our loyalty to the great organization to which we all have the honour to belong. The Working Committee expects all Congressmen to stand by the organization and vindicate its honour and dignity."

Statement By Mrs. I. Gandhi's Supporters:

The following is the text of the statement issued by Mrs. Gandhi's supporters on November 12 after her expulsion:

"The Indian National Congress is facing the gravest crisis in its long history. An extraordinary and unprecedented step has been taken by Mr. Nijalingappa and some members of the Working Committee seeking to remove the Prime Minister from the primary membership of the Congress and declaring that as a consequence of such removal she has ceased to be the leader of the Congress Party in Parliament, in which capacity she holds the position of Prime Minister of the country. This action is not only illegal as per the rules and regulations of the Congress organization and the Congress Parliamentary Party, but this is a disastrous move with far-reaching political and constitutional implications.

"The Congress Party in Parliament consists of democratically elected representatives of the people according to the constitution and law of the land. The Party has its own constitution and rules of procedure. The leader of the Party is elected by the Parliamentary Party and such a leader having the confidence of Parliament, becomes the Prime Minister. Mrs. Indira Gandhi continues to be the leader of the Party unless the Party expresses no confidence in the leader.

"As long as she continues to enjoy the support of Parliament, she is entitled to function as the Prime Minister. It will be the saddest day for Indian democracy if a small group of men, without even having the mandate of the organization for this purpose, should dare take a step with a view to displacing a Prime Minister. This is against all canons of Parliamentary democracy. It is our considered view that these gentlemen have no legal or political authority to remove the Prime Minister of the country representing the 550 million of its people.

"Democracy and discipline within the Congress organization have been reduced to a mockery by a small coterie equating itself to the entire organization. Otherwise, the disastrous and rash move is inexplicable. As a matter of fact, it was this same dictatorial attitude by a handful of men which led to the many unfortunate developments weakening the organization in various States. Instead of mending their ways and allowing the democratic processes to prevail within the organization, they have continued their reckless march as party bosses, leading to the present crisis.

"It is a fact that more than 400 members of the A-ICC have called for a meeting of the A-ICC to consider the question whether the present Congress President should continue in office after the expiry of his normal term. Instead of acceding to this reasonable demand of a majority of the members of the A-ICC, all sorts of unfounded imputations have been made against those who have signed the requisition.

"This can hardly be the attitude of responsible leaders of a political organization that the majority of the members of the A-ICC have no mind of their own. Without the least concern for its implications, because charges have been made that the Congress Chief Ministers and Ministers have abused their position to influence members of the A-ICC which is the apex and supreme body in the Congress organization. If this attitude is projected to its logical limit, any decision of the Party can be discarded as having been brought about by undue influence by men in authority. It is unfortunate that a step taken in accordance with the provisions of the Congress constitution should have been considered an act of indiscipline and made the excuse to remove the Prime Minister from the Party. It will be hard to find a precedent for this in any part of the world.

"The resolution proposed by the requisitionists for consideration by the All-India Congress Committee has been interpreted as a censure motion against the Congress President and on that ground it was ruled out of order. It would be a distortion to describe the resolution as a motion of censure. If it is considered so, it was all the more necessary and proper for the President, as head of a democratic political party, to call the meeting to ascertain the opinion of the members, whether the President still retained the confidence of the All-India Congress Committee.

"Many misleading statements have been made in the resolution seeking to expel the Prime Minister to confuse the public and Congressmen.

"We want to state categorically that the action taken by Mr. Nijalingappa and his associates is illegal and of no validity. The Prime Minister continues to be a member of the Congress organization and continues to be the leader of the Congress Parliamentary Party. This is not merely on the basis of the technicalities of rules and regulations, but on the solid basis that she has the support of a large majority of the Congress Parliamentary Party and an overwhelming majority of Congressmen all over the country. More than anything else, she today represents the aspirations of millions of our countrymen who acknowledge her as the leader of the nation. It is presumptuous on the part of these handful of men to take disciplinary action against the democratically elected leader of the people.

"Members of the Congress have a special responsibility in this hour of crisis. We have to do some clear thinking and take some hard decisions. Here are men who are prepared to bypass the organization, afraid of facing the party forum, arrogating to themselves the authority to stifle the legitimate voice of party organs and indiscriminately removing, even where they have no authority, those who do not toe their line. Are we to submit to them or cleanse the organization of these undemocratic and fascist practices?

"The requisitioned A-ICC meeting gets an added significance and importance today and the members will be called upon to take many crucial decisions affecting the future of our party. We, therefore, request every A-ICC member to be present in Delhi on November 22 and 23 and participate in this historic meeting of the A-ICC to chart the future course of this great organization."

Congress Chief Ministers' Efforts Fail—Mr. M. L. Sukhadia's Statement:

The Congress Chief Ministers' talks in search of a formula to reconcile the warring Congress factions ended in failure at 1-50 a.m. on November 12, with Mr. M. L. Sukhadia confessing that although various ideas had been discussed during their talks extending over 6½ hours, agreement could not be reached on any formula.

Mr. Mohan Lal Sukhadia, Chief Minister of Rajasthan, who had convened a meeting of the Congress Chief Ministers in New Delhi on November 11 in a bid to avert the crisis in the Congress, said it was unfortunate that their proposals had been turned down by the Congress President and his supporters.

In a statement, he said: "The Chief Ministers had protracted meetings on November 11 to find a formula to resolve the crisis in the party. Consultations between the Chief Ministers were continued on November 12 also.

"The following formula emerged as the most acceptable one, even though three of the Chief Ministers —Uttar Pradesh, Mysore and Gujarat—had some reservations regarding the third point in the formula.

"The formula consisted of:

(1) The general A-ICC meeting agenda will include a review of the Faridabad Working Committee resolution on organizational elections. The A-ICC will decide the future course of action in this matter.

(2) In view of this, (a) the requisition meeting of the A-ICC will be given up; and (b) no steps shall be taken either at the organizational level or at the parliamentary level, which are likely to adversely affect the unity of the Party.

(3) The charges against Mrs. Gandhi contained in the Congress President's letters of October 28, November 2 and 3 shall be withdrawn. There shall be mutual discussions between the two sides to smoothen out difficulties and remove misunderstandings.

"The formula was put to the Congress President and his supporters through Mr. C. B. Gupta, making an earnest appeal that this proposal should be accepted by both the sides.

"Unfortunately, this has been turned down by the Congress President and his supporters. Our only satisfaction is that we tried our best to avert the crisis."

The Formula That Failed:

The Working Committee's firm refusal to withdraw the charges made by Mr. S. Nijalingappa against Mrs. Gandhi in his letter of October 23 became the issue on which the peace efforts finally failed on November 12. A settlement was almost in sight when the break came.

A four-point formula worked out by the Congress Chief Ministers at their discussions on the night of November 11 and subsequently next morning was to have been the basis of a rapprochement.

It envisaged: (a) the cancellation of the Working Committee meeting on November 12 and the meeting of the Parliamentary Party on November 13; (b) cancellation of the special A-ICC session called by Mrs. Gandhi on November 22 and 23 on the assurance that the Faridabad resolution postponing organizational elections would be reviewed at the A-ICC session in Gujarat in December, 1969; (c) no steps to be taken by either side at the parliamentary or organizational levels which may affect unity adversely; and (d) mutual discussions between the two sides to smoothen out differences and remove misunderstanding arising out of various charges levelled against each other. Discussions were to start forthwith.

Party Elections:

The formula implied that the Gujarat A-ICC session in December, 1969 would decide the modalities of new organizational elections on which the two sides were sharply divided. Mrs. Gandhi and her supporters wanted elections from the PCC level upwards, while Mr. Nijalingappa and his friends insisted on elections at all levels.

The formula said nothing on the touchy issue of the re-instatement of Cabinet Ministers or members of the Working Committee who had been removed. This was to be tackled through "mutual discussions," which were to be conducted by a six-member team consisting of three representatives each to be nominated by Mrs. Gandhi and Mr. Nijalingappa.

Withdrawal Of Charges Against Mrs. Gandhi Main Hurdle:

The Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa told a news conference in New Delhi on November 12 that the demand for withdrawal of the charge-sheet against Mrs. Gandhi was not in the Chief Ministers' formula as originally brought to the Working Committee on the morning of November 12.

He said that the Working Committee had already approved the formula as brought by Mr. Hitendra Desai and Mr. C. B. Gupta when a telephone call was received asking for the inscription of the demand for withdrawal of the charge-sheet in the formula. He declined to identify the caller.

He said that the demand for the inclusion of an additional condition for the start of talks aimed at ending misunderstanding among Congress leaders was not acceptable to the Working Committee.

Mr. Sadiq Ali, Congress General Secretary, explained: "There was no question of our agreeing to the withdrawal of the charge-sheet because we had already said there will be mutual discussion between the two sides and these charges would come up during this discussions. There cannot be an agreement beforehand on withdrawing these charges."

Subsequently, he added, a further suggestion came that the charges against both the Prime Minister and the Congress President should be withdrawn. This too was not acceptable to the Working Committee.

When a reporter said that Mr. Sukhadia had stated that withdrawal of the charge-sheet was part of the formula from the beginning, Mr. Sadiq Ali said: "It was not there in the formula brought to us by Mr. C. B. Gupta and Mr. Hitendra Desai."

Mr. Nijalingappa said that if the Prime Minister's supporters had not insisted on withdrawal of the charge-sheet, "we could have had a heart-to-heart discussion about everything."

He personally would not say that his letters had made any "charges" as such against "complaints" listed chronologically about what had happened in recent months.

He thought that the telephone call asking for inscription of the charge-sheet withdrawal in the formula was "probably made after Mrs. Gandhi intervened."

Expulsion Order Ignored:

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Gandhi, decided on November 12 to ignore the Congress Working Committee's "illegal" action against her and face the open challenge to her leadership within the Party and in Parliament.

Mrs. Gandhi was backed in her resolve by seven of her senior colleagues and seven Congress Chief Ministers, besides a large number of Congress Members of Parliament.

The decision to fight it out with the Syndicate was announced to newsmen after a high-level meeting on November 12.

The meeting was attended by Mr. Y. B. Chavan, Mr. Jagjivan Ram, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Sardar Swaran Singh, Mr. Satya Narayan Sinha, Mr. P. Govinda Menon and Mr. K. Raghuramaiah, all Ministers in the Central Government.

The seven Chief Ministers who attended the meeting were: Mr. M. L. Sukhadia, Mr. V. P. Naik, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, Mr. B. P. Chaliha, Mr. G. M. Sadiq, Mr. S. C. Shukla and Dr. Y. S. Parmar.

The special invitees to the meeting including Mr. C. Subramaniam, Mr. D. Sanjivayya, Mr. D. P. Mishra, Mr. G. L. Nanda and Dr. S. D. Sharma.

In a strongly worded resolution adopted at the end of their meeting, Mrs. Gandhi's supporters denounced the decision of the Congress President as "a disastrous move" with far-reaching political and constitutional implications.

They decided that the Working Committee's resolution removing Mrs. Gandhi from the primary membership of the Congress Party must be ignored and declared that Mrs. Gandhi was entitled to function as Prime Minister "as long as she continues to enjoy the support of Parliament."

As regards her party leadership, the meeting expressed the view that the Working Committee's action had no validity and Mrs. Gandhi continued to be the Leader of the Parliamentary Party until the Party expressed no confidence in her.

CPP Re-affirms Confidence In Mrs. Indira Gandhi:

On November 13, the Congress Parliamentary Party, with about 250 members present, passed a resolution re-affirming confidence in Mrs. Gandhi's leadership.

The resolution said: "The Congress Parliamentary Party hereby declares that the decision of Mr. Nijalingappa and his associates to remove Mrs. Gandhi from the primary membership of the Congress is invalid and unjustified, Mrs. Gandhi continues to be the leader of the Party and enjoys support and confidence of the Party."

Rules For Expulsion:

Clause 16 of the Congress Parliamentary Party (CPP) constitution lays down the procedure for the removal of any "office-bearer or Minister."

It says: "In the event of not less than 25 members of the Party sending notice of no-confidence against any of the office-bearers of the Party or against the Government or against any members thereof for consideration by the Party, a special general meeting of the Party shall be held after giving at least ten days' notice, and the motion shall be deemed to have been passed only when two-thirds of the members present vote in its favour by secret ballot."

The CPP constitution (clause 6-b) requires that "the election of the leader shall be for the full term of Parliament." But it is silent on the removal of the leader of the party. The contingency is covered by application of clause 16 to the leader in his or her capacity as an office-bearer or a Minister.

Any directive to the Parliamentary wing of the Party from the organizational authority for the removal of the Parliamentary Party leader is also not explicitly provided in the CPP constitution.

However, the "pledge" which every person is required to sign to qualify for membership or associate membership of the Party commits him to abide by the rules and directions of the organizational authority.

The pledge says: "I declare that I will follow the principles and policy laid down by the Congress or by any competent authority on its behalf and will conform to the rules and directions duly issued from time to time, as well as to the instructions issued by the party organization in Parliament for the guidance of the members thereof."

In fact, the pledge goes to the extent of getting an undertaking from every member to resign his seat "whenever called upon to do so by a competent Congress authority."

In deciding to expel Mrs. Gandhi from the Congress primary membership, the Working Committee seems to have acted under clause f (iv) of Article 19 of the Indian National Congress. The provision empowers the Working Committee to take "such disciplinary action as it may deem fit against a Committee, other than the A-ICC, or any individual."

It has also relied on Rules 4 and 6 relating to breach of discipline and punishment.

Breach of discipline under Rule 4 includes "deliberately acting or carrying on propaganda against the programmes and decisions of the Congress and deliberately disregarding rules or disobeying orders passed by any competent authority."

Rule 6 stipulates punishment for various bodies and individuals. It says:

"(a) In the case of a Congress Committee, supersession of such a Committee and such other action against offending individual members as may be necessary.

"(b) In the case of an office-bear*er or member of any Congress Committee, his removal from office or membership and the fixation of a period during which he cannot be elected or nominated to any office or membership in any Committee or enrolled as primary member.*

"(c) In the case of a primary or active member, his removal from membership and disqualification from membership for a specified period.

"Provided that if any person against whom disciplinary action has been taken and punishment awarded, as a member of any local body, legislature, Parliament or holds any other position by virtue of his being a Congressman, he may also be called upon to resign from such bodies."

The Working Committee's decision on Mrs. Gandhi, however, does not specify the duration of her expulsion.

Legal Opinion Cited In Favour Of Mrs. I. Gandhi:

Legal experts in Mrs. Gandhi's camp asserted on November 5 that even after her expulsion by the Working Committee, Mrs. Gandhi remained a member of the Congress Parliamentary Party.

They said that under the Congress Parliamentary Party's rules, a member of the Party was one returned to Parliament on the Congress ticket. The Prime Minister, who was the leader of the Party in Parliament "does not lose this position unless a no-confidence motion is passed."

They said that once the party ticket was given after scrutiny by the Central Election Committee and the candidate was elected to Parliament, the only body who had authority over the member was the Parliamentary Party.

They said that under Article XII (E) of the Congress constitution, the leader of the Congress Party in Parliament was a member of the A-ICC. "From this, it would follow that any action taken (against Mrs. Gandhi) will be ineffective. This may sustain the argument that the Working Committee or the Congress President has no power to take action against Mrs. Gandhi. "As declared in the Working Committee's Unity Resolution (August 25), Mrs. Gandhi is supreme in the parliamentary sphere."

Offer Of Deputy Prime Ministership To Mr. S. Nijalingappa Denied:

On November 9, the External Affairs Minister, Mr. Dinesh Singh, denied that he had offered the Deputy Prime Ministership to the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa.

In a statement, Mr. Dinesh Singh said: "I am sorry that Mr. Nijalingappa continues to misrepresent facts about my meeting with him. I have incontrovertible proof that the suggestion came from the side of the Congress President. I am also amazed to see the headlines in The Statesman newspaper regarding the offer of Deputy Prime Ministership to Mr. Nijalingappa. I had made no such offer to either Mr. Nijalingappa or his son-in-law (Mr. Rajasekharan)."

On the other hand, Mr. Nijalingappa told newsmen that both Mr. Rajasekharan, who is a member of the Lok Sabha, and Mr. Veerendra Patil, Chief Minister of Mysore, had informed him of the offer "last Saturday (November 8) night."

He said it was true that Mr. Dinesh Singh himself did not mention this offer to him when they met on the night of November 6. And, he added, he would not have met Mr. Dinesh Singh had either Mr. Rajasekharan or Mr. Patil conveyed the offer to him prior to the meeting. "This shows", Mr. Nijalingappa said, "to what depths of cynicism they have descended. I am very angry."

Mrs. I. Gandhi's Letter To A-ICC Members:

In a hard-hitting six-page letter to the members of the A-ICC, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, declared on November 8: "I do not want a split in our great national organization which has to fulfil its promises by building up a new society." She added, however, that she wanted unity which was a unity on principle and on method of work.

She explained that to speak of socialism and secularism and to vote for these in meetings but to have a public image of association with those who were opposed to these objectives was no service to the Congress.

She said that in the name of things, a national debate on issues at stake and the competing points of view could not be carried on without some pain and emotional disturbance, but the need for the debate was inescapable. No one could stifle it.

She pointed out that the basic issue in the conflict must be separated from other issues which, though important, were secondary. That basic issue was whether the democratic process should prevail in the Congress or not.

She said that in his last years her father, Pandit Nehru, was greatly concerned that the Congress was moving away from the people and that there were people inside the Congress who were offering resistance to change. Her own experience even before the fourth General Elections was that the forces of the status quo with close links with powerful economic interests were ranged against her.

She alleged that arrogant use of authority had made some people resign from the Congress or retire from active work. It also discouraged fresh streams of young workers from flowing into the Congress. Recently, the tendency to acquire factional control of the organization had become more intense. This was linked up with the desire to control the direction of Government policy and economic life in line with the narrow purposes and interests of a limited section.

Giving the background to the present crisis, she pointed out that within the Congress there had been a group which did not have total faith in the Party's objectives. She alleged that people of this group paid only lip service to these ideals because they knew that if they expressed their reservations openly they would lose the power and influence they had derived from the Party.

She explained that this was not a new phenomenon. It had existed in the Party through the last 22 years and even before. She knew that this group had constantly tried to check and frustrate Pandit Nehru's attempt to bring about far-reaching economic and social changes. The Congress was moulded by Mahatma Gandhi and Pandit Nehru to be the prime instrument of social change. The acceptance of office and of responsibility of Government was after all to bring about this non-violent revolution in society.

Strength Of Mrs. I. Gandhi's Group:

After a meeting of the Parliamentary Party on November 16, it was stated that Mrs. Indira Gandhi's group would have a strength of 210 in the Lok Sabha and 104 in the Rajya Sabha.

The meeting was attended by 293 Party members. At the end of the meeting, nine were admitted to the Party as full or associate members. Twelve members, who could not be present, had sent letters conveying their support to Mrs. Gandhi.

Those admitted to full membership of the Party were: Swami Brahmanand, Mr. A. K. Kisku, Mr. P. R. Thakur (all of the Lok Sabha), Mr. H. R. Bachchan, Prof. Nurul Hasan, Mr. G. Ramachandran and Mr. N. P. Chowdhury (all Rajya Sabha).

Mr. Diyabhai Peshwar and Mr. Solanki who had resigned from the Swatantra Party were given associate membership.

Those who were unable to attend were: Mr. K. Hanumanthaiaya, Mr. Kota Punnaiah, Mr. R. M. Hajarnavis, Mrs. Sushila Rohtagi, Mr. A. K. Sen, Mr. Aghar Husain, Babasaheb Sevnekar, Mr. P. C. Goswami, Maharaja Devendra Vijaya Singh, Maharaja Manavendra Shah of Tehri Garhwal, and Mr. Avdhesh Chandra Singh.

Mr. S. Zulfiquar Ali Khan, Lok Sabha member, resigned from the Swatantra Party. He would sit in Parliament as an Independent member.

Mr. S. Nijalingappa's Group Meeting—Strength Assessed:

At a meeting of the members of Parliament belonging to Mr. S. Nijalingappa's group, also on November 16, Mr. Morarji Desai was unanimously elected Chairman of the group in the Congress Parliamentary Party.

The meeting also decided to have two separate leaders—Dr. Ram Subhag Singh for Lok Sabha and Mr. Shyam Nandan Mishra for Rajya Sabha—and two Deputy Leaders.

Dr. D. S. Raju, a former Central Deputy Health Minister, will be the Deputy Leader of the Party in Lok Sabha and a former Central Minister of State for Co-operation, Mr. M. S. Gurupadaswamy, the Deputy Leader in Rajya Sabha.

According to Mr. Nijalingappa, 111 members of Parliament attended the meeting—65 from Lok Sabha and 46 from Rajya Sabha. Ten more members, five from each House, also had pledged their support and he expected the group's strength to go up to 125.

Dr. R. S. Singh Becomes First Leader Of Opposition:

With Dr. Ram Subhag Singh's election as Leader of the (Opposition) group in the Lok Sabha, India's Parliament will for the first time have a Leader of the Opposition.

No other group has, in any of the four Lok Sabhas elected since 1952, measured up to the definition of a party given in the Rules of Procedure. Recognition under these Rules is conditional upon membership coming up to at least 52 or 10 per cent of the total strength of the Lok Sabha.

The privileges and perquisites of the Leader of the Opposition have remained undefined all these years. A demand is likely to be made on behalf of the group that Dr. Ram Subhag Singh should be given a status similar to that of the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons.

Dr. Singh became a member of the provisional Parliament in 1950. He was a member of the Parliamentary Party's Executive Committee since 1954 until two years ago when Mrs. Gandhi discouraged Ministers from seeking election. He has been a member of the Congress Working Committee since 1951, and of the Central Election Committee since 1966.

He joined the Government as Minister of State for Agriculture in 1962, moving over to Railways in 1964. He was elevated to the Cabinet rank in 1967 as Minister for Parliamentary Affairs and Communications when Mrs. Gandhi re-constituted her Government after the election and was recently shifted to Railways during the re-shuffle early this year. He was dropped from the Cabinet in the current crisis (see page 9267).

Dr. Singh is known not to mince words. There were several occasions when he joined issue with Mrs. Gandhi on policy questions, notably on the issue of the message she sent President Ayub Khan congratulating him on the completion of the Mangla Dam which happens to be in Azad Kashmir territory.

He often clashed with Pandit Nehru in Parliament, specially in the wake of the Chinese invasion of the N-EFA. Regardless, there was a relationship of mutual esteem between the two.

As Minister for Parliamentary Affairs, he masterminded Dr. Zakir Husain's election to the Presidency which won him a handsome tribute from the Prime Minister. Even though he is a tough adversary, he has always maintained cordial relations at the personal level with members of the Opposition and his colleagues in the Congress Parliamentary Party.

Dr. Ram Subhag Singh's Letter To Mr. V. V. Giri:

Dr. Ram Subhag Singh, the newly elected Leader of the Congress Parliamentary Party (Nijalingappa group), requested the President, Mr. V. V. Giri, on November 16 to take "immediate and suitable action in the light of the fact" that Mrs. Gandhi no longer enjoyed support of the majority in the Lok Sabha.

In a letter to Mr. Giri, Dr. Singh said that the meeting of the Party held under the chairmanship of Mr. Nijalingappa was attended by 60 members of the Lok Sabha and 46 of the Rajya Sabha.

He said: "As you know, so far the Congress Party has been in majority in the Lok Sabha. Consequently the leader of the Congress Party in Parliament was the Prime Minister.

"Up to now, the Congress Party membership in the Lok Sabha was 284 out of a total of 523. But Congress members of the Party who met under the chairmanship of Mr. Nijalingappa on November 16 elected me (Dr. Ram Subhag Singh) as Leader of the Congress Party in the Lok Sabha in place of Mrs. Indira Gandhi, who has been removed from the primary membership of the Congress and the leadership of the Party in Parliament by the Congress Working Committee on November 12."

Fight For The Congress Symbol:

With the split in the Congress Party, the question that exercised the minds of people on November 13 was as to who should be allotted the Congress election symbol of two bullocks with the yoke.

According to Election Commission sources, the rules to meet such exigencies are explicit and interpreting them should not pose much difficulty.

There have been four precedents in which rival groups of parties claimed the election symbol for their factions. In all these cases, the Commission had not found it difficult to interpret the rules "since the situation was clear beyond doubt."

The Election Symbols (Reservation and Allotment) Order, 1968 (Clause 15) lays down that "when the Commission is satisfied on information in its possession that there are rival sections or groups of a recognized political party, each of whom claims to be that party, the Election Commission may, after taking into account all the available facts and circumstances of the case and hearing such representatives of the sections or groups and other persons as desire to be heard, decide that one such rival section or group is that recognized political party and the decision of the Commission shall be binding on all such rival sections or groups."

The disputes that were referred to the Commission in the past were limited in scope. These related to the Republican Party in Uttar Pradesh, the United National Party of Goa (Sequiera group and Fortado group) and the Akali Dal (Tara Singh group and Sant Fateh Singh group) in Punjab. These were all essentially provincial parties.

The only all-India party whose case was referred to the Commission was the Communist Party. But here too the Commission had a fairly easy task because when the split came, the bulk of the legislators remained with the parent body.

In the case of the Congress, both the factions will control Legislature Parties in a few States.

Opposition Parties' Reactions:

Opposition leaders in the country generally welcomed the split in the Congress Party, though for different reasons.

Those opposed to the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, demanded her immeriate resignation. The others favouring her continuance as Prime Minister felt that she would be able to execute her progressive policies effectively.

From the various reactions, explicit as well as implicit, it was evident that the 42-member Swatantra Party and 33-member Jana Sangh would lend their full support to any move to topple the Government. Some Samyukta Socialist Party members of Parliament also called upon Mrs. Gandhi to step down.

On the other hand, the 24-member CPI, 19-member CPM, 25-member DMK and a sizable section of Independents are likely to support Mrs. Gandhi, in the event of the Congress split reflecting in the Lok Sabha, the House which would determine whether the Government commanded majority support or not.

BKD Wants Dissolution Of Congress:

The National Executive of the Bharatiya Kranti Dal (BKD), after a 13-hour meeting on November 14, came to the conclusion that the Congress Party should dissolve itself in the interests of the country.

It said that this would not only be in keeping with the last wishes of Mahatma Gandhi, but would also facilitate polarization of forces and emergence of healthy traditions in public life and successful functioning of the party and of democracy in the country.

B. Mr. J. L. Hathi And Mr. C. M. Poonacha Resign From Central Cabinet: On November 13, the Central Minister for Labour, Employment and Rehabilitation, Mr. Jaisukh Lal Hathi, tendered his resignation from the Central Cabinet. He did not give any reasons, but told newsmen that in the present rift in the Congress Party, he wanted to remain neutral.

On November 15, the Central Minister for Steel and Heavy Engineering, Mr. C. M. Poonacha, also resigned.

In his letter of resignation, Mr. Poonacha said that in view of the resolution passed by the Congress Working Committee expelling Mrs. Gandhi from Congress membership on November 12 and subsequent developments, he was resigning his membership of the Cabinet.

He was the fourth Cabinet Minister to have left the Government since the Congress Party crisis began in July, 1969.

With Mr. Poonacha's exit, there were eight vacancies in the Council of Ministers—four of Cabinet rank, two of Ministers of State and two of Deputy Ministers.

Re-allocation Of Portfolios:

As a result of these resignations, it was announced on November 15 that Mr. Jagjivan Ram, Minister for Food and Agriculture, will hold additional charge of the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Rehabilitation.

Sardar Swaran Singh, Minister for Defence, has been placed in additional charge of the Ministry of Steel and Heavy Engineering.

Mr. K. K. Shah, Minister for Health and Housing, will be the Leader of the Rajya Sabha in place of Mr. Jaisukh Lal Hathi.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, also allocated the work in the Finance Ministry between the two Ministers of State for Finance, Mr. P. C. Sethi and Mr. R. K. Khadilkar. Mr. Sethi will deal with the Department of Revenue and Insurance minus Insurance Division cases, Department of Economic Affairs—internal finance (including budget, banking and economic situation)—and Department of Expenditure (Establishment division, Bureau of Public Enterprises and Project Estimates). Mr. Khadilkar will deal with the Department of Expenditure in respect of heads other than the three put under Mr. Sethi's charge, insurance and national savings organization.

C. Mr. Pal Losonczi's Visit: The President of Hungary, Mr. Pal Losonczi, arrived in New Delhi on a State visit on November 11.

The same evening, India's President, Mr. V. V. Giri, gave a banquet in honour of President Losonczi at which Mr. Losonczi declared that the policy of non-alignment allotted to India a significant role in safeguarding peace and security primarily in Asia. At the same time, Hungary was highly appreciative of India's interest in the consolidation of a security system in Europe and recognition of European realities.

He added that the progressive world highly appreciated that India took the side of the Arabs in the West Asia conflict and condemned the aggression of Israel.

Mr. Giri, in his speech, traced the long cultural links between the two countries and said: "We watch with interest the processes current in your country aimed at expanding the social basis of State power, and the decentralization of your socio-economic structures."

Talks With Mrs. I. Gandhi:

Next day (November 12), Mr. Pal Losonczi had talks with the Premier, Mrs. Indira Gandhi. The ground covered related mainly to bilateral issues and development of trade and economic collaboration between the two countries.

This was the third round of talks between the two leaders. They met twice on November 11, although on both occasions the contact was of a preliminary and informal nature.

Opening the talks, Mrs. Gandhi said that India's policy was to seek areas of co-operation with all countries. In this context, she welcomed development of further economic, ultural and scientific co-operation etween India and Hungary.

President Losonczi said that an xchange of visits could broaden relations and "Hungary is ready to broaden her relations in all fields with India."

Civic Reception:

At a civic reception accorded to him in Delhi on November 12, Mr. Pal Losonczi said that close "in the strictest sense of the word", as Indo-Hungarian relations were, the future held greater promise.

He said that under various Agreements for the next two years, nearly 70 Indian scientists, writers and artistes would be visiting Hungary. A similar number of Hungarians from the same backgrounds would come to India.

Referring to India's policy of non-alignment, he pointed out that it had gained acceptance in the world. The role India had played at international forums in the "struggle for the liquidation of the colonial system" had gained for it even greated prestige.

Indology, said Mr. Losonczi, had a tradition in Hungary, with many Hungarians acquainted with Indian literature through translations. The most beautiful parts of the Ramayana and Mahabharata had been translated by the eminent Indologist, Ervin Baktay.

On behalf of the people of Delhi, the Mayor of Delhi presented him with an ivory bullock-cart and a brocade stole and an evening handbag to Mrs. Losonczi.

President Losonczi left New Delhi for Bombay on November 14 on his way home.

Joint Communique:

A joint communique issued in New Delhi on November 15 on President Losonczi's talks with Mrs. Indira Gandhi listed several concrete steps, aimed at enlarging the scope of economic co-operation between India and Hungary.

The endeavour would be directed not merely to promote joint collaboration in new fields of industry and increased volume of mutual trade, but also to explore the prospects of joint industrial ventures and trading partnerships in third countries.

A firm decision was taken to set up joint experts' teams to study these objectives in depth and to recommend appropriate measures.

The specific fields of co-operation listed by the communique included the aluminium industry, tele-communication, water research and irrigation. The communique makes it clear that the list was not exhaustive.

It indicated that the two countries were also planning fairly extensive co-operation in the scientific, cultural and educational fields. The talks had led to an agreement in principle to conclude a separate agreement for scientific and technological exchanges and mutual recognition of diplomas and degrees. Exchange of scientific, technical and cultural personnel was also planned.

On Indo-Pakistan relations, the communique expressed the hope that "Indo-Pakistan problems would be settled bilaterally and peacefully in the spirit of the Tashkent Declaration."

There was also agreement that the Viet-Nam problem should be settled within the broad frame-work of the Geneva Agreement of 1954 and that all efforts should be made to implement the November 22, 1967 UN Security Council resolution on the Arab-Israeli conflict.

> [India's trade and cultural relations have been continuous and progressing since 1953. A Trade Agreement of 1954 signed in Budapest was revised in 1959 (see page 2745), while on December 12, 1961 another Agreement signed provided for 10 per cent increase in the trade between the two countries in 1962. Trade between the two countries in 1967 had gone up to Rs. 2.60 million from Rs. 1.2 million in 1953. On October 28, 1968 it was decided in Budapest that Indo-Hungarian trade both ways should amount to Rs. 540 million during 1969. India would export mineral ores, railway wagons, ready-made garments, textile and leather products etc in exchange for steel and steel products, fertilizers, chemicals and items of heavy machinery and equipment. A Cultural Agreement was signed between the two countries in New Delhi on March 30, 1964 to strengthen ties of friendship and promoting better understanding and close co-operation between the two countries in the fields of culture, science, education, literature, health and sports. On December 16, 1966 the two countries in the fields of culture, science, education, literature, health and sports. On December 16, 1966 the two countries ratified an Air Agreement signed earlier in February, 1966 under which Air-India and Malev, the Hungarian air service, would operate one service a week through Budapest and Bombay. Dr. Zakir Husain, then President of India, paid a visit to Hungary on June 6, 1968 (see page 8432). He had then said at Budapest on June 8: "It is only natural that our bilateral relations should develop steadily in all directions."]

D. Nehru Award Presented To Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan: On November 15, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan was presented the 1967 Nehru Award for International Understanding.

Presenting the Award, the President, Mr. V. V. Giri, said: "The life and work of great personages like Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan give us faith in the future of humanity. With the vision of idealism in his eyes, he looks beyond the desolation now surrounding man. He is striving to bring man and man, nation and nation closer to one another. His achievement signifies the evolution of a new type of human force which alone can ultimately be the motivation of enduring international amity."

He pointed out that if anybody could be called a Universal Man, it was Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, for he stood not for any narrow sectarianism or groups but for eternal values.

The citation, which was read by the Vice-President, Mr. G. S. Pathak, recalled the services that Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan had rendered in the cause of India's freedom and his close link with Mahatma Gandhi.

Carrying the scars of many years of imprisonment, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan had remained undaunted in his faith in man, "a faith which shines through the tensions and traumas of today."

It added: "There is a debt we owe Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan. There are many lessons we have to learn from him—to struggle constantly for our beliefs, for the freedoms of the peoples, with compassion and with larger understanding which alone can lift the human consciousness out of despair, apathy and cynicism. Badshah Khan's devotion to the ideal of human brotherhood gives his life that universal quality on which alone our hopes for peace and international amity can be based—a cause so dear to Jawaharlal Nehru."

The Award includes a cash prize of Rs. 1,00,000 convertible into foreign exchange.

The 1965 Award was to the UN Secretary-General, U Thant. The American Negro leader, Dr. Martin Luther King, was given the 1966 award posthumously.

Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan's Reply:

Replying, Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan said that he had only two things on his mind when he came to India. First, the Gandhi Centenary which was being celebrated this year. Secondly, he wanted to study the conditions prevailing in the country.

He added: "There is a saying in the Pushtu language: 'Often a friend will make you cry, an enemy makes you laugh.' I consider myself a friend of India, and your well-wisher. I have just returned from the land of Gandhi. I had once been there with him, this time without him. When I went with Gandhi, what did I see? I saw love, I saw non-violence. I saw service of mankind. What did I see this time? I saw hatred instead of love. I found violence instead of non-violence. I saw destruction and plunder instead of service of mankind.

"This country is full of all sorts of social conflicts. Hindus fight with Hindus. The Shias fight with Sunnis. The non-Brahmins fight with Brahmins. Hindus fight with Muslims and vice versa. I am sorry to note that we have not yet been able to understand the meaning of religion, which is why things have come to such a pass. Both Hindus and Muslims are ignorant about religion. That is why they do not understand their prayers. Because of ignorance people are duped in the name of religion."

He posed the question: "What is religion?" and said: "Religion is love. It is sympathy. It teaches us to serve the downtrodden. It teaches us to serve mankind. Look at history. Whenever a nation gives up its social and moral standards, then God sends a man to show them the right path. Religion comes to serve the truth and not for any other purpose. It does not teach us to burn people, to abduct girls, to loot and destroy. How could this be religion and humanism? Therefore, I say look at these things carefully."

LEBANON

A. Crisis Over Palestine Commandos: Lebanon faced her most serious crisis since the 1958 civil war in the latter half of October, 1969 when Palestinian guerrillas demanding freedom of action for commando activity from Lebanese territory against Israel rose in armed rebellion.

The immediate cause of the crisis was the nagging question of the 5,000 odd Palestinian commandos operating in the country. After months of sporadic incidents between the small Army and the Palestinian refugees, the crisis came to a head when the Army clashed brutally with commandos in the south.

Reaction in the Arab world was immediate and violent, and the acting Lebanese Premier, Mr. Rashid Karame, disavowing the Army's action, tendered his resignation.

The situation took on alarming proportions when joint Palestinian-Syrian units backed by tanks and heavy artillery crossed into Lebanon.

Following President Nasser's offer of good offices, representatives of the Government and the commandos met in Cairo when a settlement, details of which were not released, was reached.

Protagonists In Crisis:

The crisis placed several politicians in the limelight. The diversity of their respective positions on the Palestinian commandos (given below) is a telling indication of the problems facing the country.

Mr. Charles Helou, the President of the Republic, clearly defined his position on May 31 in a "message to the nation." He refused to allow the guerrillas to present the Government with a fait accompli which it would have to sanction. He later added that feddayin activities must be stopped if they endangered Lebanon's security.

Mr. Rashid Karame, the newly-resigned caretaker Prime Minister, a Sunni Moslem, has continually stressed the differences between his position and that of the Head of State, a Maronite Christian. He urged the Lebanese Army and the Palestinian commandos to unite "against Israel's expansionism." Such co-operation, however, was impossible because of the reciprocal distrust between the Army and guerrilla leaders. Mr. Karame, in his letter of resignation, re-asserted that he opposed repression of the Palestinian commandos. He dissociated himself from it and laid responsibility on the military authorities. He is very popular among the Sunni population, especially in the north around Tripoli, the country's second city.

Mr. Kamal Jumblatt, the Leftist leader of Lebanon's Druze community supports liberty of action for the feddayin. He plays an important role as chairman of Leftist parties and organizations, now trying to forge a common policy. He is influential among intellectuals and trade unionists.

Mr. Camille Chamoun, the moderate Christian leader, played a central role in the 1958 civil war. As President of the Republic he had invited the Americans into Lebanon to protect the country from "foreign subversion." His position in the present conflict is ambiguous. He has expressed support for the feddayin, qualifying it by saying that he would give priority to Lebanon's security if guerrilla action provoked Israeli retaliation beyond the defensive capacities of the Lebanese Army.

Gen. Fuad Chehab, former President of the Republic who succeeded Mr. Chamoun, has not defined his position in the present crisis. In 1958 he was thought to favour the pro-Nasser faction, but was virtually responsible for bringing about national reconciliation. Observers now believe that he has used his considerable influence with the Army, and particularly the Intelligence Branch, to encourage action against the feddayin.

Mr. Pierre Gemayel, the Christian "Phalangist" leader, is an advocate of "absolute respect for Lebanese sovereignty." Like former President Chamoun, he subordinates feddayin claims to national security. In an emergency, he would be able to raise 2,000 or 3,000 armed militiamen.

Mr. Raymond Edde, a member of the moderate "triumvirate" which carries great weight in the Christian community, shares the basic ideas of his colleagues, Mr. Chamoun and Mr. Gemayel. He has also called for a UN peace-keeping force along the Israel-Lebanon border.

Armed Clashes:

On October 18, the crisis between the authorities and commandos flared up into armed clashes.

Following the familiar pattern, the forces surrounded a guerrilla camp in a village south of Lebanon and gave the commandos 48 hours to move near the Syrian border. When they refused, shooting broke out and a commando and two Lebanese civilians were wounded.

The action came after a series of Israeli allegations of commando activities on the Lebanese-Israeli border. After similar incidents two months earlier, Israel had launched a major air raid on Lebanon.

Threat Of Civil War:

The renewed fighting in which a score of people were killed or wounded threatened to trigger off a civil war in Lebanon.

One observer said: "The situation has gone beyond the possibility of a compromise and there are too many groups interested in pushing it into a civil war."

The Chairman of the Palestinian Liberation Organization, Mr. Yassir Arafat, refused to go to Beirut for any talks with the authorities and instead ordered commando groups all over Lebanon to resist the armed forces until the last man.

Syrian Measures:

Meanwhile, in Damascus on October 22, after announcing that her borders with Lebanon had been closed, Syria threatened to take "firmer, and more effective measures" to force the Lebanese authorities to call off a reported crackdown on Palestinian guerrillas.

The Syrian move was announced by the Political Bureau of the ruling Socialist Baath Party. It said the border closure was a prelude to "firmer and more effective measures. Lebanese authorities must be made to call off their measures against the Palestinian guerrillas."

The Political Bureau statement described Lebanese Army attacks during the last 24 hours on guerrilla bases in south Lebanon as part "of a plot by US imperialism and Zionism to crush the Palestinian revolution."

Immediately after the announcement, the Interior Ministry ordered the entire border with the Lebanon shut and banned travel between the two countries.

The Lebanese-guerrilla-Syria conflicts and counter-conflicts represented an unprecedented turn in the 2½-year-old West Asian hostilities.

Tens of thousands of demonstrators peacefully marched through the streets of Baghdad and Amman and mobs rioted in Beirut to protest against the Army crack-down on guerrillas. The demonstrators in Beirut stoned police from improvised barricades. Many of them carried guns tucked in their belts. Others brandished sticks and cudgels.

Baghdad Radio said the demonstrators shouted: "Death to the criminal rulers of Lebanon" and "Down with imperialist-backed regimes."

Mr. R. Karame Resigns As Premier:

On October 22, the Prime Minister, Mr. Rashid Karame, resigned and indicated that he disagreed with the decision to launch Lebanese troops against Palestinian commandos.

He said he had announced his decision to resign to President Charles Helou "not because I want to flee or out of fear, but because a man cannot bear the responsibility for an affair about which he was not consulted or an affair which is not in accordance with his own ideas."

But, on November 6, Mr. Karame agreed to attempt to form a Cabinet and end the country's seven-month political crisis.

He told newsmen after a meeting with President Charles Helou that formation of a Cabinet was now possible following the agreement on November 2 between Lebanese and Palestinian commandos on the status of Palestinian guerrillas in Lebanon.

Meanwhile, Iraq put its armed forces at the disposal of the Arab guerrillas. It strongly protested to Lebanese authorities as 250,000 Iraqis demonstrated in the streets of Baghdad in support of the Arab commando action.

Guerrillas Attack Lebanese Border Posts:

A Beirut report said on October 23 that guerrillas from Syria had struck at three Lebanese border posts.

A Lebanese Army communique reported that the border posts at Arida and Buqaita, 48 km apart in the north, were surrounded by 150 raiders and the gendarme garrisons made prisons.

El Fatah, the most powerful of the Palestinian guerrilla groups, announced from Damascus that all war captives would be released.

At the big frontier post at Masnaa on the main Beirut-Damascus highway, an attack by guerrillas using rockets, mortars and machine-guns was beaten off. One Lebanese gendarme was wounded.

In a statement, El Fatah claimed credit for the attacks on the three border posts. It said 24 Lebanese security, police and customs men captured in these raids were being released and delivered back to the Lebanese authorities.

Lebanese troops fought running battles with armed civilians and Arab guerrillas in the northern port of Tripoli following a clash between demonstrators and security forces in which at least seven people were killed and many more wounded.

Defying an indefinite curfew clamped on Lebanon's major cities following bloody clashes between the army and Palestinian guerrillas, demonstrators battled with troops and police in two areas of the town.

The authorities had announced a curfew on all big cities after a day of mounting tension in the Arab world and internationally following attacks on Lebanese border posts by Syrian troops.

The President, Mr. Charles Helou, in a telephonic conversation with the Syrian President, Mr. Nuruddin Atassi, said that he was surprised at the Syrian military concentrations on the Lebanese frontier. He also complained that "Syrian elements" were carrying out military operations against Lebanese public buildings.

Guerrillas and armed rebels gained control of the most strategic part of Lebanon's second city, Tripoli, and consolidated their hold on two new villages on October 26.

The pressure on the relatively small Lebanese Army, which could muster less than two divisions, and the security forces exposed the vulnerability of the two large regions of the country north of Tripoli and southwards of the southern city port of Sidon.

Diplomatically isolated from the rest of the Arab world because of its action against the guerrillas, and with the country's security entirely on its shoulders following the resignation of Mr. Rashid Karame as Prime Minister, the Army was engaged against the guerrillas in three new areas in the south.

Mr. Mokaddem, a political rival of Mr. Karame and a fellow Tripolitanian, said that any new Government must favour freedom of action for commando activity from Lebanese territory. He also called for the dismissal of the officials responsible for action against the guerrillas in the south, the incident which began the crisis. "It would be in the interest of the authorities to meet these demands as soon as possible, before more demands are made and more people killed."

President Nasser's Message To Mr. C. Helou:

President Nasser of UAR in a message to Mr. Helou said: "We did, and still do, consider the stand of any Arab countries towards the struggle of destiny waged by our nation as completely conditioned by this country's stand towards the Palestinian resistance.

"With our full appreciation of the positions and conditions of Lebanon, we, however, cannot conceive that the Palestinian resistance could face what it is now facing in Lebanon, while it (the resistance) is being subjected to enemy fire and terrorism."

Arab Protests:

Lebanon was inundated with protests from Arab countries. Within the country, students and workers and Leftist groups joined in the massive agitation against the authorities. There were sporadic clashes between troops and the guerrillas.

President Nasser's special representative, Dr. Nassan Sabry el Kholy, visited Beirut and Damascus in a mediatory effort.

As a result of UAR efforts, talks began in Cairo on October 30. Several sets of proposals were discussed.

Cease-fire Comes Into Force:

A cease-fire between the commandos and Lebanese troops came into force on November 2.

The move was decided during the final stage of the negotiations between the Palestine Liberation Organization leader, Mr. Yassir Arafat, and the Commander-in-Chief of the Lebanese Army, Gen. Emile Bustany.

Both sides also agreed to try to defuse the Lebanese crisis while working for complete agreement between the Lebanese Government and the Palestinian commandos.

The other details of the settlement were not immediately disclosed.

Syria Re-opens Border:

On November 13, Syria re-opened its border with Lebanon which was closed on October 21 following clashes between Palestinian commandos and Lebanese security men in south Lebanon.

A statement by the Political Bureau of the ruling Arab Baath Socialist Party said that the decision was taken after information had been received on the Cairo Agreement between delegations representing Lebanon and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO).

The closure of the border with Lebanon, together with other measures which the Syrian Government had intended to take, it said, had been aimed at "asserting the legitimacy of the Palestinian struggle and its right to set out from Arab territory. It was meant to underline the seriousness of subjecting the resistance to any obstruction or delay in carrying out its sacred tasks."

Implications Of Cease-fire Agreement:

The Statesman (Calcutta) correspondent in Beirut wrote on October 5 to say that the political consequences of the settlement between the Lebanese Government and the Palestine resistance movement in Cairo were of an importance quite out of proportion to the very modest military events and almost all these results were beneficial to Lebanon.

Details of the Cease-fire Agreement were kept secret, but it is certain that the guerrillas have not been given the complete freedom to operate from Lebanon against Israel which was their main demand and which would have nullified Lebanese sovereignty.

Moreover, the refugee camps in Lebanon will be brought under stricter control to prevent them becoming a State within a State. In short, there is to be co-ordination between the Lebanese Army and the guerrillas which the latter, in public at least, rejected when the Lebanese proposed it to them six months earlier.

This Cease-fire Agreement settles things for the time being between the Lebanese and the Palestinians. But there is a very important third party to the crisis—Israel. If it becomes known that a definite zone of Lebanon has, more or less, been turned over to the guerrillas, and if the latter step up their attacks from this zone on Israel, then obviously that zone and probably other targets or areas in Lebanon will be attacked or seized by Israel.

The zone, in the foothills of Mount Hermon, is mainly delimited by what it does not contain, which is the sensitive central sector of the Lebanese-Israeli frontier around the town of Bint Jbeil, from where the guerrillas were evicted by the Lebanese Army ten days earlier.

Perhaps the most important single fact to emerge from this crisis is that the internal solidarity of Lebanon is much stronger than any one dared hope. External pressure only served to draw the various religious communities together and many Lebanese who fancied themselves Leftist progressives or pan-Arab nationalists discovered that first of all, they were Lebanese patriots.

The prime casualty of the crisis was the mythical but very important being called "Arab". The Lebanese have asserted that they were primarily Lebanese and got away with it.

Likewise, it demonstrated that while Palestine is of deep concern to the average Lebanese it is not a grassroots issue for which he is prepared to confront the authorities. The biggest mistake of the Palestinians was a gross over-estimation of their popular support in the Lebanon.

The second mistake the Palestinians made was to show themselves working in co-ordination with Syria. Early in the crisis, Syria succeeded in isolating Lebanon from many Arab States, but greater understanding brought them round so that now it is Syria that is isolated.

By travelling, against the advice of some of his extremist colleagues, from Damascus to Cairo and there accepting a settlement, Mr. Yassir Arafat, the Palestinian leader, showed some disposition to break away from Syrian influence. In fact, the proposal has been made that the commando groups should move their headquarters away from Damascus.

The Palestinians have, of course, also made some gains. The presence of their commandos on Lebanese territory has now been officially accepted and is a public fact. It had been accepted before but only semi-publicly. This is mainly a moral gain, but it is nevertheless of importance to a resistance movement seeking to establish its presence and legitimacy.

Inside Lebanon, the Army has greatly increased its popularity and this has been at the expense of the professional politicians who were both unable and unwilling to do anything to help resolve the crisis. With the commando problem out of the way, President Helou may at long last be able to find politicians willing to serve in a new Cabinet.

Extremist groups both amongst Palestinians and the Lebanese may continue to protest against the Cease-fire Agreement and occasional acts of violence could yet occur. But basically the Lebanese have once again worked out an understanding according to the well-tried Lebanese formula of "no victor, no vanquished".

CEYLON

A. First Oil Refinery Opened: Ceylon's first oil refinery was formally opened on October 12, 1969 by the Prime Minister, Mr. Dudley Senanayake.

At present, the Government spends Rs. 100 million annually on the import of refined petroleum products.

Built at a cost of Rs. 200 million, the refinery, established by the Ceylon Petroleum Corporation, will process 1.7 million tons of crude oil per year. It is expected to reach its maximum production capacity in 1973 when it will meet most of the petroleum product requirements of the country. It will produce 11 different refined petroleum products which have been imported hitherto.

An Agreement has been entered into with the Consolidated Petroleum Supply Company, a subsidiary of the Dutch Shell Company, for the supply of crude oil and the purchase of surplus products as well as the training of Ceylonese personnel to run the refinery. A technical team from the Consolidated Petroleum Supply Company has arrived in the Island to run the refinery for the next two years, during which time they will train local personnel to take over from them.

B. Crop Production Targets: The Agricultural Implementation Programme for 1970 has set a paddy production target of nearly 75 million bushels.

This represents an increase of 12 per cent on the anticipated performance in 1969. As the total paddy production in 1969 is likely to be in the region of 67 million bushels, the target for 1970, if achieved, would result in the production of about 8 million bushels of paddy more than in 1969.

Rice output has increased consistently since 1965.

Substantial increases have been planned in the production of subsidiary food crops in 1970. The percentage increases over the 1969 targets with regard to the principal crops are: dried chillies: 21.8 per cent; red onions: 12.0 per cent; maize: 36.3 per cent; groundnuts: 13.9 per cent; and potatoes: 15.8 per cent.

The estimated production of the export crops in 1970 is as follows: tea 531 million lbs; rubber 355 million lbs; and coconut 3,000 million nuts. The figures for the respective crops in 1968 were 496 million lbs, 328 million lbs and 2,600 million nuts.

C. Accord With India On Tea Consortium: Colombo reports quoting official sources said on November 13, 1969 that "complete agreement" on the broad frame-work of the proposed joint Indo-Ceylonese Consortium to push up tea exports had been reached in the talks between the delegations from the two countries.

The Indian working group's proposal that the Consortium should be in the form of a Joint Management Council with three directors each of two separate national companies to be floated for promotion of tea exports was accepted by Ceylon.

Ceylon's working group had suggested a single joint consortium for the purpose with no national concerns.

In national companies, which will have a share capital of about Rs. 50 million each, only the Governments and producers will have holdings.

The six-member Joint Management Council will decide on all policy issues regarding packing, blending and marketing of tea in both traditional and non-traditional markets.

The chairman and the deputy chairman of the Joint Council will alternate every three years between the two Governments.

It was left to the two Governments, which have to ratify the Agreement reached at the talks between the representatives of producers of the two countries, to decide on where the headquarters of the Consortium should be located.

But talks between the officials of the two countries represented on the Indo-Ceylonese Standing Committee on Tea had got bogged down on the main issue, namely, in what proportions the two countries, who account for 80 per cent of world tea exports, should bear the cut of 90 million lbs in total world tea exports for 1970.

CHINA

A. Border Talks With USSR: China and the Soviet Union opened in Peking on October 20, 1969 talks to settle their border disputes.

Heading the respective teams were the Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr. Chiao Kuan-hua, and the First Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr. Vasily Kuznetsov, described by Western observers as Russia's "top diplomatic troubleshooter."

On November 6, 1969, a Hong Kong communist newspaper reported that the border talks had stalled.

China refrained from official comment on the discussions, but the weekly English-language edition of Ta Kung Pao said its correspondent in Canton had learnt that the talks had run into trouble.

The Ta Kung Pao is an authoritative source on communist affairs, but in the report it did not claim to be speaking for China. In the past it had frequently embarrassed itself by its misinterpretations of the Maoist line.

The newspaper stated: "The negotiations on the boundary question have not been proceeding as smoothly as some in the outside world have made them out to be."

It was not clear whether the newspaper's correspondent received this information on a visit to Peking or whether he had it at second-hand from a member of the Ta Kung Pao's staff, who was recently in the Capital. The story was couched in fairly tentative terms, carefully hedging its assertion that "there is yet no sign of progress" with the phrase "for all that our correspondent has been able to learn."

The actual obstacle to progress was not clearly identified. The newspaper hinted that the Russians had [illegible] to aggressor's special repre- agreeable to both sides through con-sultations carried out on a basis of equality" which would allow an "all-round settlement of the boundary question and the conclusion of a new Boundary Treaty."

But, the newspaper also suggested that the Soviet side may be dragging out the negotiations in the hope of winning some concessions from the Chinese on other issues in return for a settlement of the frontier dispute.

President Podgorny of the Soviet Union said in a speech in the Kremlin on November 6, 1969 that a favourable outcome of the Peking talks "would help further to normalize relations between the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China and to strengthen world socialism and the entire revolutionary movement."

It was noted that he said "would," not "will", and gave no hint of optimism about Chinese intentions. He confirmed that the talks were begun "at the Soviet initiative."

Peking, reports say, is still adhering to its demand that the Russians must recognize the inequality of the 19th century border treaties before anything is re-negotiated, and is even repeating territorial claims. The Russians had wanted to relegate the "admission of inequality" to a lower place on the agenda in the hope of evading it.

B. Resentment Against Indian Courtesies To Dalai Lama: The New China News Agency on October 16, 1969 accused India of persisting in its anti-China policy and said that the Dalai Lama was trying to "whitewash the expansionist policy of the Indian reactionaries."

The Agency was commenting on events in New Delhi on October 10 when the Indian President, Mr. V. V. Giri and the Minister of External Affairs, Mr. Dinesh Singh, separately received the Tibetan leader.

It said: "The reactionary Indian Government has again made use of Dalai, chieftain of the Tibetan traitorous bandits, to carry out frenzied anti-China activities. This shows that the reactionary Indian Government is persisting obdurately in its hostile stand towards the Chinese people and that all the repeated utterances of its chieftains about their intention to 'improve India-China relations' are nothing but deceitful lies."

The Agency alleged that Mr. Dinesh Singh had told the Dalai Lama "that the Indian Government's 'support was always there' to bring up the so-called 'Tibetan question' at the United Nations General Assembly session so as to seek help from this imperialist-manipulated Organization for intervention in China's internal affairs".

"With the reactionary Indian Government pulling the strings behind the scenes", it added, "traitorous bandit Dalai made a lengthy reactionary speech in the School of International Studies. Discarding his religious cloak, this traitorous bandit filled his speech with counter-revolutionary politics and tried nauseously at the same time to whitewash the expansionist policy of the Indian reactionaries."

SUMMARY: Requisitioned A-ICC Meeting; CPI Support To Mrs. I. Gandhi; UP Ministers' Resignations; Pakistan's Violation Of Air Corridor; Mizo Hills Villages' Re-grouping; Preventive Detention Act To Lapse; Extremists' Activities; LIC Business.

A. Requisitioned A-ICC Meeting: The requisitioned meeting of A-ICC members belonging to Mrs. Indira Gandhi's group met in New Delhi on November 22 and 23, 1969. About 440 members (out of a total of 706) were stated to be present. It removed Mr. S. Nijalingappa from the Presidentship of the Congress (in retaliation to Mr. Nijalingappa's expulsion of Mrs. Gandhi from the primary membership of the Congress Party), elected Mr. C. Subramaniam as its interim President, and elected ten members to its Working Committee. They were all members of the original Congress Working Committee from which the break-away took place. Later, Mr. Subramaniam nominated ten more new members to his Working Committee.

Mrs. Gandhi presided.

The following is the State-wise break-up of A-ICC members attending the session (the figure given in brackets is the strength of the A-ICC members in that State):

Andhra 45 (51); Assam 16 (22); Bihar 39 (73); Delhi 2 (7); Goa 6 (6); Gujarat 3 (28); Haryana 10 (12); Chandigarh 2 (2); Himachal Pradesh 7 (7); Jammu and Kashmir 8 (8); Kerala 14 (24); Madhya Pradesh 43 (43); Mysore 9 (26); Manipur 3 (6); Maharashtra 50 (52); Tamil Nadu and Pondicherry 16 (50); Tripura 7 (7); UP 62 (112); Orissa 19 (25); Punjab 17 (17); Rajasthan 29 (33); West Bengal 18 (52); Bombay 5 (10); Nagaland 3 (3); N-EFA 1 (1) and six of the 14 members elected by the Congress Parliamentary Party.

Mr. F. A. Ahmed's Welcome Speech: Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Chairman of the Reception Committee, welcomed the A-ICC members and others.

Mr. Ahmed recalled how the high idealism and spirit of sacrifice sustained by Congressmen got eroded in recent years and much of the misfortune, whether in the country or in the organization, stemmed from this erosion. It was time to re-capture the same spirit, the same zeal and the fervour of sacrifice which characterized the organization in earlier years, "for we have come at the crossroads today and have to take a direction almost afresh and adopt our line of action with vigour and determination."

Tracing the background to the present crisis in the organization, he said it started long before the selection of the Presidential candidate. The adversaries themselves had admitted that their quarrel with the bulk of the rank and file of the organization and the progressive leadership was of a long duration. The Presidential election only provided a turning point, an occasion for "well-laid conspiracy to see that the progressive elements in the party were not allowed to speak out or remain at the helm of affairs in the Government."

When the selection was made, he said, it was openly declared by many people that the decision would cut the Prime Minister down to size and that the subsequent election would also ensure that Government leadership was rid of those "who did not agree with the policy of status quo, which would be essentially the policy of reaction."

On party discipline, he said: "Disciplined conduct and behaviour is an essential ingredient for the proper functioning of the party. However, this can be be effectively ensured only on the basis of strict adherence to party policies and programmes and in internal democracy within the party involving party organs at various levels."

Resolution For A New President: Mr. A. K. Sen, a former Law Minster, moved the main resolution which provided that the programme of electing a new Congress President in December, 1969, when the term of the present President would have ordinarily come to an end, be undertaken on the basis of the present delegates so that the election of the new President could be completed by December 30, 1969.

He said the requisition submitted to the Congress President, Mr. Nijalingappa, was "perfectly valid", but the meeting was not called because the majority was on the side of the Prime Minister. "They knew that they had no majority and were afraid to call the A-ICC."

He maintained that the Working Committee's decision taken at Faridabad to postpone the organizational elections needed to be ratified by the A-ICC within six months. This was clear from the party's constitution and yet no attempts were made to call the A-ICC before the expiry of the six-month period.

Resolution On Removal Of Mr. S. Nijalingappa:

Seth Govind Das moved the resolution on the removal of Mr. Nijalingappa from Congress Presidentship.

The following is the text of the resolution:

"The acceptance of the Prime Minister's note, embodying a radical programme, by the Bangalore session of A-ICC, and the bold step taken by her to nationalize the major banks created a sense of confidence in the masses that the progressive and socialist policies of the Congress would be fully carried out.

"The resolution of the Congress Working Committee passed on August 25, 1969 generated the hope that the unity necessary for the full and effective implementation of the said policies and programmes would be brought about. Unfortunately the wind of change, which has been welcomed widely by the nation, appears to have generated tensions within the party which threaten the execution of these basic policies to which Congress stands committed.

"It is evident that the declared policies of the Congress cannot be fully implemented unless the Congress organization as a whole is attuned to this purpose and gives its whole-hearted co-operation, particularly at its top level.

"The A-ICC, therefore, resolves that the programme of elec'ing a new Congress President in December, 1969, when the term of the present President would have ordinarily come to an end, be undertaken on the basis of present delegates and steps to that end be taken without delay so that the election of a new President is completed by 30th December, 1969."

The following is the text of an amendment moved by Mr. H. N. Bahuguna:

"Since the requisition notice was submitted to the Working Committee, the Congress President took the unusual step of removing two of the Working Committee members and declaring the membership of one member as having lapsed, which in the view of the A-ICC is illegal and unconstitutional. Moreover, since some members of the Working Committee have been removed illegally, there is no validly constituted Working Committee. Further, the President has refused to co-operate in the holding and conducting of the requisitioned meeting of the A-ICC, declaring that this is an illegal meeting. Therefore, he is not likely to carry out the resolution passed by this meeting of the A-ICC. Therefore, it has become necessary for the A-ICC to take necessary steps to conduct the election of the President, in pursuance of which this meeting appoints Dr. S. D. Sharma as the Returning Officer and the following time-table fixed for the purpose."

This resolution was adopted with only one hand raised against the second resolution removing Mr. Nijalingappa when it was put to vote.

Mr. Subramaniam's election as interim President went through in minutes. His name was proposed by Mr. V. P. Naik, Maharashtra Chief Minister, and seconded by Mr. M. L. Sukhadia, Rajasthan Chief Minister.

Immediately after the proposal was adopted unanimously, Mrs. Gandhi vacated the Presidential seat for him.

Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Speech:

Mrs. Indira Gandhi, in a speech, declared that she wanted unity even now, but the door must be closed on those working against "our policies, our way of thinking and our ideology."

She added that the doors of the party were open to those who had left the organization because of personal differences, referring presumably to men like Mr. Charan Singh of the BKD and Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee, West Bengal Chief Minister.

Mrs. Gandhi broke down twice, her emotions getting the better of her over the issue of her expulsion from the party. The first time was when Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari described Mr. Nijalingappa's action as a shocking blow to the country's stability, taken by "wise people" who, after working India's democratic experiment successfully for 20 years, had suddenly started "to cut the tree at its roots."

As Mr. Krishnamachari was saying that Mrs. Gandhi could not be removed from the Congress because her every fibre belonged to the party, Mrs. Gandhi was seen wiping a tear from her eyes.

Shortly afterwards, while Mrs. Gandhi spoke on the tasks before the requisitioned session, she recalled the events leading to her expulsion. In a voice choked with emotion, she agreed with Mr. Krishnamachari that no one could throw her out of the party because she belonged to it heart and soul.

She took pains to emphasize that the decision to hold the meeting had been taken after much anxious thought. The Congress was getting divorced from the people, thus destroying its value as the king-pin of the democratic system. This unfortunate trend had to be reversed, and the cherished social and economic goals of the party reaffirmed to renew its bonds with the people. "We have to find a new light, a new way to solve our problems. We have to be in tune with our people."

Suspensions Annulled—New Working Committee Formed:

Next day (November 23, 1969), the meeting removed all the 11 members of the Congress Working Committee under Mr. Nijalingappa from their offices on a motion proposed by the interim President, Mr. C. Subramaniam. One member voted against the motion.

He himself moved the resolution for the removal of Mr. K. Kamaraj, Mr. S. K. Patil, Mr. Morarji Desai, Mr. Atulya Ghosh, Mr. K. C. Abraham, Mr. Hitendra Desai, Mr. C. B. Gupta, Mr. P. Venkatasubbiah, Mr. Sadiq Ali and Dr. Ram Subhag Singh, who were present when the decision to expel the Prime Minister was taken from the Working Committee.

Taking note of this situation, the interim President, Mr. Subramaniam told the meeting that the "partition" in the Congress Party should take place in a friendly and peaceful way and the two parties should go along their chosen path and leave it to the people to decide which of them was a better instrument for their service.

It was also resolved to hold the plenary session of the Congress in Bombay from December 26 to 28, 1969. The Subjects Committee and the A-ICC would meet on December 26 and 27 and the open session would be held on December 28. The Bombay Pradesh Congress Committee and the Maharashtra Pradesh Congress Committee would host the session. It would ratify the resolutions adopted by the requisitioned A-ICC.

By another resolution moved by Mr. Mishrilal Gangwal, the expulsion of Mrs. Gandhi and the removal of Mr. C. Subramaniam, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed and Dr. S. D. Sharma and the suspension of Mr. Arjun Arora and Mr. Shashi Bhushan were annulled.

The resolution was so worded that whatever disciplinary action was taken by Mr. Nijalingappa's group in the Working Committee after October 30—which included the suspension of Mr. Kamalapati Tripathi and Mr. H. N. Bahuguna—was annulled. It made clear that Mrs. Gandhi continued to be "a primary member of the Congress and an active member of the Working Committee and leader of the Congress Parliamentary Party."

To demonstrate their confidence in Mrs. Gandhi and her supporters in the Working Committee, the A-ICC re-elected Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, Mr. Jagjivan Ram, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Dr. S. D. Sharma, Mr. V. P. Naik, Mr. K. Brahmananda Reddy, Mr. Mohan Lal Sukhadia and Mr. Uma Shankar Dixit to the Working Committee besides Mr. D. P. Mishra.

The interim President nominated ten others in accordance with the amended party constitution—Mr. D. Sanjivayya, Mr. Siddhartha Shankar Ray, Mr. Mir Qasim, Mr. H. N. Bahuguna, Mr. K. R. Ganesh, Mr. V. C. Shukla, Mrs. Nandini Satpathi, Mr. Chandrajit Yadav, Mr. K. Karunakaran and Mr. Kollur Mallappa.

All Congress Chief Ministers and PCC Presidents would be special invitees besides Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari, Sardar Swaran Singh, Mr. G. L. Nanda, Mr. Chandra Shekhar and Mr. Fatehsingh Rao Gaekwad.

Mr. C. Subramaniam's Address:

In his address, the interim President, Mr. C. Subramaniam argued that the basic difference in the attitude towards various policies had brought about the parting of ways between the two groups. It was better to part company without bitterness or anger.

He asked the party men to recapture the glorious image of the Congress and become "efficient soldiers" in the struggle for eradication of poverty and establishment of a socialist system.

He referred to the anti-Congress atmosphere in the country at the time of the last General Elections, which was the reaction of the people to the way in which the party had been functioning. It had become necessary to inject new blood into the organization. It was his hope that in the next few weeks while he was President, he would streamline the party secretariat and try to bring about greater co-operation between the A-ICC and the Congress Parliamentary Party.

The 21 members of the new Working Committee came from 13 States and one Union Territory. The States not represented were Gujarat, Haryana, Nagaland and Punjab. Uttar Pradesh had four members, Madhya Pradesh three and there were two each from Andhra Pradesh and Maharashtra.

Six Central Ministers were on the Committee—four of Cabinet rank including Mrs. Gandhi, one Minister of State and one Deputy Minister. There were three State Chief Ministers—from Andhra, Maharashtra and Rajasthan.

Mrs. N. Satpathi is, at 38, the youngest member of the Committee. She was, as her published biography shows, associated with the Communist Party of India. She had been active in the Congress since 1960 when she was chosen to head the Women's Section of the Orissa PCC. She came to Parliament as a member of Rajya Sabha in 1962 and was appointed Deputy Minister for Information and Broadcasting in January, 1966.

Mr. Chandrajit Yadav was also previously connected with the CPI in UP. Mr. K. R. Ganesh was joint secretary of the All-India Students' Federation from 1945 to 1948 and was thought, therefore, to have been close to CPI.

New Secretaries & Treasurer:

Mr. C. Subramaniam appointed two General Secretaries—Dr. S. D. Sharma and Mr. H. N. Bahuguna—on November 23, 1969.

A third name would be announced later.

Mr. Uma Shankar Dixit was appointed Treasurer—the counterpart of Mr. S. K. Patil in the other Working Committee.

Five persons were nominated to the Central Parliamentary Board—Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Jagjivan Ram, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed and Mr. C. Subramaniam. Three seats were left vacant.

Economic Policy Panels:

In a brief statement on economic policy, Mrs. I. Gandhi made a powerful plea for land reforms at the requisitioned meeting of the A-ICC on November 23, 1969 and warned that neglect might create a situation "neither we nor any one else will be able to control."

Mr. T. T. Krishnamachari outlined the key tasks on the economic front and wanted checks on the growth of monopolies and expenditure, mopping up of the savings of the rich for hastening economic development through higher taxation, and administrative plus legal changes to stamp out tax evasion.

At Mrs. Gandhi's suggestion, it was decided that the interim Congress President, Mr. C. Subramaniam, would appoint four ten-member panels to recommend the priorities to be adopted in various fields of development.

The first panel would deal with the problems of the country-side, with special reference to the needs of the landless and of farmers cultivating in dry areas.

The second would look into issues of industrial policy, including the deficiencies of the public sector and the scope for associating workers with management.

The third panel would examine the scope for public works, with particular reference to initiation of schemes for slum clearance, extension of irrigation facilities and building of rural roads. The aim would be to find more job opportunities for the landless in the countryside, and unemployed engineers, technicians and others from the cities.

The fourth panel would endeavour to work out a "socialist charter" for children, in consonance with the aim of creating equality of opportunity for the future citizens of all classes. "We can enable the backward sections of our population, like Harijans and others, to come up only when we provide the opportunity to them to improve their lot."

Reactions:

Mr. S. Nijalingappa said that the developments were "unfortunate." He maintained that the claim of 440 elected members having attended the Delhi meeting was "bogus and wrong."

Constitutionally, he said, they were on a firm footing—and a lot more might be heard from their camp in the next two days about the illegality of the Delhi meeting. But they would resist the temptation of basing their strategy exclusively on legal factors: the consensus regarded the Delhi A-ICC as a political challenge to be met as such.

Dr. Ram Subhag Singh, however, confined himself to the constitutional aspect. "The Delhi meeting is not competent either to expel Mr. Nijalingappa or to elect Mr. Subramaniam as Congress President. Besides, Mr. Subramaniam is not a member of the A-ICC and is thus not qualified to attend the meeting (granting that it is a session of the A-ICC), much less to be chosen as the party chief. This tamasha is rather odd."

He had a similar objection to the presence of Mrs. Gandhi who, he said, was no longer a member of the Congress Party.

Mr. K. Kamaraj said that the meeting was not "an organizational A-ICC" but "a governmental A-ICC," noting that the delegates attending included "about" 90 Ministers of the Central and State Governments and "nearly" 45 MPs belonging to the Prime Minister's group.

Mr. S. N. Mishra said the "unconstitutionality" of the requisitioned meeting was made worse by the steps it had taken.

B. Mr. S. Nijalingappa's Letter To Mrs. I. Gandhi On One-Man Rule: Mr. S. Nijalingappa released on November 19, 1969 a letter he sent to Mrs. Gandhi on November 11, barely 24 hours before she was expelled from the party, in which he asked her why she had neither submitted accounts for the funds she had collected in the name of the party nor filed her return of assets to the A-ICC.

He said in the letter: "May I ask you whether it is not a fact that you and your close associates have collected large sums of money in the name of the party and for political work. You are aware that the resolutions of the Congress make it obligatory for a Minister to report all collections even for charitable purposes to the A-ICC. You know too that the rules of the A-ICC require that Ministers and Members of Parliament and legislatures submit a declaration of their assets to the A-ICC."

The letter was in reply to Mrs. Gandhi's communication to Mr. Nijalingappa on November 3. It said that Mr. S. K. Patil had already answered the allegations made by her about the collection of elections funds by him. He had stated that he had submitted accounts to the organization as well as in the High Court of Bombay.

Dealing with various points raised by Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Nijalingappa said that the "persistence with which you are attempting to paint your bid for one-man rule in the organization and the Government as a conflict between the so-called progressive and radical section and the so-called reactionary section in the Congress cannot mislead any one except the stormtroopers. No aspirant for dictatorial powers in the 20th century has omitted to put on the garb of socialism."

He said: "Your answer to my statements on one-man rule and the personality cult is significant. You have said that the accusation is saddening and hurtful. It is significant that you have not denied my statement that your actions and attitudes betray your desire to establish one-man's rule.

"You say that the Constitution of our country has provided built-in safeguards against one-man rule. So had the Constitution of Weimar Republic in Germany. One does not have to look to the distant past for parallels. The history of the 20th century is replete with instances of tragedy that overtakes democracy when a leader who has risen to power on the crest of a popular wave or with the support of a democratic organization becomes a victim of political narcissim and is egged on by a coterie of unscrupulous sycophants who use corruption and terror to silence opposition and to attempt to make public opinion an echo of authority.

"The Congress, as an organization dedicated to democracy and socialism, has to combat such trends."

In the letter, Mr. Nijalingappa covered almost the same ground as in his communication to Mrs. Gandhi on October 28, which was in the nature of a massive charge-sheet (see page 9264).

C. CPI To Support Mrs. I. Gandhi: The Chairman of the CPI, Mr. S. A. Dange, stated in New Delhi on November 26, 1969 that his party was not satisfied with the "mixed character of the Indira Gandhi Congress," but would continue to defend it as long as there was a threat of the "Rightists' take-over of power."

He found a qualitative change in Mrs. Gandhi's Congress because Mr. Morarji Desai was not there. Of course, there were still many more who should be "purged." For instance, it was a "mystery" to him how Maharaja Fatehsingh Gaekwad had been associated with the new Congress Working Committee, if the party was committed to abolish privy purses and princely privileges.

The best course to stabilize the situation at the Centre and successfully adopt progressive measures was to form a "national democratic front" Government. No single party, he felt, was in a position to run the Government.

He was of the view that a national democratic front coalition Ministry should be constituted immediately at the Centre. But the CPI support to Mrs. Gandhi was not dependent on this. The party was determined to frustrate the "Jana Sangh-Swatantra-Syndicate axis." However, if the Government wanted to bring any retrograde or reactionary measures, such as the Preventive Detention Act, the CPI would oppose it.

CPI Resolution:

The possibilities of a wider national "democratic front" on a national scale as a result of the split in the Congress were hinted at in a resolution adopted by the National Council of the CPI on November 25, 1969.

The Council, which made a brief reference to such possibilities in the context of the future of the United Front in West Bengal, said that the attitude of the CPM was tarnishing the image of the United Front. The Council took a serious view of the situation created within the Front by the sectarian and disruptive policies of the CPM. It pointed out that having seen the success of the UF and utilizing the gains of the masses, the CPM was now directing its main policy with the disruptive aim of establishing its domination over the UF at the cost of other partners and the democratic movement as a whole.

It alleged that this policy was being ruthlessly pursued by the CPM by misusing the Government machinery and by organizing campaigns of terror and murder against the partners of the UF. It said that in the name of class struggle, the CPM was pitting worker against worker, peasant against peasant, thus causing serious division in the mass movement. "The method of political gangsterism against the UF partners is a danger to the United Front."

It appealed to all Left parties, including the CPM, to support the new Kerala Ministry and judge it on the basis of its performance and the role it was playing in ensuring that President's Rule was not imposed in Kerala at a time when the national scene was fast changing.

The Council condemned the attitude of the CPM in Kerala and blamed the party for wrecking the previous United Front Government.

D. Congress Party In Parliament (Opposition) Issues Policy Statement: In a policy statement issued in New Delhi on November 22, 1969, the Congress Party in Parliament (Opposition) pledged itself to the goal of assuring minimum living standards to the people by 1975, removing disparities in rural and urban incomes and broadening of socialism through deepening of democracy.

It laid considerable emphasis on the need for vigilance to preserve democracy and socialism. It argued that those who sought authoritarian "socialism" had subverted various institutions into convenient instruments of the supreme authority and "the social structure is sought to be made wholly subservient to the power apex."

The nine-page statement incorporated a number of changes made in the original draft during prolonged discussions in order to accommodate different view-points on the party's economic programme and the mode of its implementation.

Explaining the need for a policy statement when the Congress Party's policy and programme were well known, the Party Chairman, Mr. Morarji Desai said the intention was to rebut the propaganda against the group that it represented forces of reaction. He explained that although he opposed abolition of privy purses, at one stage he had fallen in line with the A-ICC resolution on this subject.

He spoke about the growth of "fascist-type authoritarian tendencies in the country." Asked whether the Constitution did not provide safeguards against growth of fascism, he said that the safeguards had to be invoked. That underlined the need for public education.

He said that his Party would start a crusade against use of All-India Radio and the Government machinery for propagating the views of a certain group and furthering its political objective. The strong feeling against A-IR might lead parties to adopt an agitational approach. He felt that to ensure proper use of A-IR it should be brought under the control of a Parliamentary Committee.

He alleged that the appeal to Muslim and Scheduled Caste votes during the Presidential election by responsible persons was tantamount to fomenting communal passions. "This is far more dangerous than direct communal instigation."

He said that the strength of the Party in Parliament now was 100—62 in the Lok Sabha and 38 in the Rajya Sabha. He did not believe in "pinching away" members from other parties, but admitted that negotiations were going on with some. There was nothing wrong in having "honourable, dignified and democratic negotiations with anybody" or in conversion through faith and persuasion.

He said it was "indiscipline" at the top level and the "fascist-type" methods of the Governmental wing that had led to the split in the CPP.

He made further points on the policies and programmes of his group. On democracy and socialism: "A democracy will have to be socialist in order to remain a democracy. Likewise, there can be no socialism without democracy."

On privy purses: "I may have said abolition of privy purses is a breach of pledge to the princes, but now that the Congress has taken a decision, I have to abide by it."

On All-India Radio: "My opposition to the Chanda Committee's recommendation that A-IR should be made a public corporation was a mistake. But even an autonomous corporation does not solve the problem because it can be packed by people of one side. It must be a Parliamentary Committee which should be there."

Modifications:

Earlier, the pro-Nijalingappa Congress Parliamentary Party had revised the draft of its first policy statement to tone down its commitment to mixed economy and to the role of the private sector. This was a concession to those members who wanted the party not to provide an opportunity to Mrs. Gandhi's group to outdo them in professions for socialism.

The first statement thus significantly omitted several references—among the deletions being: "India's economy is a mixed one by deliberate choice" or "in large-scale industries, private enterprises exist in our country and must continue to exist", or "the private sector is entitled to equal respect and opportunity as the public undertakings in the sphere allotted to it".

On the other hand, the final document contained a warning—which was not there in the original draft—"against the growth of monopolies and concentration of economic power." It, however, cautioned that "Government regulations are to be employed for quick and even industrial growth and not for restriction and constriction at every turn. The industrial economy that we seek to build has to be modern and strictly competitive in the world markets."

An additional paragraph was devoted to the ills of the co-operatives which had to play "an increasingly important role." But, "the vested interests entrenched in the co-operatives have to be eliminated through statutes or otherwise. Steps have to be taken to liberate the co-operational politics."

Two other new subjects which did not find place in the original draft related to foreign policy and law and order situation.

The Opposition Congress upheld the policy of non-alignment and pursuit of peace in international relations, but said that it "can never acquiesce in non-alignment being made a cover for leaning on one particular Power grouping nor excuse lapses in international morality in its name."

Noting "steady deterioration" in the law and order situation in many parts of the country, it said that "political activities that stir mass hysteria weaken the fabric of social order further and pledged itself to uphold the frame-work of law and order because in its absence progress gets retarded and the life of every person becomes insecure."

E. Accord Over Congress Party Names In Parliament: It was agreed on November 17, 1969 that the new group of Congress members of Parliament formed under the chairmanship of the former Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Morarji Desai, would be known as "Congress Party in Parliament—Opposition."

The section headed by Mrs. Indira Gandhi would continue to be called "the Congress Party in Parliament."

The formula was evolved when Dr. Ram Subhag Singh, Leader of the Congress Opposition in the Lok Sabha, met the Speaker.

Dr. Singh, whose group will be the officially recognized Opposition party, has been allotted the room earlier occupied by the Labour Minister, Mr. Jaisukhlal Hathi, in Parliament House. The new group will also have its own separate office in Parliament House.

F. West Bengal PCC Suspended: In a letter to the President and Executive Committee members of the West Bengal PCC, Mr. C. Subramaniam, the newly elected President of Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Congress, suspended them and transferred their functions to an ad hoc committee.

The three-man committee consists of Mr. K. K. Shukla, who is to act as the convenor, Mr. Pijush Kanti Mukherjee and Mr. Abdur Sattar.

The show-cause notice required the Executive Committee to give its explanation by November 30, failing which further proceedings were threatened. The ad hoc committee was made responsible to Mrs. Gandhi's Congress Working Committee and could co-opt additional members.

The West Bengal PCC was asked to hand over all properties and documents to this Committee. The official Committee was held guilty of a "serious breach of discipline" by carrying on propaganda against the decisions of the requisitioned A-ICC meeting and of lowering the prestige of the Congress by its statements against Mrs. Gandhi's Working Committee.

Mr. Subramaniam declared that the main criterion he would have in taking action against other PCCs would be their non-recognition of "the Indian National Congress of which I happen to be the President". He described the action against the West Bengal PCC as a matter of separation of the two organizations. He said the process of "sorting out" was bound to take some time.

The official Congress President, Mr. Nijalingappa replied to the offensive by Mrs. Gandhi's camp by asking the President and Executive Committee members of the West Bengal PCC to disregard the show-cause notice.

Mr. K. K. Shukla Removed As General Secretary:

Dr. Pratap Chandra Chunder, President of the West Bengal Pradesh Congress Committee, announced in Calcutta on November 26 that Mr. Krishna Kumar Shukla was no longer the General Secretary of the party or a member of its Executive Committee.

"I shall in due time proceed to appoint a new General Secretary", he said in a statement.

G. Mysore PCC Suspended: On November 27, 1969, Mr. C. Subramaniam also suspended the Executive Committee and office-bearers of the Mysore PCC and appointed an 11-member ad hoc committee in its place.

Mr. D. Devaraj Urs, MLA, will be the convenor of the ad hoc committee which will have the power to co-opt more members for conducting party affairs in the State.

The communication addressed to the President of the Mysore PCC, which was under Mr. Nijalingappa's control, was the same as sent to the West Bengal PCC chief. While in West Bengal, only a 3-member ad hoc committee ewas set up, the strength of the ad hoc committee in Mysore is 11.

The PCC was charged with "deliberately" acting against the decisions taken at the requisitioned meeting of the A-ICC in Delhi. It was accused of acting in a manner calculated to lower the Congress prestige.

Similar committees were proposed to be set up shortly in Gujarat and Tamil Nadu. (The PCCs in all the four States owe allegiance to the Congress Party headed by Mr. Nijalingappa.)

Although the PCCs in these States do not recognize the authority of Mr. Subramaniam, the latter was taking this action to organize the party machinery wherever it did not exist.

Reaction:

Reacting sharply to the appointment of an ad hoc committee to replace the Mysore Pradesh Congress Committee, Dr. Nagappa Alva, President of the Mysore PCC, said in Bangalore on November 27, 1969 that he would "treat it with the contempt it deserves."

He added: "We do not recognize Mr. C. Subramaniam, interim President of the Indira Congress, even as a part of the Indian National Congress".

He indicated that the Pradesh Executive might take disciplinary action against those who worked against the unity of the organization.

According to Dr. Alva, only three out of 25 members of the Executive belonged to the pro-Indira Gandhi Congress.

H. Mr. A. P. Sharma Re-instated As President Of Bihar PCC: Mr. A. P. Sharma, who had been removed from the Presidentship of the Bihar PCC at a meeting of the PCC general body in Patna on November 19, was re-instated on November 27, 1969 by the interim Congress President, Mr. C. Subramaniam.

Mr. Subramaniam's office issued a Press release, saying that the so-called requisitioned meeting in Patna should be ignored and the PCC headed by the "constitutionally" elected President, Mr. A. P. Sharma should continue to function as such.

Although the Patna meeting had clearly demonstrated that the Bihar PCC continued to be under the control of the pro-Syndicate faction, this claim had been disputed by the supporters of the Prime Minister. The PCC had elected Mr. K. B. Sahay, former Chief Minister, as its new President in place of Mr. Sharma.

I. Uttar Pradesh Ministers' Resignations: On November 20, 1969, the Deputy Chief Minister of Uttar Pradesh, Mr. Kamalapati Tripathi, and eight other Ministers (out of the total Cabinet strength of 16) resigned from the UP Ministry, thus withdrawing their support to the Chief Minister, Mr. C. B. Gupta.

[The Ministers who resigned belong to Mrs. Indira Gandhi's group in the Congress. Mr. C. B. Gupta belongs to Mr. S. Nijalingappa's group.]

Mr. Gupta's Ministry was thus reduced to a "minority" Government in UP. Out of a total Congress strength of 218 out of 425 in the State Assembly, Mr. Gupta claimed the support of 156 members, conceding the support of 62 members to Mr. Kamalapati Tripathi.

In their resignation letters submitted to the Chief Minister, the nine Ministers accused him of supporting the Syndicate group in the Congress which had been opposing the basic pro-socialist policies of the Congress.

The Ministers who resigned, besides Mr. Kamalapati Tripathi, were: Mr. Chaturbhuj Sharma (Revenue), Mr. Atiq-ur-Rehman (Local Self-government), Mr. L. S. Yadav (Co-operation), Mr. Ajit Pratap Singh (Jails), Mr. N. D. Tiwari (Planning and Labour), Mr. Swami Prasad Singh (Justice), Mr. Sita Ram (Agriculture) and Mrs. Vidyawati Rathor.

In his long resignation letter to Mr. Gupta, Mr. Tripathi said that after the expulsion of the Prime Minister, Mrs. Gandhi from the Congress, acute differences had arisen between them (he and Mr. Gupta) and now they were "poles apart." He charged Mr. Gupta with being a party to the expulsion of Mrs. Gandhi. He had opposed neither the rejection of the requisition for an A-ICC meeting nor the dropping of the Working Committee by Mr. Nijalingappa, who had thus ensured the majority of his group.

Mr. Tripathi is also President of Uttar Pradesh Congress Committee.

Mr. K. Tripathi Suspended:

Thereupon, the Congress President, Mr. S. Nijalingappa, suspended the UP Congress Committee President, Mr. Kamalapati Tripathi, and its General Secretary, Mr. H. N. Bahuguna, from the party on November 21 on charges of trying to "wreck" the Congress Ministry and spreading indiscipline in the State.

Mr. Tripathi had dismissed the UPCC Secretary, Mr. Banarsi Das, (who belongs to the Gupta faction) on November 20.

Mr. Nijalingappa conveyed the suspension order to Mr. Tripathi by telegram and stayed the dismissal order against Mr. Banarsi Das. He appointed Mr. Mohan Lal Gautam, Vice-President of UPCC, to act as President till a new President was elected.

Support To Mr. C. B. Gupta:

On November 22, the UP Congress members of the State Assembly, A-ICC members from the State and Presidents of Zila Parishads met in Lucknow and authorized the Chief Minister, Mr. C. B. Gupta, to run his Government in any manner he chose, and not to resign in the eventuality of a possible break-away of the party legislators in support of Mr. Kamalapathi Tripathi.

Mr. Krishnanand Rai, General Secretary of the Congress Legislature Party and Health Minister, announced that 137 of the 229 MLAs and 34 of the 67 MLCs had attended the meeting.

Among others who could not come because of their pre-occupation, he said, 19 MLAs and 12 MLCs had telegraphically informed Mr. Gupta of their support.

He said that invitations for the meeting had been issued to 70 out of 111 A-ICC members from UP; 51 of them were present, while six more had intimated their support to Mr. Gupta. Out of 47 Presidents of Zila Parishads, 28 were present while nine had confirmed their support.

More Ministers Appointed:

Next day (November 23), Mr. C. B. Gupta inducted 29 persons, including three women, into the UP Cabinet.

The Governor, Mr. B. Gopala Reddy, administered the oaths of office and secrecy to the new Ministers.

The six new Ministers are: Mr. Kailash Prakash, MLC, (former Education Minister); Mr. Dau Dayal Khanna, MLC (former Health Minister); Mr. Bansi Dhar Mishra, MLA, Mr. Munishwar Dutt Upadhyaya, MLC (former UPCC President), Mr. Anand Singh, MLA, and Begum Aizaz Rasool.

The three MLCs had been defeated in the General Elections in 1967.

The 11 Ministers of State are: Mr. Shiv Prasad Gupta, MLC, Mr. S. P. Singh, MLC, Mr. Banshi Dhar Pande, MLA, Mr. J. N. Sinha, MLA, Mr. Vijay Kumar Tripathi, MLA, Mr. Ram Kumar Shastri, MLA, Mr. Kalpanath Singh, MLA, Mr. Mumtaz Mohammed Khan, MLA, Mr. Brijraj Singh, MLA, Mr. Dharmvir, MLA, and Mr. Rajendra Pratap Singh, MLA.

J. Pakistan's Violations Of Air Corridor—Protest Note: It was officially learnt in New Delhi on November 24, 1969 that India had strongly protested to Pakistan against continuous and wilful violation of the air corridor between West and East Pakistan by Pakistani aircraft.

In a Note handed to the Pakistan High Commissioner, Mr. Sajjad Hyder, India noted that although Pakistani aircraft were given permission to overfly Indian territory from West Pakistan to Dacca, a Pakistan C-130 aircraft had deviated from the corridor on October 30. This deviation was apparently for purposes of reconnaissance of Indian defence positions.

In an attempt to forestall Indian protests against the violation, the Chief of the Pakistan Air Force, Air Vice-Marshal Yusuf, had summoned the Indian Air Attache in Islamabad to Peshawar and made a protest that the Indian Air Force had intercepted a Pakistan C-130 on its way to Dacca. India had firmly rejected this accusation by Pakistan, a familiar pattern of accusing the other party when Pakistan itself was involved in violating the rights.

K. Dutch Co-operation In Development: The Netherlands has extended its full co-operation to India for the successful launching of a development strategy in the seventies.

The offer was made by Mr. B. J. Udink, Minister for Development and Co-operation in the Netherlands Government, during his visit on November 14, 1969.

The Government of India welcomed the initiative taken by the Government of the Netherlands in making commitments for aid for two years at a time, thus enabling this country to plan on a more realistic basis of aid availability. The Government of the Netherlands has offered a new line of credit amounting to 80 million guilders (Rs. 16 crores) bearing a rate of interest of 2½ per cent and repayable in 30 years.

The discussions with Mr. Udink also covered the importance of tailoring the aid to the specific needs of developing countries, taking into account their debt service obligation and the need to gradually untie aid. Untying of aid, particularly for procurement within developing countries of the region, would be a significant contribution to regional economic co-operation and development.

There was complete accord on the importance of reaching agreement on the broad strategy of convergent international action for the Second Development Decade. While it was recognized that the primary responsibility for development rested on the developing countries, corresponding supporting action needed to be taken by the developed countries. The strategy for the Second Development Decade should be such as to lay the foundations for the gradual transformation of the international community to attain the common objective of better human, social and economic development.

L. Re-grouping Of Villages In Mizo Hills—Second Phase Completed: It was disclosed in Calcutta in November, 1969 that the second phase of re-grouping in the Mizo Hills district of Assam—called "Operation Accomplishment II"—had been completed and the re-grouped villages were being handed over by the Army to the civil administration.

The first phase of re-grouping had been carried out in January-February, 1967 along a 10-mile belt astride the Vairangte-Aijal-Lungleh road and involved the movement of about 48,000 people. Though attempted for the first time in India under considerable handicaps, it was a rewarding experience and was welcomed by the local people as it provided security to them by isolating subversive elements and bringing them nearer civilization.

The second phase of the scheme covered the re-grouping of villages on the Tripura, Pakistan and Burma borders of the district. It also incorporated areas adjacent to the Selling-Champhai, Lungleh-Demagiri and Lungleh-Lawangtlai roads besides some portions of the eastern part of the district.

The scheme covered a total population of 127,968 from 326 different villages and involved the movement of 54,838 people. There are altogether 57 group centres, each with an average population of 2,500. The re-grouping centres were selected keeping in view their accessibility, economic viability, availability of water, administrative feasibility and ability to provide protection from hostile action.

All the new group centres of PPVs (progressive protected villages, as they are called) have either a security outpost located near them or are within its easy reach. At places, police forces have also been stationed.

The Army was given six months to complete the re-grouping. It took immediate steps to ensure that the villagers would not be without the basic necessities of life in their new locations. A standardized ration scale was prepared and stocks were procured. Reserves had also to be built. The total requirement of supplies was over 5,000 tons. Of this, 95 per cent was air-dropped by giant AN-12 planes of the Air Force.

M. Preventive Detention Act Lapses: The Preventive Detention Act lapsed on December 31, 1969 as a result of the Central Home Ministry's decision not to go ahead with the proposal for its extension during the current session of Parliament.

The decision reflected the shift in the balance of power at the Centre as the present Government was obviously not sure of seeing the Act through in Parliament without the support of the Opposition parties. (All the major Opposition groups in Parliament were opposed to the Act.)

A decision to seek extension of the Act by three years had been taken by the Government only a fortnight earlier. All the States without exception were stated to have favoured extension of the Act for varying reasons.

The State Governments were later informed by the Central Home Ministry that an extension of the Act was not being sought by the Central Government and they should review their arrangements. It was pointed out that the States could take necessary steps by passing legislation similar to the Preventive Detention Act.

The Act was first introduced 20 years ago by the then Home Minister, Sardar Patel. It had been on the Statute Book ever since.

Till the end of September this year, 1,879 persons were detained under the Act. Besides Assam, where 891 Mizos were detained under the Act, 660 persons were kept in detention in West Bengal. In Andhra Pradesh 123 persons and 79 in Manipur were detained under the Act. Under the Central Government's authority 274 persons, largely in Nagaland, were detained.

Both in Assam and West Bengal, detention orders were issued under Security and Public Order clauses of the Act. Of the 660 persons detained in West Bengal, 47 were detained in the interest of maintaining essential supplies to the community.

While most of the State Governments wanted extension of the Act from three to five years, the Kerala Government favoured extension for a period of one year only.

The United Front Government in West Bengal, in its last letter on the subject to the Home Ministry in September this year, had wanted the Act to continue as it strengthened the hand of the Government to deal with anti-social elements and blackmarketeers.

The Andhra Government had pointed out that it would be difficult for the State Government to deal with the Naxalite movement which held out a threat not only to law and order but also to the security of the country.

N. Activities Of Extremists In States: The Central Minister of State for Home, Mr. V. C. Shukla, placed a statement in the Rajya Sabha on November 26, 1969 about the extremists' activities in various States.

Andhra Pradesh: The extremists were operating mostly in Srikakulam, Visakhapatnam, Krishna, Guntur, Khammam, Karimnagar, Warangal and Nalgonda districts. Since they had not started any regular enrolment of members, their number was not known.

Assam: The extremists' activities were continued in circulation of posters and leaflets preaching their ideology in Goalpara, Kamrup, Darrag, Nowgong, Sibsagar, Lakhimpur and Cachar districts. About 128 persons were suspected to be concerned with extremists' activities.

Bihar: The extremists had been found to be active in Muzaffarpur, Darbhanga, Champaran, Monghyr, Bhagalpur, Purnea, Saharsa, Shahabad, Ranchi and Singhbhum districts. Their number was estimated to be about 800.

Tamil Nadu: The number of extremists in the State was estimated to be about 1,000. The names of the districts in which their activities had come to notice were being ascertained.

Maharashtra: There were only about 25 extremists in Bombay city, but they were not reported to be active.

Orissa: The extremists were active in Koraput and Ganjam districts, and their number was estimated to be about 200.

Punjab and UP: The number of extremists in the States was not known and the names of the districts in which they were active were being ascertained.

West Bengal: The extremists were active in Darjeeling, Jalpaiguri, Nadia, 24-Parganas, Hooghly, Burdwan, Birbhum, Purulia and Midnapore districts and Calcutta. Their number was not known.

Some propaganda activities of extremists had come to notice in Andaman and Nicobar Islands. In the remaining Union Territories and in Gujarat, Haryana, Madhya Pradesh, Mysore, Nagaland and Rajasthan no extremist activities had come to notice.

Mr. Shukla said that according to information received from the State Governments, the extremists had, of late, stepped up their activities in some portions of Purulia, Birbhum, 24-Parganas, Nadia, Jalpaiguri, West Dinajpur, Darjeeling and Midnapur districts. In Midnapur district their activities were confined to the areas of police stations of Gopiballavpur and Debra, where they had committed murder of some jotedars and had looted their properties.

He added: "It has been reported by the State Government that about 130 persons have so far been arrested in connexion with the specific cases arising out of the incidents created by the extremists. All precautionary measures have been taken and strict vigilance is being maintained over the activities of the extremists."

O. Mr. Ajoy Mukherji On Law And Order In West Bengal: The Chief Minister of West Bengal, Mr. Ajoy Mukherji stated at a news conference in Calcutta on November 10, 1969 that the law and order situation in the State had not improved.

He made the observation when a reporter drew his attention to the previous day's "inter-party" clash in Burdwan in which three persons were killed. A Home Department official said later that the Burdwan incident was not of a political nature.

Asked whether his observation on the law and order situation was not tantamount to indictment of his own Government, Mr. Mukherji said: "You may think so. But a fact is a fact."

To a question whether he did not have a special responsibility in regard to the law and order situation, he said it should be tackled jointly by all the parties of the United Front. "The Chief Minister is not a dictator".

He had been told that in some areas forcible "collection" of paddy had become a practice and the people in those places had become panicky. He said there should be security of life and of "legally owned" property. Murder of any one, irrespective of whether he was a jotedar or a peasant, should be condemned.

"The State must protect the life and property of people, but unfortunately it is not being done in West Bengal. There is no precedent for this state of affairs in the civilized world. "Not to speak of improvement in the law and order situation, murders, violent clashes, looting, gherao and forcible occupation of land have become the order of the day in West Bengal. There is no denying the fact that people, particularly in rural areas, have become panicky and in many places a sense of insecurity of life and property has gripped the population."

P. Orissa Ministry Re-shuffled: The Orissa Coalition Ministry was re-shuffled in Bhuvaneshwar on November 17, 1969 with the swearing-in of three Adivasi Deputy Ministers as Cabinet Ministers and a new Adivasi Deputy Minister.

The promoted Deputy Ministers were Mr. Gangadharan Pradhan and Mr. Kartick Chandra Majhi of the Swatantra Party and Mr. Monmohan Tudu of the Jana Congress wing. The new Deputy Minister was Mr. Dambaru Majhi (Swa).

While the strength of the Council of Ministers remained unchanged at 19, the number of Cabinet rank Ministers increased from 12 to 14. The Adivasi and Harijan members now number seven in the Ministry—five Ministers and two Deputy Ministers. Their increased number in the Cabinet was intended to meet their demand for "proportional" representation on the basis of their strength of 40 in the ruling coalition of 73 members.

The elevation of the three Deputy Ministers, who belong to Sundargarh and Mayurbhan districts, was seen as a move to counteract the Jharkhand movement which had been gaining ground there.

Another Re-shuffle:

The Orissa Chief Minister, Mr. R. N. Singh Deo, announced in Bhuvaneshwar on November 24, 1969 the second re-shuffle of portfolios in eight days among the members of his Cabinet.

Mr. Mon Mohan Tudu (Jana Congress), who was the Minister without Portfolio since his elevation to Cabinet rank on November 17, was entrusted with the Tribal and Rural Welfare Department, earlier held by Mr. Santanu Kumar Das of the same party.

Mr. Das retained the Excise Department. In addition he took over administration of new capital and river valley development branches of the Political and Services Department from the Jana Congress Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. Pabitra Mohan Pradhan and registration branch of the Revenue Department from Mr. Surendranath Patnaik.

The Deputy Chief Minister, Mr. Pradhan held the portfolios of Political and Services (excluding administration of new capital and river valley development), Mining and Geology.

Mr. Surendranath Patnaik (Jana Congress) retained the Departments of Revenue (excluding registration) and Irrigation and Power.

Q. Donations To Political Parties: A statement was placed in the Rajya Sabha on November 17, 1969 by the Industrial Development Minister, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, listing donations to political parties by the commercial and industrial firms of six business groups from 1962-63 to 1967-68.

According to this statement, the Congress Party received the highest donations from these groups, the Swatantra the second highest and the Jana Sangh occupied the third position during these years.

In 1967-68, the Birla group donated Rs. 16,45,000 to the Congress, Rs. 651 to the Hindu Mahasabha, Rs. 21,552 to the Jana Sangh, Rs. 53 to the Communist Party, Rs. 1,500 to the P-SP, Rs. 1,001 to the BKD and Rs. 151 to the Janta Party;

Tata donated Rs. 5,40,000 to the Congress and Rs. 2,50,000 to the Swatantra;

J. K. Singhania: Rs. 67,500 to the Congress and Rs. 10,000 to the Swatantra;

Kirloskar: Rs. 1,02,000 to the Congress, Rs. 3,75,000 to the Swatantra and Rs. 11,000 to the Jana Sangh;

Goenka: Rs. 25,000 to the Congress;

Sahu Jain: Rs. 5,88,000 to the Congress.

R. LIC Business During 1968-69: The Life Insurance Corporation (LIC) completed a record business of Rs. 929.35 crores in 1968-69 as against Rs. 844.47 crores in the preceding year.

According to the annual report of the LIC, released in New Delhi on November 10, 1969, about 9,93,000 policies, comprising 68.5 per cent of the total number of policies issued in India and assuring Rs. 547.64 crores (59.5 per cent of the total new sum assured in India), were sold to persons insuring for the first time. More than 81.3 per cent of the new policies sold in rural areas were to persons who bought insurance for the first time and the percentage for urban areas was 62.1 per cent.

The average sum assured per policy during the year increased to Rs. 6,390 as against Rs. 5,913 in the previous year. About 74 per cent of the new policies were issued for sums between Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 5,000. This indicated the spread of life insurance to people who needed it most.

The total business in force as on March 31, 1969 was Rs. 5,718 crores under 134,35,000 policies against Rs. 5,240 crores under 127,59,000 policies as on March 31, 1968.

The premium income went up to Rs. 234.78 crores from Rs. 213.01 crores in the previous year. The income from interest on loans, dividends and rents from properties from investments in respect of life business was Rs. 77.93 crores as against Rs. 68.21 crores during the previous year.

The life fund at the end of the year amounted to Rs. 1,434.47 crores as against Rs. 1,260.66 crores in the previous year. Total assets as on March 31, 1969 amounted to Rs. 1,577.33 crores as against Rs. 1,400.01 crores in the preceding year.

S. Remuneration For Company Directors Reduced: The Government on November 14, 1969 reduced by nearly a third the maximum remuneration payable to company directors and managers from Rs. 1,80,000 to Rs. 1,35,000 a year.

The revised guidelines, announced by the Company Law Department, fixed the salary ceiling for directors and managers at Rs. 90,000 a year. In addition, they were allowed a commission of the net profits up to one per cent, subject to a maximum of Rs. 45,000. So far, company directors and managers were allowed a maximum remuneration of Rs. 1,80,000.

As regards perquisites, there was no overall ceiling on their value except on certain individual items like housing and medical benefits. The Government had now decided that in future all perquisites should not exceed a third of the salary or Rs. 30,000 a year.

All these ceilings were, however, subject to exceptions and in deserving cases the Government might allow higher remunerations to be paid.

As regards multiple directorship, the Government made it clear that a person who was already a whole-time director in one company would not be approved as a paid director in another company.

In the case of managers, however, an exception might be made in cases where the two companies were small or engaged in more or less similar or allied business, but the remuneration approved for the appointment in the second company would be regulated suitably.

T. Bombay Port Pilots' Strike: Pilots and dock-masters of the Bombay Port Trust resumed work on November 13, 1969 ending their strike which had paralysed ships' movements in the harbour for eight days.

They called off the strike following an agreement that the Port Trust would re-open the pilots' control room and that they, on their part, would resume work on the turn system on a continuous roster.

They may, according to the agreement, alternatively divide themselves into two groups and maintain 24 hours' working of the port by operating on "24 hours on and 24 hours off" working system, from the control of the Deputy Conservator or Harbour Master.

During the strike, 28 ships, including a foodgrain vessel and four fertilizer ships, had been tied down in the stream, waiting to be piloted into berths.

U. Sant Fateh Singh To Commit Self-Immolation: The Akali Dal President, Sant Fateh Singh announced in Amritsar on November 24, 1969 that he would commit self-immolation on February 1, 1970 if Chandigarh was not merged with Punjab by January 26.

In a statement, he said he would begin a six-day fast on January 26. If he was still alive on February 1, he would immolate himself.

He also announced his resignation of the convenorship of the all-party action committee on Chandigarh. "With great difficulty I have succeeded in maintaining Hindu-Sikh unity in the State. I want them to live together for ever."

When the Sant had gone on a fast to be followed by self-immolation three years ago, some others had also joined him in the fast and declared their intention to burn themselves to death at the agnikunds constructed at the Golden Temple.

The same night (November 24), the Working Committee of the Akali Dal appealed to Sant Fateh Singh to give more time to the Central Government for solving the Chandigarh issue and not to take the hard line of making the supreme sacrifice.

V. Andhra Cyclone Havoc: A severe cyclonic storm hit several districts of Andhra Pradesh on November 7, 1969 taking a heavy toll of life and property.

In Krishna district the cyclone, which was accompanied by heavy rain, caused heavy floods, and many persons lost their lives in Kaikulu taluk due to the sudden rise in the level of the Kolleru Lake. Forty-eight persons were reported to have died and 13 were missing. Crops were badly damaged and thousands of thatched houses collapsed.

In West Godavari district, 41 persons lost their lives. Heavy damage was caused to crops, and communications were disrupted. In East Godavari district, the death toll was 51. All low-lying areas were submerged. Many huts, farms and parts of Kakinada town were under water. There was heavy loss to crops and property. Road traffic was disrupted, as were electricity and telephone and telegraph lines. Four deaths were reported from Khammam district.

Pending assessment of damage and relief measures, Rs. 50,00,000 was sanctioned by the Government and placed at the disposal of the Board of Revenue for distribution among the affected people.

W. Jawaharlal Nehru University Inaugurated: Inaugurating Jawaharlal Nehru University in New Delhi on November 14, 1969, the President, Mr. V. V. Giri, stressed the need for devising courses which would help to make students self-reliant.

He said the problem had been sharply focussed by the large number of educated unemployed. Expert bodies such as Jawaharlal Nehru University should take up the task of orienting the university courses to practical needs.

After the formal inauguration, 22 students received the degree of B.A. (Hons.) in the Russian language at the first convocation of the University.

Mrs. Indira Gandhi, Chancellor of the University, presided. Among the other distinguished persons who attended were Khan Abdul Ghaffar Khan, the Vice-President, Mr. G. S. Pathak, Mr. M. C. Chagla and Mr. Buckminster Fuller. Miss Dorothy Woodman presented to the University the library of the late Mr. Kingsley Martin along with an advance copy of her book on the Himalayas.

In her convocation address, Mrs. Gandhi said that her father, Mr. Nehru was a maker of modern India. The University, she hoped, would serve as a milestone in development of higher education.

She said that education was not merely accumulation of knowledge but a means to stimulate the capacity to think, to evolve and to emulate. Centres like Jawaharlal Nehru University should try to create a climate conducive to social change. "We must all join together to promote a new humanism and the intelligentsia which should identify itself with the process of change."

The Vice-Chancellor of the University, Mr. G. Parthasarthy, said: "Our approach is to evolve policies and programmes which will make Jawaharlal Nehru University a net addition to the national resources in higher education in kind rather than a mere expansion of facilities which already exist."

He said the University would develop programmes of close and intimate collaboration with outstanding institutions of higher education and research in Delhi and outside.

The University would begin its programmes at the higher research level and then introduce at an appropriate stage post-graduate teaching, particularly in the courses that had inter-disciplinary approach. After the initial take-off period at its 1,000-acre campus in South Delhi, the University would undertake programmes for development in other parts of the country. He said that the North-East Frontier region was very near to the heart of the late Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru and he wanted much to be done for this region. The University was also considering the possibility of recognizing defence training institutions spread all over the country.

X. "Anand Bhavan" Donated To Jawaharlal Nehru Memorial Fund: The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, on November 14, 1969 donated her house Anand Bhavan, in Allahabad, to the Jawaharlal Nehru Memorial Fund.

She said that she had taken this decision so that the Bhavan may be suitably used to keep alive the name of Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru "as a living memory of a man beckoning us to remain true to his beliefs which are so basic to the survival of this great country."

She added: "Jawaharlal Nehru loved beautiful things but had no attachment to possessions. However, he did have a special feeling for Anand Bhavan which he described in these words: 'Far more than structure of bricks and concrete, more than a private possession.' It is connected intimately with our national struggle for freedom and within its four walls great things have happened and great decisions have been reached.

"So Anand Bhavan is not just a building but a symbol of our fight for freedom for which many members of our family had struggled, suffered and sacrificed. For me also, memories of the house are not of family life but of the days of jail-going, police searches, confiscation of goods and, above all, the constant flow of people of all sections and from all parts of India. Thus Anand Bhavan became a part of our history, and people still flock to it in large numbers.

"My father left the house to me, but it is appropriate that I should not keep it as my private property. I have, therefore, decided to gift it to the Jawaharlal Nehru Memorial Fund, so that it may be suitably used to keep alive the name of Jawaharlal Nehru, not as a bit of history frozen into brick and mortar, but as a living memory of a man beckoning us to remain true to his beliefs which are so basic to the survival of our great country.

"It joins the original Anand Bhavan donated by my grandfather to the Congress in 1930 and since then known as Swaraj Bhavan. For many years, Swaraj Bhavan served as the office of the Indian National Congress. But since Partition, it is a home for children."

SUMMARY: Mr. S. Ramgoolam's Visit; Trade With Yugoslavia; Chinese Air Base In Chumbi Valley; Plans For Naval Academy; Meghalaya Approved; Land Reforms In Kerala, UP And Mysore; Steel Prices Raised; Congress (Old) Resolutions.

A. Mr. S. Ramgoolam's Visit: Mr. Seewoosagar Ramgoolam, Prime Minister of Mauritius, arrived in India on December 10, 1969 and was received at the airport, among others, by the Prime Minister of India, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, and the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Dinesh Singh. Soon after his arrival, after a courtesy call on the President of India, the two Prime Ministers surveyed a wide range of world issues of mutual interest to their respective countries. They discussed inter alia security problems in respect of the Soviet Union's interest in bases in Mauritius.

The Foreign Minister of Mauritius, Mr. C. Duval, exchanged ideas with Mr. Dinesh Singh on questions pertaining to bilateral relations between the two countries and security problems in the Indian Ocean areas. Mr. Dinesh Singh informed Mr. Duval that Indian businessmen would be able to set up industries in Mauritius on the basis of minority participation of the Indian party. There was detailed discussion on the two proposed projects, the establishment of a fertilizer plant in Mauritius with Indian assistance and the expertise of Air-India to help set up Mauritius' own air lines corporation. India's help was also sought to modernize the Fort Luis airport and to raise it to international standards. It was, however, made clear that India was prepared to export 'know-how' and machinery but not capital.

At a dinner hosted by Mrs. Gandhi the same evening (December 10, 1969), the two Prime Ministers re-affirmed their determination to evolve in their respective countries a multi-racial and multi-religious society on the basis of equality.

Discussions between the two Prime Ministers were continued on December 12, 1969. Both sides agreed that the Indian Ocean should be a nuclear-weapon-free area. India also agreed to set up an Institute of Indian Studies, Culture and Traditions in Mauritius and to provide co-operation in various economic and industrial projects. Mr. S. Ramgoolam informed Mrs. Indira Gandhi that the island leaders had agreed on a government of national unity to concentrate on development aspects.

Mr. Ramgoolam was awarded the degree of Doctor of Laws (honoris causa) by the Delhi University on December 12, 1969.

In a joint communique issued at the conclusion of their talks the two Prime Ministers re-iterated that the "Indian Ocean should be kept a nuclear weapon-free area", and expressed deep disappointment at the continuation of tension in West Asia, urging speedy implementation of the Security Council resolution of November 22, 1967. They emphasized the need for greater economic co-operation amongst the developing countries and particularly between the countries of Asia and Africa.

They re-iterated that the arrangements agreed to in UNCTAD-II for development of developing countries should be implemented without further delay.

They stressed the importance of peaceful co-existence between States with different social systems, respect for sovereignty and settlement of all differences peacefully without resort to use of force.

They considered it necessary for the world community to reach an early settlement on general and complete disarmament.

Mr. Ramgoolam and party left for Mauritius on December 16.

[Dr. S. Ramgoolam had last visited India on December 12, 1967, a few months before Mauritius attained Independence on March 12, 1968 (see page 8110). He had then said that he had reasons to expect "as much help as possible" from India with whom Mauritius had close cultural, religious and linguistic ties and had expressed satisfaction with the "very encouraging talks" he had had then with Indian leaders.]

B. Trade With Yugoslavia—New Agreement: The meeting of the Yugoslav-India Committee for Economic Co-operation ended in Belgrade on December 31, 1969 with the signing of an Agreement between the Foreign Trade Minister, Mr. B. R. Bhagat and Mr. Miran Mejak, member of Yugoslavia's Federal Government.

A communique said that it was expected that trade between the two countries would reach the amount of $66 million in 1970, with considerable increase of Indian exports.

India will export, besides traditional goods, new products like jeeps, commercial vehicles, and consumer plastic goods.

Yugoslav exports will include tractors, printing equipments and agricultural light airplanes.

Rupee Payment Arrangement With Yugoslavia Extended:

It was announced in New Delhi on January 8 that India and Yugoslavia had agreed to continue the present rupee payment arrangement for their trade exchange till the end of March, 1972.

The Agreement to extend the existing payment arrangement by two years was reached during the Foreign Trade Minister, Mr. B. R. Bhagat's visit to Belgrade in the last week of December, 1969.

C. Five Loan Agreements With West Germany: West Germany formally committed assistance amounting to DM265 million (Rs. 54.30 crores) to India during 1969-70 with the signing of five Loan Agreements at Frankfurt recently.

Of these five Agreements, signed by Mr. Khub Chand, India's Ambassador, with the Development Bank through which West German assistance to India is made available, two Agreements for a total of DM69 million related to balances from the aid promises of previous years.

Two other Agreements of DM99 million (Rs. 20.29 crores) for the purchase of goods and services and DM62 million (Rs. 12.7 crores) for refinancing payment of principal amounts due during 1969-70 in respect of certain earlier German credits were in partial implementation of the overall Economic Assistance Agreement for 1969-70 signed in July, 1969 at the end of the visit of the West Germany official delegation headed by Mr. E. Elson.

D. Chinese Air Base Extended In Chumbi Valley: According to Army sources in Shillong on January 2, the Chinese had extended their air base at Phari Dzong in the Chumbi valley that cuts Sikkim from Bhutan, north of the India-Tibet border to receive logistic support.

Phari Dzong is situated on the old India-Bhutan route via Sikkim at an altitude of 14,300 feet, about five km from the Indian border as the crow flies.

The extension of the base, according to these sources, was a strategically important step by China to improve communications and logistics on its border with India. It brought the sensitive north-east Indian targets within reach of Chinese aircraft.

The Chinese had also built a motorable road in this Tibetan plateau within close range of Bum La, India's northernmost outpost in Kameng district of N-EFA.

Another jeepable road now linked the Tibetan capital of Lhasa with Khinse Mane, the first Indian outpost that fell to the Chinese during the 1962 aggression. It was located near the India-Tibet-Bhutan border tri-junction.

E. Plans For Naval Academy: The Chief of the Naval Staff, Admiral A. K. Chatterji, stated in Madras on December 7, 1969 that a Naval Academy would start functioning from January 1, 1970. It would be temporarily at Cochin, but would be shifted to a permanent site later.

He said that the Navy would be acquiring more submarines in years to come. The first Indian-built Leander-class frigate, under construction at Mazagaon, would be commissioned in 1971. Thereafter one frigate would be built every year.

Apart from frigates, sea-way defence boats (SDB) were being built indigenously. Work on the south breakwater in Bombay was progressing "very well", and was six months ahead of schedule. An advance naval base was also under construction at Port Blair.

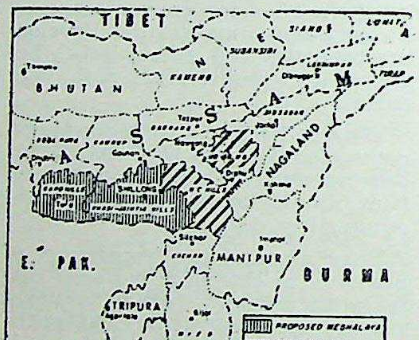
F. Meghalaya Autonomous State Within Assam Approved By Parliament: On December 24, 1969, Parliament set its seal of approval on the formation of an autonomous State called Meghalaya—comprising three hill districts—within the State of Assam.

Parliamentary history was made when the Assam Re-organization Bill was taken up and passed by the Rajya Sabha, suspending certain rules of procedure, within three hours of its adoption in the Lok Sabha. Never before had a Bill been passed in both Houses the same day. This unprecedented move underlined the support for the Bill from all sections of the House.



The Lok Sabha had earlier rejected all amendments except one moved by the Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, which was of minor consequence. Mr. Chavan said the House should appreciate the eagerness and anxiety with which the people of the hill areas were awaiting the formation of the State.

Replying to an amendment moved by a member that there was no need for setting up of a provisional Assembly, Mr. Chavan said, provision had been made in the Bill for the constitution of a provisional Legislative Assembly for Meghalaya pending General Elections to the Assembly. If the amendment were to be accepted, formation of the State would be delayed till the General Election.

Referring to the demand of some members that North Cachar and Mikir Hills should also be given similar autonomy, Mr. Chavan said provision had been made for those areas to join Meghalaya. If for any reason they preferred not to join, they would continue as parts of Assam.

The House then passed all the 77 clauses and four Schedules without much discussion.

Facts And Figures:

The area of United Mikir and North Cachar Hills district, comprising the two sub-divisions of Mikir and North Cachar Hills, is 583 square miles out of the total area of the 2,732 square miles of 34 autonomous hills districts of Assam. The total population of this district, according to the 1961 census, is 2,80,000 as against the total population of 13,13,000 for the hill districts.

The Mikir Hills sub-division is predominently inhabited by the Mikir tribes and the North Cachar Hills by Dimasa Kacharis. The Mikir Hills sub-division comprises an area of 4,000 square miles.

The highest peak in Mikir Hills sub-division is the Singhsani with a height of 4,499 feet and in North Cachar sub-division the Jhingtubum with a height of 6,128 feet.

The area has not been mapped in detail and the economic value of its mineral resources is still not precisely known. Sporadic occurrence of minerals like coal and limestone has been reported. The Mikir Hills sub-division has potentialities in coal resources. Koilajan and Disobai are two of its existing collieries.

A kind of peacock is found in the region covering Frikjindeng in Mikir Hills and in and around the Garampani area of the North Cachar Hills. Imperial pigeons and green pigeons were available in abundance in the region, but these birds are becoming rarer owing to indiscriminate shooting by shikaris.

The climatic conditions are such that the region is ideally suited for the propagation of varied types of animal population, but much of the fauna still remains unexplored.

G. Right To Property—Law Ministry's View: The Law Ministry, in a recent note giving its views on certain constitutional amendments proposed by West Bengal for speedier and effective implementation of land laws, has brought to the notice of the Government of India that the Chapter on Fundamental Rights in the Constitution, which includes the right to property, cannot be amended by Parliament in view of the judgment given by the Supreme Court in 1967 in the well-known Gokalnath case.

The Law Ministry has stated that in the Gokalnath case, the Supreme Court had held that Parliament had "no power to amend Part III of the Constitution so as to take away or abridge the Fundamental Rights enshrined in the Constitution."

In the light of this judgment, legal circles expressed surprise at the suggestion made by the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, at the Bombay session of the Requisitionists Congress on December 27, 1969 that the laws in regard to property rights must be changed, though they have not failed to note that the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, had recognized the legal limitation to any such action.

In regard to land reforms too, the Law Ministry note makes it appear that the States are shirking their responsibility by asking the Centre to bring forward constitutional amendments to place curbs on landlords. It is of the view that the States themselves could enact legislation to bring down land ceilings or fix compensation for lands in excess of the ceiling as such enactments would enjoy protection under Article 31A of the Constitution, which stipulates the conditions under which property could be acquired by the State.

It has also stated that there is no need to amend the Constitution to enable the States to implement land reforms more speedily or effectively.

The plea for constitutional amendments was made by the West Bengal Government in a communication to the Government of India in which it had suggested that provisions of the Constitution regarding ceilings in respect of family holdings should be amended.

H. Land Reforms In Kerala: A new era of hopefulness dawned for tenants, hutment dwellers and the landless of Kerala on January 1, when the Land Reforms (Amendment) Act came into force. By it, landlordism will end in the State once and for all. Tenants will become owners with full ownership rights over their land. The monopoly enjoyed by a few big landlords over cultivated land will be broken. The surplus land above the ceiling will be distributed to the landless.

The Revenue Minister, Mr. K. T. Jacob, said in Trivandrum on December 30, 1969 that all the provisions of the amended Act would come into force from January 1.

The right of landlords to collect rent from their tenants would cease and that right would vest with the Government. The landlord-tenant relationship would thus end.

The Government would pay compensatoin to landlords dispossessed of their rights and realize the same from the tenants. Hutment dwellers would become owners of their dwellings by exercising their right to purchase them.

The Kerala Chief Minister, Mr. Achutha Menon, said that the State Government had urged the Centre to include the Kerala Land Reforms (Amendment) Act in the Ninth Schedule of the Constitution so that it might get the same protection as the original Act.

Notice To Land-owners Issued:

On January 1, the Kerala Government gave 90 days' notice to land-owners to inform the Land Board about their surplus possessions.

The announcement followed the enforcement of all provisions of the Land Reforms Act. It means that various classes of landlords, tenants and intermediaries have ceased to exist in the agrarian sector.

Although this is true legally, it may take the Government some more time to implement all the provisions.

The provisions concerning ceiling on holdings are as follows:

(1) An adult unmarried person can hold land up to five standard acres so that the actual area under his possession shall not be less than six acres and not more than 7½ acres;

(2) A five-member family can own ten standard acres which should not be less than 12 acres and not more than 15 acres;

(3) For families with more than five members, one additional standard acre is allowed for each member in excess of the five members, but the total ceiling area shall not be more than 20 acres and not less than 12 acres;

(4) In the case of any person other than a joint family the ceiling area shall be ten standard acres which can be 12 acres minimum and 15 acres in extent.

The standard acre differs from place to place in the State depending on productivity and the nature of the land—dry or wet.

Under the law, tenants have become legal owners of the land they till. However, the actual transfer of ownership rights will take some time. In the intervening period, the landlords will not get any rent from the tenants.

All rights of landlords and intermediaries have been vested in the Government, but it does not prevent a landlord from applying for resumption of land under certain conditions.

I. Land Revenue Ordinance In UP: The Uttar Pradesh Government issued an Ordinance on January 1 exempting holdings up to 6.25 acres from land revenue.

The Ordinance also envisages fresh settlement for other holdings and says that land settlement would now be held after every 20 years instead of 40 years.

This goes against the guarantee given under the Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms Act of 1952 —that revenue would not be raised for 40 years—that is, up to 1992.

The Ordinance called the UP Zamindari Abolition and Land Reforms (Second Amendment) Ordinnance, provides that every member of a family, the total area of land held by whose members as 'bhumidars' or 'sirdhars' at the commencement of any agricultural year does not exceed 6 1/4 acres, shall be exempt in that year from liability to pay land revenue. This exemption shall, during the agricultural year commencing on July 1, 1969, apply in respect of only the rabi instalment of land revenue.

According to it, the share of an individual or any member of his family in a holding shall, for purposes of deciding whether he is entitled to this exemption, be determined in such manner and by such authority as may be prescribed, but no such determination shall be binding on any court or tribunal in any suit or other proceeding relating to the holding.

It has been explained in the Ordinance that a "family consists of any individual, his or her spouse, and minor sons and unmarried daughters, whether they are joint or not with the individual, and major sons if they are joint with that individual."

The Ordinance does not indicate how the State Government proposes to meet the loss in revenue of Rs. 11 crores annually, arising out of the exemption.

The Jana Sangh and SSP have welcomed the Ordinance.

J. Mysore Land Reforms Ordinance: The Mysore Governor promulgated on January 6 the Mysore Land Reforms (Amendment) Ordinance 1970 "for the speedy implementation of Land Reforms Act."

Under the Ordinance, which came into force from January 15, munsiff courts were empowered to deal with cases filed before land tribunals.

The land tribunals had found it difficult to dispose of expeditiously cases filed before them, which number several thousand. The land reforms cases, now pending with the land tribunals, would stand transferred to the munsif courts of the area to which the cases pertain, after January 15.

The Ordinance empowered the courts to decide all cases—"whether a person is a tenant or not."

Land measurements, now in acres and guntas, would be given in metric measurement under the Ordinance.

K. Steel Prices Raised: The Government of India decided on December 30, 1969 to allow an average increase of Rs. 75 per tonne in the price of steel with effect from January 1. The Joint Plant Committee has been authorized to notify the revised prices of various categories of steel as from this date.

In addition to an average increase of Rs. 75 per tonne, the Government also decided to allow a further average increase of Rs. 2.50 per tonne for contribution to the Engineering Goods Export Assistance Fund. The total average increase would, therefore, be Rs. 77.50 per tonne.

The price increase agreed to by the Government, however, fell short of the demand made by the main producers in May, 1969. While Tatas had sought an increase of Rs. 116 per tonne, Hindustan Steel wanted Rs. 88.50 per tonne. The other producer, Indian Iron and Steel Company, had not specified any figure, but wanted a Tariff Commission study into the cost structure.

The last price increase was in July, 1968, when an average increase of Rs. 57 per tonne was allowed. A price increase was also allowed in May, 1967 (Rs. 53 per tonne) when steel was decontrolled, followed by a marginal increase again of Rs. 3 per tonne in January, 1968.

The present increase is not based on the capital block of Hindustan Steel but that of the private producers. From this point of view, HSL will still suffer from a disadvantage compared with the private producers.

Announcing the price increases, an official Press Note said that the Government "would like to point out that the relevant escalation factors having been provided for, there should ordinarily be no occasion for any further price increase in the next five years". This seemed to suggest that the Government would like to freeze steel prices for another five years, but how far it will succeed remains to be seen.

L. Railwaymen's Federation Calls For A Railway Corporation: The Annual Convention of the All-India Railwaymen's Federation which met in Agra on December 30, 1969 called for "the re-organization of the Indian Railways into an autonomous Corporation", as this was essential if the Railways, which carried 70 per cent of the transport of the country, were "to play a vital role in the development of the national economy."

By another resolution, the Convention criticized the method of determining the wage structure and service conditions of Central Government employees by setting up ad hoc commissions instead of resolving industrial disputes pertaining to railway employees with the help of the industrial relations machinery.

It also adopted a resolution calling for the withdrawal of all means of automation, including computers, route relay machines and diesel and electric locomotives.

(The Hindustan Times, New Delhi)

M. Electrified Railway Mileage: The new Chairman of the Railway Board, Mr. B. C. Ganguli, said in New Delhi on January 7 that India now had the largest mileage, after France, of electrified railway.

Over 3,000 km of the Indian Railways tracks, he said, had been electrified at a cost of nearly Rs. 150 crores in the last ten years.

He expected electrification to be completed by June, 1970 of the Rourkela-Durg section of the South-Eastern Railway, by October, 1970 of the Kanpur-Tundla section of the Northern Railway, and by 1972-73 of the Virar-Sabarmati section of the Western Railway.

Nearly 24 per cent of the broad-guage traffic was now taken care of by electric traction which, he said, was the cheapest of the three types now in use. The comparative costs, he said, were: electric, Rs. 2.09 to Rs. 2.61 per km; steam, Rs. 4.12 to Rs. 4.54 per km; diesel, Rs. 5.44 to Rs. 6.03 per km.

He added that with the expertise developed in this field, India could now offer consultancy service in electric traction.

N. Old Congress Working Committee Resolutions: The Organization (Old) Congress Working Committee of Mr. S. Nijalingappa met in New Delhi on January 3 and 4 and passed several resolutions criticizing Mrs. Indira Gandhi for her "abortive" attempts to "topple" Mr. C. B. Gupta's Ministry in Uttar Pradesh and for undertaking frequent tours of that State without giving prior intimation to the Chief Minister.

Mr. C. B. Gupta, who acquainted the Working Committee with the political situation in his State, and several other members said that it was unfortunate that the Prime Minister whose main responsibility was to provide a stable administration in the country should herself "encourage or connive" at activities aimed at weakening democracy.

He disclosed that the UP Government had spent Rs. 40,00,000 during the last 15 months on security arrangements for the Prime Minister during her visits to the State. Since she had gone on a political mission and most of her time had been spent in meeting MLAs opposed to him, it was not fair on the part of the Prime Minister to impose such heavy financial strain on the State Government whose resources were extremely limited. The security arrangements for a day's visit by the Prime Minister cost the State exchequer about Rs. 1,00,000.

In another resolution, it criticized the ruling party for demanding, at its session in Bombay, nationalization of the sugar industry in UP and said: "Under no circumstances can nationalization be permitted to become a tool in the game of power politics of parties."

It said that the "deliberate" focussing of the demand on UP alone could have only one purpose, to pose difficulties, financial and legal, for the Gupta Ministry and exploit this issue for denigrating and unseating, if possible, that democratically functioning Government.

Expressing concern at the delay in the settlement of the Chandigarh issue, it also urged the Government of India to take a speedy decision to end the present stalemate as the delay in taking a decision on this question had created a difficult situation both in Punjab and Haryana.

On January 4, in another resolution on Economic and Social Policy, the Working Committee accorded the highest priority to eradication of unemployment in the country and called for immediate re-orientation of the Fourth Five-Year Plan to provide for greater employment opportunities, particularly to the educated unemployed.

It spelt out the programmes that should be undertaken without delay to fight the "growing menace of unemployment in the country." First, a crash programme of rural works should be launched throughout the country to provide gainful employment to all able-bodied men and women. They should be assured of at least Rs. 2 a day as wages. An initial outlay of Rs. 200 crores per annum has been suggested for the purpose. Secondly, a national employment corporation should be set up to operate a central fund of Rs. 50 crores to provide employment to the educated unemployed in industries. The fund should be administered in co-operation with the Industrial Development Corporations in the States. In both cases, the State Government under the Organization Congress should provide additional financial support.

The Working Committee also condemned the attitude of the Government of India to the formation of a "Congress-led" coalition Ministry in Bihar.

It charged the ruling Congress with using all "unfair and questionable means" to delay the formation of a popular Government in Bihar by Mr. Harihar Singh, leader of the Organization Congress Legislature Party.

It also appealed to the minorities, especially Muslims, not to "mistake their friends for their foes" and restrict the area of good-will available to them.

A resolution on the subject virtually charged the ruling Congress of deliberately misleading the minorities and creating suspicion and distrust among them about other political parties.

O. CPM Politburo's Conditional Support To Mrs. I. Gandhi: Extending "support to the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, for every measure directed against the menace of Organization Congress," the CPI(M) Politburo which met in Calcutta on January 4 warned her against the dangers of her policy of "Marxist-baiting and disruption of the United Fronts in Kerala and West Bengal."

The Politburo statement on the current political development noted that the new Requisitionists Congress was engaged in "subtle" anti-communist manoeuvres, chiefly directed against the CPI(M) and "it is abetting and actively encouraging the division and disruption of the United Fronts in Kerala and West Bengal." This was being done, according to it, in pursuance of the political strategy of a new polarization of forces around the two Congress-centred alliances.

The Organization Congress, it said, representing the line of "extreme reactionary forces in the country," was interested in forging "a front of reaction and counter-revolution with the Jana Sangh and the Swatantra," while the new Requisitionsts Congress was trying to rally some political parties and break-away groups of the Congress to build up an opposition to the Organization Congress and its allies.

Against these two alliances, the CPI(M) would call for the formation of a "real democratic alliance" on the basis of ten "immediate steps" including nationalization of foreign banks and foreign trade, control on monopolists and extension of public sector, an employment-oriented Fourth Plan, abolition of privy purses, drastic reduction in the defence budget and tax burden on the people, genuine land reform measures, ceiling on urban property and on corporate profits, end of the policy of victimization of Central Government employees, full autonomy for States and a shift in foreign policy lending support to anti-imperialist struggles and ensuring firmer ties with socialist Governments.

It called for fresh elections in Kerala and charged the State Government with perpetuating "repression."

In a reference to Bengal, it expressed the view that the Bangla Congress was merely biding its time to join hands with the new Congress and form a mini-front Ministry.

P. Mr. Jagjivan Ram's Tax Returns – Lok Sabha's Decision: After a five-hour debate on December 24, 1969, the Lok Sabha rejected by 158 votes to 75 the demand for a Parliamentary Committee to investigate the failure of the Central Food Minister, Mr. Jagjivan Ram, to file his tax returns.

Mr. Jagivan Ram admitted his lapse but pleaded that he had no intention of evading taxes. He corroborated Mr. Morarji Desai's disclosure that he (Mr. Jagjivan Ram) had offered to resign when it was pointed out to him that he had failed to file tax returns for ten years. But, Mr. Jagjivan Ram said: "The next day, I found that Mr. Morarji Desai was taking political advantage of it."

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, commended Mr. Jagjivan Ram's defence of his case as one of "great dignity and restraint." She agreed that there had been great weaknesses in the tax collection system and the Government had no intention of going slow in dealing with that aspect of it. But, she asked, was not Mr. Jagjivan Ram entitled to what any ordinary citizen was entitled? She contended that the accusation against Mr. Jagjivan Ram was "politically motivated."

The demand for Mr. Jagjivan Rams' resignation came from several quarters. Mr. Morarji Desai said that Ministers must conform to law. If they did not, they must resign. If they did not resign, the Prime Minister must make them do so; otherwise, she would also be culpable. If Mr. Jagjivan Ram pleaded that he was ignorant of the law, "I have nothing more to say."

Others who urged that the Minister must gracefully admit his mistake and resign in the interest of the cleanliness of public life included Acharya J. B. Kripalani (Ind) and Mr. S. N. Dwivedi, leader of the P-SP group.

The CPI group gave solid support to the Government by arguing that the earlier Finance Ministers had shielded such lapses and tax evasions over the past many years and that if there was to be a committee of inquiry it should cover all other cases and not merely pick on one individual for political reasons. The DMK also adopted a similar line of trying to turn the tables on Mr. Morarji Desai and other former Ministers who had now gone over to the Opposition.

The Marxist group, on the other hand, welcomed the resolution moved by Mr. Mohammed Imam, which stated. "This House takes note of widespread criticism in the country regarding the failure on the part of the Central Food Minister, Mr. Jagjivan Ram, to file his income-tax returns and also the serious financial irregularities committed by various institutions with which the Central Food Minister is associated and resolves that a committee of members of Parliament be appointed to investigate these allegations and make a report to the House."

Q. Bangla Congress Satyagraha: The West Bengal Chief Minister, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee, led a 24-hour fast by nearly 2,00,000 people all over West Bengal on December 28, 1969 in protest against continuing violence in the State.

Mr. Mukherjee began the fast along with his party General Secretary, Mr. Sushil Dhara, in Calcutta where he had undertaken a three-day fast when the Bangla Congress launched its indefinite relay fast on December 1, 1969 to "rouse public conscience against rampant violence in West Bengal."

The Praja-Socialist Party (P-SP), which is a constituent of the United Front, also supported the fast.

According to Mr. Dhara, about 20,000 P-SP supporters fasted on December 28, 1969 at 30 centres. They included dissident P-SP President, Mr. Bidyut Bose, a member of the State Cabinet.

Addressing a gathering, Mr. Ajoy Mukherjee said in Calcutta that the Bangla Congress would not work with the CPM if the latter did not give up hooliganism and dacoity.

Asking the people to make the CPM realize that they would not vote for the party in the Parliamentary election in 1972 or even earlier if it did not mend it ways, he said that if the people failed to control the CPM, the Bangla Congress would not remain with these "dacoits".

He added: "We are gentlemen, we cannot keep company with dacoits. If the United Front (UF) breaks as a result, we cannot help it. We want to preserve the UF, and even now if they behave, we are prepared to work with them. But we shall not work with dacoits".

Satyagraha Called Off:

The Bangla Congress Secretariat called off the month-long State-wide mass fasting satyagraha on January 1.

The decision was taken "unanimously."

The Secretariat resolution said that the Working Committee of the party would fix the date and time for launching the second phase of the movement. The Working Committee would also decide on the "form" of the second phase.

R. Swatantra Party Elections: Mr. M. R. Masani was unanimously elected President of the All-India Swatantra Party for two years on December 27, 1969.

The newly-elected General Council of the party which met in Calcutta also unanimously elected Dr. R. C. Cooper as General Secretary.

Other office-bearers elected were: Vice-Presidents: Mr. R. N. Singh Deo, Chief Minister of Orissa; Mr. M. Ruthnaswamy; Maharani Gayatri Devi;; Mr. N. Dandekar; and Mr. Dahyabhai V. Patel; Joint Secretaries: Dr. H. V. Hande, MLA (Madras); Mr. Harihar Patel, Orissa Industries Minister; Mr. M. K. Somani; Mr. R. K. Amin; and Mr. Madhu Mehta; Honorary Treasurers: Mr. H. P. Nanda and Mr. Lal Chand Hirachand.

Mr. M. R. Masani On Political Situation:

Addressing a closed-door meeting of the General Council of the Party, Mr. Masani said that 20 years of wrong economic policies had created a situation where political crises were bound to recur with increasing intensity "unless these policies are abandoned and the country is put on a proper track".

This called for a radical shift "in our political structure". This might flow from the recent split in the Congress Party, but the nation faced the danger of what he called "further abdication and destruction of law and order".

He added: "Bengal and certain other parts of our country are in the hands of elements whose patriotism is not above question and in the coming years guerrilla warfare developing into dangerous threats to our national security cannot be ruled out in Bengal and in the north-east frontier."

S. Southern Zonal Council Meeting: Addressing the 11th meeting of the Southern Zonal Council in Bangalore on January 6, the Central Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan, said that an all-out effort must be made to eliminate violence from public life in the country.

He said: "The strength and vitality of democratic institutions depend on a firm and unwavering adherence to the rule of law. Some of you may in this context feel the lapse of the Preventive Detention Act. But that should, in fact, spur us to take more effective action under substantive provisions of normal laws."

Making a rapid survey of progress made in the Southern Zone in various fields, he said, he felt happy that the region had been comparatively less affected by communal incidents.

Dealing with hydro-power resources in the region, he said these sources were estimated at eight million kW at 60 per cent load factor. Aggregate installed capacity in the region at present was 3.17 million kW which was expected to rise to 4.5 million kW by 1970-71 and 6.15 million kW by 1973-74. According to estimates of the fifth annual power survey it was anticipated that there would be a deficit in this region of about 400,000 kW by 1970-71 rising to about one million kW by 1973-74. An additional generation of 1.3 million kW had to be planned for execution immediately to meet the anticipated deficits during the Fourth Plan period.

He said that an atomic power station was already under construction in Kalpakkam in Tamil Nadu. According to present plans, a 200 mW unit would be commissioned in 1973-74.

Making pointed reference to irrigation projects in the South, he said he felt happy that the Chief Ministers of Kerala and Tamil Nadu and the Central Minister of Irrigation and Power had settled during their discussions in May, 1969 outstanding issues and disputes. He expressed confidence that problems of Cauvery basin would also be amicably settled by the Chief Ministers of Kerala, Mysore and Tamil Nadu during their discussions in February, 1970.

During the discussions, it was pointed out that during the past few years police arrangements during general elections had been mounting. Some of the Chief Ministers were reported to have pleaded that the Government of India should share the expenses. Mr. Chavan replied that law and order was a State subject and the sharing of expenditure in this case did not arise.

However, the Council agreed that the question could be studied further in all its aspects.

T. Madhya Pradesh Assembly Session—Governor's Address: While inaugurating the Budget session of the Madhya Pradesh Legislative Assembly in Bhopal on January 7, the State Governor, Mr. K. C. Reddy, was interrupted several times by slogan-shouting demonstrators from the public galleries.

The Privileges Committee of the House met quickly, and on its recommendation, one of the demonstrators was jailed for the day. Five others were proposed to be sent to jail for three days each.

In his address, Mr. Reddy gave an account of the Government's achievements and targets, and revealed that due to differences with the Planning Commission the State's Fourth Five-Year Plan was yet to be finalized. He described the outlay of Rs. 383 crores as "unsatisfactory and inadequate"

He said that in 1969, the police killed 59 dacoits, arrested 195 and rescued 17 people held to ransom by the dacoits. In their intensified anti-dacoity operations the police liquidated an entire gang of 18 dacoits with its leader.

The State Government, he added, had earned a bonus of Rs. 2.7 crores from the Centre for its performance in procuring rice. It had procured more than 300,000 tonnes of rice to sell to other States till October, 1969. The bonus would be used in minor irrigation works and other agricultural production schemes.

U. Jammu & Kashmir Ministry—Portfolios Re-allocated: The Chief Minister of Jammu & Kashmir, Mr. G. M. Sadiq, re-allocated the portfolios of some Ministers of State and Deputy Ministers in the Cabinet on January 7.

Mr. A. G. Goni, Minister of State, was given Agriculture and National Extension Service, and Mr. Sonam Wangyal, Minister of State, would be in charge of Co-operation and Consolidation.

The following Deputy Ministers were put in charge of different portfolios:

Mr. Parmanand—Social Welfare; Mr. Mufti Mohammed Syed—Agriculture and Law; Mr. Gurmukh Singh—Information and Publicity; Mr. Mohammad-uddin Banday—Irrigation; and Chowdhury Mohammed Shafi—Animal Husbandry and Local Self-Government.

V. New Deputy Chairman Of Rajya Sabha: Following the death of Mrs. Violet Alva, Mr. B. D. Khobaragade was elected Deputy Chairman of the Rajya Sabha on December 17, 1969.

Mr. Khobaragade, a Republican member from Maharashtra, was sponsored by the ruling Congress party, DMK, CPI and the Muslim League. His opponent, Mr. Gaure Murahari—he got 60 votes to Mr. Khobaragade's 128—was supported by the Congress (Opp), P-SP, SSP, Jana Sangh, Swatantra and CPM.

This was the first time in the present session that the Marxists aligned themselves against Mrs. Gandhi. This was considered a significant development in the light of the growing differences between the two Communist parties over West Bengal happenings.

The total vote (188) was 49 short of the total strength of the Rajya Sabha, most of the abstentions being from Opposition benches. Particularly striking was the fact that only two out of 13 Swatantra members turned up to vote.

Mr. Khobaragade's total was made up of 96 votes from the ruling Congress, eight from CPI, four from DMK, two from Muslim League, and the rest from RSP, Forward Bloc, and Independent members. One BKD member also voted for him.

X. Air-India's Annual Report: According to an official review released in New Delhi on January 2, although Air-India carried more passengers in 1968-69, it earned less profit compared with the previous year. This was mainly accounted for by the increase in operating expenses by more than 10 per cent from Rs. 49.58 crores to Rs. 54.68 crores.

The total number of passengers carried rose by 16 per cent from 285,459 to 331,051. Operating revenue increased from Rs. 55.01 crores in 1967-68 to Rs. 59.50 crores in 1968-69. But net profit, before tax, declined to Rs. 2.94 crores from Rs. 3.49 crores in the previous year. The profit squeeze continued in the wake of further decline in average revenue yields, of rising costs and of heavy investments for the new Jumbo jets.

Pending the delivery of its Jumbo jets, Air-India's operations would remain substantially at the same level as in the current year as there was little margin of capacity for expansion. There would, however, be some marginal increases in the frequency of some routes and possibly the addition of a few new stops.

Y. International Film Festival: The fourth International Film Festival was inaugurated in New Delhi on December 5, 1969 by the President, Mr. V. V. Giri.

He reminded the film makers that they had a great social responsibility in making the film an instrument of public education. He said that they should create new norms and values.

Indian culture and civilization, he said, were known for their genius for fusing diversities into the mainstream. It was, therefore, proper that India should play host to an International Film Festival. The Festival aimed at telescoping the colourful variety of creative experience into a kaleidoscope. If this international event succeeded in projecting the many facets of contemporary cinema, it would have served its purpose.

He stressed the potentiality of films for propagating ideas for acceptance by society. Children's films were playing an increasingly important role in the education and upbringing of the young. He hoped that the dynamic medium of cinema would be increasingly used to widen the horizon of friendship and to bring closer the vision of a world which could be called one family.

Earlier, Mr. Satya Narayan Sinha, Central Minister for Information and Broadcasting, in his welcome address, said that a feature of the Festival would be the Indian cinema retrospect covering a period of 50 years. He expressed the hope that another Festival would provide an exposition of Afro-Asian cinema and bring into sharp focus "the creative achievements as well as the professional problems of this part of the world."

Thirty-two of the 58 countries which were invited to the Festival participated in the event. But, not many countries included actors and actresses in their delegations.

The fourth International Film Festival was the second competitive international event to be held in India. The first was held in 1965. Two other festivals held in 1952 and 1961 were non-competitive in character.

Awards:

The Festival ended on December 18, 1969 with the presentation of 11 Awards. The Golden Peacock for the best feature film went to the US-Italian entry, "The Damned," directed by Luchino Visconti. The Golden Peacock for the best short film was won by the Cuban entry, "Taking Off At 1800 Hours."

The following were the awards:

Golden Peacock for the best feature film: "The Damned" (USA-Italy).

Golden Peacock for the best short film: "Taking Off At 1800 Hours" (Cuba).

Silver Peacock for the best Director: Kerel Kachyna in "Funny Old Man" (Czechoslovakia).

Silver Peacock for best actress: Lucia Bose in "Jurtzenka" (Spain).

Silver Peacock for the best actor: Christopher Sandford in "Jurtzenka" (Spain).

Silver Peacock for the short film: "Man and the Crow" (Ceylon).

Special Jury Prize: "Tagore Paintings" (India).

Jury's Special Merit Award: "Bhuvan Shome" (India).

Unicrit Award: (1) "The Joke" (Czechoslovakia) directed by Jaromil Jires; (2) Special mention to Mrinal Sen, Director of "Bhuvan Shome."

Cidalc Award: (1) "Bhuvan Shome" (India); (2) The Total Work of Lester James Peries.

Gandhi Award: Best Feature Film: "Five Past Five."

Z. Harappan Skeletons Excavated: Four human skeletons, specimens of pottery and copper bangles, possibly belonging to the Harappan Age (1300 BC) have been excavated from a fashionable shopping centre in Chandigarh.

The first skeleton was found recently when labourers were digging the foundation of a building. The Department of Indian Culture and Archaeology of Punjab University then started the excavation and on January 1 three more skeletons were found.

Earlier, pots belonging to the "ochre-coloured pottery culture" or pre-Iron Age (about 3,300 years ago), copper bangles and rings and beads of carnelian stone were also found at a depth of 12 feet. Some of the earthen pots had pointed bottoms which, archaeologists said, was typical of the Harappan culture.

IRAQ

A. Cabinet Re-shuffle: The President, Mr. Ahmad Hassan El Bakr, re-shuffled and enlarged his Cabinet on December 31, 1969 by bringing a known Communist into the Government for the first time.

Brought into the Cabinet was the veteran Communist lawyer, M. Aziz-Sharrif, as Justice Minister. He has headed various Communists front organizations in Iraq since 1946 and has spent years in hiding and working underground.

Five Ministers lost their jobs. But three of them remained in the Cabinet as Ministers without Portfolio.

The re-shuffle did not affect the dominant role of President Bakr's Arab Socialist Ba'ath Party which seized power in July, 1968.

B. More Political Prisoners Freed: It was disclosed in Baghdad on December 18, 1969 that the Government had released another group of political prisoners, including the former Premier, Mr. Taher Yahya.

The move was considered part of the Ba'athist Party's new policy to set up a national front with the participation of non-Ba'athist elements.

Also freed were two other Ministers in the ousted Aref Government—Mr. Malek Douhan Al Hassan and Mr. Hassan Tamer—as well as other Ba'athists considered Leftist. They had been arrested on charges of corruption and neglect of duty.

Another group, jailed for espionage, was freed following a Ba'athist Party inquiry which found the accusations inaccurate.

ISRAEL

A. West Asia Fighting: An Iraqi military communique reported on December 21, 1969 that Iraqi anti-aircraft guns had shot down two Israeli fighters in a six-hour Israeli attack on the Jordan-Syria front. Four Iraqi soldiers were killed and three injured in what was described as a "massive aerial operation."

In Amman, a military spokesman reported that Jordan anti-aircraft guns shot down one Israeli plane during a three-hour attack on villages in north Jordan.

Israeli commandos cut deep into UAR on December 22, 1969 and mortared a naval base on the Red Sea at Safaga.

Safaga, 100 km south of the mouth of the Gulf of Suez, guards a road linking the Red Sea coast to the Nile Valley.

On December 18, 1969, an Israeli commando unit attacked an UAR Army camp at Salihive. east of the Suez Canal.

Israel handed over to UAR on December 22, 1969 about 330 Arab civilians and two bodies of UAR soldiers killed on December 17, 1969 in a raid across the Suez Canal. The transfer was effected by the Red Cross.

An Israeli spokesman said in Tel Aviv that Israeli war-planes pounded military targets in UAR and Jordan on December 26, 1969.

He said that UAR artillery and anti-aircraft batteries were hit near the city of Suez in a raid lasting three hours. Eye-witnesses said that an hour-long battle in Jordan territory, couth-east of the Sea of Galilee, left two Jordanian army vehicles afire. All planes returned safely from both raids. In occupied Gaza city, a hand grenade was thrown at an Israeli patrol vehicle.

Reacting quickly to the Israeli commando raid across the Gulf of Suez on December 26, 1969, UAR claimed on December 28, 1969 that their naval commandos struck in the opposite direction and destroyed Israeli equipment and killed many soldiers on the west coast of the Gulf.

It was the first UAR commando action in many weeks.

Israel had stepped up air and commando activity since the collapse of the Rabat "summit," but all operations were described by UAR as abortive. The latest Israeli commando attack on the Suez Gulf coast was repulsed at the cost of two UAR soldiers killed and four missing.

An Israeli military spokesman said that Israeli planes bombed the Jordanian radar station at Ajlun in a 3½-hour raid on December 28, 1969.

The raid followed "a sharp increase in acts of aggression" from Jordanian territory. All Israeli aircraft returned safe.

Cairo said that two Israeli jets, one a Phantom, were shot down during an hour-long raid on UAR positions near the foot of the Canal. The UAR commandos destroyed an Israeli armoured car and killed its occupants in a sortie across the Suez Gulf.

Jordan announced on December 28, 1969 that it had inflicted 13 casualties and damaged three Israeli vehicles in a series of clashes during the day.

It was stated in Tel Aviv that on December 31, 1969, Israeli jets pounded UAR artillery and anti-aircraft batteries in the southern sector of the Suez Canal. All Israeli planes returned safely from the 80-minute raid.

Also, Israeli war-planes hammered Jordanian artillery batteries in the Gilad mountains south-east of the Sea of Galilee following artillery exchanges on December 31, 1969.

Israeli jets streaked into northern Jordan on January 1 and bombed the Ghor irrigation canal, a vital channel for Arab farmers.

Tel Aviv official sources said that on January 2, Israeli troops crossed the Lebanese border to hunt for Arab guerrillas who captured an Israeli civilian watchman on December 31, 1969. The troops entered the Lebanese village of Kefar Kela and took a number of suspects back to Israel after searching for Arab saboteurs.

According to a Beirut report, three Israeli soldiers were killed when Lebanese forces counter-attacked.

A United Arab Republic patrol, according to Cairo military sources, killed or wounded five Israelis during a raid across the Suez Canal into Sinai on January 2.

On January 4, according to Tel Aviv, Israeli war-planes shot down two Egyptian jets during an air strike on UAR. The two jets—both Soviet-made MIG-21s—exploded in the air.

The latest action brought to 62 the number of UAR war-planes Israel has claimed shooting down since the June, 1967 war.

Israeli forces killed nine United Arab Republic soldiers belonging to a commando party which crossed the Suez Canal on January 5 in a raid on the Israeli-held east bank.

It was one of the UAR's heaviest losses in recent weeks of raid and skirmishes along the blocked waterway.

A military spokesman in Tel Aviv said the commandos clashed with Israeli troops north of Port Tewfiq.

An Israeli Army spokesman said that UAR war-planes twice tried to raid Israeli military installations at both ends of the Suez Canal on January 6, but failed to cause any casualties.

According to an Amman report, Jordanian and Israeli forces exchanged artillery and light weapon fire during an 80-minute duel in the south of the Jordan Valley on January 6.

An Amman military spokesman said that Jordanian and Israeli forces fought an hour-long duel across the Jordan on January 6 using machineguns, mortars and heavy artillery.

Israeli planes raided two villages in southern Lebanon on January 6 causing property damage without casualties. The planes hit Kfar Hamam and Rachaya el Fokhar villages in the Arkoub region.

According to an Israeli Army spokesman, the Israeli Air Force hit UAR military targets across the southern end of the Suez Canal and saboteur hide-outs in the far north on Mt. Hermon slopes in Lebanon on January 7.

UAR Radar Station Taken Away:

The London newspaper Daily Express reported on January 2 that Israeli commandos had stolen an entire top-secret seven-ton radar station which the Russians gave to Egypt recently.

It said that the raid took place at the Gulf of Suez port of Ras Ghareb, 115 miles south-west of Port Suez on the night of December 26.

According to the story, the radar capture was carried out because Israeli pilots on recent missions to destroy radar posts had found that Egyptian ack-ack guns were hitting home no matter how fast and low their planes came in.

President G. A. Nasser For A Political Settlement:

According to Associated Press news agency, President G. A. Nasser was reported to have told Palestine guerrilla leaders that he favoured a political settlement of the West Asian conflict rather than a war with Israel.

He argued that the Arab armed forces would not be strong enough to fight Israel for five more years.

This report was published in the Left-wing weekly, Africasia, which reflects the views of the socialist leaders in Asia and Africa.

The magazine said that President Nasser, at a recent meeting, presented a "realistic picture" of the military situation of the Arabs and reportedly said that the Israeli air force had "great superiority" and that the UAR Air Force had as many planes as had Isreal but lacked trained pilots.

He was reported as saying that only in five years' time would UAR have parity in pilots to "crush the superiority" of the Israeli Air Force.

He added: "So, in five years, we can really fight a war, but one should not think the Israelis will stay inactive during that period. We just learned a few days ago that they had doubled the number of their tanks."

Maj.-Gen. M. Dayan On UAR Aircraft Losses:

The Israeli Defence Minister, Maj-Gen. Moshe Dayan, told the Knesset on January 6 that Israel had shot down a total of 76 Arab combat aircraft since the June, 1967 war.

Replying to a question, he said that 62 planes had been brought down on the UAR front and 14 on the front between Israel and Syria. Forty-six of the downed Arab planes were MIG-21, 16 were MIG-17 and four Sukhoi-7—all Soviet-designed.

In answer to another question, he said that up to the end of November, 1969, altogether 55 Arab civilians had died in Israeli-occupied territory as a result of Arab guerrilla activity, and 454 civilians were injured. These figures included nine dead and 28 wounded as a result of fire by Israeli security forces following guerrilla assaults or in answer to hand-grenade attacks.

He added that from the end of the June, 1967 war up to the end of November, 1969, UAR activity of all kinds numbered 3,971 incidents. They caused 400 Israeli civilian casualties of whom 40 died, and 188 military casualties of whom 23 were killed.

Summing up the war in the air, he said, there had been altogether 35 dog-fights between Israeli, UAR and Syrian combat aircraft; Israel had carried out 168 air attacks on enemy targets.

UAR armour and air power had grown by 170 per cent compared to what it was on the eve of the 1967 war. There had been a considerable improvement in the standards of the arms supplied by the Soviet Union to UAR and other Arab countries including Sudan.

UAR-Libya-Sudan Alliance To Fight Israel:

The establishment of an Arab Revolutionary Alliance between UAR, Sudan and Libya to "widen the fighting front" against Israel was launched at the Libyan capital of Tripoli in the last week of December, 1969 at the end of the talks between President Nasser, Gen. Nimeiry (Libya) and Col. Geddafy (Sudan).

Coming as it did closely on the heels of the abortive Arab "Summit" in Rabat a week earlier, the results of the Tripoli "little summit" provided comfort and cheer to the disheartened "progressive" sections of the Arab world.

B. El Aqsa Mosque Fire—Rohan Found Not Guilty: An Israeli court found on December 30, 1969 that Denis Michael Rohan, 28-year-old Australian sheep-shearer who admitted to having setting fire to the El Aqsa Mosque on August 21, 1969 (see page 9177) was not punishable under law because of his mental state.

It ordered him to be sent to hospital. According to Israeli law, a committal order to hospital is similar to a conviction and Rohan was given 45 days in which to appeal.

The verdict was delivered by the Jerusalem District Court which found him not guilty, because of insanity, of a crime when he set fire to the mosque, Islam's third holiest shrine.

Rohan remained impassive showing no sign of emotion throughout the 2¼-hour judgment read by Judge Harry Baker.

Through his lawyer, Rohan had pleaded not guilty because of insanity to four charges of arson and violating a holy place.

During his trial which began on October 6, 1969, Rohan said that he tried to burn down the mosque on August 21 because God wanted him to re-build Solomon's temple on the site of the mosque and would crown him king of Jerusalem.

He said that an Israeli girl, Ziporah, who taught him Hebrew in a Kibbutz, would be his queen.

During his four days of evidence, Rohan claimed that he was a relative of Britain's Queen Elizabeth and that they both descended from the House of David.

He also described how he had been persecuted by Satan all his life but had finally overcome him when he realised he was God's chosen agent.

The fire gutted the south-eastern wing of the Mosque and sent waves of anger throughout the whole Muslim world. It brought accusations that the Israeli Government itself was responsible.

Reactions:

A Jordanian Minister, Sheikh Abdullah Ghosha, charged on December 30, 1969 that the Israeli Government was mainly responsible for the burning of the El Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem.

In Damascus, an official Syrian spokesman described the verdict as an "attempt by the Israeli authorities to cover up their premeditated crime of burning the Mosque."

Mr. Zuheir al-Midani, Assistant Secretary-General of the Federation of Arab Lawyers and President of the Union of Syrian Lawyers, said that the trial was "a poor play, produced by the Israeli authorities to evade responsibility for burning the Mosque."

C. Sinai Oil—UAR Warning: According to the Italian newspaper Globe, the UAR Government had warned on January 4 that it would "react" if Israel extracted oil from beneath the Sinai desert.

UAR, it said, had already warned Canada, USA and Britain about the gravity of such an act and the repercussions it would cause.

He referred to statements by Mr. John King, Chairman of the US company—King Resources—that any oil discovered in the Sinai desert by one of his subsidary companies—Mobdar—would be the "property of the State of Israel."

Geological and technical exploration of the Sinai desert, it was said, has already been undertaken by Mobdar which is under contract with the Israeli Government.

Oil wells may be sunk near those which the Italian State-owned petroleum company, ENI, sunk before the June, 1967 war under an Italian-UAR co-operation scheme.

JAPAN

A. Air Agreement With Soviet Union: Japan and the Soviet Union signed an Agreement on November 5, 1969 providing for independent air services by Japan Air Lines (JAL) and Aeroflot between Tokyo and Moscow over the Siberia route beginning in March, 1970.

The negotiations began on October 28 under an arrangement made in February, 1969 in Tokyo between the Transport Minister, Mr. Ken Harada and the Soviet Civil Aviation Minister, Mr. Yevgeny F. Loginov.

JAL and the Soviet State airline Aeroflot had been jointly operating the Tokyo-Moscow service via Siberia by using chartered Russian airliners since 1967.

Under the new Agreement, JAL and Aeroflot will start operating their own Tokyo-Europe services on March 28, 1970. Their routes will initially be Tokyo-Moscow-Paris and Tokyo-Moscow-London. JAL and Aeroflot will each operate bi-weekly flights on the routes using DC-8s and Ilyushin-62s, respectively.

The new Agreement will open the shortest Tokyo-Europe air route—three to 3½ hours shorter than the North Polar service.

Both sides also signed Technical and Commercial Agreements related to the independent air services.

B. Release Of Japanese Detenus In China: Five Japanese trading company employees returned to Tokyo on November 8, 1969 from Hong Kong after they were released from 28 months' detention by China.

The five, all employees of Daiichi Tsusho Co., were: Mr. Kazunori Mori, Mr. Kaname Iwamoto, Mr. Toshio Nishino, Mr. Koichi Yahagi and Mr. Takehiko Fujita.

China had placed them under house detention on spying and other charges.

At a news conference held immediately after their return to Tokyo International Airport, however, they evaded any definite answer to a question about the Chinese charges against them. Their release was in the form of deportation but no conditions were attached to their release. They said that they had little information on the eight other Japanese detained in China.

Government officials welcomed their release, but they believed it was too early to conclude that Peking's policy toward Japan had changed.

C. Banking Transactions With China: Japanese foreign exchange banks, with the approval of the Bank of Japan, have accepted a new Sino-Japanese trade formula for settling transactions.

The formula, proposed by Peking, is expected to go into effect immediately, particularly affecting transactions at the Canton Commodity Fair.

The main points of the new settlement formula, which had been at issue between Japan and China for the past eight months, are:

(1) Japan and China will use their own currencies for drawing up contracts and issuing letters of credit;

(2) The £ sterling will be the account settlement currency for the time being or until either side wishes to make a change.

(3) The exchange rates will be Yen 864 and Yuan 5.908 for £1; and

(4) If changes in exchange rates occur, Japan or China will immediately inform the other to this effect and negotiations will resume.

D. Nuclear Fuel Plant: According to the Japan Nuclear Fuel Company, the country's first nuclear fuel manufacturing plant is scheduled to begin operations on the southern shore of Tokyo Bay by the Autumn of 1970.

Construction of the factory was started recently by the company as a joint venture of Tokyo Shibaura Electric Company, Hitachi, and General Electric Company of USA. Trial production is expected to begin in March, 1970.

The joint venture firm has invested more than $2.6 million. The two Japanese partners hold 30 per cent each and General Electric has a 40 per cent investment.

Nuclear electric power generation of Japan's second commercial plant will start full operation in November, 1970, when the Tsuruga station puts on stream its 322,00-kw light water-cooled power reactor. The plant, owned by the nation's nine largest electric power companies, will be operated by the Japan Atomic Power Company, producing 40 tons of refined uranium and processing it into fuel bars by the end of the first year.

E. Cotton Trade Agreement With EEC: Japan and the six member-nations of the European Economic Community (EEC) signed on October 22, 1969 a new annual Cotton Trade Agreement retro-active to October 1, 1969.

Under the Agreement, EEC countries will abandon their arbitrary controls on Japanese exports of cotton textiles. In return, Japan will voluntarily regulate exports to Belgium, the Netherlands, Luxembourg, France, West Germany and Italy.

The Tokyo Ambassadors of the six countries signed for their respective Governments and Mr. Kiyohiko Tsurumi, Director-General of the Foreign Ministry's Economic Affairs Bureau, signed for Japan. The accords were based upon an international long-term cotton trade pact and an over-all Trade Agreement between Japan and the EEC nations.

Exports predicted that the volume of Japan's cotton goods exports to the EEC would now be increased from the present 7,770 tons to a total of 11,450 tons annually. The new target would be broken down as follows: 6,000 tons to West Germany, 2,650 tons to France, 1,600 tons to Italy and 1,200 tons to the Benelux countries.

NEPAL

A. King Mahendra On Panchayat System: Addressing a function in Birganj on December 17, 1969, King Mahendra deprecated the attempts of some people to create "misgivings about the Panchayat system."

He said that it was wrong on the part of any one to attempt to shake off the confidence of the people in the Panchayat system. He was sure no Nepali could be "beguiled" now as before. His reference was obviously to the movement initiated in the fifties by political parties for the introduction of parliamentary democracy which was eventually discarded by him in December, 1960.

The King said that it was a liberal system under which everyone had the right to find a solution to national problems by mutual discussions. "It does not mean that one can do what one chooses or speaks as one likes."

He declared his resolve to serve the nation and to consolidate the gains of the Panchayat system which was based on the "strength of the people."

B. Replacement Of Indian Personnel At Border Check-posts: A Foreign Ministry spokesman disclosed in Khatmandu on January 1 that Nepalese had replaced about 25 Indian personnel in eight Nepalese border check-posts.

The replacement was in accordance with the Agreement reached between the two countries in June, 1969.

The remaining Indian personnel in nine Nepalese border check-posts would also be withdrawn during the current year.

C. Construction Of National Highway—World Bank Team's Recommendations: A study team of the World Bank has suggested the construction of a new national highway linking Khatmandu Valley with the Nepalese Terai and India and through India with the rest of the world.

The team has submitted a report with their suggestion to the Nepal Government after completing a survey of the Tribhuvan Rajpath and the Bagmati delta.

The team, which visited Nepal recently, suggested that this road should run all along the Bagmati River banks. The necessity of a new north-south road had been considered more practical and dependable as the present Tribhuvan Rajpath linking Nepal with India was too expensive and perennially fraught with accidents. It may be recalled that Tribhuvan Rajpath was the first national highway built through Indian aid opening up Nepal to the rest of the world through India.

The alternative highway as suggested by the World Bank team would run from Khatmandu up to Hetauda and would be about 80 km long. Two major bridges would have to be built over the Bagmati River.

The Tribhuvan Rajpath built through Indian aid but under the Nepalese charge needs repairs at several points. The repair work would, however, be very costly. It was estimated that the gasoline and other expenses involved in traffic on the Tribhuvan Rajpath amounts to Rs. 10 crores annually.

Traffic on the highway had throughout remained hazardous. With increased developmental activities in the Kingdom, the traffic had increased tremendously. Therefore, canalization of road traffic was imperative.

PAKISTAN

A. Constitutional Proposals Criticized: The recent constitutional proposals of President Yahya Khan (see page 9365) have come in for sharp criticism from some leading politicians, who have termed them as "inadequate and half-hearted."

While most of the establishment Press has hailed Gen. Yahya Khan's announcement about the dismemberment of the unified West Pakistan, there is a feeling that measures like the holding of elections by October, 1970 and acceptance of the one-man one-vote principle do not go far enough.

Voicing his disappointment, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, former Foreign Minister and Chairman of the Pakistan People's Party, called them "a half road" towards constitutional settlement.

The Dawn of Karachi in the first week of December, 1969 quoted Mr. Bhutto as expressing his strong doubt if the Constituent Assembly would be ever able to solve problems like the extent of autonomy to be enjoyed by different units of Pakistan and the question of an Upper House.

It may be recalled that East Pakistani leaders had been demanding an uni-cameral legislature which should be elected on the basis of direct adult franchise. This would give East Pakistan a majority of about 55 per cent. President Yahya Khan had declared that such issues would be settled by the Constituent Assembly.

Mr. Bhutto was of the view that on all such matters the President should have given a clear verdict.

The former Chief Minister of East Pakistan, Mr. Ataur Rehman Khan, also criticized some of the provisions of Gen. Yahya Khan's announcement. He expressed disappointment over the fact that autonomy issue had been left unsolved.

Though Sheikh Mujibur Rehman of the Awami League described these measures as "one step forward", he expressed fears about the shape of things to come. In his view, the elections should have been held much earlier than scheduled.

B. Regional Autonomy Not Linked With General Elections—President Yahya Khan's Clarification: President Yahya Khan said in Dacca on December 23, 1969 that the question of regional autonomy had nothing to do with the General Elections in the country and that the issue had been left to the people to settle.

When his attention was drawn to the demands by Pakistani leaders, Maulana Bhashani, Mr. Ataur Rahman and Mr. Nurul Amin, that the question of regional autonomy should be settled before elections, he said: "This was only the demand of three persons out of the 12 crore people of Pakistan. They may be representing political parties but I will not recognize them as people's representatives until they come through elections."

He said that one-man one-vote meant representation on the basis of population. Consequently, East Pakistan would have a larger representation in the National Assembly.

Demand For Creation Of Separate Provinces In West Wing:

Meanwhile, creation of separate provinces of Karachi and the erstwhile Bahawalpur State has been demanded following Gen. Yahya Khan's announcement about the dismemberment of the One-Unit in West Pakistan.

Karachi leaders such as Mr. Z. H. Lari, of the Muslim League, Mr. Khaliq-uz-Zaman, and others have expressed the view that the present character of Karachi would be lost if the city was allowed to be reamalgamated in Sind.

Karachi city has a large number of Urdu-speaking refugees who are opposed to the demand to make Sindhi a national language of Pakistan and to give complete autonomy to Sind in internal affairs.

According to the daily Jung, representatives of over 50 political, social and cultural organizations of Karachi have stated in a resolution that the separate identity of the city must be kept. They have also alleged that about half-a-million Pathans, who were settled in Karachi under encouragement from President Ayub Khan, were trying to create conditions of lawlessness under the instigation of Mr. Gauhar Ayub, the former President's son. Mr. Z. A. Bhutto and other Sind leaders have, however, opposed the demand.'

Meanwhile, some Punjab politicians have lent their support to the demand for the creation of a separate province of Bahawalpur State along with the districts of Multan, Dera Ghazi Khan and Dera Ismail Khan.

Nawab Mushtaq Ahmed Gurmani, a former Governor of West Pakistan, and Mr. Hassan Mahmood, a former Chief Minister of Bahawalpur State, have supported the suggestion on the ground that the people of these areas speak a language which was different from Punjabi. But other leaders, including Air Marshal Asghar Khan, have opposed the suggestion on the ground that the language of these areas was only a dialect of Punjabi.

INDIA

SUMMARY: Firing On East Pakistan Border; State Monopoly Over Import Of Five Items; Ban On Use Of Cyclamates; Licences To Birla Group; Parliamentary Opposition Comes Into Being; Indian Airlines' Annual Report.

A. Firing On East Pakistan Border: The East Pakistan Rifles (EPR) fired on December 20, 1969 across the Punarbhaba River in the Bamungola sector of Indian territory in Malda district.

On hearing of the incident, the Inspector-General of the Border Security Force (BSF), Mr. P. K. Basu sent a protest to EPR headquarters in Dacca demanding an immediate cease-fire. The BSF sector commander went to the Malda border.

In March, 1969 EPR men had resorted to unprovoked firing in the same area, injuring three BSF personnel. According to a BSF spokesman, the latest firing at least in the initial stages was not returned by the Indian side.

The feeling in political circles was that the East Pakistan authorities wanted to create tension across the border to divert public attention from the political issues facing the country. According to BSF sources, the firing was all the more surprising as it violated the agreement reached between the BSF and the EPR after the firing in March, 1969.

Cease-fire:

A cease-fire took effect at 1-39 p.m. on December 21, 1969 at Bamungola in Malda district after about 22 hours of unprovoked, intermittent firing by East Pakistan Rifles from across the border.

The cease-fire followed telephonic contacts established by BSF authorities with the EPR headquarters at Rajshahi in East Pakistan.

B. Mixed Economy Favoured By Mrs. I. Gandhi: In an interview on the role of the public sector, the Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi has stated that mixed economy is a viable concept and can be the main means of attaining a socialistic society.

Today, in her view, the public sector has a prominent position in the national economy in name, but not in fact. The immediate requirement is to give it that position in fact also.

Since available resources were limited, public sector investments would be most suitable in areas where social returns were highest. She did not wish to diminish the private sector if it functioned "as it should function, realizing its own limitations, realizing the public compulsions".

She agreed that the expansion of the public sector had given rise to the expectation that it would make profits. On competition between the two sectors, as in the case of railways and road transport, she said there could be norms, but one had to take into account the social profits, and not only other profits. Rail-road competition existed in other countries also. In India, the Railways performed a much greater service than in almost any other country. If the Government decided not to bother about them the public suffered. That was where the question of public service came in.

She was asked about her concept of socialism, and the place of the public sector. Her attention was also drawn to the general expectation that on account of the recent developments she was likely to make policy changes of a socialistic character.

She said: "In the circumstances here in India it would be difficult to change entirely and suddenly what we have been committed to. We have been committed to the concept of a mixed economy. Within that, there is considerable room for movement.

"As far as I am concerned, and I think my party is concerned, we believe we should remain centrists but left of centre, if I may put it that way. (Personally I do not feel that the words Left or Right have much meaning. But they seem to make things clearer to people sometimes. That is why I am using them).

"The trouble is not that the policy has failed but it has simply not been implemented in the manner in which it should have been. I am not blaming anybody at all because sometimes you are a victim of circumstances: the whole system we have here and the circumstances of the country, and events which took place, have pushed us along one way or the other. But there is no doubt about the direction. And I know in which direction my father wanted to go; I know he felt that we were not entirely going there. But, as I said, the force of circumstances cannot be ignored.

"For the realization of our objectives, a sizable public sector is a necessity. The mixed economy which we have envisaged gives a prominent position to the public sector. And I think mixed economy is a viable concept and it can be the main means of attaining a socialistic society".

Did she envisage a more prominent place for the public sector in the total economy than it had so far? "Well, today it has a prominent position in name but not in fact. Therefore, the first requirement is that it should have it in fact also, in the manner in which it functions".

Which were the areas into which she wanted the public sector to move? "Obviously, since our resources are limited, the most suitable areas for public sector investment are those where the social returns are the highest," she replied.

C. State Monopoly Over Import Of Five Items: In pursuance of its policy of progressive nationalization of foreign trade, the Government decided on December 24, 1969 to canalize imports of five more items through the State Trading Corporation (STC) with immediate effect.

Of the five items, sulphur was the most important and profitable item of import. The other four items were titanium dioxide, ammonium nitrate (technical grade), cresylic acid and hops. The annual imports of these five items were of the value of about Rs. 20 crores.

When the import policy for the current financial year was announced on March 31, 1969, six new items were added to the list of imports handled by STC on a monopoly basis. These were copra, mutton tallow, soyabean oil, palm oil, cork wood, and sodium nitrate. In addition to these, it was announced that four more commodities—natural rubber, sulpha products, vitamins and antibiotics—would "normally" be imported through STC for sale to actual users.

In respect of certain other industrial raw materials, such as carbon black, aluminium oxide, phosphoric acid and cellulose acetate, STC was authorised to act as an indenting house on behalf of actual users.

Even before these changes, STC had a monopoly in the import of nine items. These were nylon yarn and thread, x-ray films, rock phosphate, muriate of potash, raw wool and wool tops, all synthetic non-cellulose fibres, including polyester fibre.

Import of mercury which was handled by STC till April, 1969 was transferred to the Minerals and Metals Trading Corporation, another State agency.

The Government had already decided in principle that the import of all industrial raw materials should be made in future only through State agencies as they would have the advantages of bulk buying and negotiating long-term contracts.

Further, it was believed that canalization of imports, particularly of scarce materials like sulphur, through State agencies would eliminate certain malpractices which were often attributed to private trading in such goods.

The Government had already decided to import raw cotton worth about Rs. 100 crores through a State agency from 1970. It was proposed to set up a separate Raw Cotton Corporation for this purpose.

D. Abolition Of Controls On Cement—Government Decision Reversed: The Government on December 22, 1969 reversed its decision to do away with all controls on cement from January 1, 1970.

Announcing this in Parliament, the Minister for Industrial Development, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, said the Government was reviewing the entire question of decontrol.

He said that numerous representations had been received by the Government from a large number of producers, MPs, State Governments and chambers of commerce urging the Government to reconsider its decision and continue the existing arrangements for the sale of cement at a uniform FOR destination price and freight equalization arrangements. The various grounds urged in these representations, in particular that there might be price rises after decontrol, specially in deficit areas warranted re-examination of the Government's decision.

Under the circumstances, he said, "the existing arrangement for the sale of cement on FOR destination price and freight pooling arrangements will for the present be continued beyond December 31."

The Government's decision to end all controls on cement with effect from 1970 had been announced by Mr. Ahmed in Parliament on April 14 (see page 8936). Since then, there had been opposition to the decision from southern and western cement factories on the ground that decontrol would hit them hard. They particularly wanted continuance of the freight equalization scheme under which they could sell their surplus production in northern States at the same price as elsewhere. Abolition of the scheme, they feared, would make it difficult for them to sell their surplus production in the north.

Producers in the north, however, contended that the southern mills could find a market for their surplus production in their own region as demand was bound to pick up after decontrol. They could also export a part of their surplus.

The southern mills feared that they would be ruined financially if there was decontrol accompanied by abolition of the freight equalization scheme. The State Governments of Tamil Nadu and Andhra also voiced their opposition to decontrol.

E. Ban On Use Of Cyclamates: The Government banned on December 25, 1969 the use of cyclamates in pharmaceutical necessity or as a sweetening agent in pharmaceutical preparations.

The action was taken after the recent reports that cyclamates were suspected to be cancer-inducing in animals under certain conditions. The authorities in USA and UK and in some other countries had banned their use in food and drugs.

The Drugs Technical Advisory Board had considered the question of manufacture of preparations containing cyclamates and, on its recommendation the Central Drugs Controller had asked all States' Drugs Controllers to take immediate action in this regard pending the amendment of the Drugs and Cosmetics Rules.

The manufacturers preparing syrups of antibiotics, multivitamins, gripe water or any other preparation would not be permitted to use cyclamates as a pharmaceutical aid or necessary. The manufacturers producing sweetening agents containing cyclamates in tablet or liquid form would, however, be permitted to manufacture these preparations on certain conditions.

F. Licences Issued To Birla Group: According to official figures, the Birla group of concerns has been issued 27 industrial licences in the last three years.

Of the total number of licences issued to the group in this period, ten were for setting up new industrial undertakings and 17 for substantial expansion of existing units. In addition, six licences were issued for the manufacture of new articles in existing Birla concerns.

These licences were given to the group after the publication of the Hazare Committee report which had alleged "certain irregularities" in the issue of licences to the Birla concerns. The Hazare Committee's finding that 375 industrial licences were issued to the group between 1957 and 1966 had caused a furore in Parliament in 1967 and several Congress and opposition members had demanded that no new licences should be issued to the group pending an inquiry.

The Dutt Committee, which was appointed to go into the "disclosures" made by the Hazare Committee, had also made certain adverse remarks on the cornering of licences by a few big business groups, including the Birlas.

After examining the Dutt committee report, the Government had decided to set up an inquiry commission to go into the alleged malpractices of a few big industrial houses, including the Birlas, though the composition and terms of reference of the commission were yet to be announced.

During the last three years, no licence for the setting up of any new undertaking was issued either to the Tata group or the Walchand group. The Tatas were, however, given 14 licences for expansion of existing units.

G. Abolition Of Privy Purses—Resolution Passed By Rajya Sabha: The Rajya Sabha passed on December 19, 1969 a resolution which bound the Government to take "all legal and other steps" to abolish privy purses and privileges of former rulers before the presentation of the Budget on February 28.

Coinciding with the "historic decision", as the adoption of the motion was described, came the Home Minister, Mr. Y. B. Chavan's assurance that the Government's pledge to abolish purses and privileges stood. He repeated that negotiations with the princes would be completed within the deadline set by him earlier—the end of the year (1969).

The resolution would have given the Government time up to February 28 to make up its mind. But, Mr. Chavan went a step ahead and said that it would be before the Budget session commenced.

Intervening in the debate, Mr. Chavan spoke of the Government's commitment to the House and the nation to do away with princely privileges. There had been no change in the stand. But the Government, he said, did not want to move in the matter in a manner that might alienate any section of the community. The princes after all were part and parcel of the Indian community. It was necessary, therefore, to talk with them and to negotiate and to work out an agreed solution.

H. Parliamentary Opposition Comes Into Being: A duly recognized parliamentary opposition came into being on December 17, 1969, 22 years after Independence.

The Congress Party in opposition, led by Dr. Ram Subhag Singh was accorded that recognition by the Speaker of the Lok Sabha. (The primary pre-requisite for securing recognition as an Opposition Party is to have a membership of not less than a tenth of the total strength of the House. This had not been possible all these years, till a section of Congressmen crossed the floor from the Treasury Benches to the other side. They have a strength of more than 60, and thus form the second largest single party in the Lok Sabha.)

While Dr. Singh has the official status of Leader of the Opposition, it was made clear by Communist opposition groups that he should not be deemed to be the spokesman for the entire Opposition on vital issues.

In the Rajya Sabha, its Chairman, Mr. G. S. Pathak announced on December 18, 1969 that Mr. S. N. Mishra, leader of the Congress Opposition, would be Leader of the Opposition in the House.

He said that the Congress Opposition party with a strength of 39 in the 240-member House was having the largest following among the Opposition parties.

The Prime Minister, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, congratulating Mr. Mishra, assured him full co-operation from the Government. She also hoped that Mr. Mishra would give the same co-operation for maintaining the decorum and dignity of the House.

I. Check On Monopolies In Business—Bill Passed: The Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Bill was passed by the Lok Sabha on December 18, 1969 after some 300 amendments tabled by Opposition members were rejected.

The Rajya Sabha had already passed it.

Under the Bill—which will become an Act of Parliament when it receives the assent of the President—a Commission will be appointed by the Central Government with a person of the rank of a Supreme Court Judge as its Chairman. The Commission will have powers to inquire into any restrictive trade practices upon receiving a complaint of facts from a consumers' association having a membership of not less than 25 persons.

In his reply to the third reading, the Minister for Industrial Development, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, said the spirit behind the legislation was the acceleration of the rate of economic development in the country. He rejected the criticism that public sector undertakings also constituted monopolies. Since they were public sector projects, their operations and functioning was in the interests of the public.

J. Income-tax Assessment Of Mr. Jagjivan Ram: In a written reply in the Lok Sabha on December 22, 1969 relating to the Food Minister, Mr. Jagjivan Ram's income-tax assessment, the Minister of State for Finance, Mr. P. C. Sethi, said that for the assessment years 1955-56 to 1958-59, assessment was not finalized because it was filed late and barred by limitation.

However, if the assessment could be finalized, there would have been nominal demands of Rs. 14, Rs. 2 and Rs. 2 for the first three years, respectively, and a refund of Rs. 235 due for the last year, resulting in a net refund of Rs. 217 in respect of these four years taken together. The refund was not allowed.

For the assessment years 1959-60 to 1968-69, returns had been filed and assessment for all the years had been completed and tax paid by the assessee.

"Show-cause notices" for levy of penalty under Section 271(1)(A) were issued for the years 1959-60 to 1968-69. Mr. Jagjivan Ram filed an application before the Commissioner of Income-Tax for waiving penalty under Section 271(4A).

For the assessment years 1959-60 to 1961-62, the Income-Tax Officer dropped the penalty proceedings, keeping in view the general assurance given in the Assembly that individual notices under Section 22(2) would continue to be issued in the cases of existing assessees and it was the practice of the department that defaulters under Section 22(1) in such cases were not penalized.

For the assessment years 1962-63 to 1968-69, the Commissioner of Income-Tax waived the penalty in exercise of judicial discretion vested in him under Section 271(4A) of the Income-Tax Act, 1961.

The returns of income for the assessment years 1960-61 to 1963-64 were regularized under Section 147 of the Income-Tax Act, 1961, and those for assessment years 1964-65 to 1968-69 were accepted under Section 139(4) of the Income-Tax Act, 1961.

K. Corruption Charges Against Bihar Ministers Upheld By Mudholkar Commission: It was announced in Patna on December 11, 1969 that the Mudholkar Commission had upheld the charges of abuse of power and arbitrary action against Mr. Kamakshya Narain Singh, Raja of Ramgarh, during his tenure as Minister of Mines and Minerals and PWD in the United Front Ministry that came to power in Bihar after the 1967 General Election.

According to an official summary of the findings of the Commission, the charges upheld or substantiated against 12 of the 14 Ministers were found to be "mostly of a minor nature". But those established or upheld against Mr. Kamakshya Narain Singh were of "a more serious nature".

The Commission, appointed by the Soshit Dal Ministry to inquire into charges of misuse of power and corruption against 14 Ministers of the Mahamaya Prasad Sinha Cabinet, exonerated Mr. Tej Narain Jha (Com), Minister of State for Irrigation and Power.

Mr. Mudholkar said it was unfortunate that Mr. Kamakshya Narain Singh was placed by the Chief Minister in a position "where his self-interest was bound to come in conflict with the interest of the State or the interests of a competing private party. By doing this, the Chief Minister sacrificed public interest on the altar of political expediency."

He added: "I am surprised that the Mines and Geology portfolio should have been offered to a person who, despite his denial, has substantial interest in numerous mines in a State which is one of the richest in the country in mineral deposits".

Mr. Mudholkar found that except in the case of the Raja of Ramgarh, "the State was unable to find even a single instance of corruption or self-aggrandizement." The allegations against Mr. Kamakshya Narain Singh were of making orders and observations which were intended to or were likely to confer unmerited benefit on the Minister himself or on a person or company in whom he was interested. "These actions arose out of matters relating to mines and were passed by a Minister who was or still is a big mine owner in Bihar. At any rate his family members and transferees from him who are or claim to be in possession of the mines to which the orders relate could benefit from them."

The charges against the Raja upheld by the Commission were:

(i) Abuse of power in granting lease of a vast area to a private party, causing heavy loss to the State by keeping the department out of the picture and ignoring the advice of the Mines Commissioner and the District Mines Officer;

(ii) Cancellation of lease to a cooperative enterprise for extraction of minor minerals and granting it to a private party in whom he was interested;

(iii) Abuse of authority in refusing to grant a lease to certain parties and thereby causing loss to the State and illegally setting up checkposts at such places on the Hazaribagh-Ranchi road as enabled coal-laden trucks proceeding to Hazaribagh from Kedla and Jharkhand mines in which the respondent and his family had interest to escape checking;

(iv) Arbitrary refusal to grant prospecting licence for mica to some parties;

(v) Arbitrary acceptance of a tender which was not the lowest in his capacity as Minister;

(vi) Misappropriation of travelling allowance advanced for a trip abroad which was abandoned; and

(vii) Improper refusal to renew a mining lease in favour of Sone Valley Portland Cement Co.

In the opinion of the Commission, the action of the Minister in refusing to grant leases and licences to a large number of parties causing loss to the State exchequer was "suspicious".

The Commission considered as "highly improper", though within his authority, measures taken by the Minister, such as determining leases, stopping working of mines, ordering prosecution and cancelling licences of Indian Mica Supply Co.

The charge of misuse of power, of showing favour to Mineral Development, Ltd. in which the Minister was interested had been fully established. His "actions in relation to this matter are highly reproachable".

The majority of the 21 charges preferred against Mr. Mahamaya Prasad Sinha could not be established. The cases in which the charges were upheld related mostly to withdrawal of detention orders or cases against some people.

The Commission was of the view that Mr. Sinha had abused his authority in revoking the order of detention passed against Mohiuddin of Ranchi for fomenting communal trouble. It also found that he had succumbed to the pressure of Mr. Kamakshya Narain Singh in ordering unconditional withdrawal of cases instituted against Mr. Indra Narain Singh, MLA.

It held that the withdrawal of cases against Mr. G. Sarwar, editor of Sangam who was accused of communal propaganda was "improper", but felt that the sting of the charge had been taken out because the motivating factor was promotion of communal goodwill.

It also held as "improper" the order of Mr. Sinha for the release of Mr. P. C. Garg, a CPI(M) worker detained under the Preventive Detention Act in connexion with the communal riots at Ranchi. The release was contrary to departmental advice and of the local authorities, because two of Mr. Sinha's Cabinet colleagues, Mr. Karpoori Thakur (SSP and Mr. Indradip Sinha (CPI), held that "a Communist could not be a communalist".

L. Indian Airlines' Annual Report: According to the annual report of Indian Airlines, placed in the Lok Sabha on December 19, 1969, a record profit of Rs. 166,00,000 was made by the airline in 1968-69.

The profit showed a remarkable recovery in the last two years as 1966-67 had ended in a loss of Rs. 288,50,000 and, 1967-68 in a loss of Rs. 26,20,000.

Mr. S. Mohan Kumaramangalam, the Chairman, later told newsmen that a vigorous growth in passenger traffic and an increase in overall load were the major factors of the working of Indian Airlines in 1968-69, contributing to its improved performance.

The report showed that the airline carried 1.96 million passengers as against 1.66 million in 1967-68, thus recording an increase of 18 per cent. The foreign exchange earnings of the airline rose from Rs. 6.89 crores in 1967-68 to Rs. 7.61 crores in 1968-69, which constituted 19 per cent of the airline's total operating revenues. The foreign exchange on revenue account was Rs. 3.99 crores, thus making Indian Airlines a net earner of foreign exchange to the extent of Rs. 3.62 crores. In addition, foreign exchange of the value of Rs. 0.56 crores was saved, as this amount would have been spent by the country if Indian Airlines had not operated its services to Afghanistan, Ceylon and Burma.

The revenue during the period under review rose by 15 per cent over the previous financial year to Rs. 40.12 crores, while the expenditure for the year increased by nine per cent to Rs. 36.55 crores. The result was an operating profit of Rs. 3.57 crores which was 169 per cent more than in the previous financial period. After taking into account the payments on interest to the Government on loan capital and credit financing charges on loans outstandings for the purchase of aircraft and spares, the year's working resulted in a net profit of Rs. 1.66 crores, thus showing a 12.8 per cent rate of return on the equity capital of Rs. 12.97 crores. This was in addition to the contribution to the Central exchequer by way of customs and excise duty on aviation fuel and oil amounting to Rs. 2.74 crores. Besides, a sum of Rs. 1.22 crores was paid to different State Governments towards sales tax.

The report called attention to the very high cost of aviation fuel which accounted for nearly 27.3 per cent of the total operating expenses of Indian Airlines as against eight to 15 per cent by other airlines of the world. Over the last 16 years, Indian Airlines had paid a sum of Rs. 24.08 crores, almost equal to its capital of Rs. 25.94 crores, towards duties on aviation fuel alone.

M. Rajasthan Land Reforms Act Declared Invalid: The Rajasthan High Court on December 16, 1969 struck down the Rajasthan Land Reforms and Acquisition of Estates Act as violative of Articles 14 and 31 of the Constitution.

Allowing the writ petitions filed by eight former rulers challenging the Act, Mr. Justice Vedpal Tyagi said that Chapters 4 and 6 and the Schedule of the Act were ultra vires the Constitution. Any action taken by the Government for acquisition of the petitioners' land under the Act would be hit as being taken under a law which was not enforceable.

He said the Act was silent on how the land acquired would be utilized by the Government. It did not give any indication of any agrarian reform which might require acquisition of land from the present owners.

The petitioners included Maharaja Man Singh, Mr. Chandraveer Singh, Mr. Laxman Singh, Mr. Raghunath Singh, Mr. Sunder Singh, Mr. Gaj Singh, Mr. Bhagwat Singh and Mr. Bhagat Singh, all former rulers of princely States.

ISRAEL

A. Hijacked Passengers Exchanged For Syrian Prisoners: Two Israeli passengers who were in an American airliner hijacked by Arab guerrillas on August 29, 1969 and brought to Damascus were exchanged on December 5 for 13 Syrian prisoners.

The Syrians repatriated included two pilots who had landed their MIG-17s in Israel due to a navigation error in the Summer of 1968 (see page 8519).

The Arabs were handed over to the International Red Cross representatives at El Kuneitra, near the cease-fire line with Syria, after the two Israelis arrived in Athens. The Israelis, Dr. Shlomo Samueloff, professor of physiology at the Hebrew University and Mr. Saleh Muallem, travel agent, reached Lydda the same evening and were received by the Prime Minister, Mrs. Golda Meir, the Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban and other members of the Government.

The Syrian decision to release the Israelis came after numerous threats by Israeli officials and mounting world pressure.

From the outset, TWA had maintained constant contact with the Syrians in order to secure the release of the two passengers. The airliner had been hijacked by two armed guerrillas from the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, the extremist group, as it was on a flight from Rome to Athens.

Timed two weeks before Syria was to open her new international airport to American and other Western airlines, the incident came as a severe embarrassment to the Syrians. They held the two guerrillas for almost two months before allowing them to return to their bases in the Jordan Valley. The young woman who led the hijacking, Miss Leila Khalid, had since become a heroine in the Arab world.

B. General Election Results: The country went to the polls on October 28, 1969 to elect the Seventh Knesset and 129 Local Councils. Eighty per cent of the electorate turned out, including a similar percentage of the 150,000 Israeli Arabs and Druze eligible to vote.

On the previous day (October 27), mobile polls went out to the front lines where, despite snipers' bullets and mortar shells, members of the Israeli Defence Forces cast their vote.

In the Jerusalem Municipal elections, some 10,000 Arabs from the eastern part of the city turned out at the polling booths.

Mrs. Golda Meir thus lost her overall majority in the Knesset.

Of the 1,758,658 eligible voters, 1,427,931 cast their votes. About 60,238 ballots were not valid or blank. The deposits on the three lists which did not receive the minimum of one per cent of the votes went to the Treasury.

The following is the distribution of votes and seats among the 16 lists that participated in the elections, as authorized by the Central Election Committee:

	Votes	Percentage
Alignment	632,035	46.22
Gahal	296,294	21.67

Political Parties:

The parties contesting the 1969 elections were as follows:

1. Alignment for Unity of Israel's workers (Maarach).
2. Herut—Liberal Bloc (Gahal).
3. Israel Association (Religious) (Agudat Yisrael).
4. Independent Liberals.
5. National Religious Party (Mizrachi).
6. Israel Association of Workers. (Religious) (Poalei Agudat Yisrael).
7. Free Centre Party (Merkaz Hofshi).
8. Land Of Israel Party.
9. "State" List (AM).
10. Young Israel (Communal Group).
11. Co-operation and Fraternity (Arab).
12. Progress & Development (Druze).
13. New Communist Party.
14. Israel Communist Party.
15. "This World" List (Ha'olam Hazeh).
16. "Peace" List.

The following are the programmes of the parties, in the order of the numbers of their members in the Sixth Knesset. The definitions are as furnished by the parties themselves:

The Alignment for the Unity of Israel's Workers (Maarach), formed on May 19, 1965, consists of:

(1) Mapai, the Israel Labour Party (founded in 1930), which aims at the ingathering of the Jewish people, the reclamation and population of the Land of Israel; the development of a planned economy and encouragement of every constructive initiative, public and private, progress on the basis of social-democratic principles, peace with the Arab countries, founded on the territorial integrity of the Middle East States, friendly relations with all nations; co-operation with developing countries;

(2) Achdut Ha'avoda-Poalei Zion (founded in 1954), a pioneering Zionist party, standing for a planned economy, widespread agricultural settlement, activist defence policy; a foreign policy of non-identification; and friendship with all peace-loving peoples, particularly in Asia (member of Maarach);

(3) Rafi, the Israel Labour List (founded in 1965), stands for self-reliance in matters of national security; peace with the neighbouring countries from a position of strength; electoral reform aiming at the constituency system; universal secondary education; speedy modernization of the economy; and a democratic society with division of powers and social justice, (member of Maarach);

(4) Mapam, United Workers' Party (founded in 1948) is a Left-wing Zionist socialist party, aiming at the ingathering of the Jewish people, the realization of Socialism and the training of Jewish youth for pioneering settlement, Jewish-Arab working class solidarity, and permanent peace in the Middle East, based on neutrality of the whole region (member of Maarach).

The Herut-Liberal Bloc, founded on May 18, 1965, consists of:

(1) The Herut Movement (founded in 1948 by the Irgun Zva'l Leumi), which opposes the present regime and calls for the territorial integrity of Eretz Israel (Land of Israel) within its historical boundaries and for private initiative in the economic and social structure of the State;

(2) The Liberal Party, which stands for a liberal Welfare State; enactment of a written Constitution; a free enterprise economy of individuals and associations based on fair competition; depoliticization of the Civil Service, and electoral reform.

The National Religious Party, Mizrahi-Hapoel-Hamizrachi (founded in 1956) is based on the principle of religious Zionism, whose aims are: to promote the ethical and social values of Judaism in the life of the State; to foster legislation founded on the laws of the Torah; to develop the constructive work of religious settlement, education, trade union activities and absorption of immigrants.

The Independent Liberal Party stands for national unity and priority for national interests; freedom of the individual and social justice, equal rights for all economic sections; a democratic, liberal and social regime in order to create a Welfare State; the enactment of a Constitution and National Health Insurance.

Agudat Israel (founded in 1912) stands for the strictest observance of the Torah in the administration of the State, under the jurisdiction of rabbinical authorities; the promotion of traditional Jewish education through an independent system of schools and yeshivot; and State control of the health insurance funds.

Poalei Agudat Israel (founded in 1924) is a religious workers' movement with the object of upbuilding the State in the spirit of the Torah, protection of workers' rights, settlement and pioneering.

The Communist Party of Israel (founded in 1919—present name adopted in 1949), basing itself on Marxist-Leninist theory, aims at Socialism in Israel. It works for peace, independence and neutrality, democracy and social progress; equal rights for the Arab fopulation; peace with the Arab countries, and friendship with the Soviet Union and other Socialist countries.

Two lists contested the 1965 Knesset elections: the New Communist List and the Communist Party.

Arab Parties: Co-operation and Fraternity represents Druzes and Moslems in the Carmel area, Western Galilee and the central area; Progress and Development represents mainly Moslems and Christians in Central Galilee.

Ha'olam Hazeh—New Force (founded in 1965) is a non-party movement, founded by Ha'olam Hazeh weekly. It stands for separation of religion and State, equality for the Arab minority, neutralism in foreign relations, and peace based on co-operation between the Arab and Hebrew national movements.

The new parties contesting the election were:

1. Free Centre Party—which broke away from Herut in the Gahal Bloc.
2. Land of Israel Party—which bases its peace policy on the inclusion of all areas (occupied during the June, 1967 War) of Eretz Yisrael (Biblical Judaea and Israel) within the political borders of present-day Israel.
3. State List—led by former Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion and consisting of those remnants of Rafi Party that did not return to the Israel Labour Party.
4. Peace List—(Left-wing splinter) comprising "Matspen", a pro-Maoist and self-styled "Israel New Leftist" student group, together with a number of unaffiliated individuals opposed to the retention of any territory occupied in June, 1967.

Muslim Arab Elected Deputy Speaker:

On November 18, 1969, the Knesset (Parliament) elected a Muslim Arab Israeli farmer as one of its eight Deputy Speakers—the highest post in the land which an Arab has so far attained.

Mr. Seif El-Din Zuabi, the 56-year-old parliamentarian, told newsmen that as a member of an important Muslim minority in a non-Muslim State, he felt himself following in the footsteps of the late Indian President, Dr. Zakir Husain. "However, in everyday practical affairs, I would say that a Deputy Speakership carries wider practical connotations."

Mr. Zuabi represents a party of Arab and Druze Israelis affiliated with Mrs. Golda Meir's Left Alignment Faction. He has been active in Israeli politics since the State's establishment and has been Mayor of Nazareth where he was born.

Ministry Formed:

On December 11, 1969, Mrs. Golda Meir succeeded in forming a new Government and averting the threat of a long political crisis.

Mrs. Meir told President Shazar that she had formed a Government representing parties holding 102 of the 120 seats in the Knesset.

Final agreement by all the parties to the coalition was reached only hours before Mrs. Meir's mandate to form a new Government—following the October, 1969 elections—was due to expire.

The new Cabinet has 24 members against 22 in the last administration. Key posts remain unchanged with Gen. Moshe Dayan continuing as Defence Minister and Mr. Abba Eban as Minister for Foreign Affairs.

Earlier, Mrs. Golda Meir warned the Secretariat of the Labour Party that she might give up her efforts to form a new Government.

She insisted on the Deputy Prime Minister, Gen. Yigal Allon, also holding the Education portfolio with a member of the National Religious Party as Deputy Education Minister. [Gen. Allon had objected to having a deputy from that party.]

She warned that she may return her mandate to President Shazar.

The following is the composition of the Ministry:

Prime Minister: Mrs. Golda Meir—Labour (Mapai).

Deputy Prime Minister: Gen. Yigal Allon—Labour (Achdut Avoda).

Foreign Affairs: Mr. Abba Eban—Labour (Mapai).

Defence: Maj.-Gen. Moshe Dayan—Labour (Rafi).

Finance: Mr. Pinhas Sapir—Labour (Mapai).

Agriculture: Mr. Hayim Gvati—Labour (Mapai).

Labour: Mr. Yosef Almogi—Labour (Rafi).

Justice: Mr. Yaacov S. Shapira—Labour (Mapai).

Education: Mr. Yigal Allon—Labour (Achdut Avoda).

Housing: Mr. Zeev Sharef—Labour (Mapai).

Police: Mr. Shlomo Hillel—Labour (Mapai).

Without Portfolio: Mr. Israel Galili—Labour (Achdut Avoda).

Without Portfolio: Mr. Shimon Peres—Labour (Rafi).

Commerce and Industry: Mr. Yosef Sapir—Gahal (Liberals)

Transportation: Mr. Ezer Weizman—Gahal (Herut).

Posts: Mr. Elimelech Rimalt—Gahal (Liberals).

Development: Mr. Hayim Landau—Gahal (Herut).

Without Portfolio: Mr. Menahem Begin—Gahal (Herut).

Without Portfolio: Mr. Leo Doltzin—Gahal (Liberals).

Interior: Mr. Moshe H. Shapira—N.R.P.

Social Welfare: Mr. Yosef Burg—N.R.P.

Religious: Mr. Zerah Warhaftig—N.R.P.

Tourism: Mr. Moshe Kol—Independent Liberals.

Absorption: (Held for Mapam).

Health: (Held for Mapam).

Without Portfolio: Mr. Victor Shemtov—Mapam.

Without Portfolio: Mr. Israel Barzilay—Mapam.

KOREA (North)

A. Release Of Three American Airmen: Three Americans were released on December 3, 1969 after 3½ months of captivity.

They walked back to freedom at the border village of Panmunjom.

Their helicopter had been shot down on August 17, 1969 in the western sector of the demilitarized zone. The three men were: Capt. David Crawford, Warrant Officer Vernon Loepke, and Specialist Fourth Class Herman Hofstatter.

Gen. Adams said later that he had submitted a document to the North Koreans admitting that the UN Command had committed a "criminal act" by infiltrating into North Korea. He said he had signed the apology only to secure the release of the three men for humanitarian reasons.

The Command had made a similar apology to secure the release of the 81 crewmen of the spy ship Pueblo in December, 1968.

Gen. Adams, who said the airmen bore no signs of torture, told a news conference that Specialist Hofstatter was wounded when he was shot in the right knee as the helicopter was forced down by North Korean gunfire, and still had open wounds. Capt Crawford was shot in the back near the right shoulder, and Warrant Officer Loepke was shot near the left shoulder.

A. UN Aims Re-stated: The UN General Assembly adopted on November 25, 1969 a resolution to continue the work of the UN Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (UNCURK).

It noted with approval the past work of the Commission.

The Assembly re-affirmed that the objectives of United Nations in Korea were to bring about "by peaceful means, the establishment of a unified, independent, and democratic Korea under a representative form of government, and the full restoration of international peace and security in the area."

The Assembly also noted that the Governments concerned were prepared to withdraw their remaining forces from Korea "whenever such action is requested by the Republic of Korea or whenever the conditions for a lasting settlement formulated by the General Assembly have been fulfilled".

B. North Korean Vessel Sunk: The Counter-Espionage Operations Command in Seoul announced on October 14, 1969 that the Navy had sunk a heavily armed North Korean vessel carrying about 20 "spies" off the south-western coast.

The Command said that all the "spies" aboard the craft were believed to have been killed. There were no casualties on the South Korean side. It said the boat was sunk after Navy boats and Air Force jet fighters had given it a nine-hour chase and gun-battle.

The vessel was of the 75-ton class, capable of making 40 knots an hour and armed with an 88-mm recoilless guns, two rocket launchers, two 14.5-mm anti-aircraft guns and 157.62-mm machine guns.

LAOS

A. Threat From Chinese Troops: In a Press interview made public on December 14, 1969, the Prime Minister, Prince Souvanna Phouma, disclosed the presence of Chinese troops in northern Laos.

He dismissed a claim by Thailand's Vice-Premier, Gen. Praphas Charusathien that two Chinese divisions had penetrated northern Laos. But he acknowledged that Peking had "four or five battalions with a few anti-aircraft guns" in northern Laos.

[Gen. Charusathien had expressed concern over the presence of Chinese troops in Laos, which he said "constitute a great threat for Thailand." The presence of several Chinese battalions in the north of the country had long been known and accepted in Vientiane. The Chinese were building roads along the border in pro-Communist Pathet Lao-controlled territory, in line with an old co-operation agreement between Laos and China.]

Prince Souvanna also acknowledged that small groups of North Viet-Namese troops had infiltrated through Laos into Thailand every month, but that his Government was unable to stop them.

Restriction On American Combat Troops:

Meanwhile, in Washington, the US Senate on December 15, 1959 resolved to forbid the Administration from committing American ground forces to any conflict in Laos or Thailand.

It was one of the few occasions in recent years that the Senate held a secret session presumably because its members were liable to discuss, in the course of debate, classified information having a bearing on national security.

It passed this resolution an hour before President Nixon was due to announce another major withdrawal of US combat forces from Viet-Nam. The resolution was carried by an overwhelming majority.

The extent of US involvement in Laos and Thailand was still a well-guarded secret from the American public. The Administration, for example, would only say that USA had no combat troops in Laos. Also an agreement that USA signed with Thailand was a classified document even for the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate.

By adopting the resolution, the Senate made sure that it would not repeat the Gulf of Tonkin situation when it readily accepted the Administration's version of what had happened. Later, some of its members felt they had been too gullible and had authorised the Government to take the country into a war without any searching study of facts.

LEBANON

A. New Cabinet: A new Cabinet was formed after a 10-hour marathon meeting on November 15, 1969 between the Prime Minister, Mr. Rashid Karame, President Charles Helou and the Speaker, Mr. Sabri Hamade.

The new Cabinet consists of 10 Ministers representing practically every political complex in Lebanon.

The composition of the Cabinet came about after a three-month Government crisis. Following successful Cabinet formation, Mr. Karame expressed the hope that the new team would obtain the support of all citizens in order to serve Lebanon and maintain her security and sovereignty.

Government Wins Confidence Vote:

The Government of Mr. Rashid Karame won on December 6, 1969 a vote of confidence in Parliament by 58 votes to 30.

Three deputies abstained and eight were absent.

The debate started when Mr. Karame presented a policy statement which defended the November Cairo Agreement with the Arab commando organization (see page 9296).

[The agreement had ended a seven-month crisis in the country over the extent of the commandos freedom to act from Lebanese territory and made the formation of a Government possible]

Background:

The Statesman correspondent from West Asia wrote on November 27, 1969: "The new Ministry formed by the Lebanese Premier, Mr. Rashid Karame, after a Government crisis of 225 days over the El Fatah commando issue looks more like a Cabinet re-shuffle and expansion than a regime of new orientation reflecting the impact of the 'Palestinian revolution.'

"In retrospect, it appears that neither the clash between the commandos and the security forces, nor the Cabinet crisis need have occurred. Old compromises, which governed security and ministerial arrangements, have only been renewed and weakened.

"The concessions made by the Lebanese Commander-General Emile Bustani, and the Palestinian leader, Mr. Yasser Arafat, have rendered the Cairo agreement less durable than the one that had been in force at the time of the previous crisis in April.

"Similarly, the Cabinet was the result of more temporary accommodations by the Right and Left-wing factions—a fact that could be seen from the initial failure of Mr. Karame to form a Government and the need for the appointment of a special five-man committee to select Ministers and assign portfolios.

"There are a few new faces in the Government. Most Ministers had at some time or other held the portfolios now given to them."

MALAYSIA

A. Import Duty Raised: Increases in duty on imports were announced on September 11, 1969.

They covered a wide range of consumer goods from chocolates and cocoa to cooking ranges and extended to small vessels and boats with less than 25-ton gross weight.

Increased duties were imposed on imported vegetables, meat and fruits to meet the severe competition from China which had been dumping its canned products on Malaysian markets to the detriment of local producers.

The Government also offered pioneer status or investment tax credit if a modern plant was established in the country to manufacture these products.

Among consumer items on which import duties were increased were: weighing machines and scales, wooden and steel furniture, diesel engine and certain types of motor pumps, gas-operated stoves and cooking ranges, telephone equipment and locks and padlocks.

PAKISTAN

A. Three Political Concessions—Gen. Yahya Khan's Broadcast: In a broadcast to the nation on November 28, 1969, the President and Chief Martial Law Administrator, Gen. A. M. Yahya Khan, in a major concession to critics promised General Election on a "one man, one vote" basis on October 5, 1970 and dissolution of the One-Unit West Pakistan Province.

West Pakistan—divided from East Pakistan by 1,000 miles of Indian territory—he said, would be split into four separate new provinces, in line with demands from its minority areas—Sind, Punjab, Baluchistan and North-West Frontier.

[The announcement represented fulfilment of the major demand of political leaders of the two Wings. All political groups had been demanding Elections which will usher in civilian rule after more than 11 years of military rule, first under F-M. Ayub Khan. The dissolution of the One-Unit, leading to restoration of the different provinces which hold existed at the time of the creation of Pakistan, would meet a long-standing demand of West Pakistan's different linguistic and ethnic groups. Acceptance of the principle of "one man, one vote" would give the more populous East Pakistan a larger say than at present in national affairs. The Constitution given by President Ayub Khan had imposed parity of representation between the East Wing and the less populous West Wing.]

Gen. Yahya Khan said that elections to the Provincial Assemblies would be held after the National Assembly completed its task of Constitution-making. It would be required to finish the work within 120 days of its first sitting.

The Martial Law authorities, he added, had decided to take the initiative to solve the constitutional problem because there was no consensus on it among the political parties.

Political parties would be allowed to resume their activities from January 1, 1970.

Giving the time-table for the Elections preparatory to the change-over to popular government, Gen. Yahya Khan said the provisional legal frame-work for holding the Elections would be ready by March 31, 1970. Electoral rolls would be ready by June, 1970. With the compilation of these rolls, the Election Commissioner would be engaged in delimitation of constituencies for both Central and Provincial elections.

If the Constituent Assembly was unable to complete its task within the stipulated period, it would stand dissolved, and the nation would have to elect a fresh Constituent Assembly.

Gen. Yahya Khan said that he took the initiative to evolve a legal frame-work for the Elections as other alternatives were not found feasible.

Electing a Constitutional Convention to prepare a new Constitution would mean holding another election to the National Assembly based on the Constitution. Revival of the 1956 Constitution was opposed in both Wings of the country because of certain features like the One-Unit system. A third alternative was to frame a Constitution and have a referendum in the country. This, too, had certain practical difficulties.

Gen. Yahya Khan said that his decision to scrap the One-Unit was based on the "overwhelming consensus" in West Pakistan in favour of the step.

He began his broadcast by saying that the country was in the grip of serious economic difficulties, particularly in East Pakistan where the food situation was very serious. The Government was importing food from all available sources for East Pakistan to tide over the difficulty.

On widespread corruption among Government servants, he said the Government had decided to take action against a number of officials under Martial Law Regulations.

He hoped the high-powered committee going into re-organization of the structure of the civil services would submit its recommendations shortly.

He said that three issues had to be settled before an election could be held. Besides the dissolution of the One-Unit scheme, the two other demands were elections on the basis of "one man, one vote" and greater provincial autonomy.

"One man, one vote" was a democratic principle and was unanimously demanded by people in both Wings. Therefore, he had decided that the election to the National Assembly would be held on that basis.

The people of East Pakistan felt that they did not have their full share in the decision-making process on national issues. They were fully justified in entertaining this feeling. The solution to this question would appear to be to give maximum autonomy to the two Wings without impairing national integrity and solidarity.

One of the main aspects of the relations between the Centre and the States lay in the financial and economic spheres. This matter would have to be settled in such a way as to satisfy the legitimate demands of the Provinces without affecting the vital requirements of the nation as a whole. There was no reason to think that the people of the Provinces would not be able to work this out satisfactorily.

He said that one of the most important problems which had been agitating his mind was the mode of transfer of power to people's representatives. But this aim could not be achieved without a legal frame-work which was not available to them today. It was, therefore, necessary for him, both as the President and Chief Martial Law Administrator, to take an initiative in this matter.

He said he could think of four possible alternatives whereby the legal frame-work for the holding of elections could be evolved.

One method could be to have an Elective Convention to produce a new Constitution and then dissolve itself. The main disadvantage of this would have been that it would have involved two elections—one election to the Convention and the other to the National Assembly based on the Constitution made by such a Convention. A more serious disadvantage of this procedure would have been that it would cause unnecessary delay in the transfer of power.

The next alternative was to revive the 1956 Constitution, but there was wide opposition to the adoption of such a method in both Wings of the country as certain features of the Constitution such as One-Unit and parity were no longer acceptable to the people.

The third alternative was to frame a Constitution and have a referendum on it in the country. The simple "yes" or "no" by way of answer could not possibly be given by the people to such a comprehensive document as a Constitution.

The fourth was to evolve a legal frame-work for holding elections to the National Assembly.

He said that after careful thought he had decided to adopt the fourth alternative. On constitutional issues, like parliamentary federal form of government, the adult franchise, fundamental rights of the citizens, and their enforcement by law courts, independence of the judiciary and its role as the custodian of the Constitution and the Islamic character of the Constitution, there was no disagreement. These should be considered as settled.

But, the three main issues before the nation were the question of One-Unit, the issue of "one man, one vote" and the relationship between the Centre and the federating Provinces.

On the question of One-Unit, he felt there appeared to be a genuine desire to go back to the system of separate provinces instead of retaining the present arrangements of One-Unit for the whole of West Pakistan. Accordingly, he had decided that One-Unit would be dissolved and separate provinces would come into being.

Similarly, in deference to the wishes of the people, he had accepted the principle of "One man, One vote" and this democratic principle would be the basis of election for a future National Assembly.

The requirement for the third issue was the maximum autonomy to the two Wings of Pakistan as long as it did not impair the national integrity and solidarity of the country. He felt that the people of two religions of Pakistan should have legislative powers and control over their economic resources and development so long as it did not adversely affect the working of the national Government at the Centre.

He said there was no reason why they should not be able to work out a satisfactory relationship between the Centre and the Provinces when the people of both Wings would live together as equal and honourable partners.

He also announced that full political activities would be allowed in the country from January 1, 1970. The Martial Law Regulation prohibiting such activity would be duly withdrawn. He however, pointed out that he was not prepared to tolerate any obstruction in the restoration of democracy, but political activity must conform to certain norms of behaviour. He would issue certain guidelines about this in the near future.

He concluded by saying that democracy was the guiding force during the movement of Pakistan and he sincerely wished to adhere to the democratic principles. He said he had full faith and confidence in the people and the destiny of "our country" which was created on the basis of "our ideology" and after the sacrifices of the lives of 1,000,000 Muslims.

B. Pathans' Demand For Refugees' Rehabilitation: Pathan leaders urged the Government on November 30, 1969 to rehabilitate 800,000 of their Pushtu-speaking tribesmen who had migrated to Karachi and might be pushed out as political undesirables.

Their migration had been encouraged by former President Ayub Khan who had sought to establish a strong Pathan community in Karachi to counter Karachi's notorious opposition to his autocratic rule. The tribesmen were favoured with employment in industries as taxi and pedicab (rickshaw) drivers and used to subdue the city's large refugee population. In 1964, F-M Ayub Khan's son had even led a band of Pathans on a punitive mission against the refugees of Lallakhet Colony. The refugees had voted over-whelmingly for the Opposition candidate, Miss Fatima Jinnah, in that year's Presidential election.

During the riots early in 1969, as F-M. Ayub Khan's regime began to crumble, Pathan rickshaw drivers were mobbed and their vehicles set on fire. But the fierce mountain warriors had retaliated with violent raids that saw blood spilled in the Empress Market area and the thickly populated refugee district of Lyari and Lasbella. A major bloodbath was prevented by the timely imposition of Martial Law that kept the Pathans from marching with bared knives down the city's main streets to crush all opposition to F-M. Ayub Khan.

Yet, dividing West Pakistan into four Provinces as announced on November 28, 1969, could see the 800,000 Pathans in Karachi pushed out.

Feeling vulnerable without F-M. Ayub Khan, the Pathans recently formed an All-Pakistan Pakhtoon League whose leaders had urged the Government to "take immediate steps" to rehabilitate the large number of "Pakhtoons" in the city.

C. Defence Forces' Strength: According to deduction from data disclosed in the latest issue of the annual publication, The Military Balance, 1969-70, issued by the Institute of Strategic Studies, London, Pakistan spends proportionately more on defence than India does, taking into account the area, population, gross national product or borders of the countries.

The Institute's figures revealed that Pakistan's regular armed forces represented 1.7 per cent of its estimated total of 19,270,000 men of military age (18-45). The Indian percentage was nearly half that of Pakistan.

According to the publication, the total strength of Pakistan's armed forces, based on data brought up-to-date in July, 1969, was 324,000 (including 25,000 "Azad Kashmir" troops). In addition, Pakistan had 700,000 para-military troops and 4,000 trained reservists.

The corresponding figures for the Indian armed forces were 925,000 men, a 100,000-strong para-military force and 100,000 trained reservists.

The break-up of man-power figures of the regular fighting forces of Pakistan and India were as follows: Army 300,000 and 848,000; Navy 9,000 and 20,000; Air Force 15,000 and 57,000.

On the basis of these figures, the total strength of Pakistan's armed forces, as in July, 1969, was 36.1 per cent of that of the Indian armed forces (excluding police, border guards and other para-military units in both cases).

According to the Institute, Pakistan spent 3.7 per cent of its Gross National Product (GNP) on defence in 1968, while India spent less, namely, 3.6 per cent. In terms of per capita expenditure on defence, India spent less, the figures for 1968 being five per cent for Pakistan and three per cent for India.

Pakistan increased its defence expenditure by five per cent—from $514 million in 1968 to $542 million in 1969—while India raised its arms spending by 2.6 per cent from $1,462 million to $1,491 million. The above figures were calculated by the Institute on the basis of the prevailing exchange rate of 4.8 Pakistani rupees and 7.5 Indian rupees for a US dollar.

While the publication gave detailed statistics relating to military hardware in respect of the Indian Army, specifying the number of units under each variety of arms received from foreign countries, it merely mentioned that Pakistan had four armoured (Sherman and Patton), Soviet (T-54 and T-55) and Chinese tanks and other equipment, the number of units being unspecified.

The publication also mentioned that the approximate number and cost of arms being supplied to Pakistan by the Soviet Union under two "unidentified" Agreements since July, 1968 were "not available". But it did say that 200 units of 100-mm field artillery and an unspecified number of MIG-19, MIG-21 and IL-28 aircraft besides T-54:55 medium tanks supplied to Pakistan by the Soviet Union were expected to be in service during 1969.

In addition to 9,000 men in the Navy, Pakistan had a Coast-Guard of 1,500 men.

Pakistan's fleet consisted of four submarines (including three Daphne class submarines on order from France), two large destroyers, three destroyer escorts, two anti-submarine warfare frigates, eight coastal mine-sweepers, four fast patrol boats and two small patrol boats.

The fleet was supported by naval aircraft including Albatross and "some" UH-19 helicopters for air-sea rescue.

The above data relating to the armed strength and defence expenditure had to be viewed in the light of the fact that Pakistan had less than a fifth of India's population and less than a third of its land area, a fraction of the length of coastline and international frontiers and no island possession in the Indian Ocean.

D. Alleged Attempt On Mr. Z. A. Bhutto's Life: The former Foreign Minister, Mr. Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, escaped an assassination attempt during a political tour of West Pakistan on November 28, 1969.

Mr. Bhutto was said to have been attacked by 40 men in a truck as he was driving with his associates from Sadiqabad to Multan, 120 miles south-west of Lahore. Four of his associates were hurt.

Mr. Bhutto, leader of the Leftist People's Party, was a key figure in student and Left-wing riots which brought down former President Ayub Khan in March, 1969.

He said later that his attackers belonged to a party which was exploiting the people in the name of religion. But he did not name it.

Police were reported to have arrested 23 persons for rioting and making an attempt on the life of Mr. Bhutto.

E. New Tangail District: A new district of Tangail came into being on December 1, 1969 in East Pakistan.

Tangail, a sub-division of Mymensingh district with 1,800,000 population thus became East Pakistan's 19th district. It is about 60 miles from Dacca. The new district headquarters are being built half-a-mile away from the old sub-divisional headquarters at a cost of nearly $6.3 million.

At the inaugural ceremony, the Governor, Vice-Admiral S. M. Ahsan said that the establishment of the new district demonstrated the Government's desire to bring the decision-making authority as near to the people as possible.

F. IDA Assistance: The International Development Association (IDA) on December 10, 1969 announced a credit of $800,000 to finance the foreign exchange costs of engineering services for the East Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority.

The credit will be for 10 years, including a two-year grace period. It will be interest-free, but a service charge of three-fourths of one per cent will be made to cover IDA's administrative costs.

Water development is vital to East Pakistan. For half the year the Province is subjected to heavy rainfall and floods. In the other half there is so little rainfall that about two-thirds of the cultivated land is left fallow. Although the Province is predominantly agricultural, population growth is outpacing production and food imports have been steadily increasing.

IDA has so far helped to finance three water development projects in East Pakistan with credits totalling $11.25 million. In September, 1967, the World Bank established a special group to assist East Pakistan in its agricultural and water development. The project for which engineering services will now be provided has the support of that group. It is the Dacca South-west Irrigation Project for which an initial feasibility study has already been completed and an expanded one is underway. This project will provide flood control, drainage, irrigation and internal navigation for an area of about 400,000 acres. With the use of fertilizer and improved varieties of rice, the works will make possible the tripling of rice yields in the project area.

The project is estimated to cost a total of $1,430,000. The Government of East Pakistan will finance the local currency costs of $630,000. The project will be executed by the East Pakistan Water and Power Development Authority, a semi-autonomous body charged with coordinating the development and utilization of East Pakistan's water and power resources.

SOUTH YEMEN

A. Border Oasis Overrun By Saudi Arabia: Saudi Arabia claimed on December 5, 1969 victory over South Yemen in the ten-day-old war over a tiny oil-rich border oasis.

Riyadh Radio broadcast an Army communique saying: "Saudi forces have overrun South Yemen's last defences in the embattled Wadiyeh oasis and taken up positions along the South Yemen north-eastern frontiers.

"All Saudi areas invaded by South Yemeni forces 10 days ago are now completely purged of the aggressors."

It, however, said that King Feisal had ordered his troops to "stand put along South Yemen frontiers", overriding earlier appeals by Generals to extend the conflict beyond the border.

The South Yemen Defence Ministry said on November 26, 1969 that 18 Saudi Arabian troops and officers were killed or wounded in fierce border fighting between the two countries.

It said that the South Yemeni forces suffered no casualties in the fighting around the Madieah border post along the common frontier between the two sides.

Fresh fighting had flared up when Saudi Arabia moved up heavy artillery to support its troops repulsed earlier in the day by South Yemen forces. Saudi Arabian weapons and equipment were seized in the fighting.

South Yemen's Foreign Minister, Mr. Al Salem Al-Baidh, blamed USA for the border fighting.

Aden Radio said that Mr. Al-Baidh summoned foreign diplomats to his office and told them that "American imperialism" had instigated the fighting in retaliation for South Yemen's severance of diplomatic relations with USA.

South Yemen had severed diplomatic ties with USA on October 24, 1969 in protest against alleged US hostility towards progressive Arab States.

Envoy's Statement:

In New York, the South Yemen Ambassador to UN, Mr. Hismail Saed Noaman, said on November 26, 1969 that Saudi Arabian troops had invaded his country.

Talking to correspondents, he said he had received the report from his Foreign Ministry in Aden, but did not plan to raise the matter in UN.

Mr. Noaman said that Saudi troops had crossed the northern frontier of his country and moved into the empty district of Hardamauth. The village of Wadieah was nearest to the invasion point. Several Saudi Arabian Officers and soldier had been arrested and the matter had been "urgently referred" to the Arab League in Cairo.

Saudi Arabia said on November 27, 1969 that South Yemeni troops supported by armoured cars had occupied the Saudi border post of Wadieah.

A statement by the Saudi Arabian Interior Ministry issued by the Saudi Embassy in Beirut said that South Yemeni troops took the position, on the common border between the two countries, after a heavy clash with Saudi defenders.

The fighting continued on November 27, 1969 on the harsh and desolate border region 400 miles north-east of Aden. As fighting continued around the border post at Wadeiah, South Yemen lodged an official protest with the Arab League in Cairo accusing Saudi Arabia of aggression.

Fresh fighting broke out between Saudi Arabia and South Yemen on November 28, 1969 and military spokesman said in Aden that South Yemeni troops had taken over the disputed Wadeiah border post.

On November 30, 1969, Saudi Arabian troops, supported by tanks, planes and heavy artillery, launched another attack on the South Yemeni border post of Wadeiah. The fighting was "ferocious."

On December 16, 1969 South Yemen's Armed Forces Commander, Lt.-Col Ali Abdulla Maiseri, and his Chief of Staff, Lt-Col. Mahdi Oushaish, were dismissed. Col. Maiseri was replaced by the legendary National Liberation Front member, Mr. Ali Saleh Antar.

B. Nationalization Of Foreign Firms: The Chairman of the Presidential Council, Mr. Salem Rabyee, announced in Aden on November 27, 1969 nationalization of 36 foreign firms, including four British banks.

British, French, US, Jordanian, Pakistani, Indian and South Yemeni firms involved in banking stevedoring, foreign trade, insurance and the marketing of petroleum products were affected.

The oil and lubricant marketing organizations of British Petroleum (BP), Shell, Mobil, Esso and Caltex were nationalized, although British and US investments in petroleum refineries, bunkering in Aden harbour and aviation-fuel operations were not affected. BP's $6.72 million refinery was also spared.

The eight foreign banks in the country will be formed into one "National Bank of South Yemen." Four of them are British—National and Grindlays, Chartered Bank, Eastern Bank and the British Bank of the Middle East—and the others are the Jordan-based Arab Bank, the Bank of India and the Pakistani Habib Bank.

The announcement was made over the radio by Mr. Rabyee following 13 days of meetings of the general command of the ruling National Liberation Front.

He said that shareholders and owners of the nationalized concerns would be compensated by bonds payable after 20 years at an annual interest of 2 per cent. These were the only nationalizations the Government planned, and they had to be done "once and for all."

THAILAND

A. ECAFE Plans For Iron And Steel Institute: It was officially announced by the UN Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East (ECAFE) in Bangkok on November 7, 1969 that a South-East Asia Iron and Steel Institute, designed to further the development of iron and steel industries to encourage regional co-operation and to aid in advancement of technology, would be formally inaugurated in October, 1970 to coincide with the 25th anniversary of UN.

This decision was contained in a report adopted by representatives from eight countries in the region at a meeting held in Bangkok from November 3 to 7, 1969.

Pending formal inauguration of the Institute, the ECAFE secretariat was asked to provide services for preparatory work.

Under a Constitution drawn up at the meeting, the Institute's member-nations will be Formosa, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. Supporting member-nations will be Australia and Japan.

In addition, the Institute will have various categories of membership for iron and steel enterprises, governmental bodies, associations of producers, technical societies, and individuals.

The objectives of the Institute "shall be to further the development of iron and steel industries within its member-nations and, to this end, to encourage regional co-operation between each of its member-nations and supporting member-nations."

In accordance with these objectives, the Institute may, among other activities:

(1) Provide a forum for the exchange of knowledge and discussion of problems relating to all aspects of the development of the iron and steel industries in its member-nations;

(2) Provide advisory services and carry out, commission, or promote the study of scientific, technological and economic aspects of iron and steel industry development in its member-nations;

(3) Encourage the establishment and extension of training programmes for all categories of iron and steel industry personnel employed in the member-nations of the Institute.

INDIA

A. New Chief Of Naval Staff: It was announced in New Delhi on November 15, 1969 that Vice-Admiral S. M. Nanda would be the next Chief of the Naval Staff with the rank of Admiral in succession to Admiral A. K. Chatterjee.

Vice-Admiral S. M. Nanda is now Flag Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Western Naval Command. He will take over on March 1, 1970.

[Born in 1915, Admiral Nanda joined the Royal Indian Naval Volunteer Reserve in October, 1941. Earlier, he had served with the Karachi Port Trust. Since Independence in 1947, Admiral Nanda has held important appointments both ashore and afloat. In 1948, he joined the Navy's first cruiser Delhi in UK as her First Lieutenant. On his return to India, he served as Director of Personnel at Naval HQ for two years. Later, he commanded the destroyer Ranjit as also the frigate squadron. Posted back to Naval HQ, he became Chief of Personnel and was promoted Commodore. In 1957, he commissioned the cruiser Mysore. Subsequently, he was appointed Director-General, Naval Dockyard Expansion Scheme. He was awarded the Ati Vishisht Seva Medal in 1961. Thereafter, he underwent a course at the Imperial Defence College, London, returning to Naval HQ as Chief of Material. He became Deputy Chief of the Naval Staff in May, 1962 in the rank of Rear-Admiral. He was appointed Managing Director of the Mazagon Docks, Ltd., in December, 1964 and was responsible for giving the Mazagon Docks re-organization scheme and the Leander-class frigate project a good start. He was awarded the Param Vishisht Seva Medal for "distinguished service of a very high order" in 1966. In June, 1966, he took over as Flag Officer Commanding the Indian Fleet and came ashore in February, 1968 as Flag Officer, Bombay. On March 1, 1968, with the re-organization of the naval commands, he was re-designated Flag Officer Commanding-in-Chief, Western Naval Command, and promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral].

IRAN

A. Earthquake: What was described as one of history's strongest earthquakes rocked many towns and villages in the southern part of Iran on November 7, 1969.

The Tehran University Geophysics Institute said that "one of history's strongest earthquakes" occurred along a line between the northern corner of the Black Sea, bordering Turkey and Russia, extending towards Tehran and south-eastwards to Zahedan, Baluchistan and the Gulf of Oman.

The quake was recorded more than 1,500 km from Tehran. It caused no damage or casualties, according to a Government announcement broadcast over Tehran Radio.

IRAQ

A. Presidential System Of Government Introduced: A constitutional amendment on November 10, 1969 introduced a presidential system in Iraq, abolishing the post of Premier and delegating his powers to the President.

The new amendment gave President Ahmed Hassan el Bakr absolute powers. It made him the chief executive, Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces and head of the National Council of the Revolution Command (NCRC) with full powers to appoint and dismiss Ministers.

The NCRC, however, retained legislative powers. It will also elect the President.

Revolution Council Expanded: That the 16-month-old Baathist regime had abandoned all efforts to revive the legislative apparatus in the country was indicated by the "constitutional amendments" formalizing a Presidential form of government which pack the expanded Revolution Command Council with civilian Baathist leaders. (Iraq has not had a regular Parliament since 1958.)

The Baathists came to power in mid-July, 1968 with the help of non-Baathist "young turks" from the Army, but eliminated them by the end of the month. The Baathists then tried unsuccessfully to woo Opposition leaders, especially the Communists. When they failed, they launched a terror campaign in which Communists were suppressed and other Opposition leaders jailed or hanged on charges of corruption and espionage. Fifty-four men were sent to the gallows this year.

Under the new form of Government, Gen. Hassan Al Bakr, who had been both President and Premier, was called simply President, Nothing was said about the new designations of Gen. Saleh Mahdy Ammash and Gen. Hardan Takriti, who had been Vice-Premiers.

The Revolution Council had five members—all from the military wing of the Baath—including Gen. Bakr and Gen. Ammash who were also members of the Regional Command of the Baath. The Council's strength had now been increased to 15. Of the 10 new members, nine were from the Baath regional command and one from the Pan-Arab Command.

Two features of this change were: Gen. Ammash, who had been Vice-President of the Council, was now superseded by a civilian, Mr. Saddam Al Takriti, Assistant Secretary-General of the party. Secondly, there was a preponderance of civilians in the new Council.

B. Eight More Persons Convicted Of Spying: It was disclosed on November 20, 1969 that eight more Iraqis, one of them a Jew, had been secretly executed in Baghdad after being convicted of spying for Israel.

A released prisoner, who was not identified for fear of reprisals against his family, also reported that the former Prime Minister, Mr. Abdul Rahman Bazzaz, had been jailed for 30 years on two charges of plotting to overthrow Iraq's Leftist regime.

ISRAEL

A. West Asia Fighting: Arab guerrillas threw a grenade at the headquarters of the Israeli Military Governor of the occupied west bank in east Jerusalem on November 1, 1969 as Israelis rounded up dozens of Arabs in anticipation of Balfour Day demonstrations throughout the west bank of Jordan.

Israeli forces killed 11 Arab guerrillas on the west bank of the Jordan River as fighting flared up along the Suez Canal on November 1.

In Amman, a Jordanian military spokesman reported a clash on November 1 with "the enemy", during which Jordanian forces were fired on with automatic weapons, mortars and tanks.

Israeli jets struck at UAR military targets in the southern sector of the Suez Canal in a 30-minute daylight raid on November 5. The air strike blasted the same area where earlier a party of UAR raiders had crossed the Canal and ambushed an Israeli patrol, killing two soldiers and wounding two others. A fifth soldier was reported missing, believed captured. All Israeli aircraft returned safely to base.

Next day (November 5), UAR raiders crossed the Suez Canal for the second time in two days and attacked an Israeli Army convoy across from Port Suez. One wounded UAR soldier was taken prisoner. There were no Israeli casualties or damage to the convoy. Cairo claimed that its anti-aircraft batteries shot down an Israeli aircraft over the Suez Canal.

On November 6, Israeli aircraft attacked El Fatah guerrilla bases in the Arab al Mazra area of Jordan. The raid lasted 15 minutes and followed shelling by Jordanian positions.

On November 7, Israeli jets blasted targets on two fronts, shooting at Arab guerrillas over the Jordan River and attacking UAR artillery positions across the Gulf of Suez. Earlier in the day, Israeli planes attacked Jordan-based guerrillas.

On November 8, UAR naval units bombarded Israeli targets north of Sinai. It was believed this was the first time UAR naval units had taken part in military operations since the six-day war in June, 1967.

Israeli aircraft went into action on November 8 against five UAR ships shelling the western part of El Qantara to El Arish Road in northern Sinai, about 20 km east of the Suez Canal.

A Cairo military spokesman said that the shelling, by two destroyers and three smaller ships, lasted for 30 minutes, but caused no casualties or damage.

A UAR military spokesman said that two Israeli war planes were shot down by UAR jets during an aerial fight over the Suez Canal on November 11.

The announcement, broadcast by Cairo Radio, said: "Tweleve Israeli planes attempted to violate UAR air-space south of the Suez, but were immediately intercepted by our war-planes." It added that one Israeli plane plunged into the Gulf, while another fell earthwards in flames. One UAR jet was lost during the fight.

On November 13, Israeli aircraft bombed Jordanian positions which had opened up with bazooka and automatic weapons on an Israeli patrol.

The Palestinian armed struggle command said on November 15 that El Fatah commandos had blown up a pipeline complex in Israel carrying oil from Haifa to a storage tank.

El Fatah snipers also killed three Israeli soldiers in the northern Jordan valley. They also blew up water pipelines east of El Arish in the Gaza Strip. They scored direct hits in a rocket attack on All Metulla in northern Israel.

A UAR military spokesman said in Cairo that UAR frogmen had carried out raids on Israeli ships in Eilat, at the head of the Gulf of Aqaba on November 16.

The spokesman said in a communique that the attack was carried out by special naval units who were first landed in an aircraft just outside the Red Sea port. They planted explosives on three Israeli vessels anchored in the port. The three ships sank. The raid was carried out at dawn and was in retaliation for recent Israeli attacks on UAR positions along the Suez Gulf from the port of Eilat.

An Israeli military spokesman in Tel Aviv declined to comment on the Cairo claim that the attack was carried out by frogmen from the UAR Naval Air Service.

Artillery clashes across the Jordan, also on November 16, flared to a scale they had not reached for months, with five exchanges of fire between Israel and Jordan in less than 24 hours.

An Amman spokesman said that two Jordanian civilians were killed and six wounded on November 16 in a raid by two Israeli jet fighter planes on a highway at Shouneh, in the north Jordanian valley. He said that Israeli forces shelled Shouneh and Baquorah, also in the northern valley. Jordanian forces returned the fire and the artillery duel continued for five minutes.

The raid followed a mortar barrage on Israeli military positions in the Ashdod-Yaacov area earlier on November 16. The mortars caused no casualties.

The stepped-up tempo of the artillery duels came as underwater explosions were reported to have slightly damaged two Israeli ships in Eilat, only six miles west of the Jordanian port of Aqaba.

According to Israeli military sources, Arab saboteurs blasted five holes under the waterline of two Israeli ships anchored in the Red Sea port. The first explosion ripped a hole in the hull of the Hey Daroma, a 1,800-ton converted Scottish steamer, which plies passengers between Eilat and Sharm El Sheik at the southern tip of the occupied Sinai desert. The second charge, five minutes later, punctured the freighter Dalia, a 13,700-ton vessel of the Israeli merchant marine. The ship was scheduled to leave for the Far East with a cargo of phosphates.

On November 22, about 60 UAR commandos, under cover of a heavy artillery barrage, crossed the Canal and stormed an Israeli tank base at el-Ballah.

In Tel Aviv, an Israeli Army spokesman said that Israeli jets carried out the fiercest-ever night raid along a 70-mile stretch of the western bank of the Suez Canal on November 22.

On November 23, Cairo said, that a UAR Army unit crossed the northern sector of the Suez Canal for the second consecutive day and attacked an Israeli tank, killing its men.

On November 24, UAR planes attacked Israeli positions along the Suez Canal.

Tel Aviv said: "A number of Egyptian planes attacked between El Qantara and Balusa in the northern Canal sector and wounded one Israeli civilian in a strafing run at a quarry."

Gen. M. Dayan On Punitive Operations:

The Defence Minister, Gen. Moshe Dayan, told a news conference in Tel Aviv on November 13, 1969 that "neighbourhood punishment", not collective punishment, was the "Government's latest answer to Arab terror."

Hitherto, the Israelis had blown up Arab houses only after arms of terrorists had been found in them. But now, under the new policy, the neighbours were being held responsible for terrorist activities.

Gen. Dayan, who previously had prohibited the disclosure of figures for punitive demolitions ordered by the military Government, said that 140 houses had been blown up since April 1 in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. He added that demolitions were not the only punishment. Curfews were being imposed, transport permits for journeys across the Jordan River bridges suspended and entrances to shops bricked up.

He said that in material matters, there had never been greater normality in the occupied areas, but emotionally the Arabs felt more respect for the terrorists and co-operated with them. They wanted their schools to function, they wanted jobs in Israel and freedom to cross the bridges to Jordan, yet at the same time they expected Israel to tolerate terrorists in their midst.

He said that Israel would not allow the continuation of a situation such as existed in Jordan or Lebanon. The Arabs would have to choose between terrorism and normality. Any town or village that did not want terrorists had it in its power to eject them. He also noted that 20,000 Arabs who worked in Israel were not deterred by terrorist bombs at labour exchanges and attacks on buses taking them to their jobs.

He derided Press reports that the Egyptian naval shelling of the Mediterranean coast indicated improved tactics. He assured that the Egyptians could not venture farther north to attack settled parts of Israel as this would mean their sailing for five or six hours back to the protection of their base, in which case they might be caught by daybreak.

Casualties:

Gen. Dayan said that since April 1, 1969, Egypt had carried out 13 air attacks and 15 troop landings, apart from naval bombardment. Israel had lost 49 dead and injured in these attacks, while the Egyptians had sustained 300 casualties.

In 65 Israeli air raids and an undisclosed number of troop landings, the Egyptians had suffered approximately 1,000 casualties and Israel 20.

He claimed that the Israeli forces on the Suez Canal had clearly won the last round. The next phase would open in the Spring of 1970, but would not necessarily be an all-out war. The Arabs planned to renew the war and were building up militarily for that purpose. Egypt, Jordan, Syria and Iraq had 50 per cent more tanks and 60 per cent more aircraft than they had had on the eve of the six-day war in 1967, and they would probably get more before the next war. However, Israel was also growing stronger and the balance of forces was as much in Israel's favour now as it had been in the six-day war.

Warning To UAR:

The Defence Minister, Gen. Moshe Dayan warned Egypt on November 7, 1969 that raids and incursions across the Suez Canal would cost her a heavy toll in casualties.

Replying to questions at an interview, he said raids such as those in the past few days by Egyptian troops made no difference to Israel's firm hold along the waterway. The Israeli Army was working on plans to foil such raids and heavy losses would bring them to an end.

The demolition of houses in Israeli-held areas, he added, was the most effective deterrent to collaboration between the population and saboteurs. "We demand from the population (in the occupied areas) only a minimum of non-co-operation with the terrorists."

B. President G. A. Nasser On West Asian Situation: Addressing the Egyptian National Assembly in Cairo on November 5, 1969, President G. A. Nasser said it appeared that the only "solution" for UAR in the West Asia crisis was "armed struggle."

He added: "We asked for a political solution and an attempt was made to impose capitulation upon us. We will never give up an inch of the occupied territory.

"There is no way out of the current crisis but the way to the liberation of all the occupied territories —and principally Arab Jerusalem, the west bank of the Jordan and the Golan Heights.

"All efforts made towards a peaceful settlement of the problem have been shown to be in vain. Now we must take up the way of force across a sea of blood and through fire."

The 40-minute speech was his first since July 23, 1969 and the period he was to review was packed with developments and rumours which he usually tackled at length as for example — with rumours about his health and about Mr. Ali Sabry, the El Aqsa Mosque blaze and the Rabat Conference, the furore about US citizenship laws permitting American Jews to work in the Israeli armed forces, the stepped-up raids against Israeli positions in Libya and notices to Americans and the British to terminate their bases there.

President Nasser touched briefly on some of these and some he omitted altogether.

He disclosed that Egypt now had a defence allocation of half-a-billion pounds (Egyptian) and half-a-million men under arms. In referring to stepped-up activities against Israel in Sinai, he chose to let the communiques of the past three months speak for themselves. They spoke plenty. Egypt claimed to have shot down 40 Israeli planes (since he spoke last) and mounted a score of commando and amphibious raids on Israeli-held positions in Sinai.

He described USA as an enemy of Egypt, but limited his attack to distinguishing between Soviet experts who advised the Egyptian Army and American experts who bore arms for Israel.

On the Lebanese crisis, he said that no Arab country should or could suppress Palestinian resistance, which would go on until the Palestinian homeland was restored. Friend and foe would be determined by his attitude to the commandos.

He repeated the call for holding an Arab summit after the deliberations of the Arab League Joint Defence Council on November 6, 1969 (see below).

[The Council was originally called to discuss the El Aqsa Mosque fire but the Rabat Conference, which also dealt with it, showed divergences in Arab view-points. When some Arab leaders called for an Arab League meeting to discuss Lebanon, the differing attitudes of various countries were brought to the fore again.]

President Nasser reserved his comments to a description of the Libyan Revolution. He was known to have told many private visitors in the past few weeks how encouraged he felt by the revolution.

A major portion of his speech was an exhortation to his people to strengthen the internal front through greater work and sacrifices.

Israeli Reaction:

All Israeli newspapers concluded from President Nasser's speech that another war was inevitable.

Most of them added that it was therefore necessary to confront the Egyptian people with the following choice: "Either fight another war you cannot win, or give State power to men prepared to make peace."

The newspaper Davar, which usually reflects the position of the Israeli Government, said that President Nasser had embarked upon "the path of no return." He had given his full backing to the Palestinian guerrillas, who aimed at "the destruction of Israel."

The Jerusalem Post which backs the hard-line positions of Gen. Moshe Dayan, the Defence Minister, said: "It seems that for Nasser war is inevitable, not because it is the only solution, but because it is the only solution which can maintain Nasser in power."

Mr. Yigal Allon, the Deputy Prime Minister, described President Nasser as "a desperate man who has lost hope in himself and in his people." Speaking at a Labour Party rally in Nazareth, he urged the Egyptians to join the Israelis in seeking a political solution of the West Asian problem through direct negotiations.

He said President Nasser—"who is leading his people towards social emancipation"—should not pin his hopes on a solution through outside Powers. "I must stress that Israel is aiming at peace. We do not seek military victory."

He added: "In spite of the pugnacious words of the Egyptian President, I am convinced that conditions for a situation favourable to peace are emerging." He did not elaborate.

US Reaction:

The US Secretary of State, Mr. William Rogers, said in a statement in Washington on November 7, 1969 that President Nasser's call for war was a set-back to efforts to find a peaceful solution in West Asia in accordance with the Security Council resolution of November, 1967.

He said that President Nasser's allegations against USA, including charges of US involvement in Israeli military action against UAR, "are, of course, false". "USA is genuinely interested in contributing to a just and lasting peace in West Asia."

C. Arab Defence Council Meeting: The Arab Joint Defence Council, which met in Cairo from November 8 to 10, 1969, endorsed UAR's stand as expressed by President Nasser that "there is no possibility at present of a peaceful solution to the Middle East crisis."

The Council also accepted President Nasser's call for holding an emergency Arab Summit Conference. It decided that an Arab Summit Conference be held in Rabat from December 20 to 22, 1969.

The Council adopted several resolutions. It agreed that in assessing the general situation a peaceful solution was impossible and had reached a deadlock. "It is impossible for the Arab lands (occupied by Israel) to be liberated peacefully as a result of Israel's stubbornness and material, political and military support it receives from the US and other imperialist Powers."

Having drawn this conclusion, it added: "We should put into effect what we had already decided upon, namely, that our path is the path of mobilization, force, and preparation for organized and serious material action in which each of us bears full and definite responsibility."

The Council recommended that an Arab Summit Conference be held in Rabat within the frame-work of the Arab League. It also expressed an essential need of the moment, the need to organize the Arab struggle from the top downwards for the new phase of the fight for their rights, a fight which must inevitably ensure in the circumstances of all-out US support for Israel.

Thirdly, the Council supported UAR's pledge of help to the Palestinian resistance forces. The Council decided to help the Palestinians with all means available to the Arab nation.

D. Decree To UAR National Assembly: A draft decree to the UAR National Assembly characterized President Nasser's speech as a national document.

His speech, the decree said, "defines for the Arab struggle its only way to safeguard honour and freedom. It reveals to the Arab nation that the USA, in standing by Israel, adopts the attitude of an enemy towards the Arabs."

The National Assembly, the decree added, "expresses its faith that the speech from the leader to his men will act as a guide for its work and an incentive to further sacrifice, effort, sweat and blood."

To follow up President Nasser's speech, Citizens' War Committees were formed in all the Governorates "to organize State efforts so that there will be full co-ordination of work between the people, the executive authorities and all fields of production."

E. US Citizens Serving In Israeli Army—American Note Rejected By UAR: The newspaper, Al Ahram, reported on November 13, 1969 that the UAR Government had rejected an American Note explaining the US attitude towards Americans serving in the Israeli Army (see page 9277).

It said the Note had merely reconfirmed the presence of American nationals in the Israeli armed forces. Egypt categorically rejected the argument that United States law allowed American citizens to enlist in the armies of another State, and insisted that international law should rule in this case.

JAPAN

A. LDP Favours Continuance Of Security Treaty With USA: The ruling Liberal-Democratic Party's (LDP) Executive Board, at its meeting held in the third week of October, 1969 in Tokyo, decided in favour of automatic continuation of the Security Treaty with USA.

It meant that the Government would follow a policy which called for continuation of the Treaty for a "fairly long period of time" after the Treaty's initial 10-year term expires on June 23, 1970.

Observers said that continuation of the Security Treaty was a precondition for Okinawa's restoration to Japanese rule.

The Party decision thus further cleared the way towards an agreement on Okinawa's return to Japan between the Prime Minister, Mr. Eisaku Sato and President Richard M. Nixon when they met in Washington in November.

In making the decision, LDP said the Treaty had a significant role in protecting the nation's security and peace.

The Board said the Treaty had greatly contributed to the growth of the nation's economy and had helped raise the nation's standard of living. "While the United Nations is unable to adequately assume its peace-keeping functions, it is necessary to maintain the Security Treaty for a fairly long period of time."

Concerning the Japan-US negotiations over the reversion of Okinawa, the LDP Board agreed to refrain from making any decision on its stand so as to give a diplomatic "free hand" to Mr. Sato in his "summit talks" with Mr. Nixon.

Opposition Criticism:

The Opposition Japan Socialist Party termed the Government party decision to automatically continue the Japan-US Security Treaty beyond 1970 as "an abuse of powers infringing on democracy."

In an appeal to the nation, JSP terms the decision as a step towards militarism and imperialism aimed at making Japan "the policeman of Asia."

The appeal said that Mr. Sato's advocacy of a "major role in Asia" for Japan was dangerous as it indicated a sinister design violating the war-renouncing Constitution.

It called on the nation to rise up and protest against the LDP decision, demand dissolution of the Diet and stop Mr. Sato's visit to Washington in November.

B. Defence Build-up Plan: The Defence Agency recently started drafting its five-year programme, to begin in fiscal 1972, at the initiative of its Director-General, Mr. Kiichi Arita.

The new build-up plan was expected to call for a big improvement in the equipment and capability of the Self-Defence Forces (SDF) and this in turn was expected to lead to a major political discussion on the limits of "self-defence" allowable under the Constitution.

Limitations on Japan's defence build-up were discussed during the drafting of the second and third defence build-up programmes in connexion with the war-renouncing Article 9 of the Constitution.

Observers, however, anticipate that in the new build-up plan the modernization of defence equipment involved would make it hard to differentiate between offensive and defensive weapons in many cases.

The Government had said in the past that Japan would not possess offensive weaponry, including ICBMs and IRBMs.

As far as bombers were concerned, Government officials had explained in March, 1964 that this country would not possess bombers designed for long-range operations. But in March, 1967 the then Defence Agency Director-General had told the Diet that Japan could have strategic bombers if their operational range was short.

According to observers, the Government's policy of restricting the SDF to defensive weapons was likely to be altered "decisively in the course of the fourth defence build-up programme."

These observers predicted that the Government would eventually define SDF equipment as either defensive or offensive in accordance with purposes and circumstances.

The Agency plans to complete its draft of the new defence build-up programme around the middle of 1970 with emphasis placed on the following improvements:

(1) Strengthening of the defence capabilities of the Maritime Self-Defence Force;

(2) Strengthening of the air defence set-up; and

(3) Improvements in the nation's ability to cope with a hypothetical invasion.

Construction of high-performance submarines and helicopter-carriers was likely to be envisaged in the new programme.

The programme has touched off a big controversy over the constitutional question of to what extent Japan is allowed to build up her defence capability and exercise the right of self-defence.

C. Merger Of Steel Firms Approved: The official Fair Trade Commission (FTC) announced in Tokyo on October 29, 1969 formal approval of a merger of two of Japan's to steelmakers to ofrm the world's second biggest combine.

The Commission's decision included 24 steps to make the merger compatible with anti-monopoly legislation, and involve the breaking up of the firms' market control in foundry pig-iron, sheet piling, railroad rails and tin plate.

Under the agreement, FTC accepted the company-proposed setting up of a watchdog committee, which will give the Commission the role of overseer during initial stages of the merger.

The proposal for merger of Yawata and Fuji Iron and steel companies had touched of a legal battle over whether the combination would violate anti-monopoly legislation.

The two companies announced that their new combine would be called Nippon Steel Corp. instead of New Japan Steel Corp. as previously decided. Its annual gross sales were expected to exceed $2.5 billion.

The merger re-united the two companies just 20 years after Gen. Douglas MacArthur had ordered the break-up of the quasi-Governmental, pre-War Japan Iron and Steel Co.

[The merger agreement, signed in March, ran into FTC opposition on the eve of its planned June 1 consummation. The FTC subsequently turned down several Yawata-Fuji formulae for removing the threat of monopolies in various sectors of the industry, involving the sale of plants and holdings in related companies. FTC held that it had no "convincing guarantees" that the divestitures would be carried out.

The prosecution also demanded death for three other members of the alleged ring and gaol terms of from three to 15 years for the rest.

No-Su Pak, who was said to have been up at Cambridge under another name, was accused of having visited Pyongyang, in North Korea, twice and East Berlin 14 times between 1964 and 1968 while studying in Britain.

MALAYSIA

A. New Banking Regulations: A Government statement issued on October 16, 1969 announced that the National Operations Council had approved the Essential (Protection of Banking Companies) Regulations, 1969.

The Regulations seek to enable the Government "to declare any domestic bank a protected bank if the Government is satisfied that such action is necessary in the public interest and in particular the interest of depositors and shareholders of the bank concerned."

The main effect of a declaration is that the existing directors of the bank concerned will be replaced by directors appointed by the Director of Operations. The new directors will be responsible to the Director of Operations for the proper management and operations of the protected bank.

The statement said: "A bank is unlike any other business organization in that the directors can have access to not only the funds of its shareholders but very often the funds of its depositors which are many times greater than the share capital. Bank directors can, therefore, put themselves in a position to gamble with the people's money and their responsibility to the public is greater than their responsibility to the shareholders."

The Regulations also enable the Government to acquire any portion or the whole of the shares of the protected bank if the Government considers it would be expedient in the public interest to do so.

There is also provision for the Director of Operations to revoke the declaration of protection at any time if he is satisfied that it is no longer necessary or desirable for the bank to remain protected.

The Regulations apply to banks incorporated in Malaysia only. These will be used only when it is considered absolutely necessary in order to protect a bank and to ensure its efficient management and operations in the interest of the depositors and the shareholders as well as in the public interest.

It should be pointed out that the banking system in Malaysia is in a very healthy state and highly liquid. The Regulations are precautionary measures to be used in case of absolute necessity. When a bank is declared a protected bank, it is not the intention to regard the protected status as being permanent, but such status will be removed as soon as the protection is no longer necessary.

NEPAL

A. Airport Expansion Scheme: In an effort to modernize the country's civil aviation, Nepal has drawn up a scheme for extension of runways of airports and building new ones at a cost of about Rs. 13 crores. It has asked the Asian Development Bank to provide Rs. 6 crores.

According to the scheme, drawn up by the Civil Aviation Department, the runway at Khatmandu's Tribhuvan airport is to be lengthened from 6,600 feet to 10,000 feet, enabling it to receive big jets. At present Caravelles of Thai International land three times a week using a rear-mounted parachute as brake.

Plans have also been made to lengthen the airfield at Biratnagar and Bhairahawa and to build a new airport at Pokhara with a 5,000-feet-long runway.

Because of the hilly nature of Nepal and lack of adequate roads, air travel is most convenient and in fact the only means of travel in various parts of the country.

The State-owned Royal Nepal Airlines (RNA) which operates air esrvices from Khatmandu to many places in the country, has only Dakotas in its fleet. A single Fokker Friendship aircraft operates its services to India and Pakistan. The RNA will soon have two Avros to replace the Dakotas on certain routes.

PAKISTAN

A. Bulgarian Economic Mission –Agreement Signed: A high-powered Bulgarian Economic Mission led by Mr. Lachazar Avromov, Deputy Premier and Minister for Foreign Trade, visited Pakistan from October 20 to 23, 1969.

During their visit, Mr. Avromov and members of his mission had wide-ranging discussions on economic co-operation with Pakistan Ministers and officials.

During his visit, Mr. Avramov also called on the President, Gen. A. M. Yahya Khan, on October 21 and conveyed to him an invitation to visit Bulgaria. The invitation, which was accepted by President Yahya Khan, had been sent by the Bulgarian President. During the meeting, matters of interest to Pakistan and Bulgaria were also discussed.

On October 21, 1969 an Agreement was signed in Islamabad by Mr. Avromov and the Deputy Chairman of the Planning Commission, Mr. M. M. Ahmad, on behalf of their Governments under which Pakistan would get the first Bulgarian credit of $8 million, which Pakistan would utilize for importing various types of plants and equipments.

The Agreement, which came into force with immediate effect, provided that the entire repayment of the credit, including the down payment, would be made by Pakistan in the form of goods.

Air Services Agreement:

An Air Services Agreement was also signed on October 22, 1969 between Pakistan and Bulgaria which will enable Pakistan International Airlines and Bulgarian Airlines to fly between Sofia and Karachi on routes agreed upon by both sides.

B. Martial Law To Stay Till End Of 1970: Addressing newsmen in Lahore on November 16, 1969, the Law Minister, Mr. A. R. Cornelius, ruled out the possibility of scrapping Martial Law in the country till the end of 1970.

He said that elections could not be held till basic issues like the future of the one-unit system and the question of autonomy were settled.

Pointing out that consensus did not exist among politicians, he said the military regime did not propose to make further efforts to reach an understanding with various political leaders on such issues.

He said Gen Yahya Khan might himself come up with a solution, but that would not be before the middle of 1970. By that time, the President was expected to finalize the frame-work of a new Constitution on which he was working.

C. Disturbances In East Pakistan: Since October 15, 1969, violent disturbances have taken place throughout East Pakistan.

Fresh cases of looting, arson and stabbing were reported on November 2, 1969 in the troubled area of Mirpur only an hour after the 11-hour curfew, imposed in Dacca and Narayanganj following clashes between local people and refugees, was lifted.

At least one person was feared dead in a stabbing incident, raising the death roll to seven with over 100, including 40 policemen, injured.

Air Marshal Asghar Khan, leader of the Pakistan Democratic Party, described the situation in Dacca after the riots as "very bad"

As he toured the riot-affected areas where Urdu-speaking and Bengali-speaking Pakistanis clashed, Air Marshal Asghar Khan was attacked twice by armed mobs. He was saved by his followers, who were unable to prevent a number of other people from being beaten.

The trouble began when non-Bengalis demanded that forms for enrolment of voters should be printed in Urdu also. A similar demand had been made by the East Pakistan Awami League leader, Sheikh Mujibur Rehman recently.

In a series of incidents in the third week of October, 1969, striking workers had set fire to a weaving loom in one of Karachi's textile mills, destroying raw materials in another plant. About 60,000 workers from 25 textile mills in East Pakistan staged a walk-out.

In a statement, the Government said that "a wave of resentment is spreading among silk mill workers due to the anti-labour policy of the management." It said it might be compelled to take "drastic steps" to force management to implement the wage agreement reached on August 11 under the supervision of the Martial Law authorities.

The newspaper Daily News quoted informed sources as saying that certain "political groups and interested parties" were trying to destroy peace and harmony in the country.

East Pakistan's pro-Peking National Awami Party was so far the only major political organization backing the workers.

Demand For Sindhi As National Language:

Meanwhile, a demand has jointly been made by various political and literary organizations of Sind to make Sindhi one of the national languages of Pakistan.

In a resolution passed at a largely attended conference of Sindhi writers and intellectuals held in Nawab Shah, it was regretted that Sindhi had been neglected for 22 years.

The writers demanded national language status for Sindhi at least in West Pakistan, along with Urdu, with its use as a medium of instruction up to post-graduation and as the language of administration in all areas of the former Sind province.

The movement was led by the well-known Sindhi leader, Mr. G. M. Syed, and has wide support including that of Mr. M. A. Khuro and Kazi Fazlullah, former Chief Ministers of Sind and Mr. Z. A. Bhutto, former Foreign Minister.

Among political parties, the National Awami Party and the People's Party on the Left and the ultra-Rightist Jamaat-e-Islami support it.

Incidents In East Pakistan:

On November 3, 1969, scattered clashes erupted in Dacca after weekend riots over language differences.

Seven people were killed and at least 120, including 40 policemen, were hospitalized during the riots. A group of politicians who wanted to tour troubled parts of the crowded city of 600,000 were barred from the Mohammedpur area by police and troops.

According to a Government statement, 300 people had been arrested following violence. A dusk-to-dawn curfew was re-imposed in Dacca for the third consecutive day.

Earlier, the East Pakistan authorities had lifted the restrictions on the movement of people and vehicles on the streets of Dacca and Narayanagunj. But the Martial Law order in this connexion was again revoked.

D. Shias Form Political Party: The Shia community has decided to form a political party under the banner of the Pakistan Shia League.

The Lahore daily, Nawa-e-Waqt, quoted Shia leaders, Syed Mohammed Jaifari and Mr. Mohammed Alam Zaidi, as saying that the Sunni majority had deprived the Shias of their "lawful rights in the Services, role in political life and a proper share in the income from religious places".

In a statement, they contended that the Shias were the most persecuted minority in Pakistan. They were discriminated against on the occasion of Moharram. On the plea of hurting the feelings of the Sunnis, they were not allowed to take out tazia processions in many cities.

The Shia League demanded that Pakistan's future Constitution should provide for at least 15 per cent of seats in the National Assembly for the Shias. A separate trust board should be set up to look after Shias' interests in the grant of educational scholarships.

The League alleged official interference in the management of funds of Shia religious endowments.

It appealed to Shia leaders such as the former Foreign Minister and Chairman of the People's Action Party, Mr. Z. A. Bhutto to support its demands. Some Shia leaders, including Syed Mahmud Hassan Zaidi, Mr. Aga Altaf Khan and Syed Mazhar Ali, had threatened to go on fast to press their demands. President Yahya Khan also belongs to the Shia community.

G. High Court Ruling On Limitations Of Martial Law: A recent judgment by the High Court of West Pakistan, which questioned the right of the Martial Law administration to whittle down or curb the powers of a civilian judiciary, has been hailed by lawyers as a landmark in the country's judicial history and "a judgment of which every Pakistani will feel proud."

The momentous judgment received little or no publicity since it was delivered by a three-man Bench of the High Court in Lahore in June.

The ruling revolved around the Administration's attempts to transfer a corruption case from the civil courts to the special military tribunal which was established when Martial Law was imposed in Pakistan in March.

The accused, Mr. Malik Mir Hassan, a local businessman, who had earlier appealed to a civil court against charges laid by the Pakistan Capital Development Authority, had petitioned the High Court in May this year when his case was transferred to a military tribunal.

After a lengthy judgment, Mr. Justice Bashir-ud-Din Ahmad and his two colleagues returned the case to a civilian court and pointed out that Martial Law regulations which barred civilian courts from questioning the proceedings or verdicts of military tribunals could not curb the powers of the judiciary under the normal concept of the rule of law.

In essence, the judgment pointed out that the individual must always have the right of appeal, in spite of arbitrary and emergency regulations.

Opposing the petition, the State argued that Martial Law regulations specifically prevented the civil courts from interfering in cases brought before a military tribunal.

Mr. Justice Ahmed and Mr. Justice Shaukat Ali ruled that the specific clause contradicted another clause in the Martial Law regulation and the "Provisional" Constitution, which was promulgated by the Administration in March. The judges pointed out that the Administration had declared at the moment of Martial Law that Pakistan would be governed "as near as may be" in accordance with the previous Constitution, provided this did not contradict Martial Law regulations. "We have no cavil with the proposition of law that no Martial Law regulation can, or order could, be challenged in this court, but it must be remembered that there is nothing in the Provisional Constitution order or Martial Law regulations which bars the superior courts of this country from interpreting the Martial Law regulations."

They further added: "No one, including the Chief Martial Law Administrator, can transcend or deviate from the sole purpose of restoring law and order and democracy and it needs no gainsaying that the curbing of the jurisdiction of the established judiciary is not a step in that direction and it is for this reason that the Chief Martial Law Administrator never made any secret of that fact."

All three judges reminded the State that the purpose of Martial Law was to quell riots and disturbances and the Administration had no right to encroach on cases outside the scope of these subjects. Under these observations, the power to transfer civil cases to special military courts was beyond the jurisdiction of the Administration and ordered the Government to send the specific case back to a civilian court.

SYRIA

A. Re-opening Of Border With Lebanon: Syria re-opened its border with Lebanon on November 13, 1969 but gave warning that more drastic measures would be taken if the agreement signed in Cairo by Lebanon and the Palestine Liberation Organization (see page 9296) was not enforced satisfactorily.

Syria had closed the border on October 21 after clashes between Palestinian commandos and Lebanese security forces in southern Lebanon.

The latest decision was welcomed in Beirut where a spokesman called it "a natural step between Arab brothers" which "shows the spirit of brotherhood, friendship and co-operation between Syria and Lebanon."

The Syrian statement said that the closure of the border with Lebanon, together with other measures which the Syrian Government had intended to take, had been aimed at asserting the legitimacy of the Palestinian struggle and its right to set out from Arab territory. It was meant to underline "the seriousness of subjecting the resistance to any obstruction or delay in carrying out its sacred tasks".

It had now become clear to the Political Bureau that the Palestinian resistance command "has secured promises and agreements ensuring freedom of movement, and that nationalist and progressive Arabs who had backed it will not be prosecuted." The Political Bureau had, therefore, decided to re-open the border to give an opportunity for enforcing the agreement, and had instructed the Interior Ministry accordingly.

The Political Bureau would adopt "decisive and final measures" in the future if there was any delay in enforcing the agreement. Syria considered the Palestinian resistance as the serious start of a popular liberation war and had placed all the country's potential at its disposal.

A. General Elections: Turkey went to the polls on October 12, 1969 after a three-week General Election campaign fought mainly on domestic and economic issues.

More than 10,000,000 voters exercised their franchise to determine the new 50-seat National Assembly and returned the pro-Western Justice Party with a solid majority.

The party is led by the Prime Minister, Mr. Suleyman Demirel.

[Mr. Demirel (45), stocky and balding, is a new phenomenon on the Turkish political scene. Until he entered politics just five years ago, Turkey's democratic leaders had come from urban, mostly wealthy elite. He is a peasant.]

Cabinet Re-shuffle :

The Prime Minister, Mr. Suleyman Demirel, whose ruling Justice Party emerged victorious in the General Eleftions, announced on Novemeber 2, 1969 a radically changed Administration which would govern the country for the next four years.

Only four Ministers, including Mr. Ihsan Sabri Caglayangil, the Foreign Minister, retained their appointments in the former 24-member Cabinet. Ten were removed, and the rest given new portfolios.

The re-shuffle did away with the representatives of a powerful Right-wing minority in the conservative, pro-West Justice Party. It was a proof of previous indications that Mr. Demirel would disregard inter-party politics in favour of creating a powerful and competent Cabinet to face a period which he called "critical in Turkish history."

Political Rights Bill Approved:

On November 5, 1969, the Senate approved a Bill which will restore political rights to former members of the Democratic Party which had been toppled from power by a military coup in May, 1960.

When first considered by the Senate last May, the Bill had been shelved, under the pressure of the armed forces which were reported to have threatened to intervene should former Democrats be given back their electoral rights. The armed forces had been anxious that the former Democrats, still led by the 86-year-old former President Celal Bayar, should not have the chance to take part in the October 12 election and gain seats in the National Assembly.

The Bill, in the form of an amendment to the Constitution, was sponsored by the ruling Justice Party and supported by the Republican People's Party, the main Opposition. It was opposed in the Senate by the members of the revolutionary junta who had seats for life.

B. Credit Agreement With Soviet Union: A contract and a new Credit Agreement have been signed between Turkey and the Soviet Union for the construction of Turkey's third major steel works at Iskenderun on the Mediterranean coast.

It will be owned and operated by the State iron and steel undertaking which owns the Karabuk works on the Black Sea coast.

The plant, which will go into operation in five years' time, will have an initial output capacity of one million tons per year. Further planned extensions will increase the output capacity to two million tons.

The Soviet Union has made available a credit of $263 million at 2.5

per cent interest. The internal finance of about $222 million will be provided by Karabuk iron and steel works.

The new plant is expected to provide employment for 4,000 engineers and 15,000 men. It will save Turkey imports worth $150 million annually.

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

A. "Apollo-12" Launched Towards Moon: America's Apollo-12 space-craft, the second to land on the Moon with three astronauts on board, was launched from Cape Kennedy on November 14, 1969.

The astronauts rode their command ship, Yankee Clipper into the Earth's orbit through a lightning storm to start man's second Moon-landing expedition despite heavy rains and for a while threatened delay.

Comm. Charles "Pete" Conrad Jr. (39), Comm. Richard Gordon Jr. (40) and Lt-Comm. Alan Bean (37) thundered away from Cape Kennedy on a Saturn-5 super-rocket that blasted into the heavens and survived a possible lightning hit that momentarily disrupted communications. "I think we got hit by lightning," Comm. Conrad called just after mission controllers reported a serious loss of data from the fleeting spacecraft.

Conversation between the ground and the spacecraft indicated that lightning might have affected the instrument measuring unit which contains the rocket's guidance system.

The lightning, which struck the spacecraft at take-off, was probably caused by the rocket itself. Scientific experts at Cape Kennedy said this was likely because of the cloud-covered charged sky which the rocket had to travel through at blast-off.

Some 30 minutes after the launch, Apollo-12 was in orbit and encountering no troubles.

During their Earth-parking orbit, the astronauts carried out a series of tests to ensure that all was well with the craft. Comm. Conrad reported a heavy formation of ice on a window which blocked his view of the spacecraft's altitude control system rockets. He test-fired the rockets twice before telling ground control that he was satisfied with their operation.

After the launch, as the spacemen whirled overhead checking the systems of their spacecraft, Dr. Thomas Paine, Space Agency chief, presented President R. Nixon with one of the stones from the paved path taken by the Moonship as it was trundled from the assembly building to the launchpad.

Shortly afterwards, the astronauts separated their command ship, flipped around 180 degrees, and moved in gingerly to dock nose-to-nose with the lunar module.

Facts And Figures Of Mission:

Below are the facts and figures of the Apollo-12 mission:

Astronauts: Charles Conrad Jr., Richard F. Gordon Jr., and Alan L. Bean.

Purpose: Man's second landing on the Moon. Conrad and Bean are to descend to the Ocean of Storms to make the first detailed exploration of the lunar surface, gathering documented rocks and deploying sophisticated sets of instruments. Astronauts will spend extra day in lunar orbit to photograph future Apollo landing sites.

Total length of time on the Moon: 31½ hours, including seven hours outside lander, after which they rendezvous with Gordon in the orbiting command ship.

Flight duration: 10 days, 4 hours, 35 minutes.

Rocket: Three-stage Saturn-5, which with Apollo spaceship stands 109 metres tall. The world's most powerful booster, with first-stage thrust of 7.6 million lbs.

Cost of mission: Saturn-5 $181 million, command ship $55 million, lunar module $40 million, launch operations, including recovery forces $70 million, scientific package $25 million. Total: $375 million.

Space-craft Enters Lunar Gravity:

On Novemeber 17, 1969, the Apollo-12 swept into lunar gravity as it hurtled unerringly for a rendezvous with the Moon, whose silver crescent loomed larger than their home planet.

The astronauts zipped through the "twilight zone" in which the gravitational influence of the Earth and Moon is equal. Once across this invisible line, lunar gravity took hold and Apollo-12's speed accelerated after slowing to about 1,500 mph.

While the Earth, Sun and Moon each peeked into a different window, the crew staged a private showing for a few television viewers. "It seems like we have suspended animation out here", said Comm. Conrad.

On November 18, 1969, Apollo-12 fired its main rocket engine to change its lunar orbit into a near-circular path of about 66 by 54 nautical miles (122 by 100 km).

Soon after going into parking orbit, the astronauts beamed colour television pictures of the lunar surface to Earth. From that altitude, the Moon looked green-brown, with numerous small light-coloured craters. "Apparently they look very smooth with the naked eye, but with the monocular I can pick up these black dots—obviously they're boulders," Comm. Conrad said of the craters.

The final manoeuvres before landing on the Moon began on November 19, 1969, when Comm. Conrad and Lt-Comm. Bean undocked from the mothership and pulled away. After Intrepid had separated from the mother ship Comm. Gordon, Jr. left alone to command, the waiting space-craft, broadcast live television pictures Earthward, showing the slowly tumbling Moon lander in orbit close by.

Then, while Intrepid was on the dark side of the Moon, Comm. Conrad and Lt.-Comm. Bean fired their descent engine to put their craft into a lunar orbit, taking them within 50,000 feet of the Moon's surface. Earthlings did not learn the manoeuvre was successful until Intrepid emerged from the other side of the Moon and confirmed it was right on target.

Half-an-hour later, Comm. Gordon burned his rocket engine to give the Intrepid a little manoeuvring room and in the 14th turn around the Moon, Comm. Conrad put the fragile craft into its descent orbit. Finally, at 15,006 metres above the lunar surface, flying with their eyes turned to space, Comm. Conrad began descending.

At over 2,134 metres he turned the sace-craft around so that he could watch the approaching surface, the rocket aimed in the direction of their flight to brake their speed. Then the probes extending down from the spidery legs of the craft contacted the surface as the Intrepid dropped to the 3.6-metre level and Comm. Conrad cut his engines, letting the ship settle down on its footpads.

Moon Walk:

Comm. Charles Conrad and Lt-Comm. Alan Bean became the third and fourth men to walk on the Moon.

They deployed a set of five scientific instruments, powered by the first nuclear generator on the Moon. The Moonwalk was spoiled for earthlings when a camera relaying the first colour television pictures failed after 45 minutes. They returned to Intrepid, after spending nearly four hours walking about the lunar surface.

The first colour television from the lunar surface showed the astronauts as ghostly white figures, shuffling about a weird world, collecting rocks and acclimatizing themselves to the one-sixth lunar gravity. When the astronauts tried to move the camera to a new position about 45 minutes after the walk began, they suddenly lost the picture.

"That may have been a small one for Neil, but that's a long one for me," Comm. Conrad joked earlier, as he placed his 13-inch boot onto the black dust of the Moon. He was referring to Neil Armstrong's words when he became the first man to step on the Moon: "That's one small step for man, one giant leap for mankind."

Later, Lt-Comm. Bean had difficulty removing a canister containing the radio-active element plutonium-238 from a protective casket. "It seems swollen in there and friction is holding it in". He reported: "I don't want to pull too hard because it's a very delicate mechanism." "I've got a better idea," Comm. Conrad said, "I'll get the hammer." That did the trick.

If the canister had not come free, one of the major goals of the flight would have failed. Without the nuclear generator, the five scientific instruments would not work.

After collecting a few rock samples, raising the flag and deploying the nuclear-powered instruments, the two astronauts climbed back into Intrepid's cabin to rest until the second excursion.

Mission Control later reported that Intrepid appeared to have landed 350 metres due west of the Surveyor-3 unmanned Moonprobe which had softlanded on the side of a crater in April, 1967.

Apollo-11 Moon explorers, Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin, did not stray more than about 200 feet from their lunar module, Eagle, but Conrad and Bean were expected to range more than 1,000 feet from Intrepid.

On their second Moonwalk in less than 12 hours, their target was the hulk of a dead US spacecraft, Surveyor-3, some 200 metres from where they landed in Intrepid. The Surveyor had endured the 14-day-long lunar days and nights some 31 times, and changes in temperatures that ranged from some 250 degrees above zero (F), to 250 degrees below. Returned to Earth, parts of Surveyor will be studied to determine how it and any microscopic life it brought to the Moon had survived all the stresses of vacuum and solar blast.

Comm. Conrad began talking about the cables and devices below. "They are constantly under foot."

At this Sun angle, he said, the Moon dirt around Intrepid had a brownish tinge like a well-ploughed field. Elsewhere it was an expanse of light ash grey. They cut away their own television camera for the return home and then set out for the north-west, their first stop at the instruments they had installed earlier.

Mission control told the men to move on to the "triple crater" after about 50 minutes outside the spacecraft. They were slowly working their way over to the Surveyor craft.

Lt-Comm. Bean reported his legs "weren't a bit tired," but his hands were getting tired because of the tools. Now they were at halo crater, and the astronauts reported it had a different surface than the others they had visited. In describing this area, Comm. Conrad said: "If you saw this on earth it would look like soft dirt that had just been rained on." The astronauts said that in most of the craters they had seen there were particles that looked like glass.

One of the mysteries that absorbed Comm. Conrad as he scouted the Ocean of Storms was a strange mound that rose like a pimple from the centre of a shallow crater. "I've got to photograph this thing" he said "I can't imagine what it is. There's this big mound sticking up about 100 metres at the foot of a shallow crater on the right-hand edge of the head crater."

Astronauts Conrad and Bean, who had walked to the edge of a "fantastic" fresh crater some distance away from Intrepid, were so absorbed by what they were seeing that they had to be urged back to the lunar module as the scheduled Moonwalk period ended.

During their two Moonwalks, totalling 7½ hours, the astronauts collected between 80 and 90 lbs of rocks and soil and took hundreds of pictures. They also retrieved the Surveyor's television camera and other parts for examination on Earth.

On November 20, Comm. Conrad had a fall during his Moonwalk, but no damage was done.

Comm. Conrad said that getting up was "no big thing," although officials had said in the past that the chance of a fall of an astronaut with his bulky gear had been one of their worries.

The one thing the astronauts said they noticed in walking for four hours on the Moon was that they got very thirsty.

However, before they returned to Intrepid, the two astronauts forgot to bring back to the lunar lander a magazine of colour film of their second Moonwalk. But, they did not leave the Intrepid to retrieve the pictures.

First Two Astronauts' Comment:

The first two men to walk on the Moon, Neil Armstrong and Edwin Aldrin Jr. predicted that the bull's-eye landing by the Apollo-12 astronauts would have "far-reaching effects on our future flights."

They agreed that observations by Conrad and Bean while walking on the Ocean of Storms showed that, scientifically, "from different places on the Moon you'll see different things."

"They accomplished even more things than what I expected, so I would assess their success on the surface as pretty high," said Armstrong, who on July 20 became the first man to step onto the lunar surface.

Based on Moon-to-Earth conversations during the first excursion of Conrad and Bean outside the Intrepid landing craft, Armstrong said Apollo-12 might bring back a more significant variety of rocks than Apollo-11.

Armstrong said it appeared the lunar soil at Intrepid's touchdown point was not as firm as the spot he and Aldrin had landed on the Moon's Sea of Tranquillity 1,530 km to the east. Intrepid's landing near the rim of Surveyor-3's crater "has a far-reaching aspect in our future flights," he predicted.

Armstrong and Aldrin had landed 6½ km away from their target spot and project officials had made a pinpoint landing one of the prime objectives of Apollo-12. The feat cleared the way for future missions to aim at more rugged, highland terrain where smaller safe landing spots exist but where scientists say the most knowledge can be attained about the Moon.

Return To Mother Ship:

Shortly after returning on board the Intrepid the two astronauts blasted off the bleak lunar surface, chased their mother ship for 3½ hours and linked up safely for the long journey home.

They skilfully guided their lunar ferry Intrepid through a series of rocket firings to catch Comm. Richard Gordon in the command vessel, Yankee Clipper. Two two ships manoeuvred into position and then moved together nose-to-nose.

Safely aboard the Yankee Clipper, the astronauts jettisoned the lunar lander and sent it crashing down on the lunar surface. The impact of the crash set up vibrations on the Moon for 300 minutes—much to the surprise of scientists who were reading signals from a seismometer set up on the lunar surface by the astronauts.

Mr. Garly Latham, a geologist, said the sustained vibrations had "unquestionably profound" implications, but that scientists were not prepared to say what they were as yet.

Shortly before they retired for the night for their 7½-hour sleep period, communications between the Yankee Clipper and Earth failed. For 20 minutes ground control at Houston tried to raise the three men. An alarm sent to the spaceship was never received. Finally, as they were cleaning up after their lunar exploration, the astronauts discovered Houston calling on an omni-directional beam and answered, ending the excitement. "What did you want?" asked Comm. Conrad when he got Houston on the radio. Controllers explained the problem and told the astronauts to go about their business. All was well again. Comm. Conrad said they had turned their communications equipment off while they were cleaning up.

First News Conference From Space:

On November 24, 1969, Apollo-12 astronauts held their first space-to-ground news conference as their spaceship hurtled towards the Earth.

The three astronauts answered several questions put to them by the acting capsule communicator, Mr. Gerald P. Carr, on behalf of newsmen who had sent in their questions in writing to mission control in Houston.

During the telecast, Comm. Conrad recommended that future Moon explorers be allowed to stay outside the landing craft for longer periods than the four hours he and Lt-Comm. Alan Bean were permitted.

Lt-Comm. Bean described what it was like to fall on the Moon where gravity is one-sixth that on Earth. "You fall so slowly that it gives you plenty of time to turn around or regain your footing."

One of the most interesting discoveries the astronauts made was how much colours on the Moon changed when the sunlight hit the surface at different angles.

The spacemen, who paid special tributes to all those who had made their mission possible, also turned the camera on an inscription they had written over an instrument panel saying: "Yankee Clipper sailed with Intrepid to the Sea of Storms, Moon, November 14, 1969."

Meanwhile, Apollo-12 picking up speed second-by-second, sped past the half-way mark of its homeward trip, plunging through space at more than 5,310 kpm. At the halfway point, the space-craft was 205,253 km from both Earth and the Moon.

Tucked aboard the cone-shaped space vessel were dirt, rocks, metal and films precious to scientists. Yankee Clipper was laden with Moon rocks, film recording nearly eight hours of Moonwalk, and parts of the Surveyor-3 spacecraft that landed on the Ocean of Storms 31 months ago.

Splash-down In Pacific:

On November 25, 1969, the Apollo-12 spaceship splashed down into the Pacific, south-east of Samoa.

The astronauts were picked up by recovery men and flown by helicopter to the aircraft carrier USS Hornet.

Earlier, the command module separated from the service module and the re-entry began. As they zeroed in on their target, the astronauts were getting spectacular views of the Earth. Lt-Comm. Bean told mission control: "By golly, we can see India. And we can see the Red Sea and we can see the Indian Ocean quite clearly. It's amazing how well we can see. There's Burma and the clouds going around the coastline of Burma, and we can see Africa."

The Hornet reported that the astronauts landed just 2.9 miles from it—the closest ever spaceship recovery landing. The splashdown point was about 640 km south-east of Pago Pago, in American Samoa, and more than 2,600 miles south-east of Hawaii.

On landing, Apollo-12 turned upside down and its occupants inflated flotation bags to right it. The astronauts were picked out of the Pacific after they had bobbed in the rolling sea for about 43 minutes. First to come out was Comm. Conrad. The other two followed him.

Tourists To Visit Moon By 1985:

A scientist for the Apollo spacecraft project, Dr. K. Ehricke, predicted in Los Angeles on November 17, 1969 that tourists would be able to visit the Moon by 1985.

Dr. Ehricke, of North American Rockwell Corporation which built the craft, said that different spaceships built and orbital stations were now being designed and should be operating by the mid-1980's.

He estimated that the voyage from the Earth to the Moon would take one week and would involve several transfers between different space vehicles. Passengers would begin the journey in a shuttle craft to an earth orbital space station. Here they would do some space "swimming." The tourists would float in zero-gravity space and perform somersaults by merely flexing their muscles. A huge net would be strung near the station to stop them from drifting off. The passengers would then take another spaceship for the 100-hour trip to a lunar orbital station where a shuttle would take them to the Moon.

VIET-NAM (DR)

A. Text Of Dr. Ho Chi-Minh's Letter To President R. Nixon: The following is the text of a letter sent to President Nixon of the United States by the late President, Dr. Ho Chi-Minh, referred to by Mr. Nixon in a statement in November, 1969 (see below):

"Mr. President, I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter. The war of aggression of the United States against our people, violating our fundamental national rights, still continues in South Viet-Nam. The United States continues to intensify military operations, the B-52 bombings and the use of toxic chemical products multiply the crimes against the Viet-Namese people. The longer the war goes on, the more it accumulates the mourning and burdens of the American people. I am extremely indignant at the losses and destructions caused by the American troops to our people and our country. I am also deeply touched at the rising toll of death of young Americans who have fallen in Viet-Nam by reason of the policy of American governing circles.

"Our Viet-Namese people are deeply devoted to peace, a real peace with Independence and real freedom. They are determined to fight to the end, without fearing the sacrifices and difficulties in order to defend their country and their sacred national rights. The overall solution in ten points of the National Liberation Front of South Viet-Nam and of the 'Provisional Revolutionary' Government of the Republic of South Viet-Nam is a logical and reasonable basis for the settlement of the Viet-Namese problem. It has earned the sympathy and support of the peoples of the world.

"In your letter you have expressed the desire to act for a just peace. For this the United States must cease the war of aggression and withdraw their troops from South Viet-Nam, respect the rights of the population of the South and of the Viet-Namese nation to dispose of themselves, without foreign influence. This is the correct manner of solving the Viet-Namese problem in conformity with the national rights of the Viet-Namese people, the interests of the United States and the hopes for peace of the peoples of the world. This is the path that will allow the United States to get out of the war with honour.

"With goodwill on both sides we might arrive at common efforts in view of finding a correct solution of the Viet-Nam problem.

Sincerely,
sd/- HO CHI-MINH."

Clarification:

While Mr. Nixon regarded the letter as a complete rejection of the efforts to end the war, a North Viet-Namese official said it was intended as an invitation to a settlement.

In Paris, on November 23, 1969, North Viet-Nam's delegate to the peace talks, Mr. Xuan Thuy, said that "Hanoi is and has been ready at any time to meet the United States in private talks aimed at ending the war."

In an interview, he also asserted that President Nixon's interpretation of the letter written to him by President Ho Chi-Minh just before Dr. Ho's death was incorrect. The letter was intended as just the opposite as an invitation to a settlement. "Just look at the last paragraph," Mr. Thuy said. The paragraph said: "With goodwill on both sides, we might arrive at common efforts in view of finding a correct solution of the Viet-Namese problem." The letter was written in reply to a letter from Mr. Nixon that had said in part: "The time has come to move forward at the conference table toward an early resolution of this tragic war."

Mr. Thuy said that he had repeatedly told the chief US negotiator, Mr. Henry Cabot Lodge, that he was willing to meet privately to discuss "general problems" concerning South Viet-Nam. He contended that Mr. Lodge had rejected this proposal, insisting that the only question he was prepared to discuss was that of "mutual withdrawal."

Mr. Thuy challenged the contention of the US Government that an American troop pull-out would produce a "bloodbath" and mass slaughter of South Viet-Namese.

He said that the traditions of Viet-Nam were humane and generous and founded on love of fellow countrymen. He cited the Buddhist and Confucian traditions of his people and the later influence of Christianity, which had appealed to the Viet-Namese because of the fact that Jesus was a very humane person and that his faith was founded on men's love for one another.

He cited the record of the North Viet-Namese toward those who had collaborated with the French colonial and Japanese occupation regimes and noted that there were a number of people in the Haoni Cabinet and holding high positions who had worked with the French and the Japanese. He further pointed out that paragraph C of Point 5 of the Ten-Point Programme specifically prohibited any acts of terror, reprisal or discrimination against people collaborating with the Saigon regime.

VIET-NAM (RVN)

A. President R. Nixon On plans For Total US Withdrawal: In a major address on November 4, 1969, President Richard Nixon of the United States asserted that his Administration had a plan to end the Viet-Nam war "regardless of what happens on the negotiating front."

He said the plan, worked out with the South Viet-Namese, called for complete withdrawal of "all US combat ground forces and their replacement by South Viet-Namese forces on an orderly scheduled timetable."

He said he would not reveal the time-table schedule. "The rate of withdrawal will depend on developments on three fronts: progress in the Paris talks; level of enemy activity; and progress in training South Viet-Namese forces."

He said that if communist infiltration and the current battlefield lull continued, withdrawals probably could be speeded up. But, should Hanoi step up military pressure and the level of American casualties increase, "I shall not hesitate to take strong and effective measures to deal with that situation."

He spoke of several hitherto private initiatives he had made for peace. These included a letter he had written to the late Dr. Ho Chi-

Minh on July 15 to declare that "the time has come to move forward at the conference table towards an early resolution of this tragic war." Dr. Ho Chi-Minh's reply, received three days before his death, had simply re-stated North Viet-Nam's position and "flatly rejected my initiative."

Re-stating US proposals for free elections under international supervision, and an internationally supervised cease-fire, he regretfully reported that "Hanoi has refused even to discuss our proposals." "The effect of all public, private and secret negotiations undertaken with the communists since the bombing of North Viet-Nam was halted a year ago can be summed up in one sentence. No progress whatever has been made, except agreement on the shape of the bargaining table."

Announcing that he would persist in the search for peace through negotiations "if possible," Mr. Nixon said he would continue the plan for "Viet-Namization" of the war "if necessary." US forces would be pulled out as the South Viet-Namese became "strong enough to defend their own freedom." This "is not the easy way. It is the right way."

The following are excerpts from the President's address:

"In January I could only conclude that the precipitate withdrawal of all American forces from Viet-Nam would be a disaster not only for South Viet-Nam but for the United States and for the cause of peace.

"For the South Viet-Namese, our precipitate withdrawal would inevitably allow the communists to repeat the massacres which followed their take-over of the North 15 years before.

"For the future of peace, precipitate withdrawal would be a disaster of immense magnitude. It would promote recklessness in the councils of those Great Powers who have not yet abandoned their goals of world conquest. This would spark violence wherever our commitments help maintain the peace—in the Middle East, in Berlin, eventually even in the Western Hemisphere.

"For these reasons, I rejected the recommendation that I should end the war by immediately withdrawing all our forces. I chose instead to change American policy on both the negotiating front and the battle-front.

"In order to end a war fought on many fronts, I initiated a pursuit for peace on many fronts. We have offered the complete withdrawal of all outside forces within one year. We have proposed a cease-fire under international supervision. We have offered free elections under international supervision, with the communists participating in the organization and conduct of the elections as an organized political force. And the Saigon Government has pledged to accept the result of the election.

"We have not put forth our proposals on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. We have indicated that we are willing to discuss the proposals that have been put forth by the other side. We have declared that anything is negotiable except the right of the people of South Viet-Nam to determine their own future.

"Hanoi has refused even to discuss our proposals.

"Soon after my election, through an individual who is directly in contact, on a personal basis, with the leaders of North Viet-Nam, I made two private offers for a rapid, comprehensive settlement. Hanoi's replies called, in effect, for our surrender before negotiations.

"Since the Soviet Union furnishes most of the military equipment for North Viet-Nam, (we) have met on a number of occasions with representatives of the Soviet Government to enlist their assistance in getting meaningful negotiations started.

"We have had extended discussions directed towards that same end with representatives of other Governments which have diplomatic relations with North Viet-Nam.

"None of these initiatives have, to date, produced results.

"In mid-July, I spoke directly with an individual who had known Ho Chi-Minh on a personal basis for 25 years. Through him I sent a letter to Ho Chi-Minh. I received Ho Chi-Minh's reply on August 30, three days before his death. It simply re-iterated the public position North Viet-Nam had taken in Paris and flatly rejected my initiative.

"And we have taken other significant initiatives, which must remain secret, to keep open some channels of communication which may still prove to be productive.

"But the effect of all the public, private and secret negotiations which have been undertaken since the bombing halt a year ago and since this Administration came into office on January 20, can be summed up in one sentence: No progress whatever has been made, except agreement on the shape of the bargaining table.

"It is in line with the major shift in US foreign policy which I described in my news conference at Guam on July 25. Let me briefly explain what has been described as the Nixon Doctrine—a policy which not only will help end the war in Viet-Nam but which is an essential element of our programme to prevent future Viet-Nams.

"First, the United States will keep all of its treaty commitments.

"Second, we shall provide a shield if a nuclear Power threatens the freedom of a nation allied with us or of a nation whose survival we consider vital to our security.

"Third, in cases involving other types of aggression, we shall furnish military and economic assistance when requested in accordance with our treaty commitments.

"An announcement of a fixed time-table for our withdrawal would completely remove any incentive for the enemy to negotiate an agreement. They would simply wait until our forces had withdrawn and then move in.

"The other two factors on which we will base our withdrawal decisions are the level of enemy activity and the progress of the training programme of the South Viet-Namese forces. Progress on both of these fronts has been greater than we anticipated when we started the programme in June for withdrawal.

"As a result, our time-table for withdrawal is more optimistic now than when we made our first estimates in June.

"Along with this optimistic estimate, I must in all candour leave one note of caution.

"If the level of enemy activity significantly increases, we might have to adjust our time-table accordingly.

"If I conclude that increased enemy action jeopardizes our remaining forces in Viet-Nam, I shall not hesitate to take strong and effective measures to deal with that situation.

"I am sure you can recognize from what I have said that we really only have two choices open to us if we want to end this war.

"I can order an immediate, precipitate withdrawal of all Americans from Viet-Nam without regard to the effects of that action. Or, we can persist in our search for a just peace through a negotiated settlement if possible, or through continued implementation of our plan for Viet-Namization if necessary—a plan in which we will withdraw all of our forces from Viet-Nam on a schedule in accordance with our programme, as the South Viet-Namese become strong enough to defend their own freedom. I have chosen this second course. It is not the easy way. It is the right way.

It is a plan which will end the war and serve the cause of peace—not just in Viet-Nam but in the Pacific and in the world."

Reactions:

Russia said that President Nixon's policy speech had "disappointed those who expected to hear anything new."

A Tass commentator said that President Nixon "did not advance any programme for the withdrawal of United States troops, on which broad circles in the United States public and people all over the world insist."

The Tass commentator emphasized that "the key question of the solution" to the Viet-Nam problem was a complete and unconditional withdrawal of American troops.

Hanoi and the Viet-Cong dismissed Mr. Nixon's speech as containing nothing new and vowed to keep up their struggle.

The Viet-Cong statement in Paris said that Mr. Nixon's threat to take strong measures if necessary would have no effect on their fight. The North Viet-Namese said the speech was a challenge to the American as well as the Viet-Namese people.

Anti-War Campaign In USA:

Millions of Americans gathered in hundreds of cities and towns on October 15, 1969 to demonstrate against the war in Viet-Nam. It was the largest peace demonstration in the country's history, and although there were some counter-demonstrations, no clashes were reported.

A petrol bomb was thrown through the window of an ordnance research laboratory at the University of Pennsylvania, but otherwise student extremists were quiet.

Silent candlelight processions and church services were held everywhere and anti-war speeches delivered in parks and offices. Many wore black armbands.

Other demonstrations were held throughout the world, including Britain. In Hanoi, the North Viet-Namese Premier, Mr. Pham Van Dong, published an open letter forecasting victory for the struggle of the "progressive" people in America. He hailed the moratorium against the war organized in the United States.

He said in the letter that he hoped for "a brilliant success of the Autumn campaign", which "reflects in eloquent fashion the legitimate and pressing demand of your people to save the honour of the United States and halt the useless deaths of your sons in Viet-Nam."

Demanding a complete and unconditional withdrawal of American forces from South Viet-Nam, he added: "As long as the United States Government does not halt its aggression in Viet-Nam, the Viet-Namese people will continue their determined struggle for their fundamental national rights. The patriotic struggle of our people is also a combat for the objectives of peace and justice which you seek."

ASIA OUTSIDE ASIA

SUMMARY: Islamic "Summit" Conference; Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty Signed; Pearson Commission's Report; US Foreign Aid Bill; Fatalities Under Communist Rule; State Of World Currencies; Nobel Awards.

A. Islamic "Summit" Conference At Rabat: Representatives of 25 nations began in Rabat (Morocco) on September 22, 1969 an Islamic Summit Conference with an opening speech by King Hassan II.

The Conference ended on September 25, 1969, a day earlier than scheduled, after producing a resolution which was, in effect, identical to the November 22, 1967 resolution of the UN Security Council calling upon Israel to evacuate all the territory occupied in the June, 1967 war.

It noted that the fire at El Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem was a consequence of the Israeli occupation of that city.

The Conference in its final hours was marred by an incident involving the expulsion of the Indian delegate, who had been unanimously invited to participate in its deliberations 24 hours earlier.

The Conference, which all the Arab monarchs attended, was boycotted by 10 countries, including Syria and Iraq.

In his welcome speech earlier, King Hassan called for the restoration of Islam's prestige to its former glorious position. He said Muslims should not remain with their hands folded in the face of perils threatening them. He particularly thanked King Feisal of Saudi Arabia for making the Conference possible. He said King Feisal had provided every possible assistance to Morocco to enable her to arrange for this Conference from all aspects.

The Conference upheld a proposal by King Feisal to entrust Morocco with the chairmanship of the meeting.

The Conference set up an administrative and follow-up committee comprising Saudi Arabia, Morocco and Jordan. The Somali Foreign Minister was assigned to serve as Secretary-General for the administration of the Conference.

After the opening session, the Conference met behind closed doors.

Agenda:

On September 23, the Conference held a five-hour meeting behind closed doors at which it discussed the items on its agenda, which was as follows:

(1) The arson in El Aqsa Mosque;

(2) The situation in Jerusalem;

(3) The withdrawal of Israeli troops from all occupied territories;

(4) Restitution of the rights of the people of Palestine;

(5) Implementation of the Summit decisions and a future meeting of Islamic Foreign Ministers;

(6) The form and scope of future co-operation among the world's Muslim countries; and

(7) The final communique.

The UAR President, Mr. Gamal Abdul Nasser, in a message to the Conference read out earlier said that the fire in the El Aqsa Mosque was a "premeditated act" and a threat to free peoples throughout the world. (President Nasser was reported to be ill with influenza in Cairo).

Both King Hassan and the Shah of Iran said that the Islamic Summit, the first in 14 centuries of Islamic history, should not be the last They proposed that the world's Islamic leaders should meet regularly to discuss their common problems.

While King Hassan spoke of the Israeli occupation of Arab Palestine, the Shah made no reference to the West Asia conflict.

Heads of State who came for the meeting included the Shah of Iran, President Yahya Khan of Pakistan, King Hussein of Jordan, King Feisal of Saudi Arabia, Sheikh Sabah Al Salim Al Sabah of Kuwait, President Abdul Rahman Al-Iryani of the Yemen Republic and President Abdirashid Ali Shermarke of Somalia.

Issue Of Indian Participation:

India, which has a vast Muslim population, was not, however, initially invited to the Conference. According to reports, the Indian Government expressed its regrets—and its good wishes—to the Conference.

India protested to the Islamic Summit Preparatory Committee against the discriminatory treatment meted out to India and its Muslim population in the matter of invitations to the Conference.

The Indian Minister of Industrial Development, Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, said it was unfortunate that an attempt was being made to exclude India. "India has the third largest Muslim population in the world and these Muslims are as much concerned with what is happening in Palestine as the Muslim population elsewhere."

On September 23, 1969, the Moroccan Minister, Dr. Ahmed Laraki, announced to the Press that India had been officially invited. Immediately, the Indian Ambassador to Morocco, Mr. Gurbachan Singh, attended the Conference.

The Pakistani delegation had opposed India's presence, but had later given ground to everyone's satisfaction.

The first sign of trouble appeared on the morning of September 24, when it only remained for Heads of State to meet to examine draft resolutions, and when a draft of the final communique was already circulating among journalists. Mysteriously, the plenary session was put back from half-hour to half-hour. Towards 12.30 p.m. the Heads of State began arriving at the Conference site, only to leave an hour later without resuming their talks. The proceedings were to last late into the night. The conflict raged behind closed doors at first, but its cause quickly became known: Pakistan was refusing to return to the Conference if India was not excluded immediately. Some countries such as Iran, Turkey and Jordan were siding with President Yahya Khan, while others like UAR, Algeria, Sudan, Libya and South Yemen were lining up behind India.

Envoys from the two camps were busy stating their case. Some said it was scandalous to expel the Indian delegation when everyone had agreed to its admission. After all, India had a Muslim population of 50 million, putting it third on the list of countries where Islam was practised, after Indonesia and Pakistan. In any case, the Arab cause needed the support of this Asian giant.

The Pakistanis pointed to the clashes between Muslims and Hindus at Ahmedabad recently and said India should not be allowed to participate. Gen. Yahya Khan, they added, had never accepted that the "Hindu" Government in New Delhi be represented at the Conference. In his view, only a "people's delegation" from the Muslim community in India could be admitted as observers.

Meanwhile, several Heads of State drove out to Gen. Yahya Khan's house to ask him to reconsider his stand. To this persuasion, he invariably replied: "If the criterion of participation in the Conference is a large Muslim minority, why not invite the Soviet Union, China or Albania, not to say Israel? From the way it treats our brothers, India is to Pakistan what Israel is to the Arabs".

A deadlock had been reached, and the position of King Hassan II was particularly awkward. To ask his Indian guests to return home ran counter to the most elementary rules of Arab hospitality, and it could also have political consequences.

All talk of compromise failed with Gen. Yahya Khan. The Moroccan Foreign Minister soon informed journalists that King Hassan had decided to name Morocco's principal mosques after the nations taking part in the Conference. India's name was missing from the list he cited. Had it been decided to exclude the Indian delegation, he was asked, and replied: "No, but in view of the existing tension we have decided to advise the Indian representative to abstain from attending meetings". Just as diplomatic was the first-page announcement in the Rabat daily newspaper L'Opinion: "The Indo-Pakistani tension ended with the voluntary withdrawal of India".

Meanwhile, in response to the unanimous request from the assembled Islamic Heads of State in Rabat, India decided to send a delegation headed by Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, Minister for Industrial Development and Company Law. The Indian delegation left on the night of September 23 for Rabat to attend the Summit. Besides Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, the Indian delegation consisted of Mr. Surendra Pal Singh, Deputy Minister in the External Affairs Ministry, Mr. Ali Zaheer, a former UP Minister, Dr. A. Aleem, Vice-Chancellor, Aligarh Muslim University, Dr. I. P. Singh, Director in the External Affairs Ministry, and Mr. K. D. N. Singh, Joint Secretary in the Ministry of Industrial Development and Company Law.

A "mediation mission" headed by the Malaysian Prime Minister, Tengku Abdul Rehman, finally visited Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed in an attempt to persuade him to stay away from the crucial plenary session to avoid a walk-out by several of the most influential participants.

King Hassan took the initiative in the turmoil of backstage argument to suggest a "voluntary" withdrawal. Mr. Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed was offered observer status. After consulting New Delhi, the Indian delegate rejected this suggestion. The Tengku mission finally advised that it was the 'consensus' of the Muslim leaders that he should avoid disrupting the historic summit and stay away.

Conference officials stressed, however, that India was not formally excluded from the Conference. The Indian flag remained flying among the 26 flags outside the main entrance to the Conference room.

Final Session:

The final session of the Conference opened on September 25, 1969 in the absence of a delegation from India.

Conference sources said that King Hussein of Jordan, the Foreign Minister of Turkey and the Shah of Iran had warned the Conference Chairman, King Hassan of Morocco, that they would immediately join any walk-out by Gen. Yahya Khan should India attend the session.

The Moroccan Foreign Minister, Mr. Laraki said that India had not been excluded from the Conference, but had been advised to refrain from attending the session. He said that although India was physically absent, the Muslim community of India was represented in the final declaration.

The Indian delegation did not attend the Conference.

Declaration Adopted:

The Conference unanimously adopted a Declaration supporting the Palestinian people. It was issued in the name of the participating States plus the Muslim community of India.

It called on the Great Powers to intensify efforts to secure the speedy withdrawal of Israeli military forces from all countries occupied in the June, 1967 war with the Arab States.

It said: "The Heads of State and Government and representatives declare that the continued threat upon the sacred shrines of Islam in Jerusalem is the result of the occupation of this city by the Israeli forces. The preservation of their sacred character and unimpeded access to them require that the Holy City should be restored to its status previous to June, 1967 which was established and sanctified by the history of over a thousand years. They, therefore, declare that their Governments and people are firmly determined to reject any solution of the problem of Palestine which will deny Jerusalem the status it had before June, 1967.

"They urge all Governments, particularly those of France, USSR, United Kingdom and USA to take into account the deep attachment of the followers of Islam to Jerusalem and the solemn resolve of their Governments to strive for its liberation."

The Conference pledged each other mutual assistance in the economic, scientific, cultural and spiritual fields and said they undertook to settle their differences by peaceful means.

It also decided that the Foreign Ministers of the participating Muslim States should meet in Jeddah in March, 1970 to discuss the outcome of the common action taken by the Muslim countries concerned respecting the resolutions adopted at the Summit meeting. The Foreign Ministers would also set up the ground lines for the establishment of a permanent secretariat to make contacts with the Governments represented at the Conference for the co-ordination of activities.

King Hassan's News Conference:

Later, addressing a news conference, King Hassan said that Morocco supported anti-Israeli fighters "who fight at the front openly, who fight at the United Nations, who fight to convince States of their cause and their right."

But threats to murder every last Israeli, man, woman and unborn child, would cause even anti-Semites—and there were many in the United States—to feel themselves obliged to "weep for the sacrificed lamb and immediately protect it."

He showed surprise when told that the UAR Vice-President, Mr. Anwar Sadat had been quoted as saying in Cairo that the Conference had poor results and that the final resolution had not expressed solidarity with the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) or mentioned the withdrawal of Israeli forces from occupied Arab territory.

He said he could not believe the statement came from Mr. Sadat, because the Conference resolution had demanded the withdrawal of the Israeli forces, and because Mr. Sadat could not have judged the faith of all the participants.

India Recalls Envoys From Morocco And Jordan:

On October 14, 1969, India decided to withdraw its envoys from Morocco and Jordan to express its disapproval of the role of the two countries at the Islamic Summit, from which the Indian delegation had been excluded.

The Ambassadors of Morocco and Jordan were sent for by the External Affairs Ministry in New Delhi shortly after the decision was taken at a meeting of the External Affairs sub-committee of the Cabinet. A spokesman of the External Affairs Ministry said it was up to the two Governments concerned to consider what reciprocal measures they should take.

The Indian Ambassador in Morocco, Mr. Gurbachan Singh, who was in Delhi, was instructed to cancel his return journey, while the Indian Charge d'Affaires in Jordan, Mr. I. S. Cheddha, was told to come back as soon as possible.

After the withdrawal of the Ambassador from Morocco, the two remaining diplomats would continue to be in their posts, while the mission in Amman would be manned by junior secretarial staff.

A Government spokesman said that the decision to withdraw India's envoy from Morocco was taken because of lack of courtesy to the Indian delegation, which was led by a senior member of the Cabinet. In particular, the Foreign Minister of Morocco was discourteous to the Indian Ambassador. He pointed out that these were very special factors which had determined the decision. He said the host country and chairman had a special responsibility for seeing that the Indian delegation received considerations due to it.

He stated that Jordan was the only country which had actively supported India's exclusion from the Summit. In reply to a question, he said that Iran and Turkey did not actively oppose India's participation and at some stage favoured India's participation.

In reply to another question, he said that Pakistan's role was predictable and no question of taking any decision arose.

Move For Another Arab "Summit":

The Arab League Defence Council, meeting in Cairo on November 9 and 10, 1969, decided to recommend to member-Governments that an Arab Summit Conference should be held in Rabat in December to discuss a common military and political strategy against Israel.

The decision to recommend the Summit came after three days of meetings in which there was unanimity of despair over prospects of a peaceful solution to the West Asian crisis. It also came after President Nasser's speech in which he said that Arab force was the only answer to Israeli aggression.

The call for another Arab Summit Conference was first raised by King Hussein 18 months ago when it became clear that his military power had undergone a constant battering from Israel in reprisal for the snowballing Palestinian guerrilla action. It gained momentum after the fire in the El Aqsa Mosque welded the Arabs into a rare unity.

Arab League Mission's Statement:

The Arab League Mission in New Delhi (which was given diplomatic recognition some years ago) issued a statement on November 6, 1969 seeking to justify the Government's efforts to join the summit meeting of the Islamic States in Rabat in September, 1969.

While expressing the hope that "India will continue to participate in such gatherings in the future," the Mission's statement said: "The Arab League has been and is still concerned over the reports appearing in the Indian Press about India's participation in the Islamic summit. The Arab world has been anxious, ever since the preparations for this Rabat Conference started, that India should take part at the Rabat meeting," but did not offer any clue to the developments which eventually kept the Indian official delegation out of the Conference.

Tendering an apology for the rebuff India suffered at Rabat, it said: "It cannot be said with too much emphasis that the Arab world deeply regrets the fact that the Indian delegation could not take part in the last session of the Conference."

Praising India's consistent support to the Arabs, it said: "Our struggle is not a narrow religious feud, but a confrontation between forces of nationalism and the concerted will of our people for liberation and progress on the one hand and the aggressive forces of religious fanaticism, racism and Zionism as a colonial movement on the other."

Indian Government's Win On Rabat Issue In Lok Sabha:

In the first trial of strength in the Indian Lok Sabha on November 17, 1969 after the Congress Parliamentary Party broke into two, Mrs. Indira Gandhi's Government secured a majority of 166 in an adjournment motion on the Islamic Summit at Rabat held in September, 1969.

At the end of an acrimonious debate on the adjournment motion by the Swatantra member, Mr. Piloo Mody, on the Rabat issue, the voting was 140 in favour of adjournment, 306 against, and two abstentions.

If this voting trend persists, it is stated, Mrs. Gandhi's Government would survive even without Communist votes totalling 43—CPI 24 and CPM 19. Excluding these 43, the Government would still command 263 votes, which is more than half the total strength of 523 of the Lok Sabha.

Besides the two Communist Parties, DMK and several Independent members were known to have voted against the adjournment motion. SSP and P-SP members had announced during the debate that they would vote for the adjournment.

The total attendance at the time of voting was 448, perhaps a record. The number of votes cast for the motion was stated by the Congress (Opposition) to be 143 and not 140. Four seats are vacant.

Almost four of every five votes cast against the Government when the Lok Sabha divided on the adjournment motion on Rabat came from three parties—Congress in opposition, Swatantra and Jana Sangh. Their votes came to 117 out of the total of 146, with Congress (Opp) contributing 57, Swatantra 31 and Jana Sangh 29.

The voting clearly brought out that Mrs. Gandhi at the head of a 210-member ruling party had enough strength to beat back the challenge even without the support she received from friendly Opposition parties.

Since both socialist parties supported the adjournment motion, the theory of Rightists combining against the Government cannot be substantiated. But the fact remains that out of 17 P-SP members, only eight voted against the Government. Of the other nine, one voted with the Government "by mistake" and eight stayed away.

In the SSP's case, 13 of its 17 members voted against the Government while four absented. It was noteworthy, however, that this party fell in line with the P-SP's view that the Rabat fiasco did not merit a no-confidence move but only an adjournment motion. As the P-SP's expert on parliamentary procedure, Mr. Nath Pai had clarified in advance that an adverse vote on an adjournment motion need not oblige the Government to resign.

Among 56 "unattached" members, belonging either to smaller parties like the BKD and Akali Dal or the Independents, 32 voted with the Government and nine against it. Fifteen chose to be absent. One unattached member, Mr. Sanjiva Reddy, is now with the Congress in opposition.

The number of absentees came to 65—40 from the Opposition and 25 from the undivided Congress Party. The House has at present 518 voting members. The Speaker apart, there are four vacancies.

The CPI threw its full strength of 24 behind the Government, while the DMK and the CPM had one absentee each.

Mr. Dinesh Singh's Statement In Parliament:

The Indian Minister for External Affairs, Mr. Dinesh Singh, stated on November 19, 1969 in the Rajya Sabha that the Rabat episode would leave its mark on the minds of the people in this country, but this "will not deflect us from our basic approach in West Asia."

Making a statement on the Rabat Summit Conference, he defended the participation of India at the Conference and said that the Indian Ambassador in Rabat had conducted himself with dignity and restraint "in an extraordinary situation." "Honourable members will agree with me that Pakistan succeeded in deflecting the deliberations of the Conference from their basic objective. It is regrettable that the Arab nations at the Conference allowed Pakistan to lead them into such an impasse."

Referring to the religious sentiments of the people in the region being exploited from time to time to serve political ends, he said: "We have ourselves been the victims of the political exploitation of religious feelings which finally resulted in Partition. We have, thus, to work together with these progressive and secular forces in West Asia and North Africa, as elsewhere, to strengthen the ideas and concepts we value. After all, the foreign policy of a country is the instrument for the promotion of its national objectives abroad.

"Our secularism does not mean that we are against religion but that we respect all religions and treat all our people as equals, irrespective of their religious beliefs.

"It is not that we have shunned participation in religious functions, but we have not promoted one at the cost of the other. We cannot be shy of political meetings if our attendance is in the national interest, even if they bear some religious label. And this happens sometimes in this region where interested Powers deliberately attempt to mix religion with politics. Pakistan was one such country which always attempted to exploit the religious sentiments of the people. We have experienced it in our bilateral relations and we have watched it in Pakistan's foreign relations.

"It is in this context we considered our attitude towards such conferences, especially Islamic conferences. Mr. Nehru had decided as early as 1955 that we must continue to oppose pan-Islamic groupings which were attempts to give religious cover to political activities in the interest of a small group of countries." Mr. Nehru had also decided that "we should as a Government continue to keep out of purely religious conferences while we should allow non-official delegations to participate in them. In fact, he felt that it might be useful if they attended such meetings and put forward the points of view of Indian Muslims."

The statement also recalled how the decision to hold the Summit Conference was taken by a preparatory committee comprising six countries and said that the Saudi Arabian representative in the preparatory committee had proposed India's participation, which was supported by Malaysia and Morocco.

Mr. Singh said that some misinformed criticism had been made alleging that India had begged for an invitation. This was not correct.

The situation arising out of the exclusion of the Indian delegation from the final meeting was considered by the Government in the light of the clarifications received from most participating countries.

"It was quite clear that Morocco, as the Chairman of the Conference and the host country, had a special responsibility to see that the Indian delegation continued to participate in the Conference and was not excluded from the concluding session.

"We also came to the conclusion that Jordan was the country which, immediately after President Yahya Khan changed his mind, took the position that it would join Pakistan in abstaining from further meetings if India attended."

B. Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty Signed By Ninety-one States: The Soviet Union, USA, West Germany and Britain as well as 87 non-nuclear States have signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty since July 1, 1968.

France and China have kept out on the ground that the Treaty did not effectively check the nuclear danger while it merely protected the monopoly of Big Powers.

India, on other hand, has been unwilling to give up its options—although it has announced that it has no intention of making a bomb—since the obligations and responsibilities in the Treaty were weighted in favour of the nuclear Powers.

The Soviet ratification on November 24, 1969 followed a meeting of the Presidium of Supreme Soviet in the Kremlin, at which hope was expressed that the Treaty would be a step towards settlement of other important disarmament questions, nuclear disarmament in the first place. Kremlin leaders were of the view that the Treaty would be effective if West Germany acceded to it.

Simultaneously in Washington, the Treaty was ratified by the United States, the other principal nuclear Power with which the Soviet Union was now conducting secret preliminary talks in Helsinki on limitation of strategic arms.

Britain, the third nuclear Power, had ratified the Treaty earlier.

To date, 90 countries had signed the Treaty but only 22 had completed formal ratification procedures. The Treaty to ban the spread of nuclear weapons—or 'know-how' to make them—to countries that do not possess them will become effective when 43 countries deposit their ratification papers. Nineteen more still will be needed after Washington and Moscow make their deposits.

UN Debate:

On June 19, 1969, the UN Security Council approved a resolution embodying Big-Power guarantees of "immediate assistance" for any non-nuclear State facing nuclear aggression.

The Council made a formal commitment to "act immediately" in accordance with UN Charter obligations "in the event of such attack". The voting was 10 for none against with five abstentions.

The resolution further re-affirmed the inherent right of individual and collective self-defence if an armed attack were launched against any UN member-State, "until the Security Council has taken measures necessary."

Algeria, Brazil, France, India and Pakistan abstained from voting. All the other members voted for the draft.

The Council's action was the culminating point of UN consideration of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty barring the spread of nuclear weapons which the General Assembly had approved a week earlier.

The UN General Assembly had asked that the document be opened as soon as possible to signature and ratification. It becomes effective when USA, Russia and Britain and 40 other countries have completed this procedure.

The abstention votes were cast by States which felt that the Treaty did not go far enough and that the assurances themselves were inadequate.

The resolution, in addition to welcoming the security assurances made some additional points. It re-affirmed the right of any member-country to take measures for individual and collective self-defence if they come under armed attack until the Council acted to maintain peace and security.

Mr. Tewfik Bouattoura (Algeria) said that the resolution was either superfluous or inadequate because neither China nor France was prepared to become a party to the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

The Pakistani Ambassador, Mr. Agha Shahi, said that the resolution should not have been adopted until security assurances had been discussed at a UN conference of non-nuclear countries scheduled in Geneva from August 29 to September 28. He also called for a "more dependable security system."

The Indian delegate, Mr. G. Parthasarathy denounced the proposed security assurances by USA, the Soviet Union and Britain as discriminatory and violative of the UN Charter.

Mr. Parthasarathy re-iterated India's decision to continue its policy of peaceful uses of nuclear enerpy, but warned that the interest of the international community in encouraging non-nuclear Powers to remain so could be achieved "only by ensuring the security of all non-nuclear States in conformity with our Charter, regardless of whether or not they sign the Treaty."

He said that in the Indian Government's view, the problem of security of non-nuclear weapon States against use or threat of use of nuclear weapons arose from possession, continued stockpiling and further sophistication of nuclear weapons and the means of their delivery. The real hope of security for non-nuclear weapon States lay in nuclear disarmament when nuclear weapons would have been completely eliminated.

He added: "I should like to emphasize that any security assurances that might be offered by nuclear weapons States could not and should not be regarded as quid pro quo for signature and its own merits. The threat of nuclear weapons to non-nuclear weapon States arises directly from the possession of such weapons by certain States. That threat has nothing to do with signature or no signature of the Treaty. That threat has existed in the past and would continue to remain even after the Treaty has been concluded, until such time as the nuclear menace has been eliminated altogether. The assurance of security to non-nuclear weapon States is an obligation on the nuclear weapon States and not something which they could or should offer in return for signature by the non-nuclear weapon States."

Japan Not To Sign At Once:

The Japanese Foreign Office said on June 22, 1969 that Japan would not sign the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty on July 1—the day when the Treaty as a UN-approved document would be open for signature.

Japan voted commendation and approval of the Treaty at the UN General Assembly but she would not immediately rush to sign it. She wanted to study the Treaty more closely before she signed it.

Diplomatic observers, however, thought that by delaying her signature for a few days, she was seeking to avoid giving the impression that she was following closely US policy in this matter.

Indian Analysis:

The Institute of Defence Studies and Analysis in New Delhi has pointed out that India—even if she were to start on a nuclear weapons programme today—would not be in a position to deter China for the next eight or ten years.

It argued that India would eventually have to go in for a weapons programme, but she should not do so in a hurry. The cost of achieving a "balanced" nuclear capability would not be less than $10,000 million (Rs. 7,500 crores), a sum not beyond India's capability if spread over a ten to 15-year period. The present period of economic difficulties was "least favourable", however, for starting on a crash programme of weapons development.

India should, however, build up its capability to undertake such a programme in the future by stepping up research and development for both industrial and defence applications. The manufacture of weapons could be undertaken at a later date if a review of the international situation showed it to be necessary. This strategy would postpone India's entry into the nuclear weapons field. But it would give her a more sophisticated and balanced capability than an immediate programme. Besides, this would throw less strain upon the economy.

The rush into the manufacture of a few bombs now would be of no benefit vis-a-vis China with its greatly superior capability. "While China is developing thermo-nuclear missiles, India has no delivery system available to it other than outmoded aircraft."

Concentration on research and development in the period immediately ahead would not involve large-scale diversion of foreign exchange. It would be consistent, therefore, with the effort envisaged in the Fourth Plan to expand the industrial and engineering base. The larger the base, the easier it would be to sustain the effort to build up an independent nuclear deterrent and an appropriate delivery system.

In deciding upon a policy for India, the leadership in New Delhi would have to take into account its impact on other countries. India's entry into the nuclear field need not necessarily mean Israel, UAR and Pakistan taking to a weapons programme. If India, with its industrial capacity, and the size of its economy, is faced with many difficulties in turning nuclear, these problems would be very much more acute in the case of these Powers. But any Indian decision may provide a plausible excuse for West Germany to adopt a nuclear weapons programme.

"The Soviet Union may not feel any great misgiving about an Indian nuclear capability. But if the Indian initative were to trigger off a German decision, the Soviet Union would find it extremely unwelcome.

"Indian security needs Soviet interest and support. The Soviet reaction must, therefore, be given due weight in deciding upon Indian policy."

Discussing the security guarantees being offered by USA, USSR and Great Britain, it argued that this did not provide credible reassurance. "Yet, the fact that both the super-Powers have an important geo-political stake in India is a reality of the present situation. This in itself provides a deterrent against Chinese adventurism."

C. Pearson Commission's Report On Foreign Aid: The Commission on International Development, an independent body financed by the World Bank, issued its report, Partners in Development, on October 1, 1969.

The Commission was headed by the former Canadian Prime Minister, Mr. Lester B. Pearson.

The report reviewed the recent history of economic development and development aid and included recommendations addressed to developing countries, industrialized countries and international organizations.

Seen as a whole, the report stated, the recommendations embodied "a strategy for the strengthening of international co-operation for development" in which the principal objectives were: to create a framework for free and equitable international trade; to promote mutually beneficial flows of foreign private investment; to establish a better partnership, a clearer purpose, and a greater coherence in development aid; to increase the volume of aid; to make aid administration more effective; to re-direct technical assistance; to slow the growth of population; to revitalize aid to education and research, and to strengthen the multilateral aid system.

The Commission recorded its view that the better understanding now existing of development problems and the progress already achieved over the past two decades gave hope that existing obstacles to steady development progress could be effectively surmounted.

Main Recommendations:

In its main recommendations, the Commission made the following points:

(1) To be successful, development must be a partnership based on joint effort towards clearly defined goals; performance of all participants, donor and recipient, could be more effectively reviewed;

(2) Aid, trade and investment policies were interrelated, and certain measures should be taken to ensure that they were harmonized in support of development;

(3) Trade policies of advanced countries that raised obstacles to the growth of export earnings of developing countries should be changed, and advanced countries should grant general, non-reciprocal tariff preferences to the manufactures of developing countries;

(4) The volume of official development aid should rise to 0.7 per cent of Gross National Product (GNP) by 1975 if possible, and in no case later than 1980, as part of an increase in the over-all flow of resources to one per cent of donors' GNP by 1975;

(5) The proportion of the multilateral component of aid should be raised from 10 per cent of total official assistance to a minimum of 20 per cent by 1975;

(6) The International Development Association should have a large role in the aid system, with its resources expanded from the present $400 million to $1,500 million by 1975;

(7) Measures should be taken to alleviate the debt problem of developing countries by liberal use of long-term debt re-scheduling and other means, and to reduce future debt problems by fixing an interest rate no higher than two per cent on official development assistance loans, with maturity and grace periods of 25 to 40 years and 7 to 10 years respectively;

(8) A fund should be established within the World Bank to subsidize interest rates on some Bank loans;

(9) The United Nations should appoint a Commissioner for Population; an international programme should be launched through the World Bank, in consultation with the World Health Organization, for the mobilization of research in the field of fertility control;

(10) Greater resources should be made available for educational research and experimentation, looking to new education system conceived by and for developing countries; and

(11) The President of the World Bank should call a conference in 1970 of heads of international and national agencies and representatives of donor and recipient countries to discuss the creation of machinery to relate aid and development to other areas of foreign economic policy.

Besides the Chairman, Mr. Pearson, the Commission comprised Sir Edward Boyle (United Kingdom), Mr. Roberto de Oliveira Campose (Brazil), Mr. C. Douglas Dillon (United States), Mr. Wilfried Guth (Federal Republic of Germany), Sir W. Arthur Lewis (St. Lucia), Mr. Robert E. Marjolin (France) and Mr. Saburo Okita (Japan).

D. Presidential Nomination To Supreme Court Rejected By US Senate: The US Senate rejected in Washington on November 21, 1969 the nomination to the Supreme Court of Mr. Clement F. Haynsworth, Jr, denying a President his choice for the high bench for the first time in 39 years. The vote was 55 to 45.

Mr. Haynsworth was nominated to replace former Associate Justice Abe Fortas, who had resigned on May 14 under criticism for alleged improper financial dealings. It was the same charge that led to the defeat of Mr. Haynsworth of South Carolina, Chief Judge of the 4th US Circuit Court of Appeals.

This was the first time since April 7, 1930 that a Supreme Court nominee had been rejected by the Senate. At that time also, the nominee was a southerner, Mr. John J. Parker, of North Carolina. He lost on a 41-to-39 vote.

Mr. Haynsworth's rejection was the first major Congressional setback for President Nixon, who said in a statement that he regretted the Senate's decision and added: "I believe the majority of the people in the nation regret it."

He said: "I deplore the nature of the attacks that have been made upon this distinguished man. His integrity is unimpeachable, his ability unquestioned. The Supreme Court needs men of his legal philosophy to restore the proper balance to that great institution."

E. US Foreign Aid Bill Passed: President R. Nixon's first foreign aid Bill was passed by the House of Representatives in Washington on November 20, 1969 by 176 votes to 163.

The measure provided $2,195 million against $2,630 million sought by President Nixon for foreign aid during the 1970 fiscal year, which ends next June.

Relatively few changes were made in the Bill as approved by the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Thus, the cutback in development funds to $425,500,000 a year would total $100 million over a two-year period. About 26 per cent of these funds go to India, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Indonesia, South Korea, Pakistan and Turkey in the form of low-interest loans.

F. USA To Destroy Stockpiles Of Bacteriological Weapons: The US President, Mr. R. Nixon, announced in Washington on November 25, 1969 that USA would destroy all existing stockpiles of bacteriological weapons.

He told correspondents that USA would never employ germ warfare even if an enemy were to do so.

He announced that Government research would be limited to defensive measures such as search for immunization serums against germ weapons that others might use.

In a formal statement, he said he was taking a series of moves in the chemical bacteriological areas as "an initiative toward peace." He believed his actions would "sharply reduce" the possibility of chemical or germ weapons ever being used by any nation.

He asked the Senate to promptly ratify a 1925 Geneva protocol prohibiting the first use in war of "asphixiating, poisonous or other gases and of bacteriological methods of warfare."

The USA was joining Canada in associating itself with the principles and objectives of a British-sponsored proposed convention to ban the use of biological methods of warfare. Further, he said he had asked the Defence Department "to make recommendations as to the disposal of existing stocks of bacteriological weapons". White House sources said this meant that such stockpiles would be destroyed.

G. Fatalities Under Communist Rule: According to estimates published in the British magazine Time and Tide in the third week of November, 1969, communism has taken a toll of nearly 100 million lives since the Bolshevik Revolution overthrew the Czarist regime in Russia.

As was to be expected, Russia and China accounted between them for nearly 90 million deaths. China's impressive score in search of a better life was the loss of 44.5 million lives, but the bulk of the deaths were in Russia.

The Revolution of 1917, successive waves of pre-Stalinist and Stalinist purges and the Siberian concentration camps accounted, apparently, for 45 million deaths. To this was added the "Iron Curtain" countries of Eastern Europe over which Russia extends her shadow. Lives sacrificed in Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Albania and Yugoslavia were estimated at 3.6 million.

The Chinese civil war that exploded in Yenan and sent Gen. Chiang Kai-shek into Formosan exile and established the rule of Mr. Mao Tse-tung took a toll of 20 million lives. The process of consolidation of Mr. Mao's regime meant the liquidation of 9.5 million more people, described as "class enemies".

China's "Great Leap Forward", which plunged the country into a disastrous famine, resulted in the death of 13 million more. Finally, about 2 million had perished since 1950 in Chinese slave labour camps.

The table made no mention of people killed as a result of Communist insurrection in India, but it said that the Chinese invasion of Tibet and subsequent revolts by the Tibetans had cost 200,000 lives.

Fatalities in the Korean War were estimated at 1.5 million and the bloody revolution in Zanzibar, which overthrew the Sultan and his Arab court and led to the union of the Island with Tanzania, was at the expense of another 13,000 lives.

H. State Of World Currencies: According to the November, 1969 issue of Pick's World Currency Report, at least 62 devaluations were decreed during the past year. They included the once powerful French franc and the members of its currency area.

The shaky position of the £ sterling and its associated units had continued to generate increasing fears about its future. Of the existing 128 monetary units, at least 118 were not only inconvertible but subject to constant blackmarket dealings, and the craving for the private possession of gold had continued to complicate the lives of capitalistic and socialist currency administrators.

Neither the German de facto and de jure upvaluation of the Mark, nor the creation of paper gold (SDR's) had served to convince hoarders all over the globe of the uselessness of their reserves, small or large, of the yellow metal. Talk of adopting the "crawling peg" system or the practice of frequent mini-devaluations in the style of Chile or Brazil had also encouraged hoarders to put more of their assets into gold. As any devaluation, no matter what the size, could be made only by an increase of the price of gold in terms of national currency units, bullion or coins had helped protect the little man and the top politician and was much better than Wall Street or any kind of Government bond.

An important factor for the continued increase of private absorption of gold was the constant rise in the cost of living in every land on the globe, including countries behind the Iron Curtain. Despite the fact that the free marks prices of bars and coins had not increased greatly during the past year, private gold ownership had risen by about mini $2,100,000,000 or an average of $5,753,000 a day between the end of October, 1968 and the same date in 1969 when it had amounted to at least $24.6 billion against $22.5 billion 12 months earlier. This quantity, exceeding the official gold stocks of Austria, Belgium, Canada, France, West Germany, Italy, Netherland, Spain, the United Kingdom and the International Monetary Fund, was a rather impressive amount. It corresponded to 15 years, 9 months and 12 days of free world gold production at the 1968 rate. Hoarders of the yellow metal, with holdings about 135 per cent greater than the US gold stock, were not discouraged by any one of the measures of the American Treasury to avoid a rise in the official gold price.

The dishoarding of gold could not be expected as long as Governments everywhere "expropriate all those who believe their propaganda. Inflation and taxes will continue to increase hoarding until the United States capitulates and raises the gold price in the same proportion as it has allowed the cost of living to increase over the past 35 years."

The principal changes in hoarding trends during the past nine years showed an overall rise of such private holdings by 66.2 per cent. It was interesting to note that these gold stocks in Asia had risen from mini $3.2 billion in 1961 to mini $5.1 billion in 1969 at the official price of $35 an ounce.

I. Money Value Of World Currencies Shrinks: The First City Bank's Monthly Economic Letter for October, 1969 carried the results of its annual round-the-world survey of the shrinkage of the value of money.

According to the survey, the currency that had suffered the least depreciation in the decade 1958-68 was that of Guatemala (0.2 per cent) with El Salvador, Venezuela, Thailand and the United States taking second, third, fourth and fifth place.

At the bottom of the ladder was Indonesia. It had experienced an annual rate of depreciation of as much as 59 per cent, followed by Brazil, Argentina, Chile and South Viet-Nam.

India experienced an annual rate of depreciation of nearly 6 per cent in the decade.

If the currencies were ranged by their annual rate of depreciation in 1967-68, the dollar slipped down the list with a four per cent decline in its purchasing power. France and the United Kingdom also experienced considerable price inflation in the year under review. In most other industrial countries the upward pressure on price "remained relatively subdued until almost the end of 1968."

In countries like Argentina, India, Pakistan, the Philippines and Turkey the rate of currency depreciation was much lower in 1967-68 than in 1966-67. In India, for example, it was three per cent as against nearly 12, while in Pakistan it was 0.2 per cent as against 6.5.

The Monthly Letter pointed out that if a 4 per cent annual rate of shrinkage in value of currency reduced the real value of a 20 year bond denominated in that currency by almost 60 per cent at maturity.

"A better record of prices stability is an essential pre-requisite to the de-escalation of interest rates around the world."

The following table shows the annual rates of depreciation of world currencies:

	Indexes of Value of Money (1958 – 100)		Annual Rates of Depreciation

J. Alternative Routes For Trans-Asian Railway: Two alternative routes have been prepared for the proposed 14,500-km trans-Asian railway to link Singapore and Istanbul by railway experts of the ECAFE Transport and Communications Committee.

These two routes follow an identical alignment except in Burma and Thailand where two possibilities have been suggested. In Burma, the first route follows the more northerly one via the former capital of Mandalay, Alon, Ye-u, Kalemyo and Tamu into India by way of Imphal and Silchar. The second route follows a more north-westerly direction via Prome, Thayetomyo and Akyab into Cox's Bazar (East Pakistan) to Ramu, Dohazari and Chittagong.

Between Thailand and Burma, the alternatives shown relate to Thailand only, i.e., Phit Sanulok-Tak and Euphanburi-Tak.

Although the net-work routes have been stated to be from Singapore to Istanbul, the railways of Indonesia, on the two main islands of Sumatra and Java, will also form part of the net-work, through ferry connexions betweet Pandjang-Merak and Belwan-Port Swettenham (Malaysia).

The possible alignments, as proposed, pass through all the capitals of the region. Spur lines, to give rail access to landlocked Afghanistan, Laos and Nepal, have also been proposed. The length of the alignment from Singapore to Istanbul by the first route is 14,543 km and by the second 14,113 km. The missing links to be supplied work out at 1,595 km and 1,965 km for the two routes.

K. World's Second Biggest Merchant Fleet: According to Lloyd's Register of Shipping, Japan has overtaken Britain to become the owner of the world's second biggest merchant fleet.

Japan has shown an increase in gross tonnage of more than seven million in two years and now has a 23,987,000 tons share of the total world tonnage, which is put at 211,661,000 tons.

Liberia stays in top place with a registered 29,215,000 tons—double its 1964 figure—while Britain has dropped to third place with 23,844,000 tons. The Register attributes the increased tonnages of many countries' fleets to the bigger ships now going into service. Greece showed its largest gain since 1960, while the Belgian fleet is now over the million-ton mark.

080730

Sales of tonnage, primarily oil tankers between 10 and 15 years old, have resulted in a pause in the growth of the Norwegian fleet, while that of USA, relegated to fifth place, continues to decline. The world fleet, with the largest increase ever recovered, doubled since 1956.

The following table shows the principal merchant fleets of the world, compared with 1968, in thousand tons gross:

Liberia	29,215	(+3.495)
Japan	23,987	(+4,400)
Britain	23,844	(+1,923)
Norway	19,679	(+ 12)
USA	19,550	(— 118)
Russia	13,705	(+1,643)
Greece	8,581	(+1,165)
Italy	7,038	(+ 414)
West Germany	7,027	(+ 499)
France	5,962	(+ 166)

L. Nobel Awards: It was announced in Oslo on October 20, 1969 that the Nobel Peace Prize for 1969 had been awarded to the International Labour Organization (ILO).

The Norwegian Nobel Committee said it had decided to give the Prize to the Organization, which celebrated its 50th anniversary last year. The prize money to go with the Peace prize for 1969 was 375,000 Swedish kroner (Rs. 5,62,500).

The Prize Committee paid tribute to ILO which it described as an organization which had worked to "improve stable social relations" and thus helped safeguard world peace. "In recent years, ILO has also made considerable efforts in the field of technical aid to developing nations."

This was the 10th time that the Committee had given the Peace Prize to an organization.

Prize For Medicine:

On October 16, 1969 three US scientists won the 1969 Nobel Medicine Prize—and a record 375,000 kroner—for discoveries in molecular genetics.

In New York, one of the trio, Dr. Max Delbrueck (63) said he had carried out the work concerned 25 years ago, and was no longer working in the field.

The other two awarded the Prize were Dr. Alfred Hershey (60) and Dr. Salvador Luria.

Dr. Delbrueck, who was born in Berlin, is working at the California Institute of Technology. Dr. Hershey is working at the Carnegie Institute of Washington. Dr. Luria is a professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The Caroline Institute, announcing the award, said the trio had set the foundations on which modern molecular biology rests. "Without their contributions the explosive development of this field would not have been possible."

For the fourth consecutive year, the world's coveted medical distinction thus went to USA.

Prize For Literature:

On October 23, 1969 Samuel Beckett, the Irish author, was awarded the 1969 Nobel Prize for Literature.

The Swedish Academy in Stockholm said it had awarded Mr. Beckett the Prize "for his writing which—in new forms for the novel and drama—in the destitution of modern man acquires its elevation".

Among his most famous works are the plays "Ken Attendant Godot" (Waiting For Godot), written in 1952, and "Oh le' Beaux Jours" (Oh, The Good Days) written in 1963.

He was the second Irishman to win the Nobel Prize for Literature, the other being the poet W. B. Yeats (1923). George Bernard Shaw, another Irishman, also won the Prize, but he took British nationality. Prof. E. T. Waltson, also Irish, won the Nobel Prize for Physics in 1951.

Though he was born in Dublin in 1906, most of Mr. Beckett's works are in French. For two years, 1928-29, he was a teacher of English at the French school, Ecole Normale Superieure, and afterwards became a close friend and translator of another famous Irish writer, James Joyce. He had been in France since 1938.

The Literature Prize amounts to 375,000 kroner (about $90,000). It was awarded by King Gustav Adolf at a ceremony on December 10.

Prize For Economic Science:

On October 27, the first Nobel Prize in Economic Science was awarded jointly to Prof. Ragnar Frisch of Oslo (Norway) and Prof. Jan Tinbergen of the Netherlands.

The Academy of Sciences said they were awarding the $72,800 Prize for having "developed and applied dynamic models for the analysis of economic processes".

Prof. Tinbergen (66) had been Chairman of the Committee for Development Planning of UN since 1966.

Prof. Frisch (74) became Professor to Oslo University in 1931 and served as Director of the Institute for Social Economy at the University for many years.

Prize For Physics:

On October 30, the 1969 Nobel Prize for Physics was awarded to Prof. Murray Gell-Mann of USA.

Prof. Gell-Mann was given the Prize for "his contribution and discoveries concerning the classification of elementary particles and their inter-actions."

He was the 28th American to be awarded the Nobel Prize for physics—in which the United States now leads. Britain has received 15, Germany 14 and France 8.

The British scientist, Dr. Derek H. Barton and Norway's Prof. Odd Hasel were jointly awarded the Nobel Prize for Chemistry.

Prof. Barton is from the Imperial College of Science and Technology, London, and Prof. Hassel from the University of Oslo.

M. World Synod Of Bishops: Pope Paul VI opened in Vatican City on October 11, 1969 the second World Synod of Bishops by warning that the Roman Catholic Church must not adopt any form of democracy similar to those which govern nations.

He told his bishops that he would try to give them greater power in the church without compromising his own supreme responsibility.

He said it was a pleasing duty to confer "wider and more operative efficacy to the collegial character of the episcopate." But, he warned that church unity should not be compromised by "multifarious and excessive particular autonomies."

He called for a more solid co-responsibility in the government of the church "to the relief and support of our own increased and heavy apostolic task."

But, he added: 'Let it be clear, even in this regard, that the government of the church must not take on the appearances and the norms of temporal regimes, which are today guided by democratic institu tions that are sometimes irresponsible and going to excess, by totalitarian forms that are contrary to the dignity of the man who is subject to them."

[illegible] 1999-2000

The extraordinary synod of 147 bishops had been called to discuss the growing crisis of dissent within the Roman Catholic Church.

The official theme of the synod was relations between the Pope, the Vatican and the local churches, and relations between the local churches themselves. But behind it lay the crucial issue of papal power and the ways in which the Pope should share his absolute authority with the rest of the bishops who with him comprise the Episcopal College, the ruling body of the Catholic church.

Anglican-Catholic Commission:

It was announced on October 10, 1969 that Pope Paul and Archbishop Michael Ramsey, head of the Anglican Church, had nominated a permanent Anglican-Catholic Commission to study relations between the two Churches.

The 19-man International Commission will hold its first meeting at Saint George's House, Windsor, England, from January 9 to 15, 1970.

A spokesman for the Vatican's Christian Unity Secretariat said that the Commission would meet once a year, but might decide to set up subcommissions to study specific subjects. The Commission will work on a programme drafted by a Joint Preparatory Commission set up in November, 1969 after Dr. Ramsey had visited Pope Paul that year. This conference had taken the first steps towards restoring unity between the Churches after 400 years of separation.

Two Recommendations Accepted By Pope:

A small dent was made in the Pope's authority in the Catholic church by his accepting two of the recommendations made by the Synod of Bishops.

The first was that the Synod should meet every two years and, second, that the bishops should be represented at the Vatican's curia or secretariat on a permanent basis. But the Pope was adamant that his primacy in the Church should continue.

The Pope did not express his views on two other important recommendations. One of these was that the bishops themselves should prepare the agenda for the Synod. At present, the agenda is presented to them by the Vatican after the Pope's approval. If the bishops got this power, they could include in subsequent Synods such controversial issues as marriage for priests and birth control.

The second was that the Pope should consult the bishops before he decided on major issues. This was to prevent recurrence of crises such as the one raised by the Pope's encyclical on birth control.

According to observers, however, though the bishops were dispersing after re-affirming the Pope's primacy, the Synod had clearly started the democratisation of the Church. The bishops had now a foot lodged securely in the Vatican door and it was only a matter of time till it was opened fully to the changing world.

Synod Closed:

On October 27, 1969, Pope Paul closed the World Synod of Bishops and announced that the next Synod would be convened in 1971.

The Pope, delivering his closing speech, also pledged to set up an enlarged and permanent Synod secretariat that would include several bishops.

He also agreed to the request of his senior bishops that a Synod be held as a general rule every two years to discuss the major problems of the Roman Catholic Church. He agreed that bishops from all over the world should be permanently represented in Rome to act as a link between Synod meetings. "We will also give the utmost consideration to your wishes concerning the possibility of bringing forward by means of these bishops, themes which it is judged necessary to discuss in the Synod."

N. UN Failure Over S-W Africa: The UN Council for South-West Africa (Namibia) charged with taking over and administering the disputed territory, on October 28, 1969 admitted total failure for the third year.

The 11-member group, in an annual report to the UN General Assembly, stated: "It need scarcely be emphasized that the efforts of the United Nations, including those of the Security Council, have so far produced no change in the totally negative attitude of South Africa concerning the question of Namibia (UN name for South-West Africa)."

Members of the South-West Africa Council are: Chile, Colombia, Guyana, India, Indonesia, Nigeria, Pakistan, Turkey, the United Arab Republic, Yugoslavia and Zambia.

[The South-West Africa Council has been trying since 1967 (the year it was established) to assume control of the territory after the UN declared that South Africa's mandate was terminated. But South Africa has never acknowledged the declaration nor recognized the Council and refuses to communicate with it. The South-West Africa group recommended this year that the Security Council meet immediately to take effective enforcement measures to end South Africa's hold on the territory.]

O. Distribution Of "Paper Gold" —IMF Decision: The International Monetary Fund (IMF) voted on October 3, 1969 to distribute $9.5 billion in "paper gold", the world's first international money backed by co-operation instead of gold.

The vote was announced as the IMF drew towards the close of its joint meeting with the World Bank.

The Governor of the Bank of Zambia, Mr. J. B. Zulu, announced that the nations which had agreed to take part in the first distribution of the new money had given at least the 85 per cent vote required to put the IMF Special Drawing Rights (SDRs) into effect.

As is customary, the specific vote was not announced, however. The IMF expected a near-unanimous decision, with only South Africa's position seriously in doubt. South Africa is the IMF's largest gold-producing country. Therefore, it has a special interest not only in the continued use of gold but also in its expansion.

The Fund's Director, Mr. Pierre Paul Schweitzer called the new money "a landmark in the process of international monetary co-operation."

He said indications were that by the end of the year most countries would have completed the steps necessary to participate. About 39 countries had not filed agreements.
